Indeed, this court, in the recent case of Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hughes, 191 U. S. 477, 488, 48 L. ed. 268, 272, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132, held that § 6, as it stood after the amendment of March 2, 1889, and before the Hepburn act, did not amount to a regulation of the matter of a limitation of the carrier's liability to a particular sum in consideration of lower freight rates for transportation. To quote from the opinion (pp. 487, 488): "It may be assumed that under the broad power conferred upon Congress over interstate commerce as defined in repeated decisions of this court, it would be lawful for that body to make provision as to contracts for interstate carriage, permitting the carrier to limit its liability to a particular sum in consideration of lower freight rates for transportation. But upon examination of the terms of the law relied upon we fail to find any such provision therein. The sections of the interstate commerce law relied upon by the learned counsel for plaintiff in error, 24 Stat. at L. 379, 382, chap. 104, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3154; 25 Stat. at L. 855, chap. 382, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3158, provide for equal facilities to shippers for the interchange of traffic; for nondiscrimination in freight rates; for keeping schedules of rates open to public inspection; for posting the same in public places, with certain particulars as to charges, rules, and regulations; . . . giving remedies for the enforcement of the foregoing provisions, and providing penalties for their violation. . . . While under these provisions it may be said that Congress [137] has made it obligatory to provide proper facilities for interstate carriage of freight, and has prevented carriers from obstructing continuous shipments on interstate lines, we look in vain for any regulation of the matter here in controversy. There is no sanction of agreements of this character limiting liability to stipulated valuations, and, until Congress shall legislate upon it, is there any valid objection to the state enforcing its own regulations upon the subject, although it may to this extent indirectly affect interstate-commerce contracts of carriage?"

This query was by the decision answered in the negative. And as a result, notwithstanding § 6 of the commerce act, the courts of Pennsylvania were left free to disregard the rule laid down in Hart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. and to follow their own declared doctrine denying the right of a common carrier to limit its liability for losses due to negligence, even by a special agreement including a valuation assented to by the shipper. In this respect the situation was changed by the Carmack amendment to the Hepburn act, but not (so far as I can see) by any of the changes made in § 6 by that act.

(4) And I had supposed that since as before the Carmack amendment, under the decisions of this court in Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 57 L. ed. 314, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148, and the other cases that have followed it along the same line, the general rules of law that disabled the common carrier from establishing regulations for limiting its liability by general notice not brought home to the shipper, and debarred the carrier from limiting its liability for losses due to negligence except by a special agreement including a fair valuation assented to by the shipper, had remained in full force and vigor, and indeed, by the effect of the amendment, had been made the exclusive rule of conduct for interstate carriers by rail. For the Croninger Case not only held (negatively) that the amendment superseded state laws upon the subject, but (affirmatively) [138] that in matters not covered by its own express terms it had the effect of establishing the common-law rules respecting the carrier's liability, as laid down in previous decisions of this court, and adopted generally by the Federal courts. To quote from the opinion (p. 504): "Prior to that amendment the rule of carrier's liability, for an interstate shipment of property, as enforced in both Federal and state courts, was either that of the general common law as declared by this court and enforced in the Federal courts throughout the United States (Hart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 112 U. S. 331, 28 L. ed. 717, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 151), or that determined by the supposed public policy of a particular state (Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hughes, 191 U. S. 477, 48 L. ed. 268, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132), or that prescribed by statute law of a particular state (Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Solan, 169 U. S. 133, 42 L. ed. 688, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 289). Neither uniformity of obligation nor of liability was possible until Congress should deal with the subject" (Page 505): "That the legislation supersedes all the regulations and policies of a particular state upon the same subject results from its general character. It embraces the subject of the liability of the carrier under a bill of lading which he must issue, and limits his power to exempt himself by rule, regulation, or contract. Almost every detail of the subject is covered so completely that there can be no rational doubt but that Congress intended to take possession of the subject and supersede all state regulation with reference to it." (Page 507): "But it has been argued that the nonexclusive character of this regulation is manifested by the proviso of the section, and that state legislation upon the same subject is not superseded, and that the holder of any such bill of lading may resort to any right of action against such a carrier conferred by existing state law. This view is untenable. It would result in the nullification of the regulation of a national subject and operate to maintain the confusion of the diverse regulation which it was the purpose of Congress [139] to put an end to. . . . To construe this proviso as preserving to the holder of any such bill of lading any right or remedy which he may have had under existing Federal law at the time of his action gives to it a more rational interpretation than one which would preserve rights and remedies under existing state laws, for the latter view would cause the proviso to destroy the act itself."

Digitized by Google

It was upon this construction of the act that we proceeded to determine the validity of the provision in the receipt or bill of lading there in question, which limited the liability of the carrier to the agreed value of $50; and we applied thereto the familiar rules to which I have already referred. Thus (p. 509): "That a common carrier cannot exempt himself from liability for his own negligence or that of his servants is elementary. York Mfg. Co. v. Illinois C. R. Co. 3 Wall. 107, 18 L. ed. 170; New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. ed. 627, 10 Am. Neg. Cas. 624; Bank of Kentucky v. Adams Exp. Co. 93 U. S. 174, 23 L. ed. 872; Hart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 112 U. S. 331, 338, 28 L. ed. 717, 720, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 151. The rule of the common law did not limit his liability to loss and damage due to his own negligence, or that of his servants. That rule went beyond this, and he was liable for any loss or damage which resulted from human agency, or any cause not the act of God or the public enemy. But the rigor of this liability might be modified through any fair, reasonable, and just agreement with the shipper which did not include exemption against the negligence of the carrier or his servants. The inherent right to receive a compensation commensurate with the risk involved the right to protect himself from fraud and imposition by reasonable rules and regulations, and the right to agree upon a rate proportionate to the value of the property transported. It has therefore become an established rule of the common law as declared by this court in many cases that such a carrier may by a fair, open, just, and reasonable agreement limit the amount recoverable by a shipper in case of loss or damage to an agreed value made for the [140] purpose of obtaining the lower of two or more rates of charges proportioned to the amount of the risk."

The other decisions that have followed the Croninger Case (Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Miller, 226 U. S. 513, 57 L. ed. 323, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 155; Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Latta, 226 U. S. 519, 57 L. ed. 328, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 155; Wells, F. & Co. v. Neiman-Marcus Co. 227 U. S. 469, 57 L. ed. 600, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 267; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Carl, 227 U. S. 639, 57 L. ed. 683, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harriman Bros. 227 U. S. 657, 57 L. ed. 690, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Cramer, 232 U. S. 490, ante, 697, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Great Northern R. Co. v. O'Connor, 232 U. S. 508, ante, 703, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 380) have simply applied the doctrine therein laid down, under varying circumstances.

Digitized by Google

In each of these cases there was a special contract, held by the court to have been fairly made, and to amount to a valuation by the shipper of the goods in question for the purposes of the shipment. In short, the court in each instance applied the rule of liability laid down in Hart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. supra.

(5) Because of this firmly established policy of the law respecting the carrier's responsibility for the consequences of his negligence, I should have construed the "regulation" in question, limiting the baggage liability to $100, in subordination to that policy. According to the canon uniformly applied in construing statutes, that of giving them no meaning beyond that which the legislature may constitutionally enact, I should have construed the baggage regulation as a formula for standardizing the contracts proposed to be made by the carrier with the assent of passengers; not that the formula of itself constituted a substitute for a contract, or was intended to become binding upon the passenger until directly brought to his notice and in some way consciously assented to by him.

But my brethren construe it as binding in the absence of any knowledge or assent on the part of the passenger. So considered, I deem it void as being a regulation that it was beyond the power of the common carrier to adopt. And if I am right about this, the fact that it was included [141] in the filed and published schedules does not in the least add to its efficacy.

It is not a question of mere unreasonableness. A carrier may resort to practices that are so clearly unwarranted by law as to require no preliminary application to the Commission, and that not even the sanction of the Commission could validate. I think the attempt to enforce, ex parte, such a limitation of liability, is in that category.

(6) But, in fact, the Commission had distinctly ruled against the validity of the regulation in question, construed as the court now construes it; and had done this prior to the time this action arose.

I find nothing savoring of approval in ¶ 34(g) of Tariff Circular No. 15A, effective April 15, 1908. The reference to "excess-baggage rates" is to charges for excess weight, as I think sufficiently appears from 26 Inters. Com. Rep. 292. But, if intended to apply to excess value, it does not suggest that a limitation of liability for losses attributable to negligence, effective without the knowledge or consent of the passenger, is to be made a part of such regulations.

And in Re Released Rates, 13 Inters. Com. Rep. 550, decided May 14, 1908, the Commission, after full hearing and consideration, made an administrative interpretation of the Carmack amendment, holding distinctly that it did not abrogate the law of the Lockwood Case, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. ed. 627, 10 Am. Neg. Cas. 624, and the Hart Case, 112 U. S. 331, 28 L. ed. 717, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 151. Among other rules laid down (Mr. Commissioner Lane writing) were these (p. 553): "(b) When the shipper has placed upon his goods a specific value, the carrier accepting the same in good faith as their real value, the rate of freight being fixed in accordance therewith, the shipper cannot recover an amount in excess of the value he has disclosed, even when loss is caused by the carrier's negligence" [citing the Hart Case, and quoting in italics from the opinion to the effect that under the circumstances disclosed "the shipper is estopped [142] from saying that the value is greater"]. And again (p. 554): "The same principle is applicable when the shipper has in some other way concealed the nature or the value of his goods in order to secure a lower rate of freight. . . . It does not appear that this principle is in any respect in derogation of the provisions of § 20 [meaning the Carmack amendment]. The carrier is made liable 'for any loss, damage, or injury,' and 'no contract, receipt, rule, or regulation shall exempt such common carrier, railroad or transportation company from the liability hereby imposed.' But it is of the highest importance to note that this limitation is not secured by contract or notice—the contract has no validity per se. It is only right that a carrier who has acted in good faith should be protected against the frauds and misrepresentations of the shipper, and the law accomplishes this through the operation of the principle of estoppel. The shipper is estopped from recovering an amount in excess of the declared value, and the rule is in perfect harmony with the law as it stands to-day. 6 Cyc. title 'Carriers,' p. 401, note 5. (c) If the specified amount does not purport to be an agreed valuation, but represents an attempt on the part of the carrier to limit the amount of recovery to a fixed sum, irrespective of the actual value, the stipulation is void as against loss due to the carrier's negligence or other miscon- duct. Much confusion has arisen from failure to distinguish between this situation and the situation comprehended in Hart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. supra. That decision was expressly predicated upon the principle of estoppel; the shipper had misrepresented the value of his property, and had thereby secured the benefit of a lower rate than he was properly entitled to by virtue of the real value. He was estopped by his fraudulent conduct from recovering an amount in excess of the value he had declared. In the case we are now considering, the requisites of estoppel are wanting. An estoppel cannot [143] arise unless the party invoking it has been the victim of misrepresentation, and has himself acted in good faith. Can it possibly be argued that when a carrier has arbitrarily placed in its bill of lading a stipulation limiting the amount of its liability, regardless of the actual value of the property, it may claim the benefit of an estoppel? Obviously not; it has not acted in good faith, neither has it been the victim of misrepresentation." And again (p. 556): "(d) If the specified amount, while purporting to be an agreed valuation, is in fact purely fictitious, and represents an attempt to limit the carrier's liability to an arbitrary amount, liability for the full value cannot be escaped in event of loss due to negligence. This situation is substantially identical with that just considered,—the difference is one in form only."

Digitized by Google

(7) In the Hart Case, 112 U. S. 331, 28 L. ed. 717, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 151, the fundamental ground of decision, as appears from what has been quoted from the opinion, was that since the shipper had entered into a special agreement for the purpose of cheapening the freight, he was estopped from saying that the value of the goods was greater than the value represented by him for the purposes of the agreement. So, also, in the Croninger Case, and the other recent cases referred to, estoppel was the ground of decision, as the opinions clearly show (226 U. S. p. 510, bottom; 227 U. S. p. 476, top; 227 U. S. p. 651, top; 227 U. S. p. 668, bottom). When participating in these decisions, I, for one, so understood them. In each case the principle of estoppel is essential to the reasoning. In the Carl Case, 227 U. S. 651, 57 L. ed. 688, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391, it was said: "When a shipper delivers a package for shipment and declares a value, either upon request or voluntarily, and the carrier makes a rate accordingly, the shipper is estopped upon plain principles of justice from recovering, in case of loss or damage, any greater amount. The same principle applies if the value be declared in the form of a contract. If such a valuation be made in good faith for [144] the purpose of obtaining the lower rate applicable to a shipment of the declared value, there is no exemption from carrier liability due to negligence forbidden by the statute when the shipper is limited to a recovery of the value so declared. The ground upon which such a declared or agreed value is upheld is that of estoppel" [citing the Hart Case upon this precise point]. And in the Harriman Case (227 U. S. 668, 57 L. ed. 696, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397), the topic is summed up as follows: "The ground upon which the shipper is limited to the valuation declared is that of estoppel, and presupposes the valuation to be one made for the purpose of applying the lower of two rates based upon the value of the cattle. This whole matter has been so fully considered in Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 57 L. ed. 314, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148, and Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Carl, supra, that we only need to refer to the opinions in those cases without further elaboration."

That these decisions are inconsistent with the theory that the mere act of including the regulations upon the subject in the filed schedules would operate to limit the liability of the carrier, without any representation or agreement as to value, assented to by the shipper, seems to me equally clear. Although in each case the relation of the rate differential to the question of valuation was brought home to the shipper, so that it appeared that the shipper had actual notice of the regulation upon the subject contained in the filed and published schedules, it was not suggested that the mere existence of such a regulation, coupled with the fact that the shipment was made at the more advantageous freight rate, had the effect of limiting the liability of the carrier in the event of a loss attributable to negligence. On the contrary, while the relation of the rate differential to the valuation was discussed, it was treated as merely showing that there was consideration for the agreement made by the shipper limiting the responsibility of the carrier, and as showing [145] the reasonableness of that agreement and the grounds of the estoppel that grew out of it. It was in each case plainly implied, if not expressed, that some representation or valuation, consciously assented to by the shipper, was essential to the limitation of the carrier's liability.

In the present case there is no ground for an estoppel against the plaintiff. She made no representation of any kind, her silence being attributable to her ignorance of the existence of the baggage regulation. No estoppel arises where the conduct of the party sought to be estopped is due to ignorance founded upon an innocent mistake; and the same is more evidently true when the innocent party is silent because not asked to speak, and unaware that there is occasion—much less, duty—to speak. There is, I think, no support in reason or authority for holding that a person acting in good faith, but in ignorance of his rights or of the rights of the other party, should be estopped on the ground of knowledge imputed to him by a mere fiction of the law. It is only when good faith requires one to speak that silence estops him; and in the findings of fact in this case there is not the slightest ground to attribute to the plaintiff any want of good faith. Estoppel in pais presupposes an actual fault or a culpable silence. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 10 Wall. 604, 605, 19 L. ed. 1008; Morgan v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 96 U. S. 716, 720, 24 L. ed. 743, 744.

Digitized by Google

And it seems sufficiently obvious that the railroad company did not in anywise rely upon plaintiff's silence to its disadvantage. There would, I think, be more reason for holding the company itself estopped, because it, and not the plaintiff, had knowledge of the baggage regulation; and, according to the findings, it was charged with notice that the baggage was worth much more than $100; and the circumstances appearing from the facts as found clearly indicate that plaintiff, through her agent, in effect tendered herself ready and willing to pay for her fare and baggage charges whatever was proper under the [146] circumstances; and the company set its own price for the service it was to render.

When the carrier was thus applied to by one of the traveling public for the performance of a transportation service in the line of its public duty, without any intimation that anything less than the full measure of the carrier's responsibility would be accepted, it was the carrier's duty, I think, according to principles hitherto recognized, to quote a rate commensurate with the service demanded, including an unlimited responsibility where nothing less was mentioned. If the law required it to charge a higher rate for unlimited than for limited responsibility, it was its duty to quote such higher rate. Having failed to do this, it ought not afterwards to be permitted to take advantage of its own wrong. In view of the commerce act, I do not think the carrier, under such circumstances, is estopped from afterwards claiming the additional compensation that it ought to have exacted when quoting the rate. But I do think it ought to be held estopped from setting up any limitation of its responsibility, when no such limitation was in the contemplation of the patron on demanding the service.

(8) As I read the interstate commerce act, it expresses in its own terms the extent of the prohibition of special contracts of carriage. As has often been said, the main purpose of the act was to prevent discrimination, and the filing of the schedules is the principal means to that end. Section 6, as amended in 1906 (34 Stat. at L. 587, chap. 3591, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1290), prohibits the carrier from transporting passengers or property unless the rates, fares, and charges upon which the same are transported have been filed and published in accordance with the act; from charging or collecting a different compensation for such transportation or for any service in connection with it than as specified in the tariff; and from refunding or remitting in any manner or by any device any portion of the specified rates, or extending [147] to any shipper or person any privileges or facilities except such as are specified in the tariff. When, therefore, a carrier has established and promulgated its tariff, with regulations as to service such as it has a lawful right to establish, the effect of § 6 is to render unlawful any special contract of carriage made in contravention of the rates and regulations thus standardized in accordance with the law. Such is the effect of § 6 of the act, and it was held to have that effect before the passage of the Hepburn act. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hefley (1895) 158 U. S. 98, 39 L. ed. 910, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 802; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Mugg (1906) 202 U. S. 242, 50 L. ed. 1011, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Kirby, 225 U. S. 155, 56 L. ed. 1033, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648. All of these cases arose before the Hepburn act, and the decisions were based upon § 6 of the act of February 4, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 379, chap. 104, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3154), as amended by act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat. at L. 855, chap. 382, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3158, set forth above in the margin), which required the carrier to print and publicly post at each station for the inspection and information of the public the schedules of fares and rates for carriage of passengers and property, and provided that it should be unlawful for the carrier to depart from the published schedules; and upon the 3d section of the original act, which made it unlawful to give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular shipper. In the Hefley Case the question decided was simply that a statute of Texas imposing a penalty for a failure to deliver goods on tender of the rate named in the bill of lading was not applicable to interstate shipments. But the effect of the decision was to declare that one who had obtained from a common carrier transportation of goods from one state to another at a rate specified in the bill of lading, but less than the published schedule of rates filed with and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission and in force at the time, whether he did or did not know that the rate obtained was less than the scheduled rate, was not entitled to recover the goods upon the tender of payment [148] of the amount of charges named in the bill of lading, or of any sum less than the scheduled rates; in other words, that a special contract inconsistent with the published tariff could not avail. This principle was adopted as the ground of decision in the Mugg Case. And in the Kirby Case, likewise, it was held that as the broad purpose of the act was to compel the establishment of reasonable rates and their uniform application, a special contract by which advantage was given to a particular shipper could not be enforced. The distinction between a ground of action based upon the breach of such a special contract and one based upon the carrier's liability for negligence was clearly recognized in the opinion (p. 166), and the latter ground of liability rejected because not presented by the record. To the same effect is Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mottley, 219 U. S. 467, 476, 55 L. ed. 297, 301, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 671, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 265, which arose after the Hepburn act.

Digitized by Google

These cases rest fundamentally upon the ground that to allow the shipper to have the benefit of a special agreement for lower rates or for better service than the standard rates and service prescribed by the published schedules would in effect compel the carrier to violate the provisions of the act. In this sense, and to this extent, all shippers are "bound" by the provisions of the act that bind the carrier. But to say that because of this a shipper or a passenger who has made no special contract at all, and claims the benefit of none, shall be conclusively deemed to have made a special contract, involving terms and conditions of which he was wholly ignorant, strikes me as a manifest non sequitur. And to hold that a passenger whose rights rest not upon any contract of shipment, but upon the negligence of the carrier, shall be barred from recovering full redress for the consequences of that negligence, upon the theory that he has unconsciously attempted to make a special contract in contravention of the act, is, I submit with respect, equally illogical. It seems also a [149] complete reversal of the Hart Case and the Croninger Case, which declare that a carrier's liability for negligence can only be limited by such a contract or representation as shall estop the shipper,—to now hold that without any express contract or representation by the shipper the liability is limited, on the theory that he is legally charged with notice of requirements of which he was in fact ignorant.

It is true that in the case at bar, the supreme court of Massachusetts (209 Mass. at p. 602) unnecessarily, and, as I think, erroneously, conceded that if the regulation limiting the baggage liability to $100 in value was so related to the rates of transportation of passengers as to be a part of such rate, the plaintiff was "bound," regardless of her knowledge or assent, and therefore her recovery in this action would be limited accordingly. The error, as it seems to me, arose from a misconception of the effect of the decisions in the Hefley and Mugg Cases. The fallacy, if I am correct in deeming it to be such, lies in the double sense of the word "bound." I respectfully suggest that this court, in a matter of such far-reaching importance, ought not to accept the concession without testing its soundness.

If it were said that because she did not know of, and therefore did not assent to, a limitation of liability to $100, she remained still liable to pay to the railroad company the amount of money properly chargeable for the excess of valuation, and that the company had a lien upon the baggage for this amount on its arrival at destination, I could see the force of the suggestion. This would, perhaps, be within the doctrine of the Hefley and Mugg Cases. (Of course, I do not mean to say that the lien would survive after the goods were lost through the company's negligence.) But I can find nothing in any of the cases referred to that lends support to the view that a railroad company can limit its liability by limiting the rate charged, [150] without according to the shipper or passenger any voice in the matter.

The expressions employed in the Carl Case, 227 U. S. 652, 57 L. ed. 688, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391, that "the valuation the shipper declares determines the legal rate where there are two rates based upon valuation," and that "when there are two published rates, based upon difference in value, the legal rate automatically attaches itself to the declared or agreed value," had reference to the effect of a voluntary declaration made by a shipper who fixes the valuation of his goods for the purposes of the shipment, knowing that the valuation determines the rate that must be charged, although perhaps unaware what the precise rate may be. The same is true of similar language used in the Harriman Case, 227

Digitized by Google

U. S. at p. 669, 57 L. ed. 697, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397, the Cramer Case, 232 U. S. at p. 493, ante, 698, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383, and the O'Connor Case, 232 U. S. at p. 515, ante, 706, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 380. I am unable to see that the reasoning applies to the case of a shipper or passenger who has declared no valuation, has exercised no choice, and is unaware that a choice is open.

To say that constructive notice of the filed regulation, of which plaintiff was in fact ignorant, gave her an actual opportunity to declare the value of her baggage, pay the excess tariff rate, and thus secure the liability of the carrier to the full amount of her baggage, is to say that a fiction is the same as a fact.

(9) In the Croninger Case, and the others of the same class, the shipper consciously accepted a benefit in the form of a reduced freight charge as the consideration of an agreement voluntarily made, valuing the goods for the purposes of the shipment. But here the plaintiff did nothing of the kind. She paid the full price asked by the carrier for transportation of herself and her baggage, unaware of any regulation of the carrier that would require the payment of an additional charge for an unlimited liability for baggage. If she were setting up and relying upon any special contract made in violation of the law, [151] the doctrine of the Hefley, Mugg, and Kirby Cases would apply. But her cause of action is complete without resort to any contract, special or general; and the contract of which her passage tickets and the baggage checks were the tokens was merely the medium by which the carrier became possessed of her baggage. Having that baggage in its possession, the responsibility of the carrier for the exercise by itself and its employees of reasonable care for the safety of the goods arose under general principles of law independent of the contract; and those general principles as administered in the Federal courts (the same as in the courts of Massachusetts), entitled her to compensation upon the basis of the actual value of the goods lost, in the absence of a special agreement or of some representation of value made by her, limiting that liability.

Conceding, for argument's sake, that the contract of carriage as made between plaintiff and defendant, if deemed to import responsibility for the entire value of the baggage, was invalid because not made in accordance with the regulations filed and published in connection with the rate schedules, and because of the provisions of the interstate commerce act that in effect forbid the making of contracts otherwise than in accord with those schedules,—even so, the plaintiff was in nowise at fault. She was unaware that she was at liberty to exercise any option, to say nothing of being under an obligation to do so. The fault was wholly with defendant, for it made no inquiry respecting the value of her baggage, and gave her no notice of any limitation of liability, although itself charged with notice from the very appearance of the baggage that it must have been worth more than $100. And her present action is based upon the carrier's negligence, and not upon an affirmance of the contract.

Irrespective of the contract, the carrier, like any other bailee for hire, was bound to take reasonable care to preserve the property ready for delivery to its owner. I can [152] find nothing in the letter or the spirit of the commerce act that forfeits her property or any part of its value because of her violation of the act, supposing her to have violated it. And since, through the carriers' negligence, the property was lost, it follows, on general principles, that her right of action, upon grounds independent of the contract, remains; it being based upon the general obligation of the bailee to do justice. The principle is fundamental and familiar, and has been applied in a great variety of cases. Planters' Bank v. Union Bank, 16 Wall. 483, 500, 21 L. ed. 473, 480; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Philadelphia & H. de G. Steam Towboat Co. 23 How. 209, 217, 16 L. ed. 433, 435; Congress & E. Spring Co. v. Knowlton, 103 U. S. 49, 58, 26 L. ed. 347, 350; Armstrong v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 133 U. S. 433, 466, 33 L. ed. 747, 759, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 450; Logan County Nat. Bank v. Townsend, 139 U. S. 67, 75, 35 L. ed. 107, 111, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 496; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Central Transp. Co. 171 U. S. 138, 151, 43 L. ed. 108, 114, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 808. And see Newbury v. Luke, 68 N. J. L. 189, 191, 52 Atl. 625; Dunlop v. Mercer, 86 C. C. A. 435, 156 Fed. 545, 555; Re T. H. Bunch Co. 180 Fed. 519, 527.

In Merchants' Cotton Press Co. v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 151 U. S. 368, 388, 38 L. ed. 195, 205, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 499, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 367, this court held that while an agreement for special rates, rebates, or drawbacks was void under the interstate commerce act, the law did not make the contract of affreightment otherwise void, nor prevent liability on the part of the carrier for the freight received; that such a construction would encourage rather than discourage unlawful agreements for rebates, since the carrier might prefer them to a liability for the freight; and that although the contract for rebate was void and unenforceable, the shipper could nevertheless recover for loss of his freight through the carrier's negligence. This decision has never been overruled or qualified, and it seems to me quite decisive of the present question.

Digitized by Google

(10) Thus far I have treated the case as one arising under the common-law rules respecting the carrier's liability, as laid down in the decisions of this court and adopted generally by the Federal courts. I have endeavored [153] to show that a limitation of the carrier's liability is not permitted except it result from some actual representation or contract consciously assented to by the shipper, valuing the goods for the purposes of the shipment; that the sole ground for limiting the responsibility to this extent is that the shipper is estopped by his contract or his representations; that no different result is to be derived by any implication from the provisions of § 6 of the interstate commerce act, which merely prevents the making of a special agreement inconsistent with the schedules, and does not compel the assumption (contrary to the fact) that a special agreement was made in conformity to them; that an agreement inconsistent with the schedules, even if void in itself, does not make the contract of affreightment otherwise void, nor prevent liability on the part of the carrier for loss of the goods attributable to its negligence; and that a shipper who has acted in good faith is not to be estopped upon the theory that a fiction or presumption of knowledge is equivalent to actual knowledge, or amounts to the same as conscious misrepresentation. I have hitherto refrained from attributing any special force to the Carmack amendment as regulative of the subject-matter.

But let us now consider the specific force of that amendment (34 Stat. at L. 595, chap. 3591, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1307, quoted in marginal note, ante, p. 534). It declares (inter alia) that a railroad company receiving property for interstate transportation "shall issue a receipt or bill of lading therefor, and shall be liable to the lawful holder thereof for any loss, damage, or injury to such property caused by it . . . , and no contract, receipt, rule, or regulation shall exempt such common carrier, railroad, or transportation company from the liability hereby imposed." It was concerning this provision that the court said in the Croninger Case, speaking by Mr. Justice Lurton, 226 U. S. 505, 57 L. ed. 319, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148: "That the legislation supersedes all the regulations and policies of a particular state upon the same subject results from its general character. It embraces [154] the subject of the liability of the carrier under a bill of lading which he must issue, and limits his power to exempt himself by rule, regulation, or contract." This was equivalent to saying that because the carrier was obliged to issue to the shipper a receipt or bill of lading for the goods, and because the terms of the contract of carriage and rules and regulations pertaining thereto are presumably embodied in the receipt or bill of lading, therefore the act must be deemed an exercise by Congress of its general and exclusive power over the subject-matter.

And the language of the enactment shows that it was framed in view of the general and familiar practice of embodying in the receipt or bill of lading all the terms of the contract, including the valuation of the goods and the rules and regulations for limiting the liability of the carrier. Is it not perfectly manifest that when Congress declared that the carrier "shall issue a receipt or bill of lading" it intended that this document should embody the "contract, receipt, rule, or regulation" that are mentioned in the same clause? Is it possible, without twisting the words from their plain meaning, to read this so that the duty of the carrier shall be performed if it issues a receipt or bill of lading that does not evidence the contract between the parties, and the whole of that contract?

But in the present case there was no receipt or bill of lading within the meaning of the Carmack amendment as thus interpreted. There was nothing but three baggage checks, each bearing an identifying number, but, so far as the case shows, nothing else. I cannot agree that the statute leaves the carrier free to give a mere identifying token, instead of a "receipt or bill of lading." But, if I am wrong in this, it seems too clear for argument that so far as the carrier intends that any of its rules or regulations respecting its responsibility for the baggage are to be imported into the contract, it is incumbent upon it to set [155] them forth plainly in a bill of lading delivered to the shipper or passenger. If the act admits of the construction that a mere identifying token or check can be used in the place of a formal receipt or bill of lading, it for that reason must require the construction that the carrier may, and that he does thereby, waive the benefit and protection of the rules and regulations. For I cannot believe that the Carmack amendment is open to the construction that the shipper shall be bound by special terms or conditions respecting anything pertaining to the contract of carriage and the carrier's responsibility, while the shipper is in fact ignorant of them. This would leave the carrier free to set a trap for the innocent shipper or passenger. Nor can I agree that the act requires any affirmative regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission prescribing the form of receipts to be given for baggage. I concede the Commission may regulate the matter, so long as it does so in conformity to the letter and spirit of the statute; but not that the act remains without vitality until the Commission breathes into it the breath of life. In my view, the railroad company in the present case, having failed to give such a receipt or bill of lading as the statute contemplates, cannot be heard to set up any limitation of its liability for the value of the goods, for it would thereby in effect claim a benefit from its own violation of the law.

Digitized by Google

I submit that the Hepburn act, like the original act and its other amendments, is intended to impose duties upon the carrier,—the public servant,—not upon the shipper or passenger. There is nothing in the letter or the policy of the acts to absolve the carrier from its long-recognized duty to treat all shippers and passengers fairly, and to give them an actual opportunity to make a choice, where a choice is legally open to them. A carrier may not absolve himself in whole or in part from his responsibilities by any ex parte action. And where the rate schedules and accompanying regulations are designed to give an option [156] to the shipper, it is, I submit, incumbent upon the carrier to see that the option is in good faith tendered, or else abide by the more onerous of the alternatives. The Carmack amendment means this, at least, if it means nothing more. Therefore, the failure to deliver a bill of lading evidencing the limitation of liability should impose upon the carrier the highest responsibility, not the least, that the regulations admit of; that is to say, an unlimited responsibility for the goods.

(11) The serious consequences of the present decision are sufficiently manifest. Heretofore, shippers and passengers have been entitled to rest in the assurance that a common carrier who accepted their goods for transportation in the ordinary course of a carrier's public employment became responsible, without any express contract upon the subject, for the full value of the goods, in case of their destruction through any negligence of the carrier or its agents, unless there was a distinct understanding to the contrary, participated in by the shipper or passenger. Hereafter, so far as interstate shipments by rail are concerned, the traveler or shipper cannot rest upon any such assurance, and will not be safe in dealing with a railroad company without being authoritatively instructed respecting the latest regulations filed by the carrier with the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington. He cannot rely upon finding the regulations posted in the railroad station, for this is not essential to the efficacy of the schedules (Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cisco Oil Mill, 204 U. S. 449, 51 L. ed. 562, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 358). He cannot rely upon public notices that may be in fact posted in the station, for these may be misleading, as they were in the present case. He cannot rely upon receiving information from the company's local agents, for this may be withheld, as it was in this case. Unless he is possessed of a copy of the tariff schedules as filed, with time enough to scrutinize them, and skill enough to comprehend them, he must perforce accept [157] whatever terms the railroad company may see fit to offer, and may not hope to be furnished with even a scrap of paper to indicate what those terms are.

I can find no support for the result thus reached, either in the statute or in any previous decision.

UNITED STATES UPON THE RELATION AND FOR THE USE AND BENEFIT OF TEXAS PORTLAND CEMENT COMPANY et al.

v.

D. C. McCORD and National Surety Company of New York.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 157–164.)

Action — on bond of public contractor — prematurity.

1. An action upon the bond of a public contractor by persons supplying him with labor and materials is prematurely brought if begun within six months from the completion and final settlement of the contract, although it appears that after such performance and settlement the United States neither had nor asserted any claim, demand, or cause of action against the contractor or his sureties, since such right of action created by the act of February 24, 1905 (33 Stat. at L. 811, chap. 778, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1071), is specifically conditioned upon the fact that no suit shall be brought by the United States within such six months' period.

[For other cases, see Action or Suit, I. b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Action — prematurity — curing by intervention — suit on contractor's bond.

2. Intervention by other creditors after the expiration of the six months' period could not cure the premature bringing of the original suit on the bond of a public contractor by persons supplying him with labor and material, which right of action under the act of February 24, 1905, amending the act of August 13, 1894 (28 Stat. at L. 278, chap. 280, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2523), creating it, is specifically conditioned upon the fact that no suit shall be brought by the United States within six months from the completion and final settlement of the contract.

Digitized by Google

[For other cases, see Action or Suit, I. b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Action — prematurity — intervention as original suit.

3. The intervention by other creditors in a suit on the bond of a public contractor, brought under the act of February 24, 1905, by persons supplying him with labor and material, cannot be treated as an original suit so as to cure the prematurity of the original bill where no service was made or attempted to be had upon the intervention, as required by the statute when original actions are begun by creditors.

[For other cases, see Action or Suit, I. b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Action — prematurity — curing by amendment — suit on contractor's bond.

4. The premature bringing of a suit upon the bond of a public contractor within six months after the completion and final settlement of the contract by persons furnishing him with labor and materials is not cured by filing an amended bill more than one year after such completion and final settlement, since, under the act of February 24, 1905, suit to enforce this right of action created by such statute must not only be brought after the six months named, but within a year after such final settlement.

[For other cases, see Action or Suit, I. b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 234.]

Argued March 6, 1914. Decided April 6, 1914.

ON A CERTIFICATE from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, presenting the questions whether an action on the bond of a public contractor by persons furnishing him with labor and materials can be brought within six months from the completion and final settlement of the contract, and whether, if such action was prematurely brought, was the right of action saved by intervention or amendment. Both questions answered in the negative.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Francis Marion Etheridge argued the cause, and, with Mr. Joseph Manson McCormick, filed a brief for the Texas Portland Cement Company:

Relators had the right to institute their suit on January 3, 1910, because they pleaded and proved that the contract was completely performed on October 12, 1909, and that a final settlement thereof was made on November 11, 1909, and that in such settlement the United States was fully satisfied and neither had nor asserted any claim against the contractor or his surety, and therefore that they neither would nor could institute or maintain on their behalf, either within or without the six months' period, any action whatsoever.

Title Guaranty & T. Co. v. Crane Co. 219 U. S. 24, 55 L. ed. 72, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140; United States v. Ansonia Brass & Copper Co. 218 U. S. 452, 471, 54 L. ed. 1107, 1114, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 49; United States use of Hill v. American Surety Co. 200 U. S. 197, 50 L. ed. 437, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 168; United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Golden Pressed & Fire Brick Co. (United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. United States) 191 U. S. 416, 48 L. ed. 242, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 142; American Surety Co. v. Lawrenceville Cement Co. 110 Fed. 717; United States use of Anniston Pipe & Foundry Co. v. National Surety Co. 34 C. C. A. 526, 92 Fed. 549; United States use of Fidelity Nat. Bank v. Rundle, 40 C. C. A. 450, 100 Fed. 400; United States use of Edward Hines Lumber Co. v. Henderlong, 102 Fed. 2; Howard v. United States, 184 U. S. 676, 46 L. ed. 754, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 543.

The Illingsworth bill, seasonably filed on his own behalf, and for the use and benefit of each and every of the relators herein by name, incorporated therein by express reference the bill previously filed by the relators, and even though it should be held that the bill of relators was prematurely filed, yet it became a part of the Illingsworth bill, and supplied the details of the claim of the respective relators, and it should have been treated as an intervention in the Illingsworth suit. The Illingsworth bill, being in the nature of a creditors' suit, inured to the benefit of the relators herein, and the subsequent dismissal thereof by Illingsworth did not affect them.

Richmond v. Irons, 121 U. S. 27, 30 L. ed. 864, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 788; Nix v. Dukes, 58 Tex. 96; Foote v. O'Roork, 59 Tex. 215.

Even though it should be held that the suit of the relators herein was prematurely instituted, yet the contingency which matured the cause of action having happened prior to the dismissal thereof, the only effect would be to cast the relators in the cost of the action up to the time of the occurrence of the contingency which matured the same. The institution of the suit, even though premature, arrested limitation, and the amendment subsequently filed, following the happening of the contingency, cured the defect. The relators' amended original petition merely elaborated the allegations of their original petition, and did not constitute a new suit after the expiration of one year from the completion of the contract and the final settlement with the government.

Kauffman v. Wooters, 79 Tex. 214, 13 S. W. 549; Burns v. True, 5 Tex. Civ. App.

Digitized by Google

74, 24 S. W. 338; Kinney v. Lee, 10 Tex. 155; Crescent Ins. Co. v. Camp. 64 Tex. 521; Morgan v. E. Bement & Sons, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 564, 59 S. W. 907; Queen Ins. Co. v. May, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 35 S. W. 829; Howard v. Windom, 86 Tex. 560, 26 S. W. 483; Becker v. Gulf City Street R. & Real Estate Co. 80 Tex. 486, 15 S. W. 1094; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Kinman, 9 Kan. App. 633, 58 Pac. 1037; Seaton v. Hixon, 35 Kan. 663, 12 Pac. 22; Hall v. Hurd, 40 Kan. 374, 19 Pac. 802; Barrow v. Shields, 13 La. Ann. 57; Titus v. Poole, 145 N. Y. 414, 40 N. E. 228; Conolly v. Hyams, 176 N. Y. 403, 68 N. E. 662; Meekins v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. 131 N. C. 1, 42 S. E. 333; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Zehner, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 294.

Mr. Charles W. Starling argued the cause, and, with Mr. W. F. Robertson, filed a brief for D. C. McCord et al:

The district court having simply sustained a plea in abatement, there is no jurisdiction to review its action.

Cunningham v. Rodgers, 96 C. C. A. 508, 171 Fed. 835; Leitensdorfer v. Webb, 20 How. 176, 15 L. ed. 891; Piquignot v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 16 How. 104, 14 L. ed. 863; Stephens v. Monongahela Nat. Bank, 111 U. S. 197, 28 L. ed. 399, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336.

The suit was prematurely brought, as no right of action existed during the first six months after final settlement between the government and the contractor.

United States use of Watson-Flagg Engineering Co. v. Winkler, 162 Fed. 397; Mankin v. United States, 215 U. S. 537, 54 L. ed. 317, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 174; Stitzer v. United States, 105 C. C. A. 51, 182 Fed. 513; United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. United States, 209 U. S. 315, 52 L. ed. 808, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 537; United States v. McGee, 171 Fed. 209; United States ex rel. Williamson Bros. Co. v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 171 Fed. 247.

Subsequent proceedings in a case prematurely filed did not cure the fatal defect.

American Bonding & T. Co. v. Gibson County, 76 C. C. A. 155, 145 Fed. 871, 7 Ann. Cas. 522.

The Illingsworth intervention related back to premature commencement of suit.

Carter-Crume Co. v. Peurrung, 40 C. C. A. 150, 99 Fed. 888.

As Illingsworth's petition was dismissed after one year from final settlement, and no service of its filing was had on creditors, no cause of action was thereby preserved to any creditor.

United States use of Hollinger v. Stannard, 206 Fed. 326.

The exception at a subsequent term is not sufficient to show the claiming of any rights before the district court, now claimed on appeal.

Michigan Ins. Bank v. Eldred, 143 U. S. 293, 36 L. ed. 162, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 450.

It is an open question in Texas whether, when there is a statute fixing a time or a condition precedent to the filing of a suit, its premature filing can be cured by an amendment.

Burrows v. Gonzales County, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 232, 23 S. W. 829; El Paso v. Ft. Dearborn Nat. Bank, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 71 S. W. 799, 96 Tex. 496, 74 S. W. 21; Foote v. O'Roork, 59 Tex. 215; Kinney v. Lee, 10 Tex. 155; Howard v. Windom, 86 Tex. 560, 26 S. W. 483; Cotulla v. Urbahn, 104 Tex. 208, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 345, 126 S. W. 1108, 135 S. W. 1159.

This court, therefore, has no authoritative precedent from the courts of Texas which it may consider itself bound to follow. In such absence this court, it is submitted, should follow the case of American Bonding & T. Co. v. Gibson County, 76 C. C. A. 155, 145 Fed. 871, 7 Ann. Cas. 522.

The action declared upon being created by an act of Congress, and the limitations and conditions being imposed by such act, the effect of the premature filing of a suit thereon and without the authority granted by the act is not to be determined by the laws of the state in which the action is brought, but by the act itself, construed in reference to the common law as applied by the Federal courts.

Arnson v. Murphy, 109 U. S. 238, 27 L. ed. 920, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 184, 115 U. S. 583, 29 L. ed. 493, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185.

The amendment of original relators, filed more than one year after final settlement, and thus after right of action ceased to exist, neither preserved nor revived any rights.

Baker Contract Co. v. United States, 122 C. C. A. 560, 204 Fed. 396; Eberhart v. United States, 123 C. C. A. 180, 204 Fed. 884.

Mr. Justice Day delivered the opinion of the court:

This case is here upon a certificate from the United States circuit court of appeals for the fifth circuit. The pertinent facts certified are:

The United States, upon the relation and for the use and benefit of the Texas Portland Cement Company and others, brought suit in the United States circuit court for the northern district of Texas, on January 3, 1910, against D. C. McCord, as the principal, and the National Surety Company of New York, as surety, on a certain bond dated March 19, 1906, given in conformity to the act of February 24, 1905 (33 Stat. at L. 811, chap. 778, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1071), for the performance by McCord of a contract for the erection of certain public works for which they had furnished labor and material. The petition was filed after the completion of the contract and final settlement between the contractor and the United States, and it was alleged that the United States had no claim or cause of action against the defendants, and would not bring suit within six months from the completion and settlement of the contract, nor at any other time. An appropriate order for service and publication was had. Many creditors intervened in the case, among others W. Illingsworth, who, on May 25, 1910 (more than six and less than twelve months after final completion and settlement), filed an intervention in accordance with the act, which constituted a complete bill, purporting to be also for the benefit of the plaintiffs in the [159] original suit and others intervening in the cause, and in which he prayed, if the recovery on the bond should be inadequate to pay all claims in full, for a pro rata judgment.

Digitized by Google

Subsequently, on January 9, 1911, the original plaintiffs filed an amended original petition, elaborating the allegations of their original petition, and averring among other things that the government had no claim against the defendants, and therefore had not, within six months from the completion and settlement of the contract, brought suit against them, and did not have the legal right to maintain such suit, except upon the relation of a creditor. Illingsworth dismissed his intervention on February 2, 1911, and thereafter the court ordered that his petition and petition in intervention be dismissed.

The allegations of the petition were sustained by proof, and a plea in abatement filed by the Surety Company was heard upon an agreement and statement in open court to the effect that the contract was completed on October 12, 1909, and settlement was made on November 11, 1909, and that the government thereafter neither had nor asserted any claim, demand, or cause of action against the defendants on the contract or bond. The circuit court thereupon dismissed the suit, and the case was taken to the circuit court of appeals upon error.

The questions certified are:

"First. Under the provisions of the act of August 13, 1894 (28 Stat. at L. 278, chap. 280, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2523), as amended by the act of February 24, 1905 (33 Stat. at L. 811, chap. 778, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1071), may persons who furnish material and perform labor in the construction of governmental works bring suit on the bond of the contractor in the Federal court in the name of the United States, for their use and benefit, within six months from the completion of the works and final settlement of the contract, where it appears of record and was agreed by the parties in open court, that after performance and settlement of the contract, the United States neither had nor asserted any [160] claims, demands, or cause of action either against the contractor or the sureties on his bond?

"Second. If the original bill was prematurely filed, was a right of action saved to the parties so filing the same, by the intervention of Illingsworth, which was filed after the six months, but before the expiration of the twelve months' period, and the amended bill, filed more than one year after the completion and settlement of the contract between the government and the contractor?"

The differences in the act of February 24, 1905, and the former statute of August 13, 1894 (28 Stat. at L. 278, chap. 280, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2523), were pointed out by this court in the case of Mankin v. United States, 215 U. S. 533, 54 L. ed. 315, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 174, and need not be repeated here. The act of 1905† provides that the persons [161] named as beneficiaries under the bond may intervene and have their rights adjudicated in an action instituted by the United States in which priority of claim is to be given to the United States for any judgment recovered in the case. It

†That hereafter any person or persons entering into a formal contract with the United States for the construction of any public building, or the prosecution and completion of any public work, or for repairs upon any public building or public work, shall be required, before commencing such work, to execute the usual penal bond, with good and sufficient sureties, with the additional obligation that such contractor or contractors shall promptly make payments to all persons supplying him or them with labor and materials in the prosecution of the work provided for in such contract; and any person, company, or corporation who has furnished labor or materials used in the construction or repair of any public building or public work, and payment for which has not been made, shall have the right to intervene and be made a party to any action instituted by the United States on the bond of the contractor, and to have their rights and claims adjudicated in such action and judgment rendered thereon, subject, however, to the priority of the claim and judgment of the United States. If the full amount of the liability of the surety on said bond is insufficient to pay the full amount of said claims and demands, then, after paying the full amount due the United States, the remainder shall be distributed is also provided that, "if no suit should be brought by the United States within six months from the completion and final settlement of said contract," then the persons supplying [162] labor, etc., upon taking certain steps to get a certified copy of the bond, "are hereby authorized to bring suit in the name of the United States," etc., provided that suits by creditors of the contractor "shall not be commenced until after the complete performance of said contract and final settlement thereof, and shall be commenced within one year after the performance and final settlement of said contract, and not later." And it is further provided "that where suit is so instituted by a creditor or by creditors, only one action shall be brought, and any creditor may file his claim in such action and be made party thereto within one year from the completion of the work under said contract, and not later." It is further provided that in all suits instituted under the act such personal notice of the pendency of the suit shall be given as the court may order, informing known creditors of their right to intervene, and newspaper publication, to serve as notice of pendency of the suit to other creditors, shall also be made.

Digitized by Google

By this statute a right of action upon the bond is created in favor of certain creditors of the contractor. The cause of action did not exist before, and is the creature of the statute. The act does not place a limitation upon a cause of action theretofore existing, but creates a new one upon the terms named in the statute. The right of action given to creditors is specifically conditioned upon the fact that no suit shall be brought by the United States within the six months named, for it is only in that event that the creditors shall have a right of action and may bring a suit in the manner provided. The statute thus creates a new liability and gives a special remedy for it, and upon well-settled principles the limitations upon such liability become a part of the right conferred, and compliance with them is made essential to the assertion and benefit of the liability itself. Pollard v. Bailey, 20 Wall. 520, 526, 527, 22 L. ed. 376, 378; Fourth Nat. Bank v. Francklyn, 120 U. S. 747, 756, 30 L. ed. 825, 829, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757; Globe Newspaper Co. v. Walker, 210 U. S. 356, 52 L. ed. 1096, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 726; United States use of Gibson Lumber Co. v. Boomer, 106 C. C. A. 164, 183 Fed. [163] 726 (circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit).

The purpose of Congress to give the United States the exclusive right to bring suit within six months is stated in terms too plain to be mistaken or to require construction, because of any possible uncertainty in their meaning. When this is so it becomes unnecessary to inquire into the reasons which induced the legislation. It may be that Congress wished to give the government six months in which to test the pro rata among said interveners. If no suit should be brought by the United States within six months from the completion and final settlement of said contract, then the person or persons supplying the contractor with labor and materials shall, upon application therefor, and furnishing affidavit to the Department under the direction of which said work has been prosecuted that labor or materials for the prosecution of such work has been supplied by him or them, and payment for which has not been made, be furnished with a certified copy of said contract and bond, upon which he or they shall have a right of action and shall be, and are hereby, authorized to bring suit in the name of the United States in the circuit court of the United States in the district in which said contract was to be performed and executed, irrespective of the amount in controversy in such suit, and not elsewhere, for his or their use and benefit, against said contractor and his sureties, and to prosecute the same to final judgment and execution: Provided, That where suit is instituted by any of such creditors on the bond of the contractor it shall not be commenced until after the complete performance of said contract and final settlement thereof, and shall be commenced within one year after the performance and final settlement of said contract, and not later: And provided further, That where suit is so instituted by a creditor or by creditors, only one action shall be brought, and any creditor may file his claim in such action and be made party thereto within one year from the completion of the work under said contract, and not later. If the recovery on the bond should be inadequate to pay the amounts found due to all of said creditors, judgment shall be given to each creditor pro rata of the amount of the recovery. The surety on said bond may pay into court, for distribution among said claimants and creditors, the full amount of the sureties' liability, to wit, the penalty named in the bond, less any amount which said surety may have had to pay to the United States by reason of the execution of said bond, and upon so doing the surety will be relieved from further liability: Provided further, That in all suits instituted under the provision of this act such personal notice of the pendency of such suits, informing them of their right to intervene as the court may order, shall be given to all known creditors, and in addition thereto notice of publication in some newspaper of general circulation, published in the state or town where the contract is being performed, for at least three successive weeks, the last publication to be at least three months before the time limited therefor.

---

Digitized by Google

work and fully ascertain its character and whether it fulfilled the contract or not. Whatever the motive, the language used clearly expresses the legislative intention and admits of no doubt as to its meaning. This being so, it is only the province of the courts to enforce the statute in accordance with its terms. Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U. S. 662, 670, 32 L. ed. 1060, 1063, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651; United States v. Lexington Mill & Elevator Co. 232 U. S. 399, 409, ante, 661, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 337.

We think, therefore, that the action was prematurely brought, in view of the facts stated in the certificate. This view of the statute was also taken in a well-considered opinion in the circuit court of appeals for the third circuit. Stitzer v. United States, 105 C. C. A. 51, 182 Fed. 513.

As to the intervention of Illingsworth, in which, it is claimed, other creditors' claims were incorporated: without passing upon the effect of the dismissal of Illingsworth's intervention, we fail to see that this mends the matter. The right to intervene is given in the statute when the action is brought by the United States, and the creditors may have their rights adjudicated in such action. And in the case of an action begun by a creditor in accordance with the statute, the right to file a claim is given to creditors. These rights to intervene and to file a claim, conferred by the statute, presuppose an action duly brought under its terms. In this case the cause of action had not accrued to the creditors who undertook to bring the suit originally. The intervention could not cure this vice in the [164] original suit. Nor do we think that the intervention could be treated as an original suit. No service was made or attempted to be had upon it, as required by the statute when original actions are begun by creditors. As we read the certificate, the intervention was what it purported to be,—an appearance in the original suit, already brought, and in our view must abide the fate of that suit.

As to the effect of the filing of the amendment by the original plaintiffs on January 9, 1911, it is elementary that an amendment dates back to the filing of the petition, and is to supply defects in the cause of action then existing, or at most to bring into the suit grounds of action which existed at the beginning of the case. In this case there was no cause of action to amend. Nor was the amendment of January 9, 1911, the introduction of a new cause of action existing at the beginning of the suit. See in this connection, American Bonding & T. Co. v. Gibson County, 76 C. C. A. 155, 145 Fed. 871, 7 Ann. Cas. 522 (circuit court of appeals for the sixth circuit, opinion by Mr. Justice Lurton). If this amended petition can be regarded as an intervention in a pending suit, and it is contended that it may be, it was too late, as it was filed more than a year after the final settlement under the contract to which time such rights of action are limited by the statute. Eberhart v. United States, 123 C. C. A. 180, 204 Fed. 884. The same objection would lie if the amended petition could be regarded as the bringing of an original suit. See Baker Contract Co. v. United States, 122 C. C. A. 560, 204 Fed. 390.

It follows that both questions certified must be answered in the negative.

---

[165] ARCHIBALD HOLLERBACH and Samuel L. May, Partners, Doing Business as Hollerbach & May, Appts.,

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 165–172.)

United States — contracts for public work — representation of existing conditions.

The damage incurred by persons contracting to repair a dam for the United States because the existing dam was not backed with broken stone, sawdust, and sediment, as positively stated in the specifications, may be recovered from the government notwithstanding the cautionary provisions of other paragraphs of the specifications that the quantities given are approximate only, that no claim shall be made against the United States on account of any excess or deficiency, absolute or relative in the same, and that bidders or their authorized agents are expected to visit the site, ascertain the nature of the work, and make their own estimates.

[For other cases, see United States, VI. d, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 250.]

Argued and submitted March 9, 1914. Decided April 6, 1914.

APPEAL from the Court of Claims to review a judgment dismissing in part the petition in a suit for damages alleged to be due under a contract for a public work. Reversed.

See same case below, 47 Ct. Cl. 236.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William B. King argued the cause, and, with Messrs. George A. King and William E. Harvey, filed a brief for appellants:

Paragraph 33 of the contract contains a warranty.

Atlantic Dredging Co. v. United States, 35 Ct. Cl. 463; Delafield v. Westfield, 77

Digitized by Google

Hun, 124, 28 N. Y. Supp. 440, 41 App. Div. 24, 58 N. Y. Supp. 277; Wescott v. Higgins, 169 N. Y. 582, 62 N. E. 1101.

Even if there is an inconsistency between the different portions of the same contract, they must be reconciled by construction in accordance with the well-settled legal maxim, generalia specialibus non derogant.

Munro v. Alaire, 2 Caines, 327, 2 Am. Dec. 330; Bock v. Perkins, 139 U. S. 628, 636, 35 L. ed. 314, 317, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 677; Lauman v. Young, 31 Pa. 306; Hoffman v. Eastern Wisconsin R. & Light Co. 134 Wis. 603, 115 N. W. 383; Richmond Ice Co. v. Crystal Ice Co. 99 Va. 239, 37 S. E. 851; Newport Waterworks v. Taylor, 34 R. I. 478, 83 Atl. 833; Miller v. Wagenhauser, 18 Mo. App. 11; Scudder v. Perce, 159 Cal. 429, 114 Pac. 571; New York v. American R. Traffic Co. 66 Misc. 166, 121 N. Y. Supp. 221, 143 App. Div. 928, 128 N. Y. Supp. 1118; United States v. Utah, N. & C. Stage Co. 199 U. S. 414, 50 L. ed. 251, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 69; Horgan v. New York, 160 N. Y. 516, 55 N. E. 204.

Assistant Attorney General Thompson submitted the cause for appellee:

If we construe the contract as a whole, the court was not only warranted but compelled to hold that the condition of the backing of the dam was not peculiarly and only within the knowledge of the government, but was a subject about which the appellants were expected to inform themselves, and that the representation as to the condition back of the dam cannot be regarded as a warranty.

Smith v. Curran, 138 Fed. 150; Shappirio v. Goldberg, 192 U. S. 232, 48 L. ed. 419, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 259; Huse v. United States, 44 Ct. Cl. 19, 222 U. S. 496, 56 L. ed. 285, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 119; Burgwyn v. United States, 34 Ct. Cl. 348; Lewman v. United States, 41 Ct. Cl. 470; Griefen v. United States, 43 Ct. Cl. 107; Simpson v. United States, 172 U. S. 372, 43 L. ed. 482, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 212, 31 Ct. Cl. 217.

It is only when there is an inconsistency or repugnance which is totally irreconcilable that a discrimination will be made as to which part will be made to yield to the other.

Page, Contr. § 1113; Elliott, Contr. § 3665; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 279; United States v. Mescall, 215 U. S. 26, 54 L. ed. 77, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 19; Lindeke v. Associates Realty Co. 77 C. C. A. 56, 146 Fed. 630.

The following authorities cited by appellants uphold the government's contention that the contract must be considered as a whole:

Hoffman v. Eastern Wisconsin R. & Light Co. 134 Wis. 603, 115 N. W. 383; Richmond Ice Co. v. Crystal Ice Co. 99 Va. 239, 37 S. E. 851; Bock v. Perkins, 139 U. S. 628, 35 L. ed. 314, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 677.

[167] Mr. Justice Day delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought to recover upon a contract between the appellants, doing business as Hollerbach & May, and the United States, for the repair of Dam No. 1, Green river, Kentucky. In the aspect in which it is now presented the question involved concerns the right of the claimants to recover because of certain damages alleged to have been suffered by them which would not have accrued had the dam been backed with broken stone, sawdust, and sediment, as was stated in paragraph 33 of the specifications attached to the contract.

The determination of this controversy requires reference to certain parts of the contract and the findings of the court of claims. The specifications provide, among other things:

"20. It is understood and agreed that the quantities given are approximate only, and that no claim shall be made against the United States on account of any excess or deficiency, absolute or relative, in the same. Bidders, or their authorized agents, are expected to examine the maps and drawings in this office, which are open to their inspection, to visit the locality of the work, and to make their own estimates of the facilities and difficulties attending the execution of the proposed contract, including local conditions, uncertainty of weather, and all other contingencies.

. . . . . .

"33. Work to be done. . . . The present dam, a wooden crib structure, is 528 feet long between abutments and about 52 feet wide at its base. The expected depth of concrete work is shown on the blue prints, but it may be made greater as the condition of the old timber may render it necessary. The work shall be carried out in sections, generally from 50 to 100 feet long, and no more of the old work shall be torn out than can be rebuilt in a few days in [168] case of necessity. All the exterior surfaces of the concrete shall be faced with the facing described in paragraph 59, which shall be placed before the concrete below has set, and shall be smoothly finished off. The dam is now backed for about 50 feet with broken stone, sawdust, and sediment to a height of within 2 or 3 feet of the crest, and it is expected that a cofferdam can be constructed with this stone, after which it can be backed with sawdust or other material. The excavation behind the dam will be required to go to the bottom, and it is thought that a slope of 1 horizontal to 1.2 vertical will give ample room.

Digitized by Google

. . . . . .

"60. Blue prints. Blue print drawings showing the method of construction may be seen at this office; they shall form a part of these specifications and shall not be departed from except as may be found necessary by the condition of the old timber encountered.

. . . . . .

"70. Investigation. It is expected that each bidder will visit the site of this work, the office of the lock master, and the office of the local engineer, and ascertain the nature of the work, the general character of the river as to floods and low water, and obtain the information necessary to enable him to make an intelligent proposal."

The court of claims found as a matter of fact, among other things:

"As the contractors proceeded with the work of removing the material behind the dam it was found that said dam was not backed with broken stone, sawdust, and sediment, as stated in paragraph 33 of the specifications, but that said backing was composed of a soft, slushy sediment from a height of about 2 feet from the crest to an average depth of 7 feet, and below that to the bottom of the required excavation said dam was backed by cribwork of an average height of 4.3 feet, consisting of sound logs filled with stones."

[169] The court of claims refused to enter judgment for the damages suffered by reason of the difference in the backing of the dam as found by the court, but estimated the damages for the matters in dispute in that respect to aggregate $6,549.23 (47 Ct. Cl. 236).

In the course of its opinion the court below said that if paragraph 33 stood alone it would be a warranty of the material backing the dam. "It was," said the court, "a positive and material representation as to a condition presumably within the knowledge of the government, and upon which, in the absence of any other provision or warning, the plaintiffs had a right to rely." But the court held that the cautionary provisions of paragraph 20 and 70 required the claimants to inform themselves of the condition of the backing of the dam, and that when those paragraphs were read with paragraph 33 the statements and representations of the last-named paragraph could not be regarded as a warranty upon which the claimants had the right to rely, and the court reached this conclusion upon the authority of certain cases of its own and Simpson v. United States, 172 U. S. 372, 43 L. ed. 482, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 212.

In Simpson v. United States, supra, suit was brought upon a contract for the construction of a dry dock at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. It was discovered that the foundations upon which the dry dock rested contained quicksands which were unknown, and which were not shown in the drawings and plans inspected by the contractors before the making of the contract, and upon the strength of which the contractors had made their bid. This court held that the written contract merged all previous negotiations and must be presumed in law to express the final understanding of the parties. Of the contract itself the court said that it was clear that there was nothing in its terms which supported, even by remote implication, the premise upon which the claimants rested their right of recovery; that the contract contained no statement or [170] agreement or even intimation of a warranty, express or implied, concerning the character of the underlying soil at the place where the dock was to be built; that the only word in the contract which supported the contention of warranty was that the dock was to be built in the navy yard upon a site which was "available," and that the word "available" did not warrant against the quicksands which were found, and it certainly did appear that the site was available, for the dock was constructed upon it. It is therefore apparent that this case is entirely different from the one now under consideration, in the contents of the contract and specifications made part thereof, and that in the Simpson Case the claimants relied upon previous negotiations and information as to the site for the dock, developed in the plans showing the result of an examination made by government officers upon a portion of the yard, and did not depend, as here, upon the terms of the contract.

In this case the claimants rely upon the contract, read in the light of the findings of the court of claims. Turning to paragraphs 20 and 70, the court of claims justified its conclusion in that part of paragraph 20 which provides that "quantities given are approximate only, and that no claim shall be made against the United States on account of any excess or deficiency, absolute or relative, in the same. Bidders, or their authorized agents, are expected . . . to visit the locality of the work, and to make their own estimates," etc.; and in that part of paragraph 70 which reads, "it is expected that each bidder will visit the site of this work, . . . and ascertain the nature of the work," etc. The term "quantities," as used in paragraph 20, may doubtless refer to estimates of the amount of different kinds of work which are specified in the contract. We do not see how it could control the statement of paragraph 33, definitely made, as to the character of the material back of the dam. Pertinent parts of the paragraphs [171] referred to would seem to be those which required bidders or their authorized agents to investigate for themselves and to visit the locality of the work to ascertain its nature and make their own estimates thereof. The specifications attached to the contract set forth the work to be performed in great detail, as to its nature and character, and many particulars as to manner and extent of the work to be done, the removal of old timber and material, etc., the general character of the river as to floods and low water, etc., and the difficulties attending the execution of the contract, and as to all these things the bidder was required by paragraphs 20 and 70 to make examination for himself and at his own peril.

Digitized by Google

In paragraph 33 the government sets forth with particularity a description of the old dam, its length and width, and it was there added: "The dam is now backed for about 50 feet with broken stone, sawdust, and sediment to a height within 2 or 3 feet of the crest," etc. The specifications provided that the excavations behind the dam must be to the bottom. In the light of this specification, turn to the finding of fact, and we learn that the claimants, as they proceeded with the work, found that the dam "was not backed with broken stone, sawdust, and sediment, as stated in paragraph 33 of the specifications," and below 7 feet from the top to the bottom there was a backing of cribbing of an average height of 4.3 feet of sound logs filled with stone. Obviously, this made it much more expensive to do the work than if the representation inserted by the government in the specifications of its own preparation had been true, and only the character of material had been found which the specification unequivocally asserted was there.

A government contract should be interpreted as are contracts between individuals, with a view to ascertaining the intention of the parties and to give it effect accordingly, if that can be done consistently with the terms [172] of the instrument. In paragraph 33 the specifications spoke with certainty as to a part of the conditions to be encountered by the claimants. True, the claimants might have penetrated the 7 feet of soft slushy sediment by means which would have discovered the log crib work filled with stones which was concealed below, but the specifications assured them of the character of the material,—a matter concerning which the government might be presumed to speak with knowledge and authority. We think this positive statement of the specifications must be taken as true and binding upon the government, and that upon it, rather than upon the claimants, must fall the loss resulting from such mistaken representations. We think it would be going quite too far to interpret the general language of the other paragraphs as requiring independent investigation of facts which the specifications furnished by the government as a basis of the contract left in no doubt. If the government wished to leave the matter open to the independent investigation of the claimants, it might easily have omitted the specification as to the character of the filling back of the dam. In its positive assertion of the nature of this much of the work it made a representation upon which the claimants had a right to rely without an investigation to prove its falsity. See United States v. Utah, N. & C. Stage Co. 199 U. S. 414, 424, 50 L. ed. 252, 255, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 69.

It follows that the judgment of the Court of Claims must be reversed and the case remanded to that court with directions to enter judgment for the claimants for the damages incurred because of the different character of material found behind the dam than that described in the specifications.

Reversed.

---

[173] ATCHISON, TOPEKA, & SANTA FE RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

C. E. ROBINSON.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 173-182.)

Error to state court — Federal question — defense set up under Federal statute.

1. A decree of a state court denying to the defendant the benefit of a Federal statute compliance with which was set up in the answer and supported by testimony tending to show the truth of the allegations thereof is an adverse ruling on the Federal right which, under the Judicial Code, § 237 (36 Stat. at L. 1156, chap. 231, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 227), warrants bring-

NOTE.—On the general subject of writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4 L. ed. U. S. 97; Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884; and Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 908.

On what adjudications of state courts can be brought up for review in the Supreme Court of the United States by writ of error to those courts—see note to Apex Transp. Co. v. Garbade, 62 L.R.A. 513.

On how and when questions must be raised and decided in a state court in order ing the case up to the Federal Supreme Court by writ of error.

Digitized by Google

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1751–2049, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Commerce — exclusiveness of Federal regulation — carrier's liability.

2. The exclusive rule on the subject of the liability of a railway carrier under contracts for interstate shipment is furnished by the Carmack amendment of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. at L. 584, chap. 3591, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1288), § 7, to the interstate commerce act of February 4, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 379, chap. 104, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3154), § 20, under which a carrier receiving property for interstate transportation is made liable for any loss, damage, or injury to such property caused by it or any connecting carrier to which the property may be delivered.

[For other cases, see Commerce, I. c, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Carriers — limiting liability to agreed value — published tariffs — special contract.

3. A special contract for an interstate railway shipment without limitation of the carrier's liability to an agreed value can have no binding force where the carrier's published tariffs on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission graduate the rates according to declared value and limit the carrier's liability accordingly, since the shipper as well as the carrier is bound to take notice of the filed tariff rates, and so long as they remain operative they are conclusive as to the rights of the parties in the absence of facts or circumstances showing an attempt at rebating or false billing.

[For other cases, see Carriers, II. b, 7, b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 450.]

Argued February 26, 1914. Decided April 6, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Oklahoma to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the District Court of Lincoln County, in that state, against a carrier for the entire damage to an interstate shipment, contrary to the carrier's published rates on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

See same case below, 36 Okla. 435, 129 Pac. 20.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. S. T. Bledsoe argued the cause, and, with Messrs. J. R. Cottingham and George M. Green, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

This case presents to this court for review a well defined and vital Federal question.

Mackay v. Dillon, 4 How. 421–447, 11 L. ed. 1038–1050; Dower v. Richards, 151 U. S. 658, 667, 38 L. ed. 305, 308, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 452, 17 Mor. Min. Rep. 704; Stanley v. Schwalby, 162 U. S. 255, 274, 277, 279, 40 L. ed. 960, 966–968, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 754; Schlemmer v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co. 205 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 681, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 407; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. C. H. Albers Commission Co. 223 U. S. 573–591, 56 L. ed. 556–565, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 316; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Kirby, 225 U. S. 155, 56 L. ed. 1033, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 501; Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491–499, 57 L. ed. 314–317, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Miller, 226 U. S. 513, 57 L. ed. 323, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 155; Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Latta, 226 U. S. 519, 57 L. ed. 328, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 155; Southern P. Co. v. Schuyler, 227 U. S. 601, 611, 57 L. ed. 662, 669, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 901, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Carl, 227 U. S. 639, 57 L. ed. 683, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harriman, 227 U. S. 657, 57 L. ed. 690, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397; Railroad Commission v. Texas & P. R. Co. 229 U. S. 336, 57 L. ed. 1215, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837; Wells, F. & Co. v. Neiman-Marcus Co. 227 U. S. 469, 474–476, 57 L. ed. 600, 602, 603, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 267; Cau v. Texas & P. R. Co. 194 U. S. 427, 48 L. ed. 1053, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663, 10 Am. Neg. Rep. 659.

The limited-liability contract executed by the plaintiff and the rate paid were both pursuant to and in accordance with the published tariff of the defendant, of the terms of which the plaintiff was and is charged with knowledge.

Texas & P. R. Co. v. Mugg, 202 U. S. 242, 50 L. ed. 1011, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Kirby, 225 U. S. 155, 160, 56 L. ed. 1033, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 501; Kansas City South-to make a case for a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States—see note to Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. McGrew, 63 L.R.A. 33.

---

On Carmack amendment as affecting state regulations as to stipulations limiting liability of common carrier for loss or damage to goods—see note to Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257.

On validity of stipulation limiting carrier's liability to agreed valuation as affected by the Hepburn act—see note to Bernard v. Adams Exp. Co. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 293.

On the construction of the Hepburn act generally—see note to Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Wallace, 56 L. ed. U. S. 516.

On contracts fixing rates other than those established in accordance with the interstate commerce act—see note to Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Bell, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 351.

Digitized by Google

ern R. Co. v. Carl, 227 U. S. 639, 642, 57 L. ed. 683, 684, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Miller, 226 U. S. 513, 57 L. ed. 323, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 155; Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Latta, 226 U. S. 519, 57 L. ed. 328, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 155; Wells, F. & Co. v. Neiman-Marcus Co. 227 U. S. 469, 57 L. ed. 600, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 267; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harriman, 227 U. S. 657, 57 L. ed. 690, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397.

Nothing short of an absolute misconception of the legal rights of the parties under the act to regulate commerce, and of the effect of the printed tariffs, and a limited-liability contract executed pursuant thereto, could have led the court to the conclusion that this contract, based upon and made in accordance with such tariff, and fairly and freely executed, was not binding upon the parties thereto.

Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harriman, 227 U. S. 657, 672, 57 L. ed. 690, 698, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397; Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 57 L. ed. 314, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Miller, 226 U. S. 513, 57 L. ed. 323, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 155; Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Latta, 226 U. S. 519, 57 L. ed. 328, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 155; Wells F. & Co. v. Neiman-Marcus Co. 227 U. S. 469, 57 L. ed. 600, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 267; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Carl, 227 U. S. 639, 57 L. ed. 683, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391.

A shipper is charged with notice of the rate applicable, and an actual want of knowledge is no excuse, and the effect of such rate is not lost, although not actually published in the station.

Texas & P. R. Co. v. Mugg, 202 U. S. 242, 50 L. ed. 1011, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Kirby, 225 U. S. 155, 160, 56 L. ed. 1033, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 501; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Carl, 227 U. S. 639, 652, 57 L. ed. 683, 688, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391.

Mr. John B. Daish argued the cause, and Messrs. H. H. Smith and J. W. Beller filed a brief for defendant in error:

The findings of the supreme court of Oklahoma became a question of law to this court, and are not reviewable.

Hilton v. Dickinson, 108 U. S. 165, 27 L. ed. 688, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 424; United States v. Burchard, 125 U. S. 178, 31 L. ed. 663, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 832; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 212 U. S. 97, 53 L. ed. 424, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 220; Chrisman v. Miller, 197 U. S. 319, 49 L. ed. 772, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468.

The Supreme Court of the United States will not take jurisdiction of a case decided on a theory not necessary to determine a Federal question.

Williams v. Bruffy, 102 U. S. 248, 26 L. ed. 135; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Riverside Mills, 219 U. S. 186, 55 L. ed. 167, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 7, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164; Hammond v. Whittredge, 204 U. S. 547, 51 L. ed. 611, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 396; Rogers v. Jones, 214 U. S. 204, 53 L. ed. 969, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 635; Leathe v. Thomas, 207 U. S. 93, 52 L. ed. 118, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30; California Powder Works v. Davis, 151 U. S. 393, 38 L. ed. 207, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Gaar, S. & Co. v. Shannon, 223 U. S. 468, 56 L. ed. 510, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 236; Lawler v. Walker, 14 How. 149, 14 L. ed. 364; The Victory, 6 Wall. 382, 18 L. ed. 848; Bachtel v. Wilson, 204 U. S. 36, 51 L. ed. 357, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 243; Conde v. York, 168 U. S. 642, 42 L. ed. 611, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 234; Williams v. Oliver, 12 How. 126, 13 L. ed. 921; Harrison v. Morton, 171 U. S. 38, 43 L. ed. 63, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 742; Klinger v. Missouri, 13 Wall. 257, 20 L. ed. 635; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Illinois, 200 U. S. 561, 50 L. ed. 596, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 341, 4 Ann. Cas. 1175; Case Mfg. Co. v. Soxman, 138 U. S. 431, 34 L. ed. 1019, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 360.

Matters of practice in inferior courts do not constitute subjects upon which error can be assigned in the appellate courts.

Earnshaw v. United States, 146 U. S. 60, 36 L. ed. 887, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 14; Parsons v. Bedford, 3 Pet. 433, 7 L. ed. 732; Case Mfg. Co. v. Soxman, 138 U. S. 431, 34 L. ed. 1019, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 360; The Francis Wright, 105 U. S. 381, 26 L. ed. 1100; Merced Min. Co. v. Boggs, 3 Wall. 304, 18 L. ed. 245; Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 171, 31 L. ed. 87, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 21, 22.

The interstate commerce act does not contemplate either a written or an oral contract, and neither has been legislated about by Congress, and until Congress exercises authority over these contracts, they will be regulated by the law of the place where they are made. An oral contract is valid in Missouri, in reference to an interstate shipment, so long as its terms do not contravene the provisions of the act.

Texas & P. R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co. 204 U. S. 426, 51 L. ed. 553, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350, 9 Ann. Cas. 1075; Merchants' Cotton Press & Storage Co. v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 151 U. S. 368, 38 L. ed. 195, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 499, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 367.

The cases cited by counsel for plaintiff in error are not applicable, because, in all of the cases cited, the question presented was that the shipment moved upon the written contract, but there was no bona fide valuation.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Justice Day delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in error, plaintiff below, and herein so designated, brought suit in the district court of Lincoln county, Oklahoma, to recover for damages to a race horse, the property of the plaintiff, which was shipped with [177] other race horses from Kansas City, Missouri, to Lawrence, Kansas. Upon verdict in favor of the plaintiff, judgment was entered accordingly, which was affirmed by the supreme court of Oklahoma (36 Okla. 435, 129 Pac. 20).

The plaintiff alleged that the contract of consignment was a verbal one, made by calling up the agent of the railway company at Kansas City by telephone on the day the shipment was made, advising him that the plaintiff had race horses which he desired to ship to Lawrence in time for the races next day; that he was informed by the agent that such shipment could be made, and that if the horses could be loaded between 4 and 6 o'clock of that afternoon they would be carried by the fast freight known as the "Red Ball," making no stops for local freight, and reaching Lawrence about 12 o'clock that night; that it was agreed between them that the shipment should be made by that train; that the plaintiff was instructed where to bring the horses, and informed that a car would be placed to receive them; and that the horses were taken to the place designated by the agent, loaded into a car between 5 and 6 o'clock in the afternoon, the car being closed and labeled "Red Ball," meaning that it should go with the "Red Ball" train on that evening. The car was not taken out that night, and there was testimony tending to show that it was switched about in the yard and on the next morning was started with local freight to Lawrence, arriving there about 2 o'clock next day, too late for the races. And there was evidence that the horse of the plaintiff had been badly injured through the negligence of the defendant.

By an amended answer the railway company set up the fact that the shipment was in interstate commerce, and the filing and approval by the Interstate Commerce Commission of certain tariff rates duly posted, as required by the act, wherein it was provided:

"(A) Rates named in § 2 apply on shipments [178] of ordinary live stock, where contracts are executed by shippers on blanks furnished by these companies, and are based on the declared valuation by the shipper at time contract is signed, not to exceed the following:

"Each horse or pony (gelding, mare, stallion), mule or jack, $100. Each ox, bull, or steer, $50. Each cow, $30. Each calf, $10. Each hog, $10. Each sheep or goat, $3.

"(B) Where the declared value exceeds the above, an addition of 25 per cent will be added to the rate for each 100 per cent or fractional part thereof of additional declared valuation per head. Animals exceeding in value 800 per head will be taken only by special arrangement.

"(C) Table of rates named will be charged on shipments of live stock made with limitation of company's liability at common law, and under this status shippers will have the choice of executing or accepting contracts for shipments of live stock with or without limitation of liability and rates accordingly;"

and alleged that the shipper obtained the benefit of the reduced rate applicable to the value fixed in the written contract governing the shipment of horses; that the shipment was made under the tariffs so filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that the rates and liability of the company were governed by the act of Congress. The plaintiff contended that the complete contract was made in the oral arrangement without reference to or mention of any particular rate or the value of the stock other than that it was a race horse. Taking the most favorable view of the testimony for the plaintiff, it tended to show that after the car had started from the place of loading, an agent of the company presented to the plaintiff a printed contract made in conformity to the schedules filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, but without calling his attention to its provisions, without [179] informing him of its contents, and without procuring his assent to the terms therein stated, although he admitted executing the contract.

The trial court charged the jury over the exception of the railway company that if they found that at the time of the shipment the contract was entered into by the plaintiff and the defendant, and that the plaintiff represented to the defendant that the horse did not exceed $100 in value, and that the defendant relied upon the representation, and gave a rate less than the regular one for that class of shipment, and was misled by such misrepresentation, and induced to fix a lower rate than the regular one, and if they found the defendant guilty of negligence, they were limited in their findings to the sum of $100; but that if they found that the representation was not made by the plaintiff, but was arbitrarily inserted by defendant, or printed in its contract when signed, then the plaintiff was not bound by the limitation, and they should find his actual damages. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $1,500.

Digitized by Google

Upon writ of error to the supreme court of Oklahoma that court affirmed the judgment rendered in the district court and held:

"Where a shipment of live stock is made under a verbal contract, and where every move made, every step taken toward a shipment, up to and including a complete consignment and surrender of control by the shipper, the starting in transit of the shipment, and the assumption of liability for negligence by the carrier, is all under and pursuant to such parol agreement, and after this a printed shipping contract is presented to the shipper to sign, he has the right to assume that it embodies the terms of the verbal agreement, and the carrier will not be permitted to escape liabilities accruing to the shipper under the verbal agreement by reason of certain provisions in the written contract at variance with the parol contract, [180] unless the shipper's attention has been called to such provisions and fair opportunity given him to assent to same."

It is thus seen that the defendant specially set up a defense under the interstate commerce act, a Federal statute, which, if denied to him, was an adverse ruling of Federal right which would warrant the bringing of the case to this court from the highest court of a state under former § 709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575), now § 237 of the Judicial Code [36 Stat. at L. 1156, chap. 231, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 227]. It is apparent from the foregoing statement that the Federal question now presented involves the ruling of the state court denying to the carrier the benefit of the interstate commerce act, a compliance with which was set up in the amended answer and supported by testimony tending to show the truth of the allegations thereof.

That the effect of the Carmack amendment to the Hepburn act (§ 20, act of June 29, 1906, 34 Stat. at L. 584, chap. 3591, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1288) was to give to the Federal jurisdiction control over interstate commerce, and to make supreme the Federal legislation regulating liability for property transported by common carriers in interstate commerce, has been so recently and repeatedly decided in this court as to require now little more than a reference to some of the cases. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Carl, 227 U. S. 639, 57 L. ed. 683, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harriman Bros. 227 U. S. 657, 57 L. ed. 690, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Cramer, 232 U. S. 490, ante, 697, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Great Northern R. Co. v. O'Connor, 232 U. S. 508, ante, 703, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 380. We regard these cases as settling the proposition that the shipper as well as the carrier is bound to take notice of the filed tariff rates, and that so long as they remain operative they are conclusive as to the rights of the parties, in the absence of facts or circumstances showing an attempt at rebating or false billing. Great Northern R. Co. v. O'Connor, supra. To give to the oral agreement upon which the suit was brought, the prevailing [181] effect allowed in this case by the charge in the trial court, affirmed by the judgment of the supreme court of the state, would be to allow a special contract to have binding force and effect though made in violation of the filed schedules which were to be equally observed by the shipper and carrier. If oral agreements of this character can be sustained, then the door is open to all manner of special contracts, departing from the schedules and rates filed with the Commission. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Carl, 227 U. S. 652, 57 L. ed. 688, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391. To maintain the supremacy of such oral agreements would defeat the primary purposes of the interstate commerce act, so often affirmed in the decisions of this court, which are to require equal treatment of all shippers and the charging of but one rate to all, and that the one filed as required by the act.

The supreme court of the state in this case affirmed the instruction of the trial court upon which the case was given to the jury, and held that the oral contract was binding unless it was affirmatively shown that the written agreement, based upon the filed schedules, was brought to the knowledge of the shipper, and its terms assented to by him. This ruling ignored the terms of shipment set forth in the schedules and permitted recovery upon the contract made in violation thereof in a case where there was no proof that there was an attempt to violate the published rates by a fraudulent agreement showing rebating or false billing of the property, and no circumstances which would take the case out of the rulings heretofore made by this court as to the binding effect of such filed schedules and the duty of the shipper to take notice of the terms of such rates, and the obligation to be bound thereby, in the absence of the exceptional circumstances to which we have referred.

It follows that the ruling of the state court, affirmed in the Supreme Court, deprived the plaintiff in error of rights secured by the Federal statute, when properly [182] construed, which were set up and claimed in the state court.

Digitized by Google

Judgment reversed and case remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Mr. Justice Pitney dissents.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA, & SANTA FE RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
H. F. MOORE, C. E. Robinson, and S. H. Smith.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 182, 183.)

This case is governed by the decision in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Robinson, ante, 901.

[No. 451.]

Argued February 26, 1914. Decided April 6, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Oklahoma to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the District Court of Lincoln County, in that state, against a carrier for the entire damage to an interstate shipment, contrary to the carrier's published rates on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

See same case below, 36 Okla. 433, 129 Pac. 24.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. S. T. Bledsoe argued the cause, and, with Messrs. J. R. Cottingham and George M. Green, filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. John B. Daish argued the cause, and Messrs. H. H. Smith and J. W. Beller filed a brief for defendants in error.

For contentions of counsel, see their briefs as reported in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Robinson, ante, 901.

Mr. Justice Day delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendants in error brought suit in the district court of Lincoln county, Oklahoma, against the plaintiff in error, for damages, alleging that they were the owners of a certain race horse which had been shipped by [183] them over the railroad of the plaintiff in error from Kansas City, Missouri, to Lawrence, Kansas, and which had been injured in transit. There was a verdict and judgment for the defendants in error, which was affirmed by the supreme court of Oklahoma (36 Okla. 433, 129 Pac.

It appears that the horse, for the injury to which this suit was brought, was a part of the shipment under which the horse in the previous case of Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Robinson, just decided [233 U. S. 173, ante, 901, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 556], was carried as therein stated, and that the facts relating to the shipment and cause of injury set forth in the present case are the same as those in the Robinson Case. The supreme court of Oklahoma, after noticing the fact that, except as to the value of the animals, the extent of their injuries and the resulting damages, the two cases were identical in every material feature, followed the Robinson Case.

The present case, therefore, is controlled by the decision in the Robinson Case, and from what we have there said it follows that the judgment here under review must be reversed.

Judgment reversed and case remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Mr. Justice Pitney dissents.

---

[184] ANNIE MYERS, Petitioner,
v.
PITTSBURGH COAL COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 184–195.)

Trial by jury — infringement of right — directing judgment non obstante veredicto.

1. A Federal circuit court of appeals cannot, consistently with the right to trial by jury guaranteed by the Federal Constitution, reverse the judgment below, entered on a verdict in favor of plaintiff, on the ground that, upon the facts shown, such plaintiff had not made out the right to recover, without directing a new trial, and without sending the case back to the court below for that purpose.

[For other cases, see Jury, I. d, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

NOTE.—On the right to judgment non obstante veredicto because of the failure of proof—see note to Kirk v. Salt Lake City, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1021.

As to constitutional power of an appellate court upon reversing a judgment for plaintiff, entered upon the verdict of a jury, to direct judgment for defendant without remanding case for a new trial—see note to Gunn v. Union R. Co. 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 362.

Generally, on the right to jury trial—see notes to Supreme Justices v. Murray, 19 L. ed. U. S. 658; Eilenbecker v. District Ct. 33 L. ed. U. S. 801; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Shane, 39 L. ed. U. S. 727; and Perego v. Dodge, 41 L. ed. U. S. 113.

Digitized by Google

Appeal — review of verdict.

2. A verdict in favor of plaintiff in an action for death should not be set aside by an appellate court for the lack of evidence to support it unless the testimony was such that no recovery could be had upon the facts shown in any view which can properly be taken of them.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VIII. 1, 2, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Appeal — reversible error — refusal of requested instruction.

3. The refusal to give a requested instruction that a coal company's electrical hauling system was in charge of a mine foreman for whose negligence toward another employee the company would not be responsible is not error where the court submitted to the jury the question arising on the evidence whether the coal company had intrusted such electrical system to the mine foreman or to an electrical engineer not accountable to such mine foreman, distinctly telling them that if the mine foreman was in charge in this respect the company could not be held responsible, but that it would be responsible for the negligent operation of the electric hauling system if it was excluded from the control of the mine foreman.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 5127-5141, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Appeal — reversible error — refusal of requested instruction.

4. Failure to give an instruction requested by the defendant is not reversible error, where, if given, such instruction would only have served possibly to confuse the jury upon a point immaterial to the plaintiff's recovery, in view of the manner in which the case was submitted to the jury.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 5127-5141, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Appeal — question not raised below — failure to instruct.

5. Failure to charge as to the assumption of risk in an action for death cannot be regarded as error where the record does not show that the court was requested to make any charge on that subject, or that any exception was taken to the court's failure so to charge.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 4644-4646, 5135a-5138, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 816.]

Argued February 27, 1914. Decided April 6, 1914.

ON WRIT of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit to review a judgment which reversed a judgment of the District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania in favor of plaintiff in an action for death. Reversed, and judgment of District Court affirmed.

See same case below, 121 C. C. A. 427, 203 Fed. 221.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles K. Robinson argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Edward C. Goodwin and Frank H. Kennedy, filed a brief for petitioner:

The instincts of self-preservation and the presumption of care, in the absence of any evidence showing negligence on the part of John Myers, rebut any suggestion of injury or death from these causes.

McManamon v. Hanover Twp. 232 Pa. 446, 81 Atl. 440.

The company continued to operate its mines in defiance of the law, and must bear the consequences.

Bartlett Coal & Min. Co. v. Roach, 68 Ill. 175, 10 Mor. Min. Rep. 682; Saylor v. Chartiers Coal & Coke Co. 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 447; Bisko v. Braznell Gas Coal Co. 223 Pa. 190, 72 Atl. 504; Collins v. Northern Anthracite Coal Co. 241 Pa. 59, 88 Atl. 75; Kless v. Youghiogheny Min. Co. 18 Pa. Super. Ct. 551; Thomp. Neg. § 4184.

The presumption of life continued until the decedent was shown to be dead.

Greenl. Ev. 15th ed. p. 62, § 41.

Without regard to what is known as the mine foreman doctrine in Pennsylvania, the company is responsible for the negligence of the machine boss in permitting the car to be operated without the headlight burning.

Rau v. Pittsburg-Buffalo Co. 54 Pa. Super. Ct. 579.

The maintenance of a cross-over trolley wire at an insufficient height without any warning thereof was negligence on the part of the company.

Burns v. Vesta Coal Co. 223 Pa. 473, 72 Atl. 800; Pittsburgh, S. & N. R. Co. v. Lamphere, 69 C. C. A. 542, 137 Fed. 20.

The duty of the company to construct and provide a safe place in which to work is one which belongs primarily to the employer, and cannot be shifted to anyone else.

Vanesse v. Catsburg Coal Co. 159 Pa. 409, 28 Atl. 200; Lillie v. American Car & Foundry Co. 209 Pa. 161, 58 Atl. 272; Golden v. Mt. Jessup Coal Co. 225 Pa. 166, 73 Atl. 1103; Toward v. Meadow Lands Coal Co. 229 Pa. 556, 79 Atl. 129; Shoemaker v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 236 Pa. 123, 84 Atl. 763; Gulla v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co. 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 11; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Archibald, 170 U. S. 665, 671, 672, 42 L. ed. 1188, 1191, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 746; Simmons v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co. 240 Pa. 358, 87 Atl. 568.

If there is a divided authority between the mine foreman and some officer of the company, the company is liable. The mine foreman does not have to be entirely excluded from any authority in the premises to render the company liable.

Wolcutt v. Erie Coal & Coke Co. 226 Pa.

Digitized by Google

210, 75 Atl. 197; Reeder v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co. 231 Pa. 576, 80 Atl. 1121.

The coal company was negligent with respect both to the operation of the motor car without a burning headlight, and the construction and maintenance of a low cross wire without any warning thereof. These being the two causes which contributed to the death of John Myers, the question of proximate cause does not arise, the defendant company being responsible for both causes.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 6th ed. § 31; Burrell Twp. v. Uncapher, 117 Pa. 362, 2 Am. St. Rep. 664, 11 Atl. 619; Kraut v. Frankford & S. P. City Pass. R. Co. 160 Pa. 327, 28 Atl. 783.

It was a proper case for the jury to determine the question of the negligence of the company and the proximate cause of the death of John Myers.

Tucker v. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 227 Pa. 66, 75 Atl. 991; McManamon v. Hanover Twp. 232 Pa. 439, 81 Atl. 440; Donegan v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. 91 C. C. A. 555, 165 Fed. 869; Hammill v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 56 N. J. L. 378, 24 L.R.A. 531, 29 Atl. 151; Eagle Hose Co. v. Priceburg Electric Light Co. 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 581; Brenisholtz v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 229 Pa. 96, 78 Atl. 37; Madden v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 236 Pa. 108, 84 Atl. 672; Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 48 L. ed. 96, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 230; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Swearingen, 196 U. S. 51, 49 L. ed. 382, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 422; 4 Thomp. Neg. § 3857; Northern P. R. Co. v. Tynan, 56 C. C. A. 192, 119 Fed. 293; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408–417, 36 L. ed. 485–489, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679, 12 Am. Neg. Cas. 659; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 593–606, 36 L. ed. 829–833, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905; Gardner v. Michigan C. R. Co. 150 U. S. 349, 37 L. ed. 1107, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Archibald, 170 U. S. 665, 666, 42 L. ed. 1188, 1189, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 746.

Questions of negligence do not become questions of law except where all reasonable men must draw the same conclusions from the evidence, nor would a case be withdrawn from the jury unless the conclusion follows as a matter of law that no recovery can be had upon any view which can be properly taken of the facts which the evidence tends to establish.

Kreigh v. Westinghouse, C. K. & Co. 214 U. S. 249, 53 L. ed. 984, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 619.

The question of assumption of risk was attempted to be raised by counsel for the coal company for the first time in this case in the circuit court of appeals on the argument, although it was not included in the assignments of error.

Jones v. United States, 103 C. C. A. 142, 179 Fed. 592; Robinson v. Belt, 187 U. S. 41–50, 47 L. ed. 65–69, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 16; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Hensey, 205 U. S. 298–306, 51 L. ed. 811–814, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 535, 10 Ann. Cas. 572; Insurance Co. v. Mordecai, 22 How. 111, 117, 16 L. ed. 329, 331; First Nat. Bank v. Kentucky, 9 Wall. 353, 19 L. ed. 701; Wheeler v. Sedgwick, 94 U. S. 1, 24 L. ed. 31; Wilson v. McNamee, 102 U. S. 572, 26 L. ed. 234; Edwards v. Elliott, 21 Wall. 532, 22 L. ed. 487; Clark v. Fredericks (Davis v. Fredericks) 105 U. S. 4, 26 L. ed. 938.

The statute expressly provided that there should be kept on hand at all times, at the mines, a supply of materials necessary for the health and safety of the miners. This statute was manifestly violated by the superintendent, in failing to have a supply of carbons on hand, and under the decisions of the supreme court of Pennsylvania, the employee could not assume a risk which arose by reason of the failure of the company to comply with the terms of the statute.

Valjago v. Carnegie Steel Co. 226 Pa. 519, 75 Atl. 728; Jones v. American Caramel Co. 225 Pa. 644, 74 Atl. 613; Fegley v. Lycoming Rubber Co. 231 Pa. 446, 80 Atl. 870; Amiano v. Jones & L. Steel Co. 233 Pa. 523, 82 Atl. 780; Welsh v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 93 C. C. A. 101, 167 Fed. 465; Carstens Packing Co. v. Swinney, 108 C. C. A. 152, 186 Fed. 56.

The mine foreman, in assuming duties imposed upon him by the company, and not by the statute, is not a statutory officer to that extent, and his conduct in respect to these duties is controlling upon the company.

Wolcutt v. Erie Coal & Coke Co. 226 Pa. 204, 75 Atl. 197; Hood v. Connell Anthracite Min. Co. 231 Pa. 647, 81 Atl. 56.

In any event, the petitioner is entitled to a new trial.

Slocum v. New York L. Ins. Co. 228 U. S. 364, 57 L. ed. 879, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 523; Pedersen v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 229 U. S. 146, 153, 57 L. ed. 1125, 1128, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648, 3 N. C. C. A. 779.

Mr. Don Rose argued the cause, and, with Mr. Charles Marshall Johnston, filed a brief for respondent:

An employer is not bound to furnish for his workmen the safest methods, nor to furnish the best machinery and appliances, in order to save himself from responsibility for accidents resulting from their use. He is only required to furnish machinery, appliances, and equipment that are in ordinary use in the particular line of business, and the fact that they are in ordinary use is conclusive evidence that they are reasonably safe. Whatever methods or appliances or equipment are according to the general, usual, and ordinary course adopted by those in the same business are reasonably safe within the meaning of the law, and negligence of the employer can never be imputed from use of machinery, appliances, and equipment and methods in general use in the business.

Digitized by Google

Titus v. Bradford, B. & K. R. Co. 136 Pa. 618, 20 Am. St. Rep. 944, 20 Atl. 517; Kehler v. Schwenk, 144 Pa. 357, 13 L.R.A. 374, 27 Am. St. Rep. 633, 22 Atl. 910; Reese v. Hershey, 163 Pa. 257, 43 Am. St. Rep. 795, 29 Atl. 907; Keenan v. Waters, 181 Pa. 247, 37 Atl. 342, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 454; Higgins v. Fanning, 195 Pa. 599, 46 Atl. 102; Service v. Shoneman, 196 Pa. 63, 69 L.R.A. 792, 79 Am. St. Rep. 689, 46 Atl. 292, 8 Am. Neg. Rep. 130; McCarthy v. Shoneman, 198 Pa. 568, 48 Atl. 493; Boop v. Laurelton Lumber Co. 212 Pa. 523, 61 Atl. 1021; Fick v. Jackson, 3 Pa. Super. Ct. 386; Washington & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 135 U. S. 554, 34 L. ed. 235, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1044; Southern P. Co. v. Seley, 152 U. S. 145, 151, 38 L. ed. 391, 393, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 530; Kilpatrick v. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. 57 C. C. A. 255, 121 Fed. 11, 195 U. S. 624, 49 L. ed. 349, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 789; Law v. Central Dist. Printing & Teleg. Co. 140 Fed. 562; Keats v. National Heeling Mach. Co. 13 C. C. A. 221, 21 U. S. App. 656, 65 Fed. 940; Crawley v. The Edwin, 87 Fed. 540; Donegan v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. 91 C. C. A. 555, 165 Fed. 869.

The negligence of a state mine foreman whose competency has been certified to by the department of mines of the state of Pennsylvania is not the negligence of the mine operator.

Durkin v. Kingston Coal Co. 171 Pa. 193, 29 L.R.A. 808, 50 Am. St. Rep. 801, 33 Atl. 237; Wolcutt v. Erie Coal & Coke Co. 226 Pa. 210, 75 Atl. 197; Hall v. Simpson, 203 Pa. 146, 52 Atl. 4; Golden v. Mt. Jessup Coal Co. 225 Pa. 164, 73 Atl. 1103; D'Jorko v. Berwind-White Coal Min. Co. 231 Pa. 164, 80 Atl. 77; Rafferty v. National Min. Co. 234 Pa. 66, 82 Atl. 1089; Pittsburgh-Buffalo Co. v. Cheko, 124 C. C. A. 451, 204 Fed. 353.

The failure of a device to work is no evidence that it is out of repair or defective, and no evidence of negligence on the part of the master.

Southern R. Co. v. Carr, 82 C. C. A. 240, 153 Fed. 110; Patton v. Texas & P. R. Co. 179 U. S. 658, 45 L. ed. 361, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 275; Ash v. Verlenden Bros. 154 Pa. 246, 26 Atl. 374; Brunner v. Blaisdell Bros. 170 Pa. 25, 32 Atl. 607; Snodgrass v. Carnegie Steel Co. 173 Pa. 228, 33 Atl. 1104; Spees v. Boggs, 198 Pa. 112, 52 L.R.A. 933, 82 Am. St. Rep. 792, 47 Atl. 875; Surles v. Kistler, 202 Pa. 289, 51 Atl. 887; Bauman v. Best Mfg. Co. 284 Pa. 416, 83 Atl. 293; Shandrew v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 73 C. C. A. 430, 142 Fed. 320.

The jury cannot be permitted to guess, and the trial judge did permit them to guess, as to what caused Myers's death.

Alexander v. Pennsylvania Water Co. 201 Pa. 252, 50 Atl. 991; Marsh v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 206 Pa. 560, 56 Atl. 52; Allen v. Kingston Coal Co. 212 Pa. 55, 61 Atl. 572; Snodgrass v. Carnegie Steel Co. 173 Pa. 228, 33 Atl. 1104; Welsh v. Erie & W. Valley R. Co. 181 Pa. 461, 37 Atl. 513, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 777; Zeigler v. Simplex Foundation Co. 228 Pa. 64, 77 Atl. 239; Ault v. Cowan, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 616; Bube v. Weatherly, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 88; Cawley v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 44 Pa. Super. Ct. 340; Eigenbrodt v. Williamsport, 44 Pa. Super. Ct. 437; Fahey v. Steel Foundry Co. 19 Pa. Dist. R. 314; Rogers v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 88 Fed. 462; Minneapolis General Electric Co. v. Cronon, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 816, 92 C. C. A. 345, 166 Fed. 658; Clare v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 167 Mass. 39, 44 N. E. 1054; Leary v. Fitchburg R. Co. 173 Mass. 373, 53 N. E. 817; Warner v. St. Louis & M. River R. Co. 178 Mo. 125, 77 S. W. 67; Owen v. Illinois C. R. Co. 77 Miss. 142, 24 So. 899; Kenneson v. West End Street R. Co. 168 Mass. 1, 46 N. E. 114, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 446.

Mr. Justice Day delivered the opinion of the court:

Annie Myers brought an action in the United States circuit court for the western district of Pennsylvania to recover for the death of her husband, John Myers, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant, the Pittsburgh Coal Company. Under the law of Pennsylvania she might bring this action for the benefit of herself and minor children. A verdict was rendered against the Coal Company; on writ of error the case was reversed by the circuit court of appeals for the third circuit (121 C. C. A. 427, 203 Fed. 221), and it was brought here on writ of certiorari to that court.

The circuit court of appeals was of the opinion that upon the facts shown the plaintiff had not made out the right to recover, and the judgment was reversed without directing a new trial, and without sending the case back to the district court, which had succeeded to the jurisdiction of the circuit court, for that purpose. This was error within the doctrine of Slocum v. New York L. Ins. Co. 228 U. S. 364, 57 L. ed. 879, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 523; Pedersen v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 229 U. S. 146, 153, 57 L. ed. 1125, 1128, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648, 3 N. C. C. A. 779. It is further contended that, apart from the question just noticed, the circuit court of appeals erred in reversing the judgment of the district court, as it did, upon the ground that there was not sufficient testimony in the case to show that the deceased came to his death by the negligence charged in the petition. To determine this question involves a brief consideration of the facts in the case.

Digitized by Google

[190] John Myers, at the time of his death, was, and for several months had been, in the employ of the Coal Company as "snapper" or brakeman in underground operations, taking part in the movement of cars in and about the mine. It appears that on the morning of the injury, a train of empty coal cars, some thirty or forty in number, was being taken down the main entry and then further down a side entry into the mine, where the cars were to be subsequently distributed in the work. The manner of operation was that empty cars were hauled by a large electric motor car down the main entry to a side entry where a flying switch was made by which the motor car continued in the main entry beyond the junction of the side entry, and the cars ran down the side entry for a considerable distance, then, upon signal from Myers, whose duty it was to ride upon the rear car of the train, by the waving of his cap, which contained a lamp, or by the movement of his head with cap on, the motor car followed on down the entry, the purpose being to overtake the empty cars and distribute them in the mine. Down the side entry, about 157 feet from the main entry, was an automatic switch, which would turn the current into the trolley wire and permit the motor car to proceed farther into the mine. It was not working properly, and the motorman alighted and turned the switch by hand, returned to the motor car, and proceeded. Up to the time the motor car reached the automatic switch Myers had been seen signaling for the motor car to come on. Some distance further there was a branch of the trolley system running into another entry, and the trolley wire passed over the tracks in the side entry at a distance of about 5 feet, 7½ inches above the rail, making it necessary for one of ordinary height to remain seated in the car or to stoop down. The roof of the entry was about 9 feet above the rail at this point. There was no light at this switch, nor was the wire guarded in any [191] way. It also appears that because of ineffective carbons the headlight on the motor car was not burning, and had not been burning for several days; that requisition had been made upon the superintendent of the mine for new carbons, but that there were none at the mine. The motorman testified that when the headlight was burning he could see objects on the track clearly at a distance of 25 or 30 yards, and that he could stop his car in about 13 feet. Continuing on from the switch, as we have said, the motor car suddenly ran upon something, was stopped, and it was found that Myers had been run over. He was lying in the middle of the track with his head toward the motor and his cap, upright, with the light still burning, was lying beside the track. Myers' body was badly torn and mangled before the motor car could be stopped. His tongue was found to be moving, but he shortly died from his injuries. It was also shown that Myers was a man of unusual strength and vigor, twenty-nine years of age, and to all appearances in full health and strength shortly before the injury.

The trial court submitted the case to the jury to determine whether the defendant had failed to discharge its duty of using reasonable care to provide a proper and safe place for Myers to work; that is, in failing to provide adequate lights at a dangerous place, and permitting the motor car to be operated without the headlight, and also in permitting an exposed live trolley wire to cross the main track at insufficient elevation. An inspection of the record satisfies us that there was testimony enough in the case to carry these questions to the jury under the instructions which were given. The duty of the master to use reasonable diligence to provide a safe place for the employees to work, to carry on the occupation in which they are employed, is too well settled to require much consideration now. This duty is a continuing one, and discharged only when the master provides and maintains a place of that [192] character. Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 157 U. S. 72, 87, 39 L. ed. 624, 629, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 491; Union P. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 161 U. S. 451, 40 L. ed. 766, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 618; Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 48 L. ed. 96, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 230; Kreigh v. Westinghouse, C. K. & Co. 214 U. S. 249, 255, 53 L. ed. 984, 987, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 619. Under the case made, the jury might well have found that the overhead wire was hung too low for the safety of the men; that there was want of adequate light at this place; and that it was negligence to run the motor car into such a place without the light which it was its duty to provide. Where workmen are engaged in such mines in occupations more or less hazardous, it is the duty of the master to exercise reasonable care for their safety, and not to expose them to injury by use of dangerous appliances or unsafe places to work, when the exercise of due skill and care will make the appliances and places reasonably safe. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 66, 48 L. ed. 99, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 230; Kreigh v. Westinghouse, C. K. & Co. 214 U. S. 256, 53 L. ed. 988, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 619.

Digitized by Google

The opinion of the circuit court of appeals placed the reversal largely upon the want of definite proof as to the manner in which Myers came to his death,—whether by contact with the wire, or, if so, whether that merely disabled him or he was only injured or stunned by the fall, was seized with vertigo or other sudden sickness and fell from the car for that reason, or lost his footing by some unexpected movement of the train, or voluntarily got off the car and stumbled and fell upon the track, or became bewildered in the dark, and mistakenly supposed himself to be in a place of safety. The court held that all these situations were more or less probable, and, in the absence of some more accurate means of ascertaining the true condition in this regard, no recovery could be had for the wrongful causing of his death, and that an examination of the testimony brought the court to the conclusion that the jury should not have been permitted to guess as to the proximate cause of death. This question, however, was submitted to the jury and found against the defendant in [193] the trial court. Unless the testimony was such that no recovery can be had upon the facts shown in any view which can be properly taken of them, the verdict and judgment of the district court must be affirmed.

That there was ample testimony to carry the question of negligence to the jury we have already said, and in any case it cannot be said as a matter of law that there was no evidence tending to show that Myers came to his death by the negligence of defendant in one or more of the ways charged in the petition. Considering the testimony, as it must be considered in determining questions of this character in appellate courts, in its most favorable aspect to the plaintiff below, we think the jury might well have found, in view of the place at which the body of Myers was found near to the wire, with his cap gone from his head, that he came in contact with that wire and was thrown to the ground, and that he survived from contact with the wire, carrying the voltage which it did, and while in this situation was run over and killed by the approaching motor car, the operator being unable to see his body upon the track because of the want of efficient light in the entry or in the motor car. We think reasonable men, considering the testimony adduced, might well have come to this conclusion, and that it was error in the appellate court to set aside the verdict for entire absence of testimony upon this subject. In our opinion, the trial court properly left the question to the jury upon testimony which, when fairly considered, might sustain the verdict. See Humes v. United States, 170 U. S. 210, 42 L. ed. 1011, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 602.

As to the contention that the trial court erred in refusing to give the instruction requested by the Coal Company to the effect that the equipment and operation of the electric haulage plant and all persons employed in the mine were in charge and subject to the orders and direction of a duly qualified mine foreman, and that, if decedent's death occurred by reason of negligence, such negligence [194] was that of the mine foreman, and the Coal Company could not be held liable: The record shows that there was testimony tending to show that the electrical system was in charge of the electrician of the Coal Company employed as superintendent of electrical equipment, who had charge of the purchase, installation, care, operation, and maintenance of the electrical equipment used by the Company, and who was not subject to the mine foreman. The court submitted to the jury the question whether the Coal Company had committed to the mine foreman the electric system of hauling in the interior of the mine, or whether such system was in charge of an electrical engineer not accountable to the mine foreman, distinctly telling the jury that if the mine foreman was in charge in this respect, the company would not be responsible, but if they found that the Coal Company had excluded from the control of the mine foreman the electric haulage system, and that the negligence of the Coal Company was the direct and proximate cause of the death of the plaintiff's husband, there must be a recovery. The charge in this respect was as favorable as the company was entitled to have given.

As to the objection that the court erred in failing to give the instruction requested by the defendant concerning the operation of the automatic switch, to the effect that if it did not work on the trip on which the decedent was run over, and even if it was out of order, those conditions would not contribute to the running over of the decedent by the motor car or to his death, it is sufficient to say that the court in its charge to the jury did not submit a question of negligence specifically concerning this automatic switch and its effect if out of repair, and to have affirmed this point by giving it to the jury would only have served to possibly confuse the jury upon a point immaterial to the plaintiff's recovery, in view of the manner in which the case was given in charge to the jury.

Digitized by Google

[195] We have examined the charge and the exceptions thereto and requests for instructions, and are of opinion that the trial court fairly submitted the questions involved to the jury in a charge to which there was no substantial objection.

As to the suggestion that the deceased had assumed the risk of the want of proper appliances and the defective character of the light at the place in which he worked and was injured, we do not find that the court was requested to make any charge upon that subject, or that any exception was taken to the court's failure to charge as to assumption of risk. In that state of the record, the appellate court was not called upon to consider that question. See Humes v. United States, supra. The circuit court of appeals reversed the case for the reason, which we have stated, that there was an entire failure of adequate testimony to show that Myers came to his death by the negligence of the company in the manner charged. As we have said, we think that was an erroneous conclusion.

It follows that the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals must be reversed, and the judgment of the District Court affirmed, and the case remanded to that court.

ROBERT RUSSELL, Plff. in Err.,
v.
CHARLES E. SEBASTIAN.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 195–210.)

Constitutional law — impairing contract obligations — corporate franchise — acceptance of state's offer.

1. The grant resulting from the acceptance by the establishment of a plant devoted to the prescribed public use of the state's offer in Cal. Const. 1879, art. 11, § 19, as amended in 1885, to permit persons or corporations duly incorporated for the purpose "in any city where there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality for supplying the same with water or artificial light" to lay pipes in the city streets for the purpose specified, constituted a contract, and vested in the accepting individual or corporation a property right protected by the Federal Constitution against impairment.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, 1201–1213, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Constitutional law — impairing contract obligations — rights of gas company — extending mains in city streets.

2. The contract rights of a gas company accepting, by the establishment of its plant, the state's offer in Cal. Const. 1879, art. 11, § 19, as amended in 1885, of the privilege of laying pipes in the streets of a city so far as may "be necessary for introducing into and supplying such city and its inhabitants" with artificial light, include the continuing authority to lay its gas mains in streets not previously used in order to extend its distributing system within the city, subject only to the limitations which such constitutional provision prescribes; viz., local superintendence of the execution of the work, regulations for indemnity with respect to damage, and the right of the municipality to regulate the rates; and such rights were unconstitutionally impaired by the amendment of such constitutional provision on October 10, 1911, and by the municipal ordinances adopted in pursuance thereof, under which extensions cannot be made unless the gas company first seeks and obtains a franchise by purchase.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, 1212, 1213, 1435–1439, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 415.]

Argued January 6, 1914. Decided April 6, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of California to review a decree refusing relief by habeas corpus to a person arrested upon the charge of excavating in a city street in violation of a municipal ordinance. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

See same case below, 163 Cal. 668, 126 Pac. 875.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Oscar Trippet argued the cause, and, with Mr. H. H. Trowbridge, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The assignments of error present questions which this court is bound to decide for itself, independent of decisions of the state court.

Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. South Bend, 227 U. S. 544, 57 L. ed. 633, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 405, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 303.

The constitutionality of an ordinance of a city may be tested upon an application for a writ of habeas corpus.

Re Johnston, 137 Cal. 115, 69 Pac. 973.

Section 19 of article 11 of the Constitution of the state of California is a grant of NOTE.—On the privilege of using streets as a contract within the constitutional provision against impairing the obligation of contracts—see note to Clarksburg Electric Light Co. v. Clarksburg, 50 L.R.A. 142.

Digitized by Google

a franchise to any gas company that accepted the same prior to the amendment thereof, and such grant and the acceptance constituted a contract between the people of the state and such gas company, which could not be impaired by any change in the provisions of the Constitution.

People v. Stephens, 62 Cal. 209; Pereria v. Wallace, 129 Cal. 397, 62 Pac. 61; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Denver, 161 Fed. 769; People ex rel. Woodhaven Gaslight Co. v. Deehan, 153 N. Y. 528, 47 N. E. 787; Welsh v. Bramlet, 98 Cal. 224, 33 Pac. 66; McDonald v. Patterson, 54 Cal. 247; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hopkins, 160 Cal. 106, 116 Pac. 557; Re Johnston, 137 Cal. 115, 69 Pac. 973; Stockton Gas & Electric Co. v. San Joaquin County, 148 Cal. 314, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 174, 83 Pac. 54, 7 Ann. Cas. 511; Denninger v. Pomona, 145 Cal. 629, 79 Pac. 360; Bank of California v. San Francisco, 142 Cal. 276, 64 L.R.A. 918, 100 Am. St. Rep. 130, 75 Pac. 832; San Jose Gas Co. v. January, 57 Cal. 614; People ex rel. Spiers v. Lawley, 17 Cal. App. 331, 119 Pac. 1089; Nevada Bank v. Steinmitz, 64 Cal. 301, 30 Pac. 970; Workman v. Southern P. R. Co. 129 Cal. 536, 62 Pac. 185, 316; Merced Falls Gas & Electric Co. v. Turner, 2 Cal. App. 720, 84 Pac. 239; Southern P. Co. v. Portland, 177 Fed. 958; Indianapolis Cable Street R. Co. v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 127 Ind. 369, 8 L.R.A. 539, 24 N. E. 1054, 26 N. E. 893; Stanislaus County v. San Joaquin & K. River Canal & Irrig. Co. 192 U. S. 201, 206, 48 L. ed. 406, 410, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 241; Hovelman v. Kansas City Horse R. Co. 79 Mo. 639; State, Hudson Teleph. Co. Prosecutor, v. Jersey City, 49 N. J. L. 303, 60 Am. Rep. 619, 8 Atl. 123; Rutland Electric Light Co. v. Marble City Electric Light Co. 65 Vt. 377, 20 L.R.A. 821, 36 Am. St. Rep. 868, 26 Atl. 635; Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. v. Minneapolis, 81 Minn. 140, 53 L.R.A. 175, 83 N. W. 527, 86 N. W. 69; Boisé Artesian Hot & Cold Water Co. v. Boisé City, 230 U. S. 84, 57 L. ed. 1400, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 997; Pearsall v. Great Northern R. Co. 161 U. S. 646, 40 L. ed. 838, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 705; Capital City Light & Fuel Co. v. Tallahassee, 186 U. S. 401, 46 L. ed. 1219, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 866; Detroit v. Detroit & H. Pl. Road Co. 43 Mich. 140, 5 N. W. 275; Elliott, Roads & Streets, 2d ed. § 759; Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. South Bend, 227 U. S. 544, 57 L. ed. 633, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 405, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 303.

The franchise granted by the Constitution of 1879 to gas and water companies is what is generally spoken of as a "blanket" franchise. This kind of a franchise is a valid grant, and when accepted is as binding as if the corporation had occupied all the streets of the city.

People ex rel. Woodhaven Gaslight Co. v. Deehan, 153 N. Y. 528, 47 N. E. 787; San Antonio Traction Co. v. Altgelt, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 81 S. W. 106, 200 U. S. 304, 50 L. ed. 492, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 261; Houston v. Houston City Street R. Co. 83 Tex. 548, 29 Am. St. Rep. 679, 19 S. W. 127; Burlington v. Burlington Street R. Co. 49 Iowa, 144, 31 Am. Rep. 145; Nash v. Lowry, 37 Minn. 261, 33 N. W. 787; Citizens' Street R. Co. v. City R. Co. 56 Fed. 746, 64 Fed. 647; City R. Co. v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 166 U. S. 557, 41 L. ed. 1114, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 653; Indianapolis Cable Street R. Co. v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 127 Ind. 369, 8 L.R.A. 539, 24 N. E. 1061, 26 N. E. 893; Gulf City Street R. Co. v. Galveston City R. Co. 65 Tex. 502; Paterson & P. Horse R. Co. v. Paterson, 24 N. J. Eq. 158; People ex rel. Chicago v. Chicago Teleph. Co. 220 Ill. 238, 77 N. E. 245; Des Moines Street R. Co. v. Des Moines Broad-Gauge Street R. Co. 73 Iowa, 513, 33 N. W. 610, 35 N. W. 602; Des Moines City R. Co. v. Des Moines, 151 Fed. 854; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Denver, 161 Fed. 769, 120 C. C. A. 100, 201 Fed. 808; Elliott, Roads & Streets, 2d ed. 752.

The extent of the right conferred by the constitutional provision is not the quantum of the acceptance, but the quantum of the offer.

San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 568, 38 L.R.A. 460, 62 Am. St. Rep. 261, 50 Pac. 633; Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. South Bend, 227 U. S. 544, 57 L. ed. 633, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 405, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 303, 306; Nevada Bank v. Steinmitz, 64 Cal. 301, 30 Pac. 970; Workman v. Southern P. R. Co. 129 Cal. 536, 62 Pac. 185, 316; Merced Falls Gas & Electric Co. v. Turner, 2 Cal. App. 720, 84 Pac. 239; Elliott, Roads & Streets, 3d ed. § 949.

The obligations of a valid contract cannot be impaired by the adoption of a new Constitution any more than they can be by the enactment of a law by the legislature.

Ede v. Knight, 93 Cal. 159, 28 Pac. 860; McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. 608, 11 L. ed. 397; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hopkins, 160 Pac. 106, 116 Pac. 557.

The provision of the California Constitution that laws relating to corporations may at any time be altered, amended, or repealed has no application to the case at bar.

Capital City Light & Fuel Co. v. Tallahassee, 186 U. S. 401, 46 L. ed. 1219, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 866; Stanislaus County v. San Joaquin & K. River Canal & Irrig. Co. 192 U. S. 201, 48 L. ed. 406, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 241; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hopkins, 160 Cal. 106, 116 Pac. 563.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Garret W. McEnerney also argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Oscar Trippet and Warren Gregory, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

It is not denied that in 1909 the Economic Gas Company, here represented by the plaintiff in error, acquired, and that it now holds, a franchise to supply gas within the city of Los Angeles, and, to that end, to occupy streets of that city with its mains.

People v. Stephens, 62 Cal. 209; Pereria v. Wallace, 129 Cal. 397, 62 Pac. 61; Re Johnston, 137 Cal. 115, 69 Pac. 973; Denninger v. Pomona, 145 Cal. 629, 79 Pac. 360; Stockton Gas & Electric Co. v. San Joaquin County, 148 Cal. 313, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 174, 83 Pac. 54, 7 Ann. Cas. 511; Re Russell, 163 Cal. 668, 126 Pac. 875, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 152; People ex rel. Woodhaven Gaslight Co. v. Deehan, 153 N. Y. 528, 47 N. E. 787; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Chicago, 176 U. S. 646, 666, 44 L. ed. 622, 629, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509; Boisé Artesian Hot & Cold Water Co. v. Boisé City, 230 U. S. 84, 57 L. ed. 1400, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 997.

Once it is conceded that the Economic Gas Company possesses a franchise, it necessarily follows that it must possess the precise franchise offered in § 19 of article 11 of the Constitution of California, because the acceptance of a franchise must conform to the offer thereof, and such an offer can only be accepted in toto or rejected altogether.

7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 660; Rex v. Westwood, 7 Bing. 1, 2 Dow & C. 21, 4 Bligh. N. R. 213, 7 Dowl. & R. 267, 4 Barn. & C. 781; Collins v. Amsterdam Street R. Co. 76 App. Div. 252, 78 N. Y. Supp. 470; Brooklyn & R. B. R. Co. v. Long Island R. Co. 72 App. Div. 496, 76 N. Y. Supp. 777; Detroit v. Detroit City R. Co. 37 Mich. 558; Canastota Knife Co. v. Newington Tramway Co. 69 Conn. 146, 36 Atl. 1107; People v. Albany & V. R. Co. 24 N. Y. 263, 82 Am. Dec. 295.

It is no impeachment of the extent of the franchise that all rights conferred thereby are not exercised at once.

Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. South Bend, 227 U. S. 544, 57 L. ed. 633, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 405, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 303; Workman v. Southern P. R. Co. 129 Cal. 536, 62 Pac. 185, 316; Los Angeles v. Southern P. R. Co. 157 Cal. 363, 108 Pac. 65.

It is the established rule that the grantee of a franchise to furnish water or artificial light to a municipality and its inhabitants is in duty bound by contract to serve the whole public, and when necessary, having regard to the reasonable circumstances of the case, gradually to extend its plant so that the municipality and all of its inhabitants may be so served.

People ex rel. Woodhaven Gaslight Co. v. Deehan, 153 N. Y. 528, 47 N. E. 787; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Chicago, 176 U. S. 646, 665–667, 44 L. ed. 622, 629, 630, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509; Lukrawka v. Spring Valley Water Co. 15 Cal. App. Dec. 793; Dooley v. People's Water Co. (decided by Cal. R. Commission, Dec. 3, 1913); Des Moines Street R. Co. v. Des Moines Broad-Gauge Street R. Co. 73 Iowa, 513, 33 N. W. 610, 35 N. W. 602; People v. Detroit United R. Co. 162 Mich. 460, 139 Am. St. Rep. 582, 125 N. W. 700, 127 N. W. 748; Indiana R. Co. v. Hoffman, 161 Ind. 393, 69 N. E. 399, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 527; Truesdale v. Newport, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 840, 90 S. W. 589; St. Louis Gaslight Co. v. St. Louis, 46 Mo. 121; Carroll v. Silver Creek Natural Gas & Improv. Co. 153 App. Div. 630, 139 N. Y. Supp. 161; Tulsa Street R. Co. v. Oklahoma Union Traction Co. 27 Okla. 339, 113 Pac. 180; Los Angeles v. Pomeroy, 124 Cal. 649, 57 Pac. 585.

Section 19 of article 11 of the Constitution of California, adopted in 1879, was intended to grant, and in fact did grant, when accepted, franchises to supply water and artificial gas to the entire municipality and to all of its inhabitants; and the acceptance of the offer created correlative duties of an equal extent.

People ex rel. Woodhaven Gaslight Co. v. Deehan, 153 N. Y. 528, 47 N. E. 787; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Chicago, 176 U. S. 646, 666, 44 L. ed. 622, 629, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509; Boisé Artesian Hot & Cold Water Co. v. Boisé City, 230 U. S. 84, 57 L. ed. 1400, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 997; Louisville v. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 224 U. S. 649, 56 L. ed. 934, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 572; Owensboro v. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 230 U. S. 58, 57 L. ed. 1389, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 988.

The very nature of the subject-matter of franchises for supplying water and artificial light to municipalities presupposes that the grantee will, at the beginning, occupy but a small portion of the area in which the franchise is to operate, and later, with growth and expansion, will occupy the whole area.

San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 568, 50 L.R.A. 633, 62 Am. St. Rep. 261, 50 Pac. 633; Boisé Artesian Hot & Cold Water Co. v. Boisé City, 230 U. S. 84, 91, 57 L. ed. 1400, 1406, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 997; People ex rel. Woodhaven Gaslight Co. v. Deehan, 153 N. Y. 528, 47 N. E. 787; Re Consolidated Gas Co. 56 Misc. 49, 106 N. Y. Supp. 407; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Denver, 161 Fed. 769, affirmed in 120 C. C. A. 100, 201 Fed. 808.

Franchises of the type here involved are coextensive with the limits of the municipality.

People ex rel. Woodhaven Gaslight Co. v. Deehan, 153 N. Y. 528, 47 N. E. 787; Boisé

Digitized by Google

Artesian Hot & Cold Water Co. v. Boisé City, 230 U. S. 84, 57 L. ed. 1400, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 997; Quincy v. Bull, 106 Ill. 337; Williamsport Pass. R. Co. v. Williamsport, 120 Pa. 1, 13 Atl. 496; West Springfield v. West Springfield Aqueduct Co. 167 Mass. 128, 44 N. E. 1063; Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. v. Minneapolis, 81 Minn. 140, 53 L.R.A. 175, 83 N. W. 527, 86 N. W. 69; Duluth v. Duluth Teleph. Co. 84 Minn. 486, 87 N. W. 1127; Michigan Teleph. Co. v. St. Joseph, 121 Mich. 502, 47 L.R.A. 87, 80 Am. St. Rep. 520, 80 N. W. 383; State v. Nebraska Teleph. Co. 127 Iowa, 194, 103 N. W. 120; Com. ex rel. Bell Teleph. Co. v. Warwick, 185 Pa. 623, 40 Atl. 93.

The franchises granted by § 19 of article 11 of the Constitution of California, as it existed between 1879 and 1911, are in perpetuity.

Boisé Artesian Hot & Cold Water Co. v. Boisé City, 230 U. S. 84, 57 L. ed. 1400, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 997; Owensboro v. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 230 U. S. 58, 57 L. ed. 1389, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 988; Louisville v. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 224 U. S. 663, 56 L. ed. 940, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 572; San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 568, 38 L.R.A. 460, 62 Am. St. Rep. 261, 50 Pac. 633; South Pasadena v. Pasadena Land & Water Co. 152 Cal. 579, 93 Pac. 490; Atty. Gen. v. Haverhill Gaslight Co. 215 Mass. 394, 101 N. E. 1061.

The disposition of this case should be controlled by four recent decisions of this court.

Louisville v. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 224 U. S. 649, 56 L. ed. 934, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 572; Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. South Bend, 227 U. S. 544, 57 L. ed. 633, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 405, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 303; Owensboro v. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 230 U. S. 58, 57 L. ed. 1389, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 988; Boisé Artesian Hot & Cold Water Co. v. Boisé City, 230 U. S. 84, 57 L. ed. 1400, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 997. See also, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Chicago, 176 U. S. 646, 666, 44 L. ed. 622, 629, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509; People ex rel. Woodhaven Gaslight Co. v. Deehan, 153 N. Y. 528, 47 N. E. 787.

Messrs. Warren Gregory and W. H. Chickering also filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The Supreme Court of the United States will determine for itself the question of the existence or nonexistence of a contract in cases of this character, and whether the state law complained of impairs its obligation.

Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. South Bend, 227 U. S. 544, 57 L. ed. 633, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 405, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 303; Mercantile Trust & D. Co. v. Columbus, 203 U. S. 311, 51 L. ed. 198, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 83; Northern P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 208 U. S. 583, 590, 52 L. ed. 630, 633, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 341.

The provision of the Federal Constitution that no state shall pass a law impairing the obligation of a contract applies to a contract to which the state is a party, as well as to contracts wholly between individuals.

Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 87, 2 L. ed. 162; New Jersey v. Wilson, 7 Cranch, 164, 3 L. ed. 303; Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. 203, 21 L. ed. 447.

No question of regulation under the police power is here involved. The police power may reasonably regulate, but it cannot destroy, a vested contract or right.

Owensboro v. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 230 U. S. 58, 57 L. ed. 1389, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 988; Hawes v. Chicago, 158 Ill. 653, 30 L.R.A. 225, 42 N. E. 373.

The grant of a right to use the public streets of a municipality by laying down pipes and conduits therein in order to supply the city and its inhabitants with gaslight is not a mere license, but is the grant of a property right which is assignable and taxable as such.

Owensboro v. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 230 U. S. 58, 57 L. ed. 1389, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 988; Boisé Artesian Hot & Cold Water Co. v. Boisé City, 230 U. S. 84, 57 L. ed. 1400, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 997; Louisville v. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 224 U. S. 649, 56 L. ed. 934, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 572; New Orleans, S. F. & L. R. Co. v. Delamore, 114 U. S. 501, 29 L. ed. 244, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1009; Knoxville v. Africa, 23 C. C. A. 252, 47 U. S. App. 74, 246, 77 Fed. 501; Morristown v. East Tennessee Teleph. Co. 53 C. C. A. 132, 115 Fed. 307.

Although the grant contained in the California Constitution was general in character, and named no specific grantee or municipality, nevertheless, when accepted by any person or corporation, it became, as to that person or corporation, a special franchise or charter of equal effect as if the people of the state, through authorized authorities, had issued to that person or corporation a distinct franchise or charter.

Stanislaus County v. San Joaquin & K. River Canal & Irrig. Co. 192 U. S. 201, 48 L. ed. 406, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 241; East Saginaw Salt Mfg. Co. v. East Saginaw, 13 Wall. 373, 20 L. ed. 611.

A right given by the Constitution to lay down pipes and conduits in the streets of a city is constitutionally impaired by a subsequent change in the law, which exacts a franchise, or requires a payment to the city of a rental for such use and occupation.

Boisé Artesian Hot & Cold Water Co. v. Boisé City, 230 U. S. 84, 57 L. ed. 1400, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 997; Re Johnston, 137 Cal. 115, 69 Pac. 973.

Digitized by Google

The words "so far as may be necessary for introducing into and supplying such city and its inhabitants either with gaslight or other illuminating light" define and indicate with certainty the compelling motive and object of the enactment. The grant was designedly made coextensive with the object sought to be attained.

People v. Stephens, 62 Cal. 234.

It is not necessary that a privilege or license to use the streets of a city for the purpose of supplying its inhabitants with these necessities be accepted expressly by the grantee. It is only necessary to ascertain the intention of the parties, and the grantee, unless specifically required by the ordinance to accept it in writing, may do so by acting thereunder in a substantial manner.

Chicago Municipal Gaslight & Fuel Co. v. Lake, 130 Ill. 42, 22 N. E. 616; City R. Co. v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 166 U. S. 557, 568, 41 L. ed. 1114, 1118, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 653.

The Constitution contemplated a single grant for the purpose of supplying the city and its inhabitants with gaslight, and not a series of separate and detached grants.

Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. South Bend, 227 U. S. 544, 57 L. ed. 633, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 405, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 303; Africa v. Knoxville, 70 Fed. 729; Workman v. Southern P. R. Co. 129 Cal. 536, 62 Pac. 185, 316; Louisville v. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 224 U. S. 649, 56 L. ed. 934, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 572; Merced Falls Gas & Electric Co. v. Turner, 2 Cal. App. 720, 84 Pac. 239; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Denver, 161 Fed. 769; People's Pass. R. Co. v. Baldwin, 14 Phila. 231; Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Eisert, 127 Ind. 156, 26 N. E. 759; White v. Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. 122 Ind. 317, 7 L.R.A. 257, 23 N. E. 782; Indianapolis Cable Street R. Co. v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 127 Ind. 369, 8 L.R.A. 539, 24 N. E. 1054, 26 N. E. 893.

The obligation of this contract was impaired by the subsequent legislation because the value of the construction already made by the Economic Gas Company in the streets of Los Angeles was thereby lessened.

Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall. 129, 21 L. ed. 929; United States v. Lynah, 188 U. S. 469, 47 L. ed. 548, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 349; Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 166, 179, 20 L. ed. 557, 560; Pearsall v. Great Northern R. Co. 161 U. S. 646, 661, 40 L. ed. 838, 843, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 705; Denver v. Mercantile Trust Co. 120 C. C. A. 100, 201 Fed. 790; Des Moines Street R. Co. v. Des Moines Broad-Gauge Street R. Co. 73 Iowa, 513, 33 N. W. 610, 65 N. W. 602; People ex rel. Woodhaven Gaslight Co. v. Deehan, 153 N. Y. 528, 47 N. E. 787; Wyman, Pub. Service Corp. § 281; Pocatello Water Co. v. Standley, 7 Idaho, 155, 61 Pac. 518; Hovelman v. Kansas City Horse R. Co. 79 Mo. 632.

A company operating under a single franchise cannot discontinue its service on any particular part of its system, which, considered by itself, is unprofitable, because the operation of the system as a whole may show a profit.

Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. North Carolina Corp. Commission, 206 U. S. 1, 27, 51 L. ed. 933, 945, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585, 11 Ann. Cas. 398.

A public service corporation having begun the exercise of its franchise, its duty to properly serve the public thereunder is recognized and enforced. Mandamus will lie to compel the performance of this public duty.

Savannah & P. Canal Co. v. Shuman, 91 Ga. 400, 44 Am. St. Rep. 43, 17 S. E. 937; Union P. R. Co. v. Hall, 91 U. S. 343, 23 L. ed. 428.

The municipalities of California are not without a concrete and signal illustration of the consequences that must result from a construction that limits the public utility to the streets occupied prior to the constitutional change.

Lukrawka v. Spring Valley Water Co. 15 Cal. App. Dec. 793.

Messrs. Charles S. Wheeler and John F. Bowie filed a brief as amici curiæ:

Ordinarily a constitutional provision is to be liberally construed for the purpose of carrying into effect the object for which it was enacted. If the provision contains a grant or an offer of a grant for the purpose of inducing public service, the offer should be construed in case of doubt as sufficiently extensive to induce people to undertake the performance of the service.

Winona & St. P. R. Co. v. Barney, 113 U. S. 625, 28 L. ed. 1111, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 606; United States v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 150 U. S. 1, 14, 37 L. ed. 975, 979, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 11.

The object for which § 19 of article 11 was enacted has been repeatedly declared.

Stockton Gas & Electric Co. v. San Joaquin County, 148 Cal. 313, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 174, 83 Pac. 54, 7 Ann. Cas. 511; South Pasadena v. Pasadena Land & Water Co. 152 Cal. 594, 93 Pac. 490.

The true construction is that which will effectuate this object.

People v. Stephens, 62 Cal. 233.

By its own terms, the provision ceases to operate in any municipality which owns its own works. Accordingly, if the rule of strict construction be adopted, the court must declare that people were expected to understand by this provision that:

Digitized by Google

(1) An invitation was extended to enter into the field of public service, and assume the obligations to serve the city and its existing and future inhabitants;

(2) No monopoly was given, but competition with existing public service, protected by definite franchises, was desired;

(3) A person devoting property to this public service could never free it from the use to which it had been put;

(4) Though service of this class involved the investment of vast sums in inconvertible capital, yet the investment was invited upon a license revocable at will by the people of the state, and revocable by the construction of similar work by the municipality served.

It is obvious that such an interpretation would defeat the object for which this provision was adopted, and should therefore be rejected.

Louisville v. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 224 U. S. 663, 56 L. ed. 940, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 572.

Neither the common-law rules nor the statutes in force authorize resort to the rule of strict construction.

Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Kansas P. R. Co. 97 U. S. 497, 24 L. ed. 1097; King v. Samuel, 7 Cal. App. 69, 93 Pac. 391; Chitty, Prerogatives, 393, 394; People v. Stephens, 62 Cal. 233; United States v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 150 U. S. 14, 37 L. ed. 979, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 11; Clary v. Rolland, 24 Cal. 148.

The territorial extent of the franchise is so clearly defined that, as to this, there is no room for construction.

Clark v. Los Angeles, 160 Cal. 30, 116 Pac. 722.

Under elementary rules of law relating to contracts, a grant must be accepted according to its terms. The extent of the grant cannot be measured by the acceptance, certainly not by the evidence of acceptance. In order to constitute an acceptance, the assent to the terms of the offer must be absolute and unqualified.

Brogden v. Metropolitan R. Co. L. R. 2 App. Cas. 691, 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 94; Smith v. Hughes, L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 597, 40 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 221, 25 L. T. N. S. 329, 19 Week. Rep. 1059.

If the words of the grant itself, defining territorial extent, were open to interpretation, the cases and decisions showing the extent of the obligations assumed by the grant remove any uncertainty.

Lukrawka v. Spring Valley Water Co. 15 Cal. App. Dec. 796; Bothwell v. Consumers' Co. 13 Idaho, 568, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 485, 92 Pac. 533; Pocatello Water Co. v. Standley, 7 Idaho, 155, 61 Pac. 518; Hyndman Water Co. v. Hyndman, 7 Pa. Super. Ct. 191.

Even if the rule of strict construction were applicable, the decision could not be supported on the theory on which it is based.

Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. South Bend, 227 U. S. 544, 57 L. ed. 633, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 405, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 303; Bewley's Case, 9 Coke, 131a.

Messrs. Ray E. Nimmo and Albert Lee Stephens argued the cause, and, with Messrs. John W. Shenk and William J. Carr, filed a brief for defendant in error:

A lighting company which constructed its system under the provisions of § 19 of article 11 of the California Constitution, as it was formerly written, obtained no vested rights as to streets not used. As to such streets there could be no contract.

St. Louis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 149 U. S. 465, 37 L. ed. 810, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 990; Pearsall v. Great Northern R. Co. 161 U. S. 646, 40 L. ed. 838, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 705; Wisconsin & M. R. Co. v. Powers, 191 U. S. 379, 385, 48 L. ed. 229, 230, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 107; Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. v. St. Charles, 154 Fed. 386; Muskogee Nat. Teleph. Co. v. Hall, 4 Ind. Terr. 18, 64 S. W. 600; Belleville v. Citizens' Horse R. Co. 152 Ill. 184, 26 L.R.A. 681, 38 N. E. 584; Sunset Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Pasadena, 161 Cal. 265, 118 Pac. 796; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hopkins, 160 Cal. 106, 116 Pac. 557; Stockton Gas & Electric Co. v. San Joaquin County, 148 Cal. 315, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 174, 83 Pac. 54, 7 Ann. Cas. 511; 3 Elliott, Railroads, § 1079; Atchison Street R. Co. v. Nave, 38 Kan. 752, 5 Am. St. Rep. 800, 17 Pac. 587; Nellis, Street Railways, § 50; Blocki v. People, 220 Ill. 444, 77 N. E. 172; Re Russell, 163 Cal. 668, 126 Pac. 875, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 152; London Mills v. Fairview-London Teleph. Circuit, 105 Ill. App. 150.

There is no consideration or a promise where no benefit is conferred upon the one making it, nor detriment suffered by the promisee, and the promisor neither undertakes to do anything which he is not bound to do, nor forbears from doing something which he has a right to do.

9 Cyc. 316.

It makes no difference that the one to whom a naked promise was made has suffered damage by relying on it.

9 Cyc. 317.

The constitutional provision was permissive merely.

Wisconsin & M. R. Co. v. Powers, 191 U. S. 379, 385, 48 L. ed. 229, 230, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 107; St. Louis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 148 U. S. 92, 37 L. ed. 380, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 485; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Atty. Gen. 125 U. S. 530, 31 L. ed. 790, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep.

Digitized by Google

961; Stanislaus County v. San Joaquin & K. River Canal & Irrig. Co. 192 U. S. 201, 48 L. ed. 406, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 241.

An act or charter of incorporation is nothing more than an offer, to be consummated by acceptance.

Pearsall v. Great Northern R. Co. 161 U. S. 646, 40 L. ed. 838, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 705.

And until such acceptance, either by direct act or commencing business, the legislature can alter or repeal.

Capital City Light & Fuel Co. v. Tallahassee, 186 U. S. 401, 46 L. ed. 1219, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 866, affirming 42 Fla. 462, 28 So. 810; Cincinnati, H. & I. R. Co. v. Clifford, 113 Ind. 460, 15 N. E. 524; State use of Washington County v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 12 Gill & J. 399, 38 Am. Dec. 317; Nashville, M. & S. Turnp. Co. v. Davidson County, 106 Tenn. 258, 61 S. W. 68.

Corporations may not with impunity neglect to embrace the offers made by states and municipalities, and then later step into the courts and demand redress for the withdrawal of those offers.

Baltimore v. Baltimore Trust & G. Co. 166 U. S. 673, 41 L. ed. 1160, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 696.

It has been said that a franchise can be lost by nonuser (Given v. Wright, 117 U. S. 648, 29 L. ed. 1021, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 907). It must, then, follow, as a logical conclusion, that, if the franchise may be lost by nonuser, it cannot be acquired except by user.

Statutory grants are strictly construed.

Coosaw Min. Co. v. South Carolina, 144 U. S. 550, 36 L. ed. 537, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689; Hughes v. Northern P. R. Co. 9 Sawy. 313, 18 Fed. 106; La Plaisance Bay Harbor Co. v. Monroe, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 155; Scranton Electric Light & Heat Co. v. Scranton Illuminating Heat & P. Co. 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 628; State ex rel. Minneapolis v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 98 Minn. 380, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 298, 120 Am. St. Rep. 581, 108 N. W. 261, 8 Ann. Cas. 1047; Detroit United R. Co. v. Detroit, 229 U. S. 39, 57 L. ed. 1056, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 697; Clark v. Los Angeles, 160 Cal. 39, 116 Pac. 722; Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 543, 547, 9 L. ed. 822, 824; Helena Waterworks Co. v. Helena, 195 U. S. 392, 49 L. ed. 250, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40; Blair v. Chicago, 201 U. S. 400, 472, 50 L. ed. 801, 831, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Knoxville Water Co. v. Knoxville, 200 U. S. 33, 50 L. ed. 359, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224; Pearsall v. Great Northern R. Co. 161 U. S. 646, 664, 40 L. ed. 838, 844, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 705.

Governmental functions expressed in offers of franchises may be changed or enlarged until a definite right flowing from the offer has become permanently acquired by user.

Aspinwall v. Daviess County, 22 How. 364, 16 L. ed. 296; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 663, 4 L. ed. 665; Wadsworth v. Eau Claire County, 102 U. S. 534, 26 L. ed. 221; Pearsall v. Great Northern R. Co. 161 U. S. 646, 40 L. ed. 838, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 705; Norton v. Taxing Dist. 129 U. S. 479, 32 L. ed. 774, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 322; Concord v. Portsmouth Sav. Bank, 92 U. S. 625, 23 L. ed. 628; Falconer v. Buffalo & J. R. Co. 69 N. Y. 491; Covington & L. R. Co. v. Kenton County Ct. 12 B. Mon. 144; Wilson v. Polk County, 112 Mo. 126, 20 S. W. 469.

Until there was an actual physical occupancy of the streets, under the former § 19 of article 11, there could be no franchise. It was a mere offer.

Belleville v. Citizens' Horse R. Co. 152 Ill. 184, 26 L.R.A. 681, 38 N. E. 584; 3 Elliott, Railroads, § 1079; Atchison Street R. Co. v. Nave, 38 Kan. 752, 5 Am. St. Rep. 800, 17 Pac. 587; Indianapolis Cable Street R. Co. v. Citizens' Street R. Co. — Ind. —, 24 N. E. 1054.

Where a municipal corporation has granted to a street railway company a right to lay its tracks, but required it to have its railway in operation within a certain time, such grant is a mere license to lay, maintain, and operate such railway upon the conditions named in the ordinance, and should be construed most strongly against the grantee.

1 Nellis, Street Railways, § 50; Blocki v. People, 220 Ill. 444, 77 N. E. 172.

No perpetual rights vested in the Economic Gas Company.

St. Louis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 149 U. S. 465, 37 L. ed. 810, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 990; Wabash R. Co. v. Defiance, 167 U. S. 88, 42 L. ed. 87, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 748; Hodges v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 72 Miss. 910, 29 L.R.A. 770, 18 So. 84; St. Clair County Turnp. Co. v. Illinois, 96 U. S. 63, 24 L. ed. 651; Omaha Electric Light & P. Co. v. Omaha, 102 C. C. A. 601, 179 Fed. 455; Wyandotte Electric Light Co. v. Wyandotte, 124 Mich. 43, 82 N. W. 821; Virginia Canon Toll Road Co. v. People, 22 Colo. 429, 37 L.R.A. 711, 45 Pac. 398; Rock Island v. Central U. Teleph. Co. 132 Ill. App. 248; East Tennessee Teleph. Co. v. Frankfort, 141 Ky. 588, 133 S. W. 565.

Mr. Justice Hughes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to review a judgment in a habeas corpus proceeding. 163 Cal. 668, 126 Pac. 875.

The plaintiff in error was arrested, on or about February 27, 1912, [198] upon the charge of excavating in a street of Los Angeles in violation of a municipal ordinance. He was acting on behalf of the Economic Gas Company, a corporation supplying inhabitants of the city with gas, and was engaged in preparing to lay its pipes in a street which it had not previously used. The company was proceeding under a claim of right based upon § 19 of article 11 of the state Constitution of 1879, as amended in 1885, which was as follows:

Digitized by Google

"Sec. 19. In any city where there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality for supplying the same with water or artificial light, any individual, or any company duly incorporated for such purpose, under and by authority of the laws of this state, shall, under the direction of the superintendent of streets, or other officer in control thereof, and under such general regulations as the municipality may prescribe, for damages and indemnity for damages, have the privilege of using the public streets and thoroughfares thereof, and of laying down pipes and conduits therein, and connections therewith, so far as may be necessary for introducing into and supplying such city and its inhabitants either with gaslight or other illuminating light, or with fresh water for domestic and all other purposes, upon the condition that the municipal government shall have the right to regulate the charges thereof."

On October 10, 1911, this section of the Constitution was amended by the substitution of the following provision:

"Sec. 19. Any municipal corporation may establish and operate public works for supplying its inhabitants with light, water, power, heat, transportation, telephone service, or other means of communication. Such works may be acquired by original construction or by the purchase of existing works, including their franchises, or both. Persons or corporations may establish and operate [199] works for supplying the inhabitants with such services upon such conditions and under such regulations as the municipality may prescribe under its organic law, on condition that the municipal government shall have the right to regulate the charges thereof. A municipal corporation may furnish such services to inhabitants outside its boundaries, provided, that it shall not furnish any service to the inhabitants of any other municipality owning or operating works supplying the same service to such inhabitants without the consent of such other municipality, expressed by ordinance."

Thereupon, by ordinance approved October 26, 1911, the city of Los Angeles provided that no one should exercise any franchise or privilege to lay or maintain pipes or conduits in the streets for conveying gas, water, etc., without having obtained a grant from the city in accordance with the city's charter and the procedure prescribed by the ordinance, unless such person (or corporation) might be "entitled to do so by direct and unlimited authority of the Constitution of the state of California, or of the Constitution or laws of the United States." Another ordinance, approved February 21, 1912, declared that it should be unlawful to make any excavation in a street for any purpose without written permission from the board of public works, and that before issuing the permit the board should require the applicant to show legal authority to use the streets for the purpose specified.

It was under the last-mentioned ordinance that the charge was laid against the plaintiff in error. A writ of habeas corpus was sued out upon the ground that the municipal legislation, and the constitutional amendment upon which it rested, so far as they interfered with the extension by the company of its lighting system within the city, impaired the obligation of the company's contract with the state in violation of article I, § 10, of the Federal Constitution, and also deprived it of its property [200] without due process of law, and denied to it the equal protection of the laws, contrary to the 14th Amendment. The writ was returnable before the supreme court of the state.

It appeared that the Economic Gaslight Company was organized in 1909 and thereupon undertook to manufacture and distribute gas within the city for lighting purposes. As there were no gas works owned and controlled by the city, the constitutional provision (as it stood before the amendment of 1911) applied. Having acquired an existing plant, which had been established under the authority of that provision, the company had extended its system so that, prior to October 10, 1911, it had many miles of mains and was serving upwards of 3,500 customers. Its plant had been established with a view to an increased demand for its service. Its situation, as disclosed by the petition, which was not traversed, was thus described by the state court: The petitioner "shows that the works of said company were established and operated with the intent to supply gas in every section of the city, and to lay pipes in every street, if necessary for that purpose; that to this end it constructed works of a size sufficient to supply gas to a much larger territory than it was supplying prior to October 10, 1911, and had expended in so doing $100,000 more than would have been required for works to supply only the territory reached by its pipes at that date, that it had laid and maintained its pipes in many streets of the city, and had supplied gas thereby to the inhabitants in such streets for more than two years before said date; that prior to said date, said company had made contracts with many of the inhabitants of the city to supply gas to them, that said contracts were still in force, and that, in order to perform them, it must extend its mains into streets not before used by it. All its works before that date were constructed in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution existing [201] prior to said amendment, and in compliance with existing regulations and directions of the city authorities." The petition also sets forth that by reason of the increased expense of construction of its plant, as above stated, it could not supply at a profit the territory contiguous to the streets actually used by it at the date of the amendment, and that to confine its service to that territory would entail upon the company a constant loss of more than $2,000 a month.

Digitized by Google

It was further averred that on February 23, 1912, the company had applied to the board of public works for permission to excavate in the designated street, not theretofore occupied by it, for the purpose of extending its distributing system in accordance with the former provision of the Constitution, offering to comply with the general regulations of the city with respect to damages and indemnity for damages. The board informed the company that there were no general regulations on the subject with which it had not complied, but that the company would not be permitted to open the street, or to lay its pipes therein, unless it first sought and obtained a franchise by purchase in accordance with the ordinance of October 26, 1911. Thereupon, the company notified the board that it would extend its mains at the time and place stated, and requested the board to direct and superintend the work. It was proceeding accordingly to open a trench for its mains when it was stopped by the arrest of the plaintiff in error.

The supreme court of the state held that the constitutional amendment authorized the city to enact the ordinances in question and thus to prescribe the terms and conditions upon which franchises of the character described might thereafter be obtained and exercised. It was further decided that the grant under the former constitutional provision took effect only upon acceptance; that the only means whereby an effectual manifestation [202] of acceptance could be made was the act of taking possession and occupying the street for the purpose allowed; and hence, that the vested right of the Economic Gas Company, at the time the Constitution was changed, went only so far as its actual occupancy and use of the streets then extended. Concluding, upon this ground, that the company had no authority to lay pipes in the new street in order to extend its service into new territory within the city, the petitioner was remanded to custody. 163 Cal. 677, 678, 681, 126 Pac. 875.

It is at once apparent that the question thus raised does not concern the power of the city to supervise the execution of the work. That, as well as the authority to regulate rates, was expressly secured by the constitutional provision upon which the claim is founded. Nor does that provision permit the assertion of an exclusive franchise. The city may not only authorize others to compete, but it may compete itself. Madera Waterworks v. Madera, 228 U. S. 454, 57 L. ed. 915, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 571.

Within these recognized limits, the question remains as to the nature and extent of the right acquired by the company prior to the constitutional amendment,—a question which, in view of the appeal to the clause of the Federal Constitution prohibiting state legislation impairing the obligation of contracts, it is the duty of this court to determine for itself. Douglas v. Kentucky, 168 U. S. 488, 502, 42 L. ed. 553, 557, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 199; Northern P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 208 U. S. 583, 590, 52 L. ed. 630, 633, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 341; Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. South Bend, 227 U. S. 544, 551, 57 L. ed. 633, 638, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 405, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 303; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Goldsboro, 232 U. S. 548, 556, ante, 725, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 364.

1. Before the Constitution of 1879, the right to lay pipes in streets rested in grant from the legislature. It could delegate to the municipality, or itself exercise, the power. Experience had produced the conviction that this authority was abused; that favoritism had fostered monopolies and restrained the competition that was then thought to be desirable. In order to terminate these [203] evils, the unique plan was decided upon of making street franchises, for the purpose of supplying water and artificial light, the subject of direct grant by the Constitution itself without requiring any action on the part of the legislature to give it force. That this was the purpose and effect of § 19 of article 11 of the Constitution of 1879 was decided by the supreme court of California in People v. Stephens, 62 Cal. 209, shortly after that Constitution was adopted. See also Pereria v. Wallace, 129 Cal. 397, 62 Cal. 61; Re

Digitized by Google

Johnston, 137 Cal. 115, 69 Pac. 973; Denninger v. Recorder's Ct. 145 Cal. 629, 79 Pac. 360; Stockton Gas & Electric Co. v. San Joaquin County, 148 Cal. 313, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 174, 83 Pac. 54, 7 Ann. Cas. 511; South Pasadena v. Pasadena Land & Water Co. 152 Cal. 579, 93 Pac. 490.

It is pointed out that the language of the provision was general both with respect to persons and to places; that it embraced all the cities in the state; and that it did not provide for any formal or written acceptance of the offer. But the lack of a requirement of an acceptance of a formal character did not preclude acceptance in fact. Nor did the generality of the provision with respect to all persons and cities make it impossible for particular persons to acquire rights thereunder in particular cities. It is clear that the offer was to be taken distributively with respect to municipalities. It referred to "any city where there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality for supplying the same with water or artificial light;" and when as to such a city the offer was accepted, the grant became as effective as if it had been made specially to the accepting individual or corporation. See Stanislaus County v. San Joaquin & K. River Canal & Irrig. Co. 192 U. S. 201, 206, 48 L. ed. 406, 410, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 241.

In the case of Re Johnston, 137 Cal. 115, 69 Pac. 973, the court said: "In People v. Stephens, supra, the above section" (referring to § 19 of article 11 "was construed by this court to be a direct grant from the people to the persons therein designated of the right to lay pipes in the [204] streets of a city for the purposes specified, without waiting for legislative authority or being subject to any restrictions from that branch of the government. . . . The only limitations upon this privilege are those contained in the language in which it is granted,—viz., that the work shall be done 'under the direction of the superintendent of streets, or other officer in control thereof,' and 'under such general regulations as the municipality may prescribe for damages and indemnity for damages.'" As it was succinctly stated in Clark v. Los Angeles, 160 Cal. 30, 39, 116 Pac. 722: "The express grant made by § 19 is of the privilege, franchise, or easement to place in the public streets of a city the conduits necessary or convenient for the business of supplying light or power to the city and its inhabitants. It may be accepted by any person, or by any company duly incorporated to engage in that business."

When the voice of the state declares that it is bound if its offer is accepted, and the question simply is with respect to the scope of the obligation, we should be slow to conclude that only a revocable license was intended. Moreover, the provision plainly contemplated the establishment of a plant devoted to the described public service and an assumption of the duty to perform that service. That the grant, resulting from an acceptance of the state's offer, constituted a contract, and vested in the accepting individual or corporation a property right, protected by the Federal Constitution, is not open to dispute in view of the repeated decisions of this court. New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. P. & Mfg. Co. 115 U. S. 650, 660, 29 L. ed. 516, 520, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Rivers, 115 U. S. 674, 680, 681, 29 L. ed. 525, 527, 528, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Walla Walla v. Walla Walla Water Co. 172 U. S. 1, 9, 43 L. ed. 341, 345, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77; Louisville v. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 224 U. S. 649, 663, 664, 56 L. ed. 934, 940, 941, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 572; Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. South Bend, 227 U. S. 544, 552, 57 L. ed. 633, 639, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 405, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 303; Owensboro v. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 230 U. S. 58, 65, 57 L. ed. 1389, 1393, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 988; Boisé Artesian Hot & Cold Water Co. v. Boisé City, 230 U. S. 84, 90, 91, 57 L. ed. 1400, 1406, 1407, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 997; Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 1242.

[205] 2. The controversy in the present case relates to the extent to which the grant had become effective through acceptance. It is not contended that the change in the Constitution could disturb the company's rights in the streets used previous to the amendment; but it is insisted that such actual user measured the range of the acceptance of the grant, and hence defined the limits of its operation.

In support of this view, the established and salutary rule is invoked that public grants are to be construed strictly in favor of the public; that ambiguities are to be resolved against the grantee. Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 420, 546, 549, 9 L. ed. 773, 823, 824; Slidell v. Grandjean, 111 U. S. 412, 437, 28 L. ed. 321, 329, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475; Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Detroit R. Co. 171 U. S. 48, 54, 43 L. ed. 67, 71, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 732; Knoxville Water Co. v. Knoxville, 200 U. S. 34, 50 L. ed. 359, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224; Blair v. Chicago, 201 U. S. 400, 471, 50 L. ed. 801, 830, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427. It has often been stated, as one of the reasons for the rule, that statutes and ordinances embodying such grants are usually drawn by interested parties, and that it serves to frustrate efforts through the skilful use of words to accomplish purposes which are not apparent upon the face of the enactment. Dubuque & P. R. Co. v. Litchfield, 23 How. 66, 88, 16 L. ed. 500, 509; Slidell v. Grandjean, 111 U. S. 412, 437, 28 L. ed. 321, 329, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475; Blair v. Chicago, 201 U. S. 400, 471, 50 L. ed. 801, 830, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427. But it must also be recognized that this principle of construction does not deny to public offers a fair and reasonable interpretation, or justify the withholding of that which it satisfactorily appears the grant was intended to convey. Winona & St. P. R. Co. v. Barney, 113 U. S. 618, 625, 28 L. ed. 1109, 1111, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 606; United States v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 150 U. S. 1, 14, 37 L. ed. 975, 979, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 11; Minneapolis v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 215 U. S. 417, 427, 54 L. ed. 259, 267, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 118. Here, the provision was presented by a constitutional convention for adoption by the people as the deliberate expression of the policy of the state in order to secure the benefits of competition in public service, and it will not be questioned that it must receive, as the state court said in People v. Stephens, 62 Cal. p. 233, "a practical, common-sense construction."

Digitized by Google

[206] There is no ambiguity as to the scope of the offer. It was not simply of a privilege to maintain pipes actually laid, but to lay pipes so far as they might be required in order to effect an adequate distribution. The privilege was defined as that "of using the streets and thoroughfares thereof, and of laying down pipes and conduits therein, and connections therewith, so far as may be necessary for introducing into and supplying such city and its inhabitants either with gaslight, or other illuminating light, or with fresh water for domestic and all other purposes upon the condition that the municipal government shall have the right to regulate the charges thereof."

The breadth of the offer was commensurate with the requirements of the undertaking which was invited. The service to which the provision referred was a community service. It was the supply of a municipality—which had no municipal works—with water or light. This would involve, in the case of waterworks, the securing of sources of supply, the provision of conduits for conveying the water to the municipality, and the permanent investment in the construction of reservoirs with suitable storage capacity; and, in the case of gasworks, the establishment of a manufacturing plant on a scale large enough to meet the demands that could reasonably be anticipated. But waterworks and gasworks constructed to furnish a municipality with water or light would, of course, be useless without distributing systems; and the right of laying in the streets the mains needed to carry the water or gas to the inhabitants of the community was absolutely essential to the undertaking as a practical enterprise. This, the constitutional provision recognized. It was clearly designed to stop favoritism in granting such rights, not to withhold them. It is not to be supposed that it was expected that waterworks and gasworks of the character required to supply cities would be erected without grants of franchises to use the streets for laying the necessary [207] distributing pipes. Boisé Artesian Hot & Cold Water Co. v. Boisé City, 230 U. S. 84, 91, 57 L. ed. 1400, 1406, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 997. The scheme of the constitutional provision was not to make it impossible to secure such grants, or to restrict the street rights to be acquired, but, as already stated, to end the existing abuses by making these grants directly through the Constitution itself, instead of permitting them to be made by the legislature, or by municipalities acting under legislative authority. People v. Stephens, supra.

In deciding upon the policy of making these direct grants it was for the state to determine their terms and their scope; it could have imposed whatever conditions it saw fit to impose. But it did not attempt to confine the privilege to particular streets or areas, or to make the laying of the necessary pipes conditional upon the renewal of the offer street by street, or foot by foot, as the pipes were put in the ground. The people of the state decided that local superintendence of the execution of the work, regulations and indemnity with respect to damages, and the continuing authority of the municipality to regulate rates, would be adequate protection. It was upon this basis that the state offered the privilege of laying pipes in the streets so far as might "be necessary for introducing into and supplying such city and its inhabitants" either with water or light, as the case might be. The individual or corporation undertaking to supply the city with water or light was put in the same position as though such individual or corporation had received a special grant of the described street rights in the city which was to be served. Such a grant would not be one of several distinct and separate franchises. When accepted and acted upon it would become binding—not foot by foot, as pipes were laid, but as an entirety, in accordance with its purpose and express language. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. South Bend, 227 U. S. 544, 555, 556, 57 L. ed. 633, 640, 641, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 405, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 303.

It is urged that, in the absence of any provision for [208] formal or written acceptance, the only way the offer could be accepted was by use of the streets, and that for this reason the rights of the company could not extend beyond the length of its pipes in place. But this is to say that the offer as made could not be accepted at all; that the right to lay pipes could not in any event be acquired. It is to assume, despite the explicit statement of the constitutional provision, that the investment in extensive plants—in the construction of reservoirs, and in the building of manufacturing works—was invited without any assurance that the laying of the distributing system could be completed, or that it could even be extended far enough to afford any chance of profit. It would be to deny the right offered, although essential to the efficacy of the enterprise, and in its place to give a restricted and inadequate right, which was unexpressed.

Digitized by Google

In view of the nature of the undertaking in contemplation, and of the terms of the offer, we find no ground for the conclusion that each act of laying pipe was to constitute an acceptance pro tanto. We think that the offer was intended to be accepted in its entirety as made, and that acceptance lay in conduct committing the person accepting to the described service. The offer was made to the individual or corporation undertaking to serve the municipality, and when that service was entered upon and the individual or corporation had changed its position beyond recall, we cannot doubt that the offer was accepted. City R. Co. v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 166 U. S. 557, 568, 41 L. ed. 1114, 1118, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 653; Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. South Bend, supra. In this view, the grant embraced the right to lay the extensions that were needed in furnishing the supply within the city.

This construction of the constitutional provision is the only one that is compatible with the existence of the duty which it was intended, as it seems to us, that the recipient of the state's grant should assume. The service, as has been said, was a community service. Incident to the [209] undertaking in response to the state's offer was the obligation to provide facilities that were reasonably adequate. Lumbard v. Stearns, 4 Cush. 60; Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Kelly, 87 C. C. A. 268, 160 Fed. 316, 324, 15 Ann. Cas. 1210; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. North Carolina Corp. Commission, 206 U. S. 1, 27, 51 L. ed. 933, 945, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585, 11 Ann. Cas. 398; People ex rel. Woodhaven Gaslight Co. v. Deehan, 153 N. Y. 528, 533, 47 N. E. 787; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 1129. It would not be said that either a water company or a gas company, establishing its service under the constitutional grant, could stop its mains at its pleasure and withhold its supply by refusing to extend its distributing conduits so as to meet the reasonable requirements of the community. But this duty and the right to serve, embracing the right under the granted privilege to install the means of service, were correlative.

In People ex rel. Woodhaven Gaslight Co. v. Deehan, 153 N. Y. 528, 533, 47 N. E. 787 (approved in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Chicago, 176 U. S. 646, 666, 44 L. ed. 622, 629, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509), a grant of authority to lay conduits for conveying gas through the streets of a town, so as to render service to the people of the town, was held to extend as a property right not only to the streets then existing, but to those subsequently opened. The court said: "It is well known that business enterprises such as the relator is engaged in are based upon calculations of future growth and expansion. A franchise for supplying gas not only confers a privilege, but imposes an obligation upon the corporation to serve the public in a reasonable way. The relator is bound to supply gas to the people of the town upon certain conditions and under certain circumstances, and it would be most unjust to give such a construction to the consent as to disable it from performing its obligations. It cannot reasonably be contended that the relator is obliged to apply for a new grant whenever a new street is opened or an old one extended, as would be the case if the consent applied only to the situation existing when made. When the right to use the streets has been [210] once granted in general terms to a corporation engaged in supplying gas for public and private use, such grant necessarily contemplates that new streets are to be opened and old ones extended from time to time, and so the privilege may be exercised in the new streets as well as in the old."

As to the question of fact, the present case presents no controversy. It was averred, and not denied, that the works of the gas company were established and operated with the intent to furnish gas throughout the city, wherever needed, and that this enterprise had been diligently prosecuted; that a large investment had been made in a plant which was adequate to supply a much greater territory than that reached by the distributing mains when the amendment of 1911 was adopted; that the expense of this installation made it impossible to supply at a profit the limited territory contiguous to the streets then actually occupied by the company; and that if it were confined in its service to that territory it would sustain a constant loss. The company, by its investment, had irrevocably committed itself to the undertaking, and its acceptance of the offer of the right to lay its pipes, so far as necessary to serve the municipality, was complete.

Digitized by Google

We conclude that the constitutional amendment of 1911, and the municipal ordinances adopted in pursuance thereof, were ineffectual to impair this right, and that the company was entitled to extend its mains for the purpose of distributing its supply to the inhabitants of the city, subject to the conditions set forth in the constitutional provision as it stood before the amendment.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

---

[211] UNION LIME COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
CHICAGO & NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY and Eden Independent Lime & Stone Company.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 211–223.)

Constitutional law — due process of law — taking private property for private use — railway spur track.

Private property is not taken for private use contrary to U. S. Const., 14th Amend., by the exercise of the power of eminent domain under Wis. Stat. § 1831a to condemn the land needed for the extension of a railroad spur track ordered by the state railroad commission conformably to §§ 1797–11m, 1797–12n, although such extension may be for the present benefit of a single industry which is to bear the initial cost, where the state courts declare the use to be a public one, holding that, subject to the subsequent equitable division of initial cost, the track is at the service of the public and constitutes an integral part of the railroad system.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, 445–449; Eminent Domain, I. d, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 529.]

Argued March 2, 1914. Decided April 6, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Wisconsin to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Circuit Court of Fond du Lac County, in that state, ordering the condemnation of the land needed for the extension of a railroad spur track. Affirmed.

See same case below, 152 Wis. 633, 140 N. W. 346.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George Lines argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Willet M. Spooner, Fred C. Ellis, and Louis Quarles, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The statute in question is invalid because it does not declare in terms or by necessary implication that the use for which it authorizes the taking of private property is a public one.

1 Lewis, Em. Dom. 3d ed. §§ 251, 371, 388; 3 Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 1039; Hairston v. Danville & W. R. Co. 208 U. S. 598, 52 L. ed. 637, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 331, 13 Ann. Cas. 1008; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Central Stock Yards Co. 212 U. S. 132–144, 53 L. ed. 441–446, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 246; Security Trust & S. V. Co. v. Lexington, 203 U. S. 323–333, 51 L. ed. 204–208, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 87; Nickey v. Stearns Ranchos Co. 126 Cal. 150, 58 Pac. 459; Reeves v. The Treasurer, 8 Ohio St. 333; Gifford Drainage Dist. v. Shroer, 145 Ind. 572, 44 N. E. 636; Fleming v. Hull, 73 Iowa, 598, 35 N. W. 673; Re Tuthill, 163 N. Y. 133, 49 L.R.A. 781, 79 Am. St. Rep. 574, 57 N. E. 303; Atty. Gen. v. Eau Claire, 37 Wis. 437; Re Theresa Drainage Dist. 90 Wis. 304, 63 N. W. 288; Eubank v. Richmond, 226 U. S. 137, 57 L. ed. 156, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1123, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 76.

While the Federal courts are bound by the decision of a state court as to the proper construction or meaning of a state statute or Constitution, they are not bound by the decision of the court as to the statute's purpose or effect. A decision involving the latter invokes general reasoning and applies general principles, and is not a local question.

Olcott v. Fond du Lac County, 16 Wall. 678, 21 L. ed. 382; Pana v. Bowler, 107 U. S. 529, 27 L. ed. 424, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 704; Great Southern Fire Proof Hotel Co. v. Jones, 193 U. S. 532, 48 L. ed. 778, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 576; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 38 L. ed. 896, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1108; Venice v. Murdock, 92 U. S. 494, 23 L. ed. 583.

No such statute as that of Wisconsin which is here involved has ever been before this court for consideration as to its validity, and after diligent search we have been unable to find its parallel in any other state. The cases which have hitherto come to this court for review of the action of state courts in upholding the taking of private property under the power of eminent domain have been of two classes:

NOTE.—On the right of railroad to condemn private property for spur tracks or sidings—see notes to Henderson v. Lexington, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 129; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Petty, 20 L.R.A. 434; Pere Marquette R. Co. v. United States Gypsum Co. 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 181; and Riley v. Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co. 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 636.

Digitized by Google

(1) Those arising under general condemnation statutes, in which class of cases the question has been whether the facts of the particular case showed a taking for some recognized public use.

Hairston v. Danville & W. R. Co. 208 U. S. 598, 52 L. ed. 637, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 331, 13 Ann. Cas. 1008; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Porter, 43 Minn. 527, 46 N. W. 75; Ulmer v. Lime Rock R. Co. 98 Me. 579, 66 L.R.A. 387, 57 Atl. 1001; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Morehouse, 112 Wis. 1, 56 L.R.A. 240, 88 Am. St. Rep. 918, 87 N. W. 849; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Petty, 57 Ark. 359, 20 L.R.A. 434, 21 S. W. 884; South Chicago R. Co. v. Dix, 109 Ill. 237; Bedford Quarries Co. v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. 175 Ind. 303, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 641, 94 N. E. 326; Contra Costa Coal Mines R. Co. v. Moss, 23 Cal. 323; State, De Camp, Prosecutor, v. Hibernia Underground R. Co. 47 N. J. L. 43.

(2) Those arising under special statutes declaring the furtherance of some particular branch of industry to be a public use, in aid of which the power of eminent domain may be exercised.

Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 41 L. ed. 369, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56; Clark v. Nash, 198 U. S. 361, 49 L. ed. 1085, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 676, 4 Ann. Cas. 1171; Strickley v. Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. 200 U. S. 527, 50 L. ed. 581, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301, 4 Ann. Cas. 1174; Bankhead v. Brown, 25 Iowa, 540; New Central Coal Co. v. George's Creek Coal & I. Co. 37 Md. 537; Phillips v. Watson, 63 Iowa, 28, 18 N. W. 659; Chesapeake Stone Co. v. Moreland, 126 Ky. 656, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 479, 104 S. W. 762; Kipp v. Davis-Daly Copper Co. 41 Mont. 509, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 666, 110 Pac. 237, 21 Ann. Cas. 1372; Zircle v. Southern R. Co. 102 Va. 17, 102 Am. St. Rep 805, 45 S. E. 802.

This court has repeatedly denied the right to take property under the power of eminent domain, or of taxation for the promotion of industrial enterprise, or the development of natural resources, except under unusual circumstances.

Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455; Cole v. La Grange, 113 U. S. 1, 28 L. ed. 896, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 416; Kaukauna Water Power Co. v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 142 U. S. 254, 273. 35 L. ed. 1004, 1010, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 173; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 164 U. S. 403, 41 L. ed. 489, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 130; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 217 U. S. 196, 54 L. ed. 727, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461, 18 Ann. Cas. 989.

This Wisconsin statute can only be upheld upon the theory that the words "public use" mean the same as "public interest" or "public advantage." This the decisions of this court deny, in harmony with the great weight of authority upon the subject.

Lewis, Em. Dom. 3d ed. §§ 256-258; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 655.

Under the Wisconsin statutes the duty of the railroad to build a sidetrack, and its right to condemn a right of way therefor, are not limited to any particular class of industries, and are not made to depend upon the relation of such industries to the public welfare, but extend to all industries and enterprises alike, great and small, and depend only upon their necessities. This, under the authorities above cited, is not a proper basis upon which to rest the exercise of governmental power, and in all cases which we have found, involving statutes which made private interest the test, they have been declared invalid.

Re Tuthill, 163 N. Y. 133, 49 L.R.A. 781, 79 Am. St. Rep. 574, 57 N. E. 303; Apex Transp. Co. v. Garbade, 32 Or. 582, 62 L.R.A. 513, 52 Pac. 573, 54 Pac. 367, 882; Healy Lumber Co. v. Morris, 33 Wash. 490, 63 L.R.A. 820, 99 Am. St. Rep. 964, 74 Pac. 681; Pere Marquette R. Co. v. United States Gypsum Co. 154 Mich. 290, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 181, 117 N. W. 733; Ryerson v. Brown, 35 Mich. 333, 24 Am. Rep. 564; Berrien Springs Water Power Co. v. Berrien Circuit Judge, 133 Mich. 48, 103 Am. St. Rep. 438, 94 N. W. 379; Great Western Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. Hawkins, 30 Ind. App. 557, 66 N. E. 765; Welton v. Dickson, 38 Neb. 767, 22 L.R.A. 496, 41 Am. St. Rep. 771, 57 N. W. 559; Fleming v. Hull, 73 Iowa, 598, 35 N. W. 673; Alfred Phosphate Co. v. Duck River Phosphate Co. 120 Tenn. 260, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 701, 113 S. W. 410; Donnelly v. Decker, 58 Wis. 461, 46 Am. Rep. 637, 17 N. W. 389; Priewe v. Wisconsin State Land & Improv. Co. 93 Wis. 534, 33 L.R.A. 645, 67 N. W. 918; Maginnis v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. 112 Wis. 385, 69 L.R.A. 833, 88 N. W. 300; Huber v. Merkel, 117 Wis. 355, 62 L.R.A. 589, 98 Am. St. Rep. 933, 94 N. W. 354.

It is essential to the validity of proceedings for the taking of land for spur track purposes that the track, when built, will in fact be accessible to the public. The mere theoretical right of the public to use it is not sufficient.

Hairston v. Danville & W. R. Co. 208 U. S. 598, 52 L. ed. 637, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 331, 13 Ann. Cas. 1008; State, De Camp, Prosecutor, v. Hibernia Underground R. Co. 47 N. J. L. 43; Wallman v. R. Connor Co. 115 Wis. 617, 92 N. W. 374.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Edward M. Smart argued the cause, and, with Mr. Edward M. Hyzer, filed a brief for defendant in error the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company:

Assuming that the judgment of condemnation in this case was in a proceeding initiated by the railroad, and based upon a sustainable finding of necessity, then, under the statutes and facts in the case, is it clearly shown that the taking is not for a "public use?"

Hairston v. Danville & W. R. Co. 208 U. S. 598, 52 L. ed. 637, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 331, 13 Ann. Cas. 1008; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Morehouse, 112 Wis. 1, 56 L.R.A. 240, 88 Am. St. Rep. 918, 87 N. W. 849; Union Lime Co. v. Railroad Commission, 144 Wis. 523, 129 N. W. 605; Illinois C. R. Co. v. East Sioux Falls Quarry Co. — S. D. —, 144 N. W. 727.

Is it material that the statute authorized the railroad commission, after hearing and investigation, upon a finding that the spur track is practically indispensable to a particular establishment, to order the railroad company to condemn?

Mr. Walter Drew argued the cause, and, with Mr. L. E. Lurvey, filed a brief for defendant in error the Eden Independent Lime & Stone Company:

The legislature of the state, either directly or through an administrative officer, board, or commission, as in this case, has authority under its police power to regulate railroads.

Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. North Carolina Corp. Commission, 206 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 933, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585, 11 Ann. Cas. 398; Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 45 L. ed. 194, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 115.

The matter of spur tracks is a recognized class of railroad service which the railroad should provide as a matter of public duty, for a reasonable compensation.

Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Suffern, 129 Ill. 274, 21 N. E. 824; People ex rel. Spruance v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 57 Ill. 436; State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 115 Minn. 51, 131 N. W. 859; North Carolina Corp. Commission v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 140 N. C. 239, 52 S. E. 941.

The only question then left to consider is whether the regulation is reasonable; and that is as to whether the order in the case before the court, and under the circumstances of this case, is reasonable.

Missouri P. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 217 U. S. 196, 54 L. ed. 727, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461, 18 Ann. Cas. 989; Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 45 L. ed. 194, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 115; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. North Carolina Corp. Commission, 206 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 933, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585, 11 Ann. Cas. 398.

The use is public under decisions in condemnation cases.

15 Cyc. 590; Kansas City, S. & G. R. Co. v. Louisiana Western R. Co. 116 La. 178, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 512, 40 So. 627, 7 Ann. Cas. 835; 2 Elliott, Railroads, 2d ed. p. 515; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Petty, 57 Ark. 359, 20 L.R.A. 434, 21 S. W. 884; Roberts v. Williams, 15 Ark. 43; Madera R. Co. v. Raymond Granite Co. 3 Cal. App. 668, 87 Pac. 27; Ulmer v. Lime Rock R. Co. 98 Me. 581, 66 L.R.A. 387, 57 Atl. 1001; People ex rel. Rinne v. Blocki, 203 Ill. 363, 67 N. E. 809; South Chicago R. Co. v. Dix, 109 Ill. 237; Bedford Quarries Co. v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. 175 Ind. 303, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 641, 94 N. E. 326; Dubuque & S. C. R. Co. v. Ft. Dodge, D. M. & S. R. Co. 146 Iowa, 666, 125 N. W. 672; Dotson v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 81 Kan. 816, 106 Pac. 1045; Hurd v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 73 Kan. 83, 84 Pac. 553; Chesapeake Stone Co. v. Moreland, 126 Ky. 656, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 479, 104 S. W. 762; Riley v. Louisville, H. & St. L. R. Co. 142 Ky. 67, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 636, 133 S. W. 971, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 230; Kansas City, S. & G. R. Co. v. Louisiana Western R. Co. 116 La. 178, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 512, 40 So. 627, 7 Ann. Cas. 831; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Morehouse, 112 Wis. 1, 56 L.R.A. 240, 88 Am. St. Rep. 918, 87 N. W. 849; Ulmer v. Lime Rock R. Co. 98 Me. 579, 66 L.R.A. 387, 57 Atl. 1001; New Central Coal Co. v. George's Creek Coal & I. Co. 37 Md. 537; State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 115 Minn. 51, 131 N. W. 859; Kettle River R. Co. v. Eastern R. Co. 41 Minn. 461, 6 L.R.A. 111, 43 N. W. 469; Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. v. Porter, 43 Minn. 527, 46 N. W. 75; Kansas & T. Coal R. Co. v. Northwestern Coal & Min. Co. 161 Mo. 288, 51 L.R.A. 936, 84 Am. St. Rep. 717, 61 S. W. 684; Kipp v. Davis-Daly Copper Co. 41 Mont. 509, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 666, 110 Pac. 237, 21 Ann. Cas. 1372; Butte, A. & P. R. Co. v. Montana Union R. Co. 16 Mont. 504, 31 L.R.A. 298, 50 Am. St. Rep. 508, 41 Pac. 232; National Docks R. Co. v. Central R. Co. 32 N. J. Eq. 755; Watson v. New York C. R. Co. 47 N. Y. 157; State ex rel. Sumner v. Toledo R. & Terminal Co. 24 Ohio C. C. 321; Wolfard v. Fisher, 48 Or. 479, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 991, 84 Pac. 850, 87 Pac. 530; Rochester & P. Coal & I. Co. v. Berwind-White Coal Min. Co. 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 104; Rudolph v. Pennsylvania Schuylkill Valley R. Co. 166 Pa. 430, 31 Atl. 131; Getz v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 105 Pa. 547; Alfred Phosphate Co. v. Duck River Phosphate Co. 120 Tenn. 260, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 701, 113 S. W. 410; Ryan v. Louisville & N. Terminal Co. 102 Tenn. 111, 45 L.R.A. 303, 50 S. W. 744; Stockdale v. Rio Grande Western R. Co. 28 Utah, 201, 77 Pac. 849; Zircle v. Southern R. Co. 102 Va. 17, 102 Am. St. Rep. 805, 45 S. E. 802; State ex rel. Ami Co. v. Superior Ct. 42 Wash. 675, 85 Pac. 669; Caretta R. Co. v. Virginia-Pocanontas Coal Co. 62 W. Va. 185, 57 S. E. 401; State, Re Camp, Prosecutor, v. Hibernia Underground R. Co. 47 N. J. L. 43; Hairston v. Danville & W. R. Co. 208 U. S. 598, 52 L. ed. 637, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 331, 13 Ann. Cas. 1008; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Morehouse, 112 Wis. 1, 56 L.R.A. 240, 88 Am. St. Rep. 918, 87 N. W. 852.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Walter Drew and W. C. Owen, Attorney General of Wisconsin, filed a brief as amici curiæ:

A common carrier railroad is a public highway, a public purpose, a public use, a public institution.

Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 135 U. S. 641, 657, 34 L. ed. 295, 302, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 965; Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Pullman Southern Car Co. 139 U. S. 79, 90, 35 L. ed. 97, 101, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 490; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 166 U. S. 290, 332, 41 L. ed. 107, 1024, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 544, 42 L. ed. 819, 848, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 285, 301, 43 L. ed. 702, 708, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 465; Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 296, 297, 45 L. ed. 194, 199, 200, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 115; Donovan v. Pennsylvania Co. 199 U. S. 279, 293, 50 L. ed. 192, 199, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 91; Olcott v. Fond du Lac County, 16 Wall. 678, 694, 695, 21 L. ed. 382, 388; Queensbury v. Culver, 19 Wall. 83, 91, 22 L. ed. 100, 104; Pine Grove Twp. v. Talcott, 19 Wall. 666, 676, 677, 22 L. ed. 227, 233.

A spur track belonging to a public railroad, connected with and used as a part of its railroad system, is a public use for which property may be taken under the power of eminent domain.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Morehouse, 112 Wis. 1, 56 L.R.A. 240, 88 Am. St. Rep. 918, 87 N. W. 849; State, De Camp, Prosecutor, v. Hibernia Underground R. Co. 47 N. J. L. 43; Contra Costa Coal Mines R. Co. v. Moss, 23 Cal. 323; Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. v. Porter, 43 Minn. 527, 46 N. W. 75; Dietrich v. Murdock, 42 Mo. 279; Brown v. Corey, 43 Pa. 495, 5 Mor. Min. Rep. 368; Boyd v. Negley, 40 Pa. 377; Waddell's Appeal, 84 Pa. 90; New Central Coal Co. v. George's Creek Coal & I. Co. 37 Md. 537; Phillips v. Watson, 63 Iowa, 28, 18 N. W. 659; Lower v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 59 Iowa, 563, 13 N. W. 718; National Docks R. Co. v. Central R. Co. 32 N. J. Eq. 755; Ex parte Bacot, 36 S. C. 125, 16 L.R.A. 586, 15 S. E. 204; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Petty, 57 Ark. 359, 20 L.R.A. 434, 21 S. W. 884; Bridal Veil Lumbering Co. v. Johnson, 30 Or. 205, 34 L.R.A. 368, 60 Am. St. Rep. 818, 46 Pac. 790; Butte, A. & P. R. Co. v. Montana Union R. Co. 16 Mont. 504, 31 L.R.A. 298, 50 Am. St. Rep. 508, 41 Pac. 232; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 171; Mills, Em. Dom. § 14; Randolph, Em. Dom. § 54; Union Lime Co. v. Railroad Commission, 144 Wis. 523, 129 N. W. 605.

Under the statutes of the state of Wisconsin, which provide that railroads shall pay taxes and license fees to the state, and that the property of railway companies "necessarily used in the operation of such railroads" shall be exempt from local taxation, the same rule is applied to determine what railroad property is used for public railroad purposes.

State ex rel. Northwestern Coal R. Co. v. Willcuts, 140 Wis. 448, 122 N. W. 1048.

The public use of a spur track operated as a part of a public railroad system, even though it be constructed to a single industry, is real and substantial. Connected with the main line, it is accessible over the main line to all receivers or forwarders of freight on the entire system, and to those on connecting systems.

State, De Camp, Prosecutor, v. Hibernia Underground R. Co. 47 N. J. L. 43; Union Lime Co. v. Railroad Commission, 144 Wis. 523, 129 N. W. 605; Chicago, Dock & Canal Co. v. Garrity, 115 Ill. 155, 3 N. E. 448; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 195 U. S. 540, 570, 49 L. ed. 312, 323, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133, 1 Ann. Cas. 517.

A railroad, having once established a public facility like a spur track, cannot at its own pleasure abandon it so long as there is any reasonable demand for its continued operation.

Rex v. Severn & W. R. Co. 2 Barn. & Ald. 646, 21 Revised Rep. 433, 7 Eng. Rul. Cas. 445; People v. Albany & V. R. Co. 37 Barb. 222; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Suffern, 129 Ill. 274, 21 N. E. 824.

Whether property sought to be taken by a railroad is taken for a public use is determined by the situation resulting from the employment of the property for the construction proposed, the public rights arising with respect to it, and the public duties with which it becomes by law impressed. These criteria have been, by this court, applied upon the question of public use with respect to a railroad under a grant by Congress of the power of eminent domain.

Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 135 U. S. 641, 657, 658, 34 L. ed. 295, 302, 303, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 965.

Digitized by Google

Whether the use is public depends upon the right of the public to use under the Constitution and laws of the state, as construed by its courts. The construction adopted by the state court upon a local question will be deferred to by this court. Hairston v. Danville & W. R. Co. 208 U. S. 598, 52 L. ed. 637, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 331, 13 Ann. Cas. 1008; Fairfield v. Gallatin County, 100 U. S. 47, 52, 25 L. ed. 544, 546, 9 Rose's Notes (U. S.) 784; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 183 U. S. 503, 508, 46 L. ed. 298, 302, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 95.

Mr. Justice Hughes delivered the opinion of the court:

This proceeding was instituted by the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company to take land for a spur, the construction of which had been ordered by the Railroad Commission of the state. The land was owned by the Union Lime Company, the plaintiff in error, and the application was resisted upon the ground that it was sought to be taken for a private, and not a public, use, and therefore that its taking would operate as a deprivation of the property of the plaintiff in error without due process of law, and a denial to it of the equal protection of the laws, contrary to the 14th Amendment. This contention was overruled by the supreme court of the state, which affirmed the judgment in condemnation (152 Wis. 633, 140 N. W. 346), and this writ of error was sued out.

The proposed track was to form an extension of an [217] existing spur, owned and operated by the railway company, which leads from its main line to the quarries and kilns of two lime companies; one of these companies is the plaintiff in error, at whose works the spur now terminates. Beyond these works lie those of the Eden Independent Lime & Stone Company, which applied to the Railroad Commission for an order requiring the railway company to extend the spur to its plant. It is provided by § 1797-11m of the Wisconsin Statutes that every railroad shall acquire the necessary right of way and shall construct and operate a "reasonably adequate and suitable spur track" whenever it does not necessarily exceed 3 miles in length, is "practically indispensable to the successful operation" of any existing or proposed manufacturing establishment, and is not "unusually unsafe" or "unreasonably harmful." The railroad may require the person, firm, or corporation primarily to be served thereby to pay the legitimate cost of acquiring, by condemnation or purchase, the necessary right of way for the spur and of its construction, as determined by the Railroad Commission. By § 1797-12n, the Commission is authorized to receive complaints, in case of the failure or refusal of railroads to perform the prescribed duty, and to make appropriate orders.† Acting under these sections, the [218] Commission directed the railway company to extend the spur as desired by the Eden Company, and thereupon this proceeding was brought to condemn the land for the right of way.

The assignments of error come to the single point,—as to the character of the use. The state, through its highest court, declares the use to be a public one, and we should accept its judgment unless it is clearly without ground. [219] Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 160, 41 L. ed. 369, 389, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56; Clark v. Nash, 198 U. S. 361, 369, 49 L. ed. 1085, 1088, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 676, 4 Ann. Cas. 1171; Strickley v. Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. 200 U. S. 527, 531, 50 L. ed. 581, 583, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301, 4 Ann. Cas. 1174; Offield v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 203 U. S. 372, 377, 51 L. ed. 231, 236, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 72; Hairston v. Danville & W. R. Co. 208 U. S. 598, 607, 52 L. ed. 637, 641, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 331, 13 Ann. Cas. 1008. The general authority to exercise the power of eminent domain for the construction of spurs is found in § 1831a, Stat. (Wis.), which provides: "Every railway company . . . may build, maintain, and operate branches and spur tracks from its road or any branch thereof to and upon the grounds of any mill, elevator, storehouse, warehouse, dock, wharf, pier, manufacturing establishment, lumber yard, coal dock, or other industry or enterprise, . . . ; and every such company may acquire by purchase or condemnation in the manner provided in this chapter for the acquisition of real estate for railway purposes, other than for its main track, all necessary roadways and rights [220] of way

† These sections, enacted by chapter 352 of the Laws of 1907, as amended by chapter 481 of the Laws of 1909 and chapter 137 of the Laws of 1911, are as follows:

"Section 1797-11m. 1. Every railroad shall acquire the necessary rights of way for, and shall construct, connect, maintain, and operate a reasonably adequate and suitable spur track, whenever such spur track does not necessarily exceed 3 miles in length, is practically indispensable to the successful operation of any existing or proposed mill, elevator, storehouse, warehouse, dock, wharf, pier, manufacturing establishment, lumber yard, coal dock, or other industry or enterprise, and its construction and operation is not unusually unsafe and dangerous and is not unreasonably harmful to public interest.

"2. Such railroad may require the person or persons, firm, corporations, or association primarily to be served thereby, to pay the legitimate cost and expense of acquiring, for such branches, spur tracks," etc. The supreme court of the state sustained the validity of this provision in Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Morehouse, 112 Wis. 1, 56 L.R.A. 240, 88 Am. St. Rep. 918, 87 N. W. 849, holding (p. 11) that "the fact that a spur track may run to a single industry does not militate against the devotion of the property thereto being a public use thereof, so long as the purpose of maintaining the track is to serve all persons who may desire it, and all can demand, as a right, to be served, without discrimination."

Digitized by Google

In Union Lime Co. v. Railroad Commission, 144 Wis. 523, 129 N. W. 605, the court had under review an earlier order of the Commission requiring the railroad to build the spur extension now in question, and, while that order was set aside because a proper hearing had not been afforded, it was held that the spur would not be a private track, but would be devoted to a public use. In the view that the tracks contemplated would be of this character, the court sustained the statutes (§§ 1797–11m and 1797–12n), under which the Commission was proceeding, against the same objections that are now raised. The court said (id. pp. 533, 534): "Such track when built becomes a portion of the trackage of the railroad. The fact that its initial cost is borne by the party primarily to be served, with provisions for subsequent equitable division of such cost, does not make it a private track nor change the nature of its use. Over it the products of the industry find their way into the markets of the world, and every consumer is directly interested in the lessened cost of such products resulting from the building and operation thereof. That these products are supplied by a single owner, or by a limited number of owners, affects the extent, and not the nature, of its use,—the track is none the less a part of the avenue through which the commodities reach the public. Subject to the equitable division of initial cost, the track is at the service of the public as much as any other, and it constitutes an integral part of the railroad system. The [221] duty to maintain and operate it rests upon the railroad. Except that it is relieved of the initial cost of right of way and construction, the track stands in the same relation to it by condemnation or purchase, the necessary rights of way for such spur track, and of constructing the same, as shall be determined in separate items by the commission, in which case the total estimated cost thereof shall be deposited with the railroad before the railroad shall be required to incur any expense whatever therefor; provided, however, that when any such person, firm, or corporation, or association shall be required by the commission to deposit with the railroad the total estimated cost, as herein provided, such person, firm, corporation, or association may offer or cause to be offered a proposition in writing to such railroad, to construct such spur track, such proposition to be accompanied by a surety company bond, running to such railroad, and conditioned upon the construction of such spur track in a good and workmanlike manner, according to the plans and specifications provided by such railroad, and approved by the commission, and deposit with such railroad the estimated cost of the necessary right of way for such spur track; and whenever such proposition and security company bond shall be offered, the person, firm, corporation, or association primarily to be served thereby shall not be required to deposit as herein provided, as the total estimated cost of such construction, an amount in excess of the estimated cost of the right of way, and the total amount stated in such written proposition. Provided further that before the railroad shall be required to incur any expense whatever in the construction of said spur track, the person, firm, corporation, or association primarily to be served thereby shall give the railroad a bond to be approved by the commission as to form, amount, and surety, securing the railroad against loss on account of any expense incurred beyond the amount so deposited with the railroad.

"3. Whenever such spur track is so connected with the main line, as herein provided, at the expense of the owner of such proposed or existing mill, elevator, storehouse, warehouse, dock, wharf, pier, manufacturing establishment, lumber yard, coal dock, or other industry or enterprise, and any person, firm, corporation, or association shall desire a connection with such spur track, application therefor shall be made to the commission, and such person, firm, corporation, or association shall be required to pay to the person, firm, corporation, or association that shall have paid or contributed to the primary cost and expense of acquiring the right of way for such original spur track, and of constructing the same, an equitable proportion thereof, to be determined by the commission, upon such application and notice, to the persons, firms, corporations, or associations that have paid or contributed toward the original cost and expense of acquiring the right of way of constructing the same.

"Section 1797–12n. In case of the failure or refusal of any railroad to comply with any of the provisions of §§ 1797–11m and 1797–12n, the person or persons, firm, corporation, or association aggrieved thereby, may file a complaint with the railroad commission, setting forth the facts, and the said commission shall investigate and determine the matter in controversy, in accordance with the provisions of §§ 1797–1 to 1797–38, inclusive, and any order it shall make in said proceeding shall have the same force and effect as an order in any other proceeding properly begun under and by virtue of the provisions of said sections."

Digitized by Google

that any other portion of its track does. The owner of the industry obtains no interest in or control over it beyond that of being served by it equally with anyone else who may desire to use it." This decision was followed in the present case. 152 Wis. 633, 637, 140 N. W. 346.

Assailing this ruling, the plaintiff in error insists that the statute itself (referring to §§ 1797-11m and 1797-12n) authorizes the taking of property for private use, and that, being unconstitutional on its face, it cannot form the basis of any valid proceeding. It is said, in the first place, that the statute does not declare in terms or by necessary implication that the use for which the property is to be taken is a public use. But this contention is plainly without merit, as the statute must be read in the light of the construction placed upon it by the state court, which has held the described use to be a public one. The judgment of the state, so far as it is competent to determine the matter, has thus been fully expressed.

It is urged, further, that the statute is necessarily invalid because it establishes as the criterion of the Commission's action the exigency of a private business. This objection, however, fails to take account of the distinction between the requirements of industry and trade which may warrant the building of a branch track, and the nature of the use to which it is devoted when built. A spur may, at the outset, lead only to a single industry or establishment; it may be constructed to furnish an outlet for the products of a particular plant; its cost may be defrayed by those in special need of its service at the time. But none the less, by virtue of the conditions under which it is provided, the spur may constitute at all times a part of the transportation facilities of the carrier which are operated under the obligations of public service, and are [222] subject to the regulation of public authority. As was said by this court in Hairston v. Danville & W. R. Co. 208 U. S. 598, 608, 52 L. ed. 637, 641, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 331, 13 Ann. Cas. 1008: "The uses for which the track was desired are not the less public because the motive which dictated its location over this particular land was to reach a private industry, or because the proprietors of that industry contributed in any way to the cost." There is a clear distinction between spurs which are owned and operated by a common carrier as a part of its system and under its public obligation and merely private sidings. See State, De Camp, Prosecutor v. Hibernia Underground R. Co. 47 N. J. L. 43; Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. v. Porter, 43 Minn. 527, 46 N. W. 75; Ulmer v. Lime Rock R. Co. 98 Me. 579, 66 L.R.A. 387, 57 Atl. 1001; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Petty, 57 Ark. 359, 20 L.R.A. 434, 21 S. W. 884; Dietrich v. Murdock, 42 Mo. 279; Bedford Quarries R. Co. v. Chicago I. & L. R. Co. 175 Ind. 303, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 641, 94 N. E. 326.

While common carriers may not be compelled to make unreasonable outlays (Missouri P. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 217 U. S. 196, 54 L. ed. 727, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461, 18 Ann. Cas. 989), it is competent for the state, acting within the sphere of its jurisdiction, to provide for an extension of their transportation facilities, under reasonable conditions, so as to meet the demands of trade; and it may impress upon these extensions of the carriers' lines, thus furnished under the direction or authority of the state, a public character regardless of the number served at the beginning. The branch or spur comes into existence as a public utility, and as such is always available as localities change and communities grow. The supreme court of Wisconsin has left no doubt with respect to the public obligations imposed upon the carrier in relation to the spurs and branches to be provided under the statute in question, and we find no ground for the conclusion that this enactment was beyond the state power.

It is also contended by the plaintiff in error that the finding by the state court that the use in the present case is a public one is not supported by the facts. But this [223] criticism of the court's finding is in substance a repetition of the argument that is urged against the validity of the statute, and what has been said upon that point is applicable.

The judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

UNITED STATES, Plff. in Err.,
v.
WILLIS N. BIRDSALL. (No. 727.)

UNITED STATES, Plff. in Err.,
v.
THOMAS E. BRENTS. (No. 728.)

UNITED STATES, Plff. in Err.,
v.
EVERETT E. VAN WERT. (No. 729.)

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 223-236.)

Appeal — by government in criminal case — construction of statute.

1. A decision of a Federal district court sustaining a demurrer to an indictment upon the ground that the acts charged did not

NOTE.—On review by government in criminal case—see note to United States v. Stevenson, 54 L. ed. U. S. 153.

Digitized by Google

fall within the condemnation of the statute on which the indictment is founded is based upon the construction of such statute, so as to be reviewable in the Federal Supreme Court.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, I. e, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Bribery — official act — departmental requirement.

2. The official action sought to be influenced by a bribe charged to have been given and accepted contrary to the Federal Criminal Code (35 Stat. at L. 1096, 1109, chap. 321, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, pp. 1600, 1623), §§ 39, 117, need not have been prescribed by statute; it is sufficient that it was governed by a lawful requirement of the executive department under whose authority the officer was acting; and such requirement need not have been prescribed by a written rule or regulation, but might also be found in an established usage which constituted the common law of the department, and fixed the duties of those engaged in its activities.

Indians — traffic in intoxicating liquors — departmental regulations — reports of subordinates.

3. Regulations and practices having the force of regulations, under which special officers for the suppression of the liquor traffic among the Indians are charged with the duty of rendering true reports to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and of making recommendations with respect to the advisability of showing executive or judicial clemency to those convicted of selling liquor to Indians, could be established by the Commissioner under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 463, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 262, giving him, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and agreeably to such regulations as the President may prescribe, "the management of all Indian affairs and of all matters arising out of Indian relations."

[For other cases, see Indians, II., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[Nos. 727, 728, and 729.]

Argued and submitted January 8 and 9, 1914. Reargued February 25, 1914. Decided April 6, 1914.

IN ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Iowa to review a judgment sustaining a demurrer to indictments charging respectively the giving and accepting of bribes. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

See same case below, 206 Fed. 818.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Solicitor General Davis, and Assistant Attorney General Denison for the United States on original submission:

Passing the point that here was a criminal action at least in a conspiracy to defraud the United States (Curley v. United States, 64 C. C. A. 369, 130 Fed. 1), we think it plain on the face of §§ 39 and 117 of the Federal Penal Code that they do not limit the offense to the inducement of criminal breaches of official duty, but cover broadly all breaches of such duty.

Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S. 462, 480, 54 L. ed. 569, 577, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249, 17 Ann. Cas. 1112; Benson v. United States, 27 App. D. C. 344; Sharp v. United States, 71 C. C. A. 258, 138 Fed. 878; United States v. Van Leuven, 62 Fed. 62.

The duties of government employees may be determined by departmental usages and regulations, and are not limited to those specifically defined by statute.

United States v. Macdaniel, 7 Pet. 1, 14, 8 L. ed. 587, 592; Benson v. Henkel, 198 U. S. 1, 49 L. ed. 919, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569; Crawford v. United States, 212 U. S. 183, 191, 53 L. ed. 465, 468, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 260, 15 Ann. Cas. 392; Tyner v. United States, 23 App. D. C. 356; Haas v. Henkel, 166 Fed. 621, affirmed in 216 U. S. 462, 54 L. ed. 569, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249, 17 Ann. Cas. 1112.

Assistant Attorney General Wallace argued the cause and filed a brief for the United States on reargument:

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs could, by regulation and usage (having the force thereof), impose on his subordinates the duty to advise him whether they consider that the suppression of the liquor traffic would be aided or hindered by reduction or suspension of sentence in the case of individual violators.

United States v. Bailey, 9 Pet. 254, 255, 9 L. ed. 119, 120; Lewis Pub. Co. v. Wyman, 104 C. C. A. 453, 182 Fed. 16; Leonard v. Lennox, 104 C. C. A. 296, 181 Fed. 760; Re Neagle, 5 L.R.A. 78, 14 Sawy. 232, 39 Fed. 860.

It is not necessary that the deputy officer should make any final decision to come within reach of the bribery statute. A recommendation is equally within its terms.

Sharp v. United States, 71 C. C. A. 258, 138 Fed. 878.

Its purpose was to safeguard the honesty of official action throughout its entire flow, from the spring of initial investigation to the ultimate ocean of final disposition.

People v. Markham, 64 Cal. 158, 49 Am. Rep. 700, 30 Pac. 620; United States v. Bailey, 9 Pet. 254, 9 L. ed. 119.

The word "pending" means undecided or undetermined.

Sanford v. Sanford, 28 Conn. 20; Wentworth v. Farmington, 48 N. H. 210.

Courts have given the words "at any time" their natural, broad meaning.

Elkins v. Wolfe, 44 Ill. App. 380; Raymond v. Wathen, 142 Ind. 367, 41 N. E. 815; Re Miller, 145 Pa. 561, 22 Atl. 1044; Schroeder v. Gemeinder, 10 Nev. 361.

Digitized by Google

Seeking the intention in the light of the evil sought to be remedied, Congress must have had in mind that a prior corruption would work as great harm, as to a matter later to come before the official, as it would in the case of a matter already before him.

United States v. Bailey, 9 Pet. 254, 9 L. ed. 119.

The words "may be brought" deal with the future.

People v. Markham, 64 Cal. 158, 49 Am. Rep. 700, 30 Pac. 620; State v. Butler, 178 Mo. 272, 77 S. W. 560.

The words "by law" should be read as "pursuant to law," or "lawfully," or "in a lawful manner," rather than as under the mandate of an act of Congress expressly imposing specific duty in this regard on the bribe taker.

Lindsay & P. Co. v. Mullen, 176 U. S. 126, 136, 137, 44 L. ed. 400, 403, 406, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 325; Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S. 462, 480, 481, 54 L. ed. 569, 577, 578, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249, 17 Ann. Cas. 1112.

We do not think it should seriously be claimed that no act of an officer or person acting in an official capacity for the United States could be said to be an official act or duty unless specifically prescribed by an act of Congress. Were such the law a warehouse would be demanded to shelve the statutes. Common sense and the law alike declare otherwise.

United States v. Macdaniel, 7 Pet. 14, 15, 8 L. ed. 592; Benson v. Henkel, 198 U. S. 1, 12, 49 L. ed. 919, 922, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569; Crawford v. United States, 212 U. S. 189, 191, 53 L. ed. 468, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 260, 15 Ann. Cas. 392.

Mr. Charles W. Mullan argued the cause, and, with Mr. H. B. Boies, filed a brief for defendant in error in No. 727:

To constitute the crime of bribery, or attempt to bribe, under the provisions of § 39, the person to whom such bribe is offered or paid must be an officer of the United States, or a person acting for or in behalf of the United States in an official function under or by authority of the department or office of the government, and must have power to act upon, or to decide, in his official capacity or in his official function, the matter, question, cause, or proceeding as to which he is sought to be influenced by such bribe. If the matter as to which he is sought to be influenced by the payment of a bribe is not one which is pending before him, or which may be by law brought before him in his official capacity or in his place of trust, or is one as to which he has no power to act or decide, then the payment of such bribe, or the offer of payment, is not an offense under § 39.

United States v. Gibson, 47 Fed. 833; Re Yee Gee, 83 Fed. 145; United States v. Boyer, 85 Fed. 425; United States v. George, 228 U. S. 14, 57 L. ed. 712, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 412; Vernon v. United States, 76 C. C. A. 547, 146 Fed. 121.

The power conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior to prescribe regulations for the government of his Department, under § 161 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 80), is administrative only, and is confined strictly to the transaction of business within his Department. No power is conferred by any act of Congress which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to establish any rule or regulation which can have any force outside of the Department of the Interior, or which does not relate directly to the administration of the business of the Department.

United States v. George, 228 U. S. 14, 20, 57 L. ed. 712, 715, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 412.

A writ of error lies only in a case in which the validity or construction of the statute upon which the indictment is founded is involved in the decision of the lower court.

United States v. Keitel, 211 U. S. 371, 398, 399, 53 L. ed. 230, 244, 245, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 123; United States v. Stevenson, 215 U. S. 190–195, 54 L. ed. 153–155, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 35.

No counsel appeared for the other defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Hughes delivered the opinion of the court:

Separate indictments were found against the several defendants. There were two indictments against the defendant Birdsall (which were consolidated), charging him with having given to Brents and Van Wert, respectively, a bribe in violation of § 39 of the Criminal Code [35 Stat. at L. 1096, chap. 321, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1600]. The indictments against Brents and Van Wert were for accepting the bribes in violation of § 117. Demurrer to each indictment, upon the ground that it charged no offense, was sustained by the district court. 206 Fed. 818. The cases are brought here under the criminal appeals act. 34 Stat. at L. 1246, chap. 2564.

In view of the nature of the question presented, it is not necessary to consider the indictments separately. According to the allegations, Birdsall was attorney for certain persons who, on indictment for unlawfully selling [228] liquor to Indians, had pleaded guilty and had been sentenced at the April term, 1910. Application had then been made to the judge of the court for a reduction or suspension of the sentences, and it was also stated that an effort would be made to obtain a commutation by Executive action. Brents and Van Wert were special officers, duly appointed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, for the suppression of the liquor traffic among the Indians. It was averred that by the regulations and established requirements of the Department of the Interior they were charged with the duty of informing and advising the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, either directly or through other subordinates, concerning all matters connected with the conviction and punishment of persons violating the laws of the United States in reference to the liquor traffic affecting the Indians, and particularly "to inform the said Commissioner whether or not the effective suppression of the liquor traffic with and among Indians would be furthered or prejudiced by Executive or judicial clemency in any particular case."

Digitized by Google

After referring to the conviction and sentence of the persons named, and to the application then made to the judge for a reduction or suspension of sentence, each indictment continued as follows:

"That then and there the judge of the said court announced that he would not change or reduce or suspend the said sentences or any part thereof, unless a recommendation to that effect was made to him by the said Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and the United States attorney in the aforesaid district announced that he would not recommend a commutation or other Executive clemency unless a recommendation to that effect was made to him by the said Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

"That then and there, and during all the dates and times herein mentioned, it was and long had been the [229] settled usage and practice for the United States judges in determining upon sentences and upon the applications for changes, reductions, or suspensions thereof, to consult the United States attorney, and either directly or through him the administrative officer charged with the enforcement of the laws in question, including laws for the suppression of the liquor traffic with and among the Indians,—the said Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and likewise it had been and was the settled usage and practice of the President, in the exercise of his power of extending Executive clemency, to consult the Attorney General; and likewise it had been and was the settled usage and practice of the Attorney General, for the purpose of advising the President on the said subject, to consult with the United States attorney or other officer by whom the prosecution had been conducted. . . . .

"That then and there and that at all the times herein mentioned the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in the performance of his official duty, as provided by the rules and regulations and established usages and practices and requirements of the said Department of the Interior, and as provided by law, was charged with the duties of assisting in the enforcement of the laws of the United States in reference to the liquor traffic affecting Indians, and particularly with the duty, when requested so to do, of advising and making recommendations to any judge before whom any prosecutions on the said subject may have been tried, and the United States attorney or other officer by whom the said prosecution had been conducted, concerning the effect upon the enforcement of the said law of any proposed leniency or clemency in connection with the punishment of persons found guilty of offenses thereunder."

The indictments against Birdsall charged him with having given money to Brents and Van Wert with intent to influence their official action so that they would advise the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, contrary to the truth, [230] that upon facts officially known to them leniency should be granted to the persons who had been convicted and sentenced, as stated, and that in the interest of the enforcement of the laws the Commissioner should so recommend to the judge, the United States attorney, the Secretary of the Interior, the Attorney General, or the President. The indictments against Brents and Van Wert charged that they had received the money from Birdsall with the intent that their official action should be thus influenced.

As the district court held that the acts charged did not fall within the condemnation of the statute, the court necessarily construed the statute, and the cases are properly here. United States v. Patten, 226 U. S. 525, 535, 57 L. ed. 333, 339, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 325, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141.

Section 117 of the Criminal Code (35 Stat. at L. p. 1109, chap. 321, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1623), with respect to the acceptance of bribes, provides that "whoever, being an officer of the United States, or a person acting for or on behalf of the United States, in any official capacity, under or by virtue of the authority of any department or office of the government thereof," accepts money, etc., "with intent to have his decision or action on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding which may at any time be pending, or which may by law be brought before him in his official capacity, or in his place of trust or profit, influenced thereby," shall be punished as stated.. Section 39 (id. p. 1096), as to bribe giving, uses similar language in defining the official relation of the recipient and the character of the action intended to be influenced; adding the words—"with intent to influence him to commit . . . any fraud . . . on the United States, or to induce him to do or omit to do any act in violation of his lawful duty."

Digitized by Google

Every action that is within the range of official duty comes within the purview of these sections. There was thus a legislative basis (United States v. George, 228 U. S. 14, 22, 57 L. ed. 712, 715, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 412) for the charge in the present cases, if the action sought to be influenced was official action. To constitute [231] it official action, it was not necessary that it should be prescribed by statute; it was sufficient that it was governed by a lawful requirement of the Department under whose authority the officer was acting (Rev. Stat. § 161, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 80; Benson v. Henkel, 198 U. S. 1, 12, 49 L. ed. 919, 922, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569; Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S. 462, 480, 54 L. ed. 569, 577, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249, 17 Ann. Cas. 1112). Nor was it necessary that the requirement should be prescribed by a written rule or regulation. It might also be found in an established usage which constituted the common law of the Department and fixed the duties of those engaged in its activities. United States v. Macdaniel, 7 Pet. 1, 14, 8 L. ed. 587, 592. In numerous instances, duties not completely defined by written rules are clearly established by settled practice, and action taken in the course of their performance must be regarded as within the provisions of the above-mentioned statutes against bribery. Haas v. Henkel, supra.

We must assume, in view of the decision below, that the indictment sufficiently charged that the action of Brents and Van Wert, which it was sought to influence, was action in the course of duty so far as the regulations and usages of the Department could establish that duty.

The question is whether the Department had authority to establish it. The district court held that it had no such power, and hence that the indictments charged no offense. The ruling was that there was "no act of Congress conferring upon the Interior Department, or the Bureau of Indian Affairs, any duty whatever in regard to recommending to the executive or judicial departments of the government whether or not Executive or judicial clemency shall be extended to, or withheld from, any person who may be charged with, or convicted of, selling intoxicating liquors to Indians, or of any other offense against the United States." 206 Fed. 818, 821.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, "under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and agreeably to such regulations as the President may prescribe," is [232] charged with "the management of all Indian affairs and of all matters arising out of Indian relations" (Rev. Stat. § 463, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 262). The object of the establishment of the office was to create an administrative agency with broad powers adequate to the execution of the policy of the government, as determined by the acts of Congress, with respect to the Indians under its guardianship. From an early day, Congress has prohibited the liquor traffic among the Indians, and it has been one of the important duties of the Indian Office to aid in the enforcement of this legislation. See act of June 30, 1834, chap. 161, § 20, 4 Stat. at L. 729, 732; Rev. Stat. §§ 2139-2141; act of July 23, 1892, chap. 234, 27 Stat. at L. 260; act of January 30, 1897, chap. 109, 29 Stat. at L. 506. It has furnished such aid by the detection of violations, by the collection of evidence, and by appropriate steps to secure the conviction and punishment of offenders. The regulations of the office, adopted under statutory authority (Rev. Stat. §§ 465, 2058, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 264), have been explicit as to the duties of Indian agents in this respect.[1] In recent years, Congress has [233] made special appropriations "to enable the Commissioner of Indian Af-

[1] These regulations are as follows:

"574. Having therefore the power to break up to a great extent this demoralizing traffic" (the liquor traffic), "agents are expected to use the utmost vigilance in enforcing the penalties of the law against all persons who engage in it with the Indians under their charge, whether this is done on or off the reservation.

"575. When persons are detected in a violation of the law their cases should be placed in the hands of the district attorney for the district wherein the crime was committed, in order that they may be promptly arrested, tried, and punished; and agents will cooperate with that officer in his efforts to convict the guilty parties, furnishing him with the requisite evidence and all the facts that they may be able to obtain for the purpose indicated. Indians are competent witnesses in these cases.

"576. It is also the duty of agents to strictly carry out the provisions of §§ 2140 and 2141 of the Revised Statutes of the United States respecting the searching for concealed liquors within their agencies, and respecting the destruction of distilleries set up or continued in Indian country." Regulations of the Indian Office (1904).

Digitized by Google

fairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to take action to suppress the traffic of intoxicating liquors among Indians" (34 Stat. at L. 328, 1017, chaps. 3504, 2285; 35 Stat. at L. 72, 782, chaps. 153, 263; 36 Stat. at L. 271, 1059, chaps. 140, 210; 37 Stat. at L. 519, chap. 388), and an organization of special officers and deputies, serving in various states, has been created in the Department. Through these efforts numerous convictions have been obtained. The results have been reported to Congress annually by the Commissioner,[2] and the appropriations for the continuance of the service have been increased.[3]

[234] This being the character of the Department's work, it cannot be doubted that when persons who are convicted apply for Executive clemency the President is entitled to avail himself of the recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior and of the Commissioner. The information obtained by the Indian Office and its advice are always at his command. The President is entitled to know whether, in the judgment of the Secretary or the Commissioner, the granting of clemency will tend to promote or hinder the efforts of the Department. The action of these officers in thus advising the President plainly would be official action; but in so acting they would necessarily rely largely upon the reports and advice of subordinates in the department who were more directly acquainted with the existing conditions, the records of offenders, and the facts and circumstances of particular cases. For this reason, if for no other, it was within the competency of the office to establish regulations, and practices having the force of regulations, that all persons employed in its work should render to the Commissioner whenever requested true reports and give disinterested and honest advice upon the facts known to them with respect to the advisability of showing leniency to convicted violators of the law.

Nor is there any ground for the conclusion that the President is limited to obtaining direct reports to himself in such matters. By virtue of his relation to the Department he may require the reports to be made to the Attorney General, who, by the direction of the President, may be intrusted with the duty of securing the information and recommendations which the President should have in order properly to pass upon applications for clemency; and for these purposes the Department could require [235] the necessary reports from those engaged in its service.

Further, there can be no question that the authority of the Department in its undertaking to suppress the forbidden traffic extended to every matter in which its aid was appropriate. That was the clear import of the legislation broadly defining its powers and of the action of Congress in supporting its work. Whenever it could afford assistance in the course of proceedings to secure the punishment of offenders it was fully empowered to give it. If a judge in fixing the sentence to be imposed upon those found guilty, or in determining whether the sentence as imposed should be suspended or reduced, desired to be advised of the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in view of his knowledge of the conditions attending the enforcement of the law, the Commissioner was not lacking in authority to comply with the request. It is not enough to say that there is no mandatory requirement im-

[2] H. Doc. vol. 27, 60th Cong. 1st Sess. pp. 26–31; H. Doc. vol. 43, 60th Cong. 2d Sess. pp. 34–40; H. Doc. vol. 44, 61st Cong. 2d Sess. pp. 12–15; H. Doc. vol. 32, 61st Cong. 3d Sess. pp. 12–13; H. Doc. vol. 41, 62d Cong. 2d Sess. pp. 32–33.

[3] The nature and extent of this authorized service of the Department are shown by the following extract from the Commissioner's report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912: "Until 1906 . . . enforcement of these statutes and subsequent enactments" (as to the liquor traffic) "was left to Indian agents and superintendents and their Indian police, assisted so far as might be by local peace officers and by representatives of the Department of Justice. In 1906 criminal dockets in Indian territory became so crowded and the possibility of early trial so remote that disregard of the statutes forbidding introduction of intoxicants assumed large importance. To meet the emergency, Congress, in the act of June 21, 1906, appropriated $25,000 to be used to suppress the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians, and in August, 1906, a special officer was commissioned and sent to Oklahoma that he and his subordinates might, through detective operations, supplement the efforts of superintendents in charge of reservations. In the fiscal year 1909, when the appropriation had grown to $40,000, this service began to operate throughout all states where Indians needed protection. In 1911 the service had grown until it had an appropriation of $70,000 and an organization including 1 chief special officer, 1 assistant chief, 2 constables, 12 special officers, and 143 local deputies stationed in 21 states. The increasing success of the service appears in the fact that in 1909, 561 cases which the service secured came to issue in court, resulting in 548 convictions, whereas in 1911, 1,202 cases came to issue, 1,168 defendants were convicted, and but 34 defendants were acquitted by juries. In 1911 fines imposed amounted to $80,463, or more than the appropriation for the service." H. Doc. No. 933, 62d Cong. 3d Sess. pp. 11, 12.

Digitized by Google

posing the obligation to give the recommendation. In executing the powers of the Indian Office there is necessarily a wide range for administrative discretion, and in determining the scope of official action regard must be had to the authority conferred; and this, as we have seen, embraces every action which may properly constitute an aid in the enforcement of the law.

The Commissioner was entitled to give his recommendations to the judge or to the United States attorney upon request, and he had complete power under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior to establish rules and usages in the Department by which he could secure correct information and uncorrupted advice from every one of his subordinates. None of these officers could properly say that in reporting with respect to the effect of leniency in particular cases he was acting outside the sphere of official conduct, and the giving and acceptance of bribes to influence their reports and recommendations [236] was within the statutes under which these indictments were laid.

The judgment of the District Court in each case is reversed, and the cases are remanded for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

DIAMOND COAL & COKE COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 236–249.)

Public lands — cancelation of patent — fraudulent entry of coal lands.

1. A homestead patent covering mineral lands, secured by submitting false proofs to the land officers of the nonmineral character of the lands applied for, although not void or open to collateral attack, is voidable and may be annulled in a suit by the government against the patentee or a purchaser with notice of the fraud.

[For other cases, see Public Lands, I. 1, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Evidence — burden of proof — sufficiency — annulling homestead patent covering mineral lands.

2. The government is charged with the burden of proof in a suit to annul a homestead patent as wrongfully covering mineral lands, and must sustain the burden by that class of evidence which commands respect, and that amount of it which produces conviction.

[For other cases, see Evidence, II. 1, 2; XII. g, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Public lands — annulling homestead patent for mineral lands.

3. To justify the annulment of a homestead patent as wrongfully covering mineral lands it must appear that the known conditions at the time of the proceedings which resulted in the patent were plainly such as to engender the belief that the land contained mineral deposits of such quality and in such quantity as would render their extraction profitable, and justify expenditures to that end.

[For other cases, see Public Lands, I. 1, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Evidence — sufficiency — knowledge that homestead entries covered coal lands.

4. Arid sagebrush lands are sufficiently shown to have been known to be valuable for their coal at the time of the proceedings in the Land Department resulting in the issuance to a coal company of a patent for such lands upon soldiers' additional homestead entries purchased by it by evidence that such company made an earlier effort to acquire a part of such lands which was obviously fraudulent and unlawful independently of their character, that easily ten times their nominal value was voluntarily expended by the company in acquiring them, and that its own nearby mining operations, supplementing the evidence afforded by an outcrop to the east of such lands and by the geological formation, had disclosed the existence of an extensive bed of valuable coal dipping to the west.

[For other cases, see Evidence, XII. f, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Public lands — what are coal lands.

5. Actual disclosure of coal within its boundaries is not essential to constitute a tract of public land coal lands which, under U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 2302, 2318, 2319, 2347–2351, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 1410, 1423, 1424, 1440, 1441, are not subject to acquisition under the homestead law, but they are to be deemed such if the adjacent disclosures and other surrounding or external conditions are such as to induce practical coal men to invest in such lands as valuable for coal mining.

[For other cases, see Public Lands, 18, 20, 21, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 192.]

Argued January 28 and 29, 1914. Decided April 6, 1914.

APPEAL from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit to review a decree which, reversing a decree of the Circuit Court for the District of Wyoming, directed an entry of a decree in favor of the United States in a suit to cancel homestead patents as wrongfully covering coal lands. Affirmed.

See same case below, 112 C. C. A. 272, 191 Fed. 786.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—On setting aside land patents for fraud—see note to Miller v. Kerr, 5 L. ed. U. S. 381.

Digitized by Google

Messrs. Cornelius F. Kelley and Mr. L. O. Evans argued the cause, and, with Mr. B. M. Ausherman, filed a brief for appellant:

In a case of this character, to set aside and annul United States patents, the government occupies the same position as any private party in a similar action, and must establish its charge by the same quantum and character of proof as private parties to similar actions charging fraud.

Davis v. Wiebbold, 139 U. S. 507, 35 L. ed. 238, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628; Atlantic Delaine Co. v. James, 94 U. S. 207, 24 L. ed. 112; Maxwell Land-Grant Case, 121 U. S. 381, 30 L. ed. 959, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1015.

The construction given to statutes by those charged with the duty of executing them is always entitled to the most respectful consideration, and should not be overruled without cogent reasons.

United States v. Moore, 95 U. S. 760, 24 L. ed. 588; Barden v. Northern P. R. Co. 154 U. S. 288, 38 L. ed. 992, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1030.

The established practice of the Land Office, which should be regarded as a rule of property, has been to deny entries of lands as coal lands or mineral lands unless the same were shown to contain within their limits developed and opened mines or deposits of coal of commercial value, or other minerals in quantity sufficient to justify the development and exploitation of the land, and to render it more valuable for mineral than for other purposes; and it has been the uniform practice to require evidence of the existence of coal or other mineral deposits upon the land itself. The fact that the land was surrounded by land containing either coal or other mineral, or that it was adjacent to mineral lodes or coal veins, or even that the land itself contained small quantities of mineral or surface croppings of coal undeveloped, has always been held insufficient; and where the character of the lands as mineral or coal lands was not established by such proof and evidence of mineral value, the land has always been held properly enterable under the homestead and other nonmineral acts.

Dughi v. Harkins, 2 Land Dec. 721; Roberts v. Jepson, 4 Land Dec. 60; Cleghorn v. Bird, 4 Land Dec. 478; Hooper v. Ferguson, 2 Land Dec. 712; Kings County v. Alexander, 5 Land Dec. 126; Re Williams, 11 Land Dec. 462; Frees v. Colorado, 22 Land Dec. 510; Arthur v. Earle, 21 Land. Dec. 92; Jones v. Driver, 15 Land Dec. 514; Re Elda Min. & Mill. Co. 29 Land Dec. 279; Tulare Oil & Min. Co. v. Southern P. R. Co. 29 Land Dec. 269; Harkrader v. Goldstein, 31 Land Dec. 87.

The views of the Land Office were not erroneous; on the contrary, they have been repeatedly approved by the decisions of this court and of the lower Federal courts and state courts which have had occasion to consider the questions involved.

Colorado Coal & I. Co. v. United States, 123 U. S. 307, 31 L. ed. 182, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 13; Deffeback v. Hawke, 115 U. S. 392, 404, 29 L. ed. 423, 426, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 95; Davis v. Wiebbold, 139 U. S. 507, 35 L. ed. 238, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628; United States v. Iron Silver Min. Co. 128 U. S. 673, 32 L. ed. 571, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195; Reynolds v. Iron Silver Min. Co. 116 U. S. 688, 29 L. ed. 774, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 601, 15 Mor. Min. Rep. 591; United States v. Reed, 12 Sawy. 99, 28 Fed. 482; Nevada Sierra Oil Co. v. Home Oil Co. 98 Fed. 673, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 283; Olive Land & Delevopment Co. v. Olmstead, 103 Fed. 568, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 700; Migeon v. Montana C. R. Co. 23 C. C. A. 156, 44 U. S. App. 724, 77 Fed. 249, 18 Mor. Min. Rep. 446; United States v. Kostelak, 207 Fed. 447; Alford v. Barnum, 45 Cal. 482, 10 Mor. Min. Rep. 422; Blackburn v. United States, 5 Ariz. 162, 48 Pac. 904, 18 Mor. Min. Rep. 684; Standard Quicksilver Co. v. Habishaw, 132 Cal. 115, 64 Pac. 113.

The legislative classification of coal lands as mineral lands is not, as shown by the construction of this statute and the application thereof, a declaration that all coal is mineral, or that all coal lands are mineral lands, but was only intended to make the act applicable to coal lands such as are specified in the exclusion of known mines from the pre-emption act of 1841, and the rule as to the necessity of showing the existence of known mines under the pre-emption act is applicable to the present case.

Colorado Coal & I. Co. v. United States, 123 U. S. 325, 31 L. ed. 189, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; Mullan v. United States, 118 U. S. 271, 276, 277, 30 L. ed. 170, 172, 173, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1041.

From the decisions of the courts and the Land Office, we believe that it can be said, without successful contravention, that the following propositions are firmly established:

First, the known character of the land at the time of the application or entry is determinative. The rule has always been that the inquiry would not be made as to such character at any time subsequent to the time of payment and final receipt or entry. The question must be determined by the conditions existing at the time the applicant does everything required on his part and becomes entitled to a conveyance, from which time he is regarded as the equitable owner of the land. Upon the purchase of homestead land under additional scrip, no residence is required. The scrip is tendered to and left with the Land Office at the time of application, so that in the case of such entries we submit that the time of the first application is the period to which the inquiry will be directed; and further, the time of application should be the determinative period, where the patent is sought to be set aside for fraud, for the reason that the motive which animated the entryman must be judged by the facts known to him and existing at the time his application was made. It is not material what developments subsequent to the application or entry show.

Digitized by Google

Second, in order to bring the land within the allegations of the bill, that is, to render it only enterable under the coal land law, it must have been shown that it contained known mines or deposits of coal, of a workable character, and of sufficient extent to make the lands more valuable on account of their existence for coal mining purposes than the lands would be for agricultural purposes.

Third, the mere presence of coal croppings or coal mines in the vicinity of the lands in question cannot determine the character which must be assigned to the land. On the contrary, it must be judged by the known physical features of the identical lands in question.

Fourth, if the lands were not shown to be coal lands in character, it is immaterial that they may have but slight value for grazing or other agricultural purposes.

Solicitor General Davis argued the cause, and, with Mr. Karl W. Kirchwey, filed a brief for appellee:

The policy of Congress to withhold lands valuable for minerals from acquisition under any law not expressly made applicable to such lands has been too often recognized by this court to admit of discussion here. This policy and the general statutes declaring it apply to coal as well as to all other minerals.

Mullan v. United States, 118 U. S. 271, 276, 30 L. ed. 170, 172, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1041.

Upon a careful examination of this court's opinions, and of all of the relevant opinions delivered by the Land Department, it will be found that they do not present any obstacle to the acceptance now of the natural and primary meaning of the terms "mineral lands" and "lands valuable for minerals," or bar out any kind of evidence, direct or circumstantial, which is calculated to shed light upon the question whether given lands, at a given time, were or were not more valuable for coal than for other purposes. The true rule, as we regard it, especially in the case of coal lands, requires only such knowledge of mineral value as, in its nature, the subject-matter will allow, and permits proof of such knowledge by any evidence, real, direct, or inferential, which is logically relevant,—such, for instance, as practical men of experience are wont to rely upon in acquiring the land for mining purposes.

Deffeback v. Hawke, 115 U. S. 392, 29 L. ed. 423, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 95; Colorado Coal & I. Co. v. United States, 123 U. S. 307, 31 L. ed. 182, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; Davis v. Wiebbold, 139 U. S. 507, 35 L. ed. 238, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628; Cowell v. Lammers, 10 Sawy. 257, 21 Fed. 200; Dower v. Richards, 151 U. S. 658, 38 L. ed. 305, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 452, 17 Mor. Min. Rep. 704; United States v. Plowman, 216 U. S. 372, 59 L. ed. 523, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 299; United States v. Iron Silver Min. Co. 128 U. S. 673, 683, 32 L. ed. 571, 575, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195; Iron Silver Min. Co. v. Reynolds, 124 U. S. 374, 384, 31 L. ed. 466, 471, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 598; Kings County v. Alexander, 5 Land Dec. 126; Re Instructions, 34 Land Dec. 200; Savage v. Boynton, 12 Land Dec. 612; Scott v. Sheldon, 15 Land Dec. 361; Rucker v. Knisley, 14 Land. Dec. 113; Hamilton v. Anderson, 19 Land. Dec. 168; Montana v. Buley, 23 Land Dec. 116; Hooper v. Ferguson, 2 Land Dec. 712; Dughi v. Harkins, 2 Land Dec. 721; Roberts v. Jepson, 4 Land Dec. 60; Cleghorn v. Bird, 4 Land Dec. 478; McWilliams v. Green River Coal Asso. 23 Land Dec. 127.

If these applicants actually believed the lands to be valuable for coal, and wilfully represented that the lands were essentially nonmineral and contained no coal, at the same time concealing from the officers of the government's Land Department such facts as that the lands lay opposite and immediately adjacent to a well-defined coal outcrop which dipped toward the lands in controversy, there would seem to be no question that they were guilty of a flagrant fraud, irrespective of what subsequent events might show as to the true character of the lands.

United States v. Trinidad Coal & Coking Co. 137 U. S. 160, 34 L. ed. 640, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57; Hyde v. Shine, 199 U. S. 62, 50 L. ed. 90, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 760; United States v. Keitel, 211 U. S. 370, 53 L. ed. 230, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 123.

Under these circumstances the burden of proof shifts from the government, which is no longer obliged to establish the mineral character of the lands.

Moffat v. United States, 112 U. S. 24, 28 L. ed. 623, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10.

The appellant company is not an innocent purchaser.

Digitized by Google

J. J. McCaskill Co. v. United States, 216 U. S. 504, 514, 54 L. ed. 590, 596, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 386; 5 Thomp. Corp. 2d ed. §§ 5474, 5479.

Mr. Justice Van Devanter delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit by the United States, against an incorporated company engaged in coal mining, to regain the title to about 2,840 acres of land in Uinta county, Wyoming, theretofore patented to Thomas Sneddon and Daniel F. Harrison, and by them conveyed to the coal company. The patents, thirty-four in number, were issued under the homestead law upon what are called soldiers' additional entries. The applications for the entries were made at various dates beginning with May 1, 1899, and each application was accompanied by an affidavit, by either Sneddon or Harrison, stating that he was [238] well acquainted with the land, had passed over it frequently, and could testify understandingly about it; that there was not, to his knowledge, any deposit of coal or other valuable mineral within its limits; that it was essentially nonmineral, and that the application was made with the object of securing it for agricultural purposes, and not of fraudulently obtaining title to mineral land. Mineral lands, including coal lands, are not subject to acquisition under the homestead law (Rev. Stat. §§ 2302, 2318, 2319, 2347-2351, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 1410, 1423, 1424, 1440, 1441), and these affidavits were made and submitted as proof that the character of the lands applied for was such that they properly could be acquired under that law. The land officers accepted the affidavits and the statements, therein as true, and allowed the entries and issued the patents.

The bill charged that the affidavits were false and that the entries and patents were procured in the execution of a fraudulent scheme to acquire known coal lands under soldiers' additional homestead entries; and the decisive issues in the case were, first, whether the lands were known to be valuable for coal when the applications for the entries were made, and, second, if they were, whether the coal company was a bona fide purchaser from the patentees. At the hearing the circuit court answered the first of these questions in the negative and gave a decree for the coal company; but upon an appeal to the circuit court of appeals that court answered the first question in the affirmative and the second in the negative, and reversed the action of the circuit court, with a direction that a decree for the government be entered. 112 C. C. A. 272, 191 Fed. 786. The present appeal was then taken by the coal company.

As the arguments of counsel have taken a wide range and in some respects have departed from the settled rules of decision applicable in cases like this, it will be appropriate to restate those rules before turning to the evidence. They are:

[239] 1. Questions of fact arising in the administration of the public-land laws, such as whether lands sought to be entered are mineral or nonmineral, are committed to the land officers for determination; and as their decision must rest largely or entirely upon proofs outside the official records, it is possible in ex parte proceedings, as was the case here, for applicants, by submitting false proofs, to impose upon those officers and secure entries and patents under one law, when if truthful proofs were submitted the lands could not be acquired under that law, but only under another imposing different restrictions upon their disposal. A patent secured by such fraudulent practices, although not void or open to collateral attack, is nevertheless voidable, and may be annulled in a suit by the government against the patentee or a purchaser with notice of the fraud. St. Louis Smelting & Ref. Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636, 640, 26 L. ed. 875, 876, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 673; United States v. Minor, 114 U. S. 233, 240, 29 L. ed. 110, 112, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 836; Colorado Coal & I. Co. v. United States, 123 U. S. 307, 313, 31 L. ed. 182, 185, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; Burfenning v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 163 U. S. 321, 323, 41 L. ed. 175, 176, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1018.

2. The respect due to a patent, the presumption that all the preceding steps required by law were duly observed, and the obvious necessity for stability in titles resting upon these official instruments, require that in suits to annul them the government shall bear the burden of proof and shall sustain it by that class of evidence which commands respect, and that amount of it which produces conviction. Maxwell Land-Grant Case, 121 U. S. 325, 379-381; 30 L. ed. 949, 958, 959, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1015; United States v. Iron Silver Min. Co. 128 U. S. 673, 676, 32 L. ed. 571, 572, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195; United States v. Stinson, 197 U. S. 200, 204, 205, 49 L. ed. 724, 725, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426; United States v. Clark, 200 U. S. 601, 608, 50 L. ed. 613, 616, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340.

3. To justify the annulment of a homestead patent as wrongfully covered mineral land, it must appear that at the time of the proceedings which resulted in the patent the land was known to be valuable for minerals; that is to say, it must appear that the known conditions at the time [240] of those proceedings were plainly such as to engender the belief that the land contained mineral deposits of such quality and in such quantity as would render their extraction profitable and justify expenditures to that end. If at that time the land was not thus known to be valuable for mineral, subsequent discoveries will not affect the patent. The inquiry must be directed to the situation at that time, as were the applicant's proofs and the finding of the land officers. If the proofs were not false then, they cannot be condemned, nor the good faith of the applicant impugned, by reason of any subsequent change in the conditions. "We say 'land known at the time to be valuable for its minerals,' as there are vast tracts of public land in which minerals of different kinds are found, but not in such quantity as to justify expenditures in the effort to extract them. It is not to such lands that the term 'mineral' in the sense of the statute is applicable. . . . We also say lands known at the time of their sale to be thus valuable, in order to avoid any possible conclusion against the validity of titles which may be issued for other kinds of land, in which, years afterwards, rich deposits of mineral may be discovered. It is quite possible that lands settled upon as suitable only for agricultural purposes, entered by the settler and patented by the government under the pre-emption laws, may be found, years after the patent has been issued, to contain valuable minerals. Indeed, this has often happened. We therefore use the term known to be valuable at the time of sale, to prevent any doubt being cast upon titles to lands afterwards found to be different in their mineral character from what was supposed when the entry of them was made and the patent issued." Deffeback v. Hawke, 115 U. S. 392, 404, 29 L. ed. 423, 426, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 95; Colorado Coal & I. Co. v. United States, 123 U. S. 307, 328, 31 L. ed. 182, 190, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; United States v. Iron Silver Min. Co. 128 U. S. 673, 683, 32 L. ed. 571, 575, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195; Davis v. Wiebbold, 139 U. S. 507, 519, 35 L. ed. 238, 242, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628; Dower v. Richards, 151 U. S. 658, 663, 38 L. ed. 305, 307, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 452, 17 Mor. Min. Rep. 704; [241] Shaw v. Kellogg, 170 U. S. 312, 332, 42 L. ed. 1050, 1057, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 632; United States v. Plowman, 216 U. S. 372, 374, 54 L. ed. 523, 524, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 299.

Digitized by Google

As a further preliminary to considering the evidence, it should be observed that these lands, if purchased under the coal-land law, would have cost $20 an acre, and also that the coal company could not have purchased directly, or indirectly through others, more than 320 acres, unless it expended $5,000 in opening and improving a mine, in which event the maximum would have been 640 acres. Rev. Stat. §§ 2348, 2350, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 1440, 1441; United States v. Trinidad Coal & Coking Co. 137 U. S. 160, 34 L. ed. 640, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57; United States v. Keitel, 211 U. S. 370, 53 L. ed. 230, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 123. As before said, the entries here in question embraced about 2,840 acres.

Coming to the evidence, we find it voluminous, unreasonably so. Part of it sheds no light upon the issues, and was taken in disregard of the last of the rules just stated. That which properly may be considered very clearly establishes the following facts:

The proceedings in the land office began in May, 1899 Most of the applications were filed during that year and passed to patent in 1901. The others were presented and acted upon in succeeding years. The patents were all secured by means of affidavits and proofs, as before indicated, declaring that the lands were essentially nonmineral, were not known to contain any deposit of coal, and were sought for agricultural purposes, and not as mineral land. For many years the district in which the lands were situate had been known to contain coal. They were surveyed in 1874, and the surveyor reported one of the sections as coal land, the others being contiguous to lands similarly reported. This was shown in the field notes and upon the official plats. The lands were in a valley, 3 or 4 miles in width, bounded on the east and west by foothills. A thick bed of coal was disclosed in the eastern face of the western hills, but its quality was not such as to make it of commercial value. Along [242] the western base of the eastern hills was the outcrop of another coal bed. This outcrop had been weathered down and in some places covered by the wash from above, but it could be traced upon the surface for several miles. It had been opened up at different places, and the openings disclosed a coal bed, from 6 to 14 feet in thickness, dipping to the west at an angle of from 15 to 25 degrees from the horizontal, as did the cretaceous rocks with which it was interstratified. This coal was of superior quality and recognized commercial value, and the rocks containing it were the coal-bearing strata of that region. The lands in controversy were west of the outcrop, in the direction of the dip. Some were near the outcrop, and the east line of the farthest section was about a mile and a half away. There was nothing upon their surface showing the presence of coal beneath, nor anything indicating that the bed outcropping on the east and dipping to the west did not pass through them. Unless valuable for coal, they were not worth to exceed a dollar and a quarter an acre. They were arid sagebrush lands, about 7,000 feet above sea level, and afforded very limited pasturage. Without irrigation they were not susceptible of cultivation, and the cost of securing water for that purpose was prohibitive.

Digitized by Google

Attracted by this outcrop, the coal company opened a mine thereon, in the vicinity of these lands, in 1894. In the beginning the output of the mine was small, but it reached 183,750 tons for 1897, 259,608 tons for 1898, and 441,277 tons for 1899.

An attempt was made by the coal company to acquire a part of the lands in controversy in 1898, by inducing some of its employees and others to make ordinary homestead entries of them under an agreement whereby the company was to bear the expense, compensate the entrymen for the exercise of their homestead rights, and receive the title when perfected. The arrangement was fraudulent [243] and in direct violation of the homestead law, independently of the character of the lands. 26 Stat. at L. 1097, chap. 561, § 5, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1388. Sneddon was in charge of the attempt. He was acquainted with the lands and all their surroundings and was well informed upon the subject of coal mining. With the aid of a surveyor he identified the subdivisions to be entered, and afterwards selected the men who were to make the entries and directed all that was done, indicating, in that connection, that the lands were coal lands and were to be taken for that reason, and also to prevent another coal concern from getting them. The entries were made in 160-acre tracts, and to give them apparent support cheap cabins were put upon the lands, at the company's expense, but the law was not even colorably complied with in other respects. The next year this plan was abandoned and that of using soldiers' additional rights was adopted. These rights were assignable, and in their exercise no residence, improvement, or cultivation was required. See Rev. Stat. § 2306, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1415; Webster v. Luther, 163 U. S. 331, 41 L. ed. 179, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 963. At the company's request the prior entries were relinquished and the entrymen were severally paid $500 for what they had done, the payment to one being $600. When the relinquishments were filed, Sneddon and Harrison immediately applied to enter the lands with soldiers' additional rights. A few of the relinquished subdivisions were not re-entered, and several tracts not covered by the prior entries were included in the new ones, but all of the latter were made with soldiers' additional rights purchased and supplied by the company, and were made for its benefit. The price paid by the company for these additional rights was from $6 to $13 an acre. After the entries were obtained the lands were conveyed to the company, and Sneddon was paid $1,000 for this service, although otherwise regularly employed by the company at the time.

In 1898, shortly before the dummy entries were made, [244] Sneddon had filed in the land office a sworn declaration of his intention to purchase, under the coal-land law (Rev. Stat. §§ 2347–2349, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 1440, 1441), one of the tracts in controversy, which he then described as containing "a valuable vein of coal." The tract was about a quarter of a mile from the outcrop. At the time of making the soldiers' additional entries he relinquished the coal filing and included the tract in two of them.

In 1899, about the time of the additional entries, James Lees purchased from the government, under the coal-land law, and sold to the company for $3,400, a quarter section upon which earlier exploration had disclosed good coal, 8 feet in thickness. This sale was in execution of a prior arrangement, and the price paid to Lees was $200 in excess of that paid to the government. The tract was within a half mile in each of three directions from lands here in controversy.

As indicative of the weight and importance which men having a practical knowledge of coal mining attached to the outcrop at the time, the government proved by an experienced mine foreman, who had been in charge of large mines, known as the Cumberland, adjacent to a portion of the lands in controversy, that those mines were opened in 1900 by reason of what was found on the outcrop; that there was no precedent drilling of the adjacent lands; and that in advising the opening of the mines he was guided by what an examination of the outcrop in 1889 disclosed. True, he said that he could not take "a solemn oath" or "be positive" that unexplored lands in the vicinity of the outcrop and in the direction of the dip contained valuable coal, but his testimony was plainly to the effect that the outcrop, the direction and inclination of the dip, and other conditions in 1899 and 1900, afforded reasonable ground for believing that a considerable territory lying west of the outcrop could be mined profitably.

[245] There was much expert testimony by geologists concerning the outcrop and other known geological data bearing upon the character of these lands. In the main the witnesses were agreed respecting the existence of these physical indicia, but differed as to the conclusions to be drawn from them; the expert for the government maintaining that they afforded convincing reasons for concluding that the lands were coal lands, and the experts for the coal company controverting that view. But the divergence was not so pronounced as it would seem, for it was partly due to a difference as to what, in legal contemplation, are coal lands.

Digitized by Google

The expert for the government proceeded upon the theory that when the known surroundings are such that practical coal men would invest in particular lands for coal mining, or advise others to do so, those lands are to be deemed coal lands, even though coal has not as yet actually been disclosed within their limits. And having in mind the outcropping coal bed, the direction and inclination of its dip, the character of the rocks with which it was interstratified, the quality and thickness of the coal at the outcrop, the proximity of the lands to the outcrop, and the topographical and structural features of the vicinity, he gave it as his opinion that the coal bed extended into and through the lands in question, and that practical coal men would regard the lands as valuable for coal, and invest in them as such. He accordingly pronounced them coal lands within his acceptation of that term. This conclusion had substantial support, not only in the facts already recited, but also in the fact that the company's maps, made three years before the suit was begun, showed that it was intended to project its mining operations westward from the outcrop a mile and a half, and had designated the intervening lands, which included some of those in controversy, as coal lands, and in the further fact that the company had returned lands extending westward [246] a similar distance, likewise including some now in controversy, as exempt from direct taxation by reason of a local statute substituting an output tax upon coal mines. Laws Wyo. 1903, chap. 81, p. 101. The return for the year in which the maps were made claimed an exemption of substantially six sections, in two tiers of three sections each, although the work of developing the mine (No. 4), as shown by the maps, was still within the east half of the middle section in the eastern tier.

The experts for the coal company proceeded largely, but not entirely, upon the theory that lands cannot be regarded as coal lands unless coal in quantity and of quality to render its extraction profitable is actually disclosed within their boundaries. One testified that even if a slope were driven from the outcrop to within 5 feet of the vertical boundary of one of the sections in question, and in good coal all the way (a fact proved, but not to be considered here, because in the nature of a discovery subsequent to the entries), it would not show that the section approached was coal land, there being no actual exposure of coal within its limits. And he added that it would be the same if the distance were 3 inches instead of 5 feet, but that "the moment you cross the line, then it commences to be coal land." Special emphasis was laid upon the uncertainties incident to coal mining in the cretaceous areas of the West by reason of the occurrence of faults, wants, thinning, and the like; and this, it was said, required that actual exposure of coal within the land, by an outcropping at the surface or an excavation, be accepted as the true and only test. But even such a test was largely discredited by statements that "a good outcrop at the surface may represent a want below, or a want at the surface may represent a coal below," and that in following a good discovery a fault or thinning, as well as a want, may be encountered at any moment. It was conceded, however, that the coal horizon—meaning the coal-bearing [247] strata shown at the outcrop, but not necessarily the coal—passed through the lands in controversy, and one expert, while declaring that he could not make an affidavit that they were coal lands in the sense of "strictly containing deposits of coal," candidly added: "But I would be prepared to make an affidavit that I believe them to contain coal." Another, although pronouncing the showing at the outcrop and elsewhere insufficient to render the lands valuable for coal mining, said: "I am not prepared, personally, to either affirm or deny that this land does or does not contain coal. I contend that it is beyond the capacity of any man to say that something exists or does not exist upon which he has no absolute testimony."

It is of some significance that Sneddon—who had long been in the company's service, had been the central figure in the acquisition of these lands, was familar with them and the purpose for which they were sought and acquired, was the company's superintendent when the evidence was taken before the master, and was present during a part, at least, of the time when it was being taken—was not called by the company as a witness, and that statements, declarations, and acts attributed to him and which made against the company were permitted to go undenied and unexplained.

We think the evidence, rightly considered, shows with the requisite certainty that at the time of the proceedings in the land office the lands were known to be valuable for coal. Otherwise they had only a nominal value, not to exceed $1.25 an acre, and yet easily ten times that amount was voluntarily expended by the company in acquiring them. It was hardly intending to make an aimless or grossly excessive expenditure. It was a practical concern, operated by practical men. It had located a mine upon the outcrop five years before, and in the meantime had proved the wisdom of the undertaking [248] by its mining operations. They had disclosed the existence of an extensive bed of valuable coal dipping to the west under the valley, and in that way had supplemented the evidence afforded by the outcrop and its surroundings. Without any doubt these considerations induced the company to believe, and rightly so, that the lands in controversy possessed a value for coal mining greatly in excess of their value for any other purpose. This explains the expenditure and the persistency of the company's efforts to acquire them; and the fact that the earlier effort was obviously fraudulent and unlawful, independently of the character of the lands, serves in no small degree to explain the kindred practices employed in the later effort. In short, the company, without care as to the means, sought and acquired the lands because it regarded them as valuable for coal. Its view and purpose were also reflected by its maps and tax returns. Of course, it was not a bona fide purchaser from Sneddon and Harrison, for they were mere agents representing it as an undisclosed principal.

Digitized by Google

An exposure to the eye of coal upon the particular lands was not essential to give them a then present value for coal mining. They were all adjacent to the outcrop and above the plane of the coal-bearing strata dipping under the valley. In alternate even-numbered sections they substantially paralleled the outcrop for 7 miles, and in two places were separated from it by only a few rods. Those to the north were opposite the company's developed mine (No. 4), and those to the south were opposite the tract acquired through Lees, upon which good coal was disclosed. The outcrop, the disclosures in the vicinity, and the geological formation pointed with convincing force to a workable bed of merchantable coal extending under the valley and penetrating these lands. These conditions were open to common obseravtion, and were such as would appeal to practical men, and be relied upon by [249] them in making investments for coal mining. They did so appeal to the Cumberland people, as well as this company, both large concerns represented by men of experience, understanding the uncertainties and hazards of the business as well as its rewards. No doubt it has its uncertainties and hazards, but the evidence shows that they are not so pronounced as indicated by the company's experts.

There is no fixed rule that lands become valuable for coal only through its actual discovery within their boundaries. On the contrary, they may, and often do, become so through adjacent disclosures and other surrounding or external conditions; and when that question arises in cases such as this, any evidence logically relevant to the issue is admissible, due regard being had to the time to which it must relate.

The case of Colorado Coal & I. Co. v. United States, 123 U. S. 307, 31 L. ed. 182, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131, relied upon by the coal company, is essentially different from this in that there the court was dealing with a statute excepting from entry lands on which there were "mines" at the time, a matter particularly noticed in the opinion (p. 328), while here the exception is of "mineral lands" and "lands valuable for minerals." Rev. Stat. §§ 2302, 2318, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 1410, 1423.

It will be perceived that we are not here concerned with a mere outcropping of coal with nothing pointing persuasively to its quality, extent, or value; neither are we considering other minerals whose mode of deposition and situation in the earth are so irregular or otherwise unlike coal as to require that they be dealt with along other lines.

Decree affirmed.

---

[250] EL PASO BRICK COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
JOHN H. McKNIGHT.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 250–260.)

Mines — rights acquired by entry — erroneous cancelation.

1. The legal effect under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2325, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1429, of the allowance of an entry upon an application for a patent to a mining claim by the local land officer issuing the final receipt as a determination that the original locations were valid and that everything necessary to keep them in force, including the annual assessment work, had been done, is not destroyed by the cancelation by the Land Department of such entry and final receipt, based upon a mistake of law.

[For other cases, see Mines, I. d, 1, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Mines — affidavit of posting — curing defect.

2. The execution before an officer residing outside of the mining district of the affidavit that notice of an application for a patent to a mining claim had been posted on the land, though not a compliance with U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2335, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1435, is not a fatal defect which invalidates the entire proceeding before the Land Department, but is a mere irregularity which may be cured by the subsequent filing of a properly verified affidavit.

Digitized by Google

Mines — acquiescence in erroneous cancelation of entry — effect on vested rights.

3. Rights to a patent to a mining claim with which the applicant had become vested by a full compliance with the requirements of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2325, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1429, were not destroyed because such applicant yielded to an erroneous ruling of the Land Department canceling the entry and receiver's final receipt on the ground that the affidavit of posting was executed before an officer residing outside of the mining district, and instituted new proceedings in order to secure a patent as evidence of title.

[For other cases, see Mines, I. d, 1, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 185.]

Argued January 22 and 23, 1914. Decided April 6, 1914.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the Territory of New Mexico to review a decree which affirmed a decree of the District Court of Doña Ana County in that territory in favor of plaintiff in a suit to try the right of possession to conflicting mining locations. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

See same case below, 16 N. M. 721, 120 Pac. 694, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1309.

Statement by Mr. Justice Lamar:

In proceedings brought by McKnight to try the right of possession to conflicting mining locations, it appeared that the defendant, the El Paso Brick Company, was in possession of the Aluminum, International, and Hortense claims, constituting what was known as the Aluminum group of placer mines. It held under locations made prior to January, 1903. In 1905 the company decided to apply for a patent to the land, which embraced about 411 acres. Accordingly, on August 2, 1905, it filed with the register of the land office at Las Cruces, Doña Ana county, New Mexico, an application for a patent, together with an affidavit (executed before an officer residing outside of the mining district) that notice of the application had been posted on the land. These papers were filed with the register, who gave the further notice required by statute. No protest or adverse claim was filed by any person. The Brick Company paid $1,027.50, being the purchase price fixed by Rev. Stat. § 2333, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1433, and on October 23, 1905, the land officers allowed an entry on which the receiver issued a final receipt—the material portions of which were as follows:

United States Land Office at Las Cruces, N. Mexico.

October 23, 1905.

Received from the El Paso Brick Company, El Paso, Texas, the sum of Ten hundred and twenty-seven and 50-100 dollars, the same being payment in full for the area embraced in that mining claim known as the "Aluminum [252] Placer Group" unsurveyed . . . embracing 410.90 acres in the Brickland mining district, in the county of Doña Ana and territory of New Mexico, as shown by the survey thereof.

$1,027.50. Henry D. Bowman, Receiver.

The entry and this final receipt prima facie entitled the company to a patent, which, however, was not issued because various parties filed protests with the land commissioner in which it was asserted that the Brick Company's locations were originally void, or if valid, had been forfeited. It was also contended that the company was not entitled to a patent because the affidavit showing the posting of the notice on the land had not been signed before an officer residing within the land district, as provided in Rev. Stat. § 2335, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1435, which declares that "all affidavits required to be made under this chapter [mining laws] may be verified before any officer authorized to administer oaths within the land district where the claims may be situated."

Notice of these protests was given to the Brick Company, which was allowed sixty days within which to show cause why the entry should not be canceled. "In response, numerous affidavits and exhibits designed to overcome the objections were filed on behalf of the company," among which was a "supplementary affidavit with reference to such posting and such claim, which was in compliance with the laws of the United States, and was verified before a proper officer."

On September 4, 1906, the commissioner ruled that the entry was fatally defective because the original affidavit as to posting had not been executed before an officer residing in the land district. From that ruling the Brick Company appealed.

There was a hearing before the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, who, on September 9, 1908, rendered a decision (37 Land Dec. 155) in which, after discussing the provisions [253] of Rev. Stat. §§ 2325, 2335, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 1429, 1435, and quoting from various rulings of the Land Department and courts, he held that the fact that the affidavit of posting had been signed before an officer residing outside of the district was a fatal defect, which invalidated the entire proceeding. Among other things, he said: "The defect is not a mere irregularity which may be cured by the subsequent filing of a properly verified affidavit. The statutory provisions involved are mandatory. Their observance is among the essentials to the jurisdiction of the local officers to entertain the patent proceedings. The requisite statutory proof as to posting, not having been theretofore filed, the register was without authority to direct the publication of the notice or otherwise proceed, and the notice, although in fact published and posted, being without the necessary legal basis, was a nullity and ineffectual for any purpose. The patent proceedings, therefore, fall and the entry will be canceled."

Digitized by Google

The record further recites that on November 24, 1908, the Brick Company waived its right to petition for a review of such decision and "thereupon such decision and the cancelation of said entry became final and said entry was canceled on the records of the land office." On the next day, November 25, 1908, the Brick Company filed at the local land office a second application for patent. McKnight thereupon filed an adverse claim in which he set up that the land described in the Brick Company's application embraced within its limits the Lulu and Agnes claims which had been located by him in April, 1905, and relocated in May, 1906, at which time he also located the Tip Top, Lynch, and Aurora claims. The patent proceedings in the local land office were stayed in order that McKnight might, as provided in Rev. Stat. § 2326, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1430, bring a suit in a court of competent jurisdiction to try the right of possession.

On January 2, 1909, McKnight brought such suit in the [254] district court of Doña Ana county, New Mexico. It was tried November 8, 1909, before a judge without a jury. At the hearing McKnight introduced the certificates of the location described in his complaint, and evidence tending to show that he had done the required assessment work on his five claims. In support of his contention that the Brick Company had forfeited its rights, by failing to do the annual assessment work, the record recites that he offered "certified copies of proof filed by the Brick Company in June, 1905, and December, 1906, for the purpose of showing, in connection with the testimony of the witness [the keeper of the county records] that there had been no satisfactory proof of labor filed for any year previous to 1906." These certified copies consisted of affidavits by the president of the Brick Company that it had done more than $5,000 worth of work on its locations during each of the years 1903, 1904, and 1906. There was no ruling by the court limiting the effect of the affidavits as evidence, but it appears that McKnight contended that, as the names of the persons actually doing the work were not stated in the affidavit, and as the first of the affidavits was made in April, 1905, the burden of showing that the work had actually been done for 1903 and 1904 was cast on the Brick Company by virtue of the provisions of § 2315 of the Compiled Laws of New Mexico.† The Brick Company, on [255] the other hand, appears to have contended that this territorial statute was not only void as being in conflict with the Federal statutes, but that the affidavits offered by plaintiff showed on their face that many times the amount of assessment work required had been done in 1903, 1904, and 1906, thus segregating the land from the public domain and rendering McKnight's subsequent locations nugatory.

At the conclusion of the evidence the court took the case under advisement, and on December 17, 1909, rendered a judgment for McKnight which was affirmed (16 N. M. 721, 120 Pac. 694, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1309) by the supreme court of New Mexico. The case was then brought here on appeal.

Mr. Francis W. Clements argued the cause, and, with Messrs. W. A. Hawkins, John Franklin, Aldis B. Browne, Alexander Britton, and Evans Browne, filed a brief for appellant:

Defendant's entry was at most only voidable, and was not and could not have been held void.

†"Sec. 2315. The owner or owners of any unpatented mining claim in this territory, located under the laws of the United States and of this territory, shall, within sixty days from and after the time within which the assessment work required by law to be done upon such claim should have been done and performed, cause to be filed with the recorder of the county in which such mining claim is situated, an affidavit setting forth the time when such work was done, and the amount, character, and actual cost thereof, together with the name or names of the person or persons who performed such work; and such affidavit, when made and filed as herein provided, shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated. The failure to make and file such affidavit as herein provided shall in any contest, suit, or proceedings touching the title to such claim, throw the burden of proof upon the owner or owners of such claim to show that such work has been done according to law."

Digitized by Google

St. Louis Smelting & Ref. Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636, 646, 26 L. ed. 875, 878, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 673; Knight v. United Land Asso. 142 U. S. 161, 211, 212, 35 L. ed. 974, 992, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 258; Southern Cross Gold Min. Co. v. Sexton, 147 Cal. 758, 82 Pac. 423.

There is no difference between an agricultural and a mineral entry as withdrawing lands covered thereby from the public domain.

Clements v. Warner, 24 How. 394, 397, 16 L. ed. 695, 696; Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S. 330, 337, 338, 23 L. ed. 424, 426, 427; Ard v. Brandon, 156 U. S. 537, 541–544, 39 L. ed. 524–526, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 406; Northern P. R. Co. v. Amacker, 175 U. S. 564, 567, 568, 44 L. ed. 274, 275, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 236; Tarpey v. Madsen, 178 U. S. 215, 220–222, 44 L. ed. 1042, 1044, 1045, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 849; Brandon v. Ard, 211 U. S. 11, 18, 19, 53 L. ed. 68, 71, 72, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Weyerhaeuser v. Hoyt, 219 U. S. 380, 388, 389, 55 L. ed. 258, 261, 262, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 300.

A mineral entry withdraws lands embraced thereby from the public domain.

Lindley, Mines, 2d ed. §§ 637, 717; Barringer & A. Mines & Mining, 265; Snyder, Mines, § 493; Re American Hill Quartz Mines, Sickels, Min. Dec. 377, 383, s. c. Comrs. Dec. Sickles, Min. Dec. 384; Re Harrison, 2 Land Dec. 767; Smuggler Min Co. v. Trueworthy Lode Claim, 19 Land Dec. 356 v. Re David Foote Lode, 26 Land Dec. 196; Nielson v. Champagne Min. & Mill. Co. 29 Land Dec. 491; McCormack v. Night Hawk & N. Gold Min. Co. 29 Land Dec. 373; Re Marburg Lode Min. Claim, 30 Land Dec. 202; Benson Min. & Smelting Co. v. Alta Min. & Smelting Co. 145 U. S. 428, 431, 432, 434, 36 L. ed. 762, 764, 765, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877, 17 Mor. Min. Rep. 488; Aurora Hill Consol. Min. Co. v. 85 Min. Co. 34 Fed. 515; Neilson v. Champaigne Min. & Mill. Co. 111 Fed. 655, 21 Mor. Min. Rep. 664; Teller v. United States, 51 C. C A. 230, 113 Fed. 273; Cranes Gulch Min. Co. v. Scherrer, 134 Cal. 350, 86 Am. St. Rep. 279, 66 Pac. 487, 21 Mor. Min. Rep. 549; Southern Cross Gold Min. Co. v. Sexton, 147 Cal. 758, 82 Pac. 423; Batterton v. Douglas Min. Co. 20 Idaho, 760, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1121, 120 Pac. 827; Belk v. Meagher, 104 U. S. 279, 26 L. ed. 735, 1 Mor. Min. Rep. 510; Germania Iron Co. v. James, 32 C. C. A. 348, 61 U. S. App. 1, 89 Fed. 811; James v. Germania Iron Co. 46 C. C. A. 476, 107 Fed. 597.

That an agricultural entry segregates land from the public domain is well settled.

Graham v. Hastings & D. R. Co. 1 Land Dec. 362; St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. v. Forseth, 3 Land Dec. 446; St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. v. Leech, 3 Land Dec. 506; Witherspoon v. Duncan, 4 Wall. 210, 219, 18 L. ed. 339, 343; Simmons v. Wagner, 101 U. S. 260, 261, 25 L. ed. 910, 911; Hastings & D. R. Co. v. Whitney, 132 U. S. 357, 363, 364, 33 L. ed. 363, 366, 367, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 112; Whitney v. Taylor, 158 U. S. 85, 90–93, 39 L. ed. 906–908, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 796; Parsons v. Venzke, 164 U. S. 89, 92, 41 L. ed. 360, 362, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27.

Rights in mineral lands withdrawn from the public domain by entry or otherwise cannot be acquired.

Brown v. Gurney, 201 U. S. 184, 50 L. ed. 717, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509; Murray v. Polglase, 17 Mont. 455, 43 Pac. 505, 23 Mont. 401, 59 Pac. 439; United States v. Steenerson, 1 C. C. A. 552, 4 U. S. App. 332, 50 Fed. 504; Adams v. Polglase, 32 Land Dec. 477; Noonan v. Caledonia Gold Min. Co. 121 U. S. 393, 30 L. ed. 1061, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 911; Kendall v. San Juan Silver Min. Co. 144 U. S. 658, 36 L. ed. 583, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 779, 17 Mor. Min. Rep. 475.

Only the facts found by the Land Department on defendant's first application for a patent are binding in this action.

St. Louis Smelting & Ref. Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636, 26 L. ed. 875, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 673; Knight v. United Land Asso. 142 U. S. 161, 35 L. ed. 974, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 258; Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Forsythe, 159 U. S. 46, 61, 40 L. ed. 71, 76, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1020.

Reviewing the legality of the cancelation of defendant's entry in October, 1905, is not a collateral attack upon the Land Department's action.

Rebecca Gold Min. Co. v. Bryant, 31 Colo. 119, 102 Am. St. Rep. 17, 71 Pac. 1110, 22 Mor. Min. Rep. 538; Southern Cross Gold Min. Co. v. Sexton, 147 Cal. 758, 82 Pac. 423.

The cancelation of defendant's entry in October, 1905, was erroneous as a matter of law.

Lonergan v. Shockley, 33 Land Dec. 238; Corning Tunnel Co. v. Pell, Sickels, Min. Dec. 307; Re Stock Oil Co. 40 Land Dec. 198; Cleaves v. Smith, 22 Land Dec. 486; Re Sharp, 35 Land Dec. 179; Re Leahy, 22 Land Dec. 114; Re Boomer, 18 Land Dec. 364; Brox v. Tobias, 17 Land Dec. 400; 2 Lindley, Mines, §§ 677, 680, 713; Wight v. Dubois, 21 Fed. 693; City Rock Lode v. King of West Lode, Copp, L. O. 218; Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. 308, 319, 19 L. ed. 931, 933.

Mr. Eugene S. Ives argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee:

The test of whether mineral territory has been segregated from the public domain,

Digitized by Google

or, in other words, has ceased to be open to location, is found in the inquiry as to whether an interest in it has vested in anybody else.

Benson Min. & Smelting Co. v. Alta Min. & Smelting Co. 145 U. S. 430, 36 L. ed. 763, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877, 17 Mor. Min. Rep. 488.

The distinction between mineral and nonmineral entries is recognized by the courts, and what decisions there are upon the question are to the effect that a mineral entry does not segregate the land from the public domain.

Brown v. Gurney, 201 U. S. 184, 50 L. ed. 717, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509; Murray v. Polglase, 17 Mont. 455, 43 Pac. 505, 23 Mont. 401, 59 Pac. 439, 20 Mor. Min. Rep. 296; Adams v. Polglase, 32 Land Dec. 477.

The rule that invalid agricultural entries segregate the land until cancelation is not inconsistent with the principle that the fact of segregation depends fundamentally upon the fact of an interest in the property, existing in a third party.

Hodges v. Colcord, 193 U. S. 192, 48 L. ed. 677, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 433.

The Secretary of the Interior had jurisdiction over appellant's application for a patent. The Land Department was a tribunal with jurisdiction over the parties and the subject-matter, and its judgment cannot be collaterally attacked. The Land Department held that, as between the United States and the appellant, the appellant's application was void ab initio and a nullity. In this adjudication the appellant acquiesced, and he cannot attack it collaterally or at all.

United States v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 15 C. C. A. 96, 32 U. S. App. 272, 67 Fed. 955; New Dunderberg Min. Co. v. Old, 25 C. C. A. 116, 49 U. S. App. 201, 79 Fed. 602; United States v. Northern P. R. Co. 37 C. C. A. 290, 95 Fed. 869; King v. McAndrews, 50 C. C. A. 29, 111 Fed. 864; Knight v. United Land Asso. 142 U. S. 211, 35 L. ed. 992, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 258.

The amended affidavit could not have a retroactive effect for any purpose, and the proceedings were at all times a nullity.

McCracken v. Flanagan, 127 N. Y. 493, 24 Am. St. Rep. 481, 28 N. E. 385.

The decision of the Secretary canceling the entry is binding and cannot be attacked in this proceeding.

St. Louis Smelting & Ref. Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636, 26 L. ed. 875, 11 Mor. Min. Rep. 673; Knight v. United Land Asso. 142 U. S. 161, 35 L. ed. 974, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 258.

The action of the Land Department cannot be reviewed in this action.

Aurora Hill Consol. Min. Co. v. 85 Min. Co. 34 Fed. 515.

Mr. Justice Lamar, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

McKnight brought suit against the El Paso Brick Company to try the right of possession to conflicting mining locations. In his complaint he asserted his own title and attacked that of the defendant under locations older in date, but which he claimed had been forfeited by failure to do the annual assessment work for 1903 and 1904, thereby leaving the land open to the locations made by McKnight in 1905 and 1906. The Brick Company, while insisting that the plaintiff's own evidence proved that the assessment [256] work had in fact been fully performed, relied on the legal effect of the company's application for a patent to the land and the final receipt issued to it by the receiver of the local land office in October, 1905. To this the plaintiff replied that the entry, on which the receipt issued, had been canceled on the ground that the patent proceedings were absolutely void because the statutory affidavit of posting had not been filed.

1. Locators of mining claims have the exclusive right of possession of all the surface included within the exterior limits of their claims so long as they make the improvements or do the annual assessment work required by the Revised Statutes, § 2324, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1426. The law, however, provides (Rev. Stat. §§ 2325, 2333, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 1429, 1433) a means by which the locator can pay the purchase price fixed by statute and convert the defeasible possessory title into a fee simple. Sixty days' notice must be given in order that all persons having any adverse claim may be heard in opposition to the issue of a patent. That notice is threefold. It must be given by publication in the nearest newspaper, by posting in the Land Office, and by posting on the land itself; and it is provided in the statute that this latter fact may be proved by the affidavit of two persons before an officer residing within the land district (Rev. Stat. § 2335). All persons having adverse claims under the mining laws may be heard in objection to the issuance of a patent. But (§ 2325) "if no adverse claim shall have been filed . . . it shall be assumed that the applicant is entitled to a patent upon the payment . . . [of the price fixed by statute] and that no adverse claim exists; and thereafter no objection from third persons to the issuance of a patent shall be heard, except it be shown that the applicant has failed to comply with the terms of this chapter" [relating to mineral lands].

Digitized by Google

2. In the present case the Brick Company's application for a patent was filed, each of the several forms of notice [257] required by statute was given, no adversee claim was filed, the purchase price was paid to the government, and a final receipt was issued by the local land office. The entry by the local land officer issuing the final receipt was in the nature of a judgment in rem (Wight v. Dubois, 21 Fed. 693), and determined that the Brick Company's original locations were valid, and that everything necessary to keep them in force, including the annual assessment work, had been done. It also adjudicated that no adverse claim existed and that the Brick Company was entitled to a patent.

From that date, and until the entry was lawfully canceled, the Brick Company was in possession under an equitable title, and to be treated as "though the patent had been delivered to" it. Dahl v. Raunheim, 132 U. S. 262, 33 L. ed. 325, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 74, 16 Mor. Min. Rep. 214. And, when McKnight instituted possessory proceedings against the Brick Company, the latter was entitled to a judgment in its favor when it produced that final receipt as proof that it was entitled to a patent and to the corresponding right of an owner.

Nor should the result have been different when the record showed that the entry and final receipt, properly issued, had been improperly canceled. It is true that the order of the Department was a denial of the patent, but it was not a conclusive adjudication that the Brick Company was not entitled to a patent, nor could such an order deprive the Brick Company of rights vested in it by law. For while the General Land Office had power of supervision over the acts of the local officers, and could annul entries obtained by fraud or made without authority of law, yet, if the Department's cancelation was based upon a mistake of law, its ruling was subject to judicial review when properly drawn in question in judicial proceedings, inasmuch as the power of the land office is not unlimited, nor can it be arbitrarily exercised so as to deprive any person of land lawfully entered and paid for. Cornelius v. [258] Kessel, 128 U. S. 461, 32 L. ed. 483, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 122; Parsons v. Venzke, 164 U. S. 89, 41 L. ed. 360, 17 Sup. Ct Rep. 27.

3. So that the case involves a determination of the single question as to whether the patent was properly refused by the Land Department because of the objection that the Brick Company had failed to comply with the terms of the law relating to mineral land. Rev. Stat. § 2325, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1429. That can be determined by an inspection of the record, in which the order appears. It shows that the cancelation of the entry was not based on the Brick Company's failure to do the annual assessment work, or to give the proper notice, or to pay the statutory price, but solely for the reason that the affidavit of posting was executed before an officer who resided outside of the land district.

That decision (37 Land Dec. 155), though supported by some Departmental rulings of comparatively recent date, was in conflict with the established practice of the Land Department, and was expressly and by name overruled, on July 29, 1911, in Re Stock Oil Co. 40 Land Dec. 198, which reaffirmed prior decisions to the effect that irregularities in proof, including the execution of affidavits before other than the designated officers, might be supplied, even on appeal.

These and similar rulings, previously followed in the Department, are manifestly correct. They accord with the policy of the land laws, under which the United States does not act as an ordinary proprietor seeking to sell real estate at the highest possible price, but offers it on liberal terms to encourage the citizen and to develop the country. The government does not deal at arm's length with the settler or locator, and whenever it appears that there has been a compliance with the substantial requirements of the law, irregularities are waived or permission is given, even on appeal, to cure them by supplemental proofs. United States v. Marshall Silver Min. Co. 129 U. S. 587, 32 L. ed. 737, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 343, 16 Mor. Min. Rep. 205. In [259] the present case such proof by supplemental affidavits, properly executed, showed that the land had been properly posted. But that fact was not allowed to have any effect because of the mistaken view that, as the original affidavit of posting had been signed before an officer residing outside of the land district, the patent proceedings were absolutely void. This confused service by proper posting—which was judisdictional,—with defective proof of such service, which —like the defective return of an officer—could be corrected. Under the law, jurisdiction depended upon giving notice by publication in a newspaper, by posting in the land office, and by posting on the land itself,—the statute directing how the giving of such notice should be proved. But irregularities in complying with such directory provision could be cured, and when cured, as it was here, the patent should have been issued. The cancelation of the entry was based on a plain error of law, and though there was no appeal in fact, and no right of appeal to the courts, the ruling did not operate to deprive the Brick Company of its property in the mines. The fact that the Brick Company, perforce, yielded to the erroneous ruling, and instituted new proceedings in order to secure a patent, as evidence of its title, did not destroy the rights with which the company had become invested by full compliance with the requirements of Rev. Stat. § 2325, U. S. Comp. Stat, 1901, p. 1429. When, therefore, in the suit to try the right of possession, the plaintiff asked that proper effect be given to the final receipt and the entry on which it was based as a judgment in rem, it was not making, as is contended, a collateral attack on the order of the Land Department, but was merely relying on the valid entry, and asking the court to decline to give effect to the erroneous cancelation.

Digitized by Google

4. This conclusion makes it unnecessary to decide the question as to whether the territorial statute, imposing upon the locator the burden of proving that he has performed the annual assessment work, is void as being in [260] conflict with the Federal statutes, which require no such annual proof, raise no presumption of abandonment, and, as construed in Hammer v. Garfield Min. & Mill. Co. 130 U. S. 291, 32 L. ed. 964, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 548, 16 Mor. Min. Rep. 125, demand clear and convincing proof that work has not been done before a forfeiture can be declared. It also makes it unnecessary to determine whether the affidavit of work being offered for one purpose by McKnight could be used for another purpose by the Brick Company as substantive evidence in the case.

Many pages of the briefs are devoted to a discussion of these questions, but if any of them were decided in favor of the Brick Company it could not increase its rights. If the legal propositions involved could be decided in favor of McKnight, that could not overcome the fact that the issuance of the final receipt to the Brick Company on October 23, 1905, was an adjudication not only that the Brick company was entitled to a patent, but that McKnight then had no adverse claim to the land. Of course he acquired none in May, 1906, by locating on property that had previously been and then was segregated from the public domain.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of the Territory of New Mexico is reversed, and the case is remanded to the Supreme Court of the State of New Mexico for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Reversed.

[261] AMERICAN IRON & STEEL MANUFACTURING COMPANY

v.

SEABOARD AIR LINE RAILWAY and S. Davies Warfield, R. Lancaster Williams, and E. C. Duncan, Receivers of the Seaboard Air Line Railway.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 261-268.)

Interest — sale on thirty days' credit.

1. A sale of supplies on thirty days' credit imports, in Virginia, an implied promise by the purchaser to pay interest after that date as an incident of the debt.

[For other cases, see Interest, I. a, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Interest — during receivership.

2. Interest during the receivership should be allowed on a claim for supplies sold to a railway company in Virginia on thirty days' credit, which, under the local law, has priority over bonded indebtedness, where, before the credit period expired, the railway company, alleged to be insolvent, was, on its own application, placed in the hands of receivers whose appointment was continued under a bill for foreclosure by the mortgage trustee, and the property was subsequently returned to the railway company upon the success of a plan to readjust the bonded indebtedness, interest having been paid on the bonds and floating indebtedness during the receivership, and the court retaining jurisdiction for the purpose of passing upon claims of creditors aggrieved by the railway company's default in paying its obligations.

[For other cases, see Interest, I. c, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 233.]

Argued March 6, 1914. Decided April 6, 1914.

ON A CERTIFICATE from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, presenting the question as to the right to recover interest on a claim against a railway company during the period of a receivership. Answered in the affirmative.

Statement by Mr. Justice Lamar:

Under the provisions of § 6 of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 828, chap. 517, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 549), the circuit court of appeals of the fourth circuit certified to this court a question on which it desired instruction, and in that connection made the following statement of facts:

"Upon a bill filed by a railway company alleging its insolvency and consequent inability to maintain itself as a going concern, except through the medium of a receivership, receivers were appointed. The bill alleged that a receivership would enable the property of the railway company to be preserved and maintained as a whole, [262] and the sums due and to become due to the bondholders and creditors to be secured and ultimately paid in full.

Digitized by Google

"The trustee in the first mortgage answered the bill, admitting its allegations, and afterwards filed a cross bill again admitting the allegations of the bill in regard to the insolvency of the company. The suit was not a creditors' suit. The trustee subsequently filed a bill in the same court to foreclose the mortgage, seeking a sale of the equity of redemption, and the two suits were consolidated. No prior encumbrancers were made parties to either suit. Prior to the receivership the claimant furnished supplies to the railway company, for which, shortly after the receivers were appointed, a lien was duly perfected under the statute of Virginia known as the labor and supply lien statute, Code of Va. § 2485. The supplies were sold on a credit of 'thirty days, 1 per cent discount allowed for payment in ten days.' Claimant filed its claim before the special master in the receivership proceedings, relying upon a statutory lien under the statute above mentioned. The special master reported against the allowance of interest on the claim, to which report in that particular claimant excepted.

"Subsequently, on the petition of the railway company, a decree was entered approving 'a plan of adjustment' of the finances of the company, and providing for turning back to the company its property, and for ending the receivership at a certain time. From time to time during the receivership and at the ratification of the plan of adjustment, and as a part thereof, all interest due at the time of the appointment of the receivers and accruing during the receivership on all the funded and many of the floating obligations of the railway company were paid in full. The amount so paid for interest aggregated some millions of dollars.

"The decree approving the plan of adjustment provided that the company should pay in due course of business all [263] its obligations, liabilities, and indebtedness, and reserved the right, in the event of default in that regard, to any claimant aggrieved by such default, to present his petition to the court to have his claim enforced 'to the same extent as though the receivership had continued.'

"After the receivership had been thus terminated, claimant filed its petition in the court, praying that its exceptions to the special master's report should be sustained, and for the enforcement of its claims, including interest thereon during the period of the receivership, and seeking to enforce it not upon the doctrine of an equitable lien, but as a statutory lien. The circuit court refused to allow interest for the period of the receivership, and from that ruling an appeal was taken.

Question.

Is interest recoverable on such a claim for the period of the receivership?

Mr. George Wayne Anderson argued the cause, and, with Mr. Henry R. Pollard, filed a brief for American Iron & Steel Manufacturing Company:

The debt is interest-bearing because "the supplies were sold on a credit of thirty days, 1 per cent discount allowed for payment in ten days." This was an express term of credit, and interest is always allowed at the expiration of an express or of an implied term of credit, for such is the implied contract of the parties.

Curtis v. Innerarity, 6 How. 146, 154, 12 L. ed. 380, 383; Spalding v. Mason, 161 U. S. 375, 396, 40 L. ed. 738, 746, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 592; Alantic Phosphate Co. v. Graffin, 114 U. S. 500, 29 L. ed. 224, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 967.

The nature of the promise implies the payment of interest. Moreover, the filing of a lien is equivalent to an account stated (Richmond & I. Constr. Co. v. Richmond, N. I. & B. R. Co. 34 L.R.A. 625, 15 C. C. A. 289, 31 U. S. App. 704, 68 Fed. 115), and interest is allowed on a stated account (Young v. Godbe, 15 Wall. 562, 21 L. ed. 250).

Again, the debt was secured by a lien duly perfected under the statute of Virginia, which gives priority to the lienor over mortgages. Since the debt is an interest-bearing debt, it follows that the security and priority of the lien attach as well to the interest as to the principal.

Central T. Co. v. Condon, 14 C. C. A. 314, 31 U. S. App. 387, 67 Fed. 98; Richmond & I. Constr. Co. v. Richmond, N. I. & B. R. Co. 34 L.R.A. 625, 15 C. C. A. 289, 31 U. S. App. 704, 68 Fed. 116; Jourolmon v. Ewing, 29 C. C. A. 41, 56 U. S. App. 149, 85 Fed. 105.

The steel company has a prior lien by statute which relates back to and dates from the time the supplies were furnished, and that was anterior to the appointment of receivers.

First Nat. Bank v. William R. Trigg Co. 106 Va. 327, 56 S. E. 158; Mott v. Wissler Min. Co. 68 C. C. A. 335, 135 Fed. 697; Re West Norfolk Lumber Co. 112 Fed. 760; Newgass v. Atlantic & D. R. Co. 56 Fed. 676; Newgass v. Atlantic & D. R. Co. 72 Fed. 712; Kahle v. Long Reach Oil Co. 51 W. Va. 313, 41 S. E. 233; Richmond v.

Digitized by Google

Irons, 121 U. S. 27, 30 L. ed. 864, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 788; Seventh Nat. Bank v. Shenandoah Iron Co. 35 Fed. 436; High, Receivers, 4th ed. §§ 138, 440; Wiswall v. Sampson, 14 How. 52, 14 L. ed. 322.

The lien is statutory and is to be liberally construed. The receivers took cum onere.

Seventh Nat. Bank v. Shenandoah Iron Co. 35 Fed. 436; Mott v. Wissler Min. Co. 68 C. C. A. 335, 135 Fed. 700; Davis v. Alvord, 94 U. S. 549, 24 L. ed. 285, 9 Mor. Min. Rep. 384; National Bank v. Mechanics' Nat. Bank, 94 U. S. 437, 441, 24 L. ed. 176, 179; Richmond v. Irons, 121 U. S. 27, 30 L. ed. 864, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 788; Guardian Trust & D. Co. v. Fisher, 200 U. S. 57, 50 L. ed. 367, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186.

The contract was for the payment of money with an express term of credit, and payment of interest being clearly implied by the nature of the promise, it became part of the debt, and is recoverable not as damages, but of right.

Curtis v. Innerarity, 6 How. 146, 154, 12 L. ed. 380, 383; Alantic Phosphate Co. v. Grafflin, 114 U. S. 500, 29 L. ed. 224, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 967; Spalding v. Mason, 161 U. S. 375, 396, 40 L. ed. 738, 746, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 592; Hastings v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 152; Meech v. Smith, 7 Wend. 318; Redfield v. Bartels, 139 U. S. 694, 701, 703, 35 L. ed. 310, 313, 314, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 683; Redfield v. Ystalyfera Iron Co. 110 U. S. 174, 28 L. ed. 109, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570; Richmond & I. Constr. Co. v. Richmond, N. I. & B. R. Co. 34 L.R.A. 625, 15 C. C. A. 289, 31 U. S. App. 704, 68 Fed. 115; Cecil v. Hicks, 29 Gratt. 4, 26 Am. Rep. 391; Chapman v. Shepherd, 24 Gratt. 384; Roberts v. Cocke, 28 Gratt. 217; Kent v. Kent, 28 Gratt. 845; McVeigh v. Howard, 87 Va. 605, 13 S. E. 31; Tidball v. Shenandoah Nat. Bank, 100 Va. 741, 42 S. E. 867; Re West Norfolk Lumber Co. 112 Fed. 769; Ohio v. Frank, 103 U. S. 697, 26 L. ed. 531; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Estill, 147 U. S. 591, 37 L. ed. 292, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 444; Young v. Godbe, 15 Wall. 562, 21 L. ed. 250; Selleck v. French, 1 Am. Lead. Cas. (Hare & W.) 5th ed. 626, note; Henderson Cotton Mfg. Co. v. Lowell Mach. Shops, 86 Ky. 668, 7 S. W. 142.

The local law allows interest as of right in such a case, which the court has no discretion to refuse, and the question of interest is always one of local law.

4 Minor, Inst. p. 909; Cecil v. Hicks, 29 Gratt. 4, 26 Am. Rep. 391; Shipman v. Bailey, 20 W. Va. 140; Pickens v. McCoy, 24 W. Va. 344; Sioux City, O'N. & W. R. Co. v. Manhattan Trust Co. 172 U. S. 642, 43 L. ed. 1180, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 879; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. McCann, 174 U. S. 586, 43 L. ed. 1096, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 755; Massachusetts Ben. Asso. v. Miles, 137 U. S. 689, 34 L. ed. 834, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 234; United States Mortg. Co. v. Sperry, 138 U. S. 313, 34 L. ed. 969, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 321; Ohio v. Frank, 103 U. S. 697, 26 L. ed. 531; Holden v. Freedman's Sav. & T. Co. 100 U. S. 72, 25 L. ed. 567.

A receivership does not put an end to the running of interest in a proper case, and the security of the lien attaches as well to the interest as to the principal.

Richmond & I. Constr. Co. v. Richmond, N. I. & B. R. Co. 34 L.R.A. 625, 15 C. C. A. 289, 31 U. S. App. 704, 68 Fed. 116; Southern R. Co. v. Carnegie Steel Co. 176 U. S. 295, 296, 44 L. ed. 474, 475, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 347, 22 C. C. A. 289, 42 U. S. App. 145, 76 Fed. 492; Central Trust Co. v. Condon, 14 C. C. A. 314, 31 U. S. App. 387, 67 Fed. 98; Jourolmon v. Ewing, 29 C. C. A. 41, 56 U. S. App. 149, 85 Fed. 105; First Nat. Bank v. Ewing, 43 C. C. A. 150, 103 Fed. 190; Southern R. Co. v. American Brake Co. 22 C. C. A. 298, 42 U. S. App. 162, 76 Fed. 502; Southern R. Co. v. Adams, 22 C. C. A. 300, 42 U. S. App. 167, 76 Fed. 504; Southern R. Co. v. Tillett, 22 C. C. A. 303, 42 U. S. App. 173, 76 Fed. 507; Virginia Pass. & Power Co. v. Lane Bros. Co. 98 C. C. A. 295, 174 Fed. 513; Wetzel & T. R. Co. v. Tennis Bros. Co. 75 C. C. A. 266, 145 Fed. 458, 7 Ann. Cas. 426; Griffith v. Blackwater Boom & Lumber Co. 46 W. Va. 56, 33 S. E. 125, 55 W. Va. 604, 69 L.R.A. 124, 48 S. E. 442.

Under the decree approving the adjustment plan, the appellees must be held as having funds in hand liable to appellant's debt, and this entitles him to interest upon the principle of Malcomson v. Wappoo Mills, 99 Fed. 633; Williams v. American Bank, 4 Met. 317; and Thomas v. Western Car Co. 149 U. S. 95, 37 L. ed. 663, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824.

Mr. L. L. Lewis argued the cause and filed a brief for Seaboard Air Line Railway et al.:

Interest was not a substantive part of appellant's debt.

The difficulty and confusion on the subject of interest has, undoubtedly, largely arisen from the failure to distinguish between those cases in which interest must be allowed as a part of the debt, pursuant to contract, and those in which, in the exercise of a judicial discretion, it may be allowed as damages. The distinction has been recognized by this court.

United States v. North Carolina, 136 U. S. 211, 34 L. ed. 336, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 920.

Whenever interest is allowed, except in cases where there has been a contract to pay interest, it is allowed for delay or default of the debtor.

Digitized by Google

United States v. Sherman, 98 U. S. 565, 25 L. ed. 235.

The fact of a specific credit having been given is not a circumstance, standing alone, from which a contract to pay interest is legally inferable.

Gordon v. Swan, 2 Campb. 429, 12 East, 419, 11 Revised Rep. 758 note.

While interest, when there is an agreement to pay it, is recoverable as matter of law, in other cases, i. e., where it is given not as a part of the debt, but as damages, it is matter of discretion, to be determined upon the particular circumstances of the case.

Erskine v. Van Arsdale, 15 Wall. 75, 21 L. ed. 63; Redfield v. Ystalyfera Iron Co. 110 U. S. 174, 28 L. ed. 109, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570; United States v. Sanborn, 135 U. S. 271, 34 L. ed. 112, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 812; Stewart v. Barnes, 153 U. S. 456, 462, 38 L. ed. 781, 784, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 849; Young v. Godbe, 15 Wall. 562, 21 L. ed. 250; Redfield v. Bartels, 139 U. S. 694, 35 L. ed. 310, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 683.

In those cases in which it has been said that interest is not given as damages at the discretion of the court or jury, but as a part of the debt, etc., the court was speaking of obligations or other written instruments for the payment of money at a given day, the point decided being that in such cases, the absence of an express contract, the law implies a promise to pay interest from the date appointed for the payment of the principal.

Chapman v. Shepherd, 24 Gratt. 377; Roberts v. Cocke, 28 Gratt. 207; Murphy v. Gaskins, 28 Gratt. 222; Cecil v. Deyerle, 28 Gratt. 775; Kent v. Kent, 28 Gratt. 840; Cecil v. Hicks, 29 Gratt. 1, 26 Am. Rep. 391; McVeigh v. Howard, 87 Va. 599, 13 S. E. 31; Tidball v. Shenandoah Nat. Bank, 100 Va. 741, 42 S. E. 867; Jones v. Williams, 2 Call (Va.) 102; Hatcher v. Lewis, 4 Rand. (Va.) 152; Buchanan v. Leeright, 1 Hen. & M. 211.

None of these cases go beyond the rule recognized by the court of King's Bench in Farquhar v. Morris, 7 T. R. 124 (decided in 1797), which was the case of a bond, conditioned for the payment of a lesser sum, dated on a day certain, without naming any day of payment or expressly reserving interest. It was held that the bond was payable on the day of its date, and that it impliedly carried interest from date. That case has never been supposed to conflict with Gordon v. Swan, supra, and other English cases in regard to book debts.

Can any reason be imagined why a claim for goods sold should, independently of statute, carry interest as matter of law any more than a judgment for money, a judgment or decree for money being a debt of record?

Shelton v. Welsh, 7 Leigh, 175.

In Virginia, interest in an action for goods sold and delivered, though sold on a specified credit, is matter of discretion, except where there is a controlling agreement of the parties, express or implied.

Mickie v. Lawrence, 5 Rand. (Va.) 571; Cooke v. Wise, 3 Hen. & M. 463; Newton v. Wilson, 3 Hen. & M. 470; Dow v. Adams, 5 Munf. 21.

A foreclosing junior mortgagee, seeking only the sale of the equity of redemption, as in the present case, has no right, under ordinary circumstances, to bring in a prior mortgagee or other prior encumbrancer, and if brought in, such prior encumbrancer may object and be relieved from the suit with costs. And, as in such a case no relief as against prior encumbrancers is sought, it goes without saying that their rights cannot be injuriously affected by the decree.

Jerome v. McCarter, 94 U. S. 734, 24 L. ed. 136; Woodworth v. Blair, 112 U. S. 8, 28 L. ed. 615, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 6.

From the action of the court refusing leave to a prior lienor to intervene in such a suit there is no appeal; and as the order refusing such leave is not final in its character, it leaves the party denied the privilege of intervening at full liberty to assert his rights, if any, in any appropriate form of proceeding.

Ex parte Cutting, 94 U. S. 14, 24 L. ed. 49; Credits Commutation Co. v. United States, 177 U. S. 311, 44 L. ed. 782, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 636; Re Metropolitan R. Receivership, 208 U. S. 90, 106, 52 L. ed. 403, 411, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 219.

Mr. Justice Lamar delivered the opinion of the court:

The statement of facts made by the circuit court of appeals of the fourth circuit shows that supplies were sold to a railway company on thirty days' credit. Before the credit period expired the road, alleged to be insolvent, was, on its own application, placed in the hands of receivers, their appointment being subsequently continued under a bill for foreclosure filed by mortgage trustees. The [264] railway company succeeded in making a readjustment of its bonded indebtedness and the property was returned to the owners. The court, however, retained jurisdiction for the purpose of passing upon the claims of creditors aggrieved by the company's default in paying its obligations. Among those presented was the American Iron & Steel Manufacturing Company's claim for supplies secured by a lien which by statute took priority over mortgages. The matter was referred to a master on pleading not before us. He made a report (not in the record) and on exceptions thereto the circuit court refused to allow interest. From that statement, in connection with the briefs and arguments of both counsel, we infer that the railway was directed to pay the principal of the claim. The case was then taken to the circuit court of appeals for the fourth circuit which certifies to this court the question, "is interest recoverable on such a claim for the period of receivership?"

Digitized by Google

Both parties agree that the matter is controlled by the law in Virginia, but no light is thrown on the subject by the statute of the state, which merely declares that legal interest shall continue to be at the rate of 6 per cent. Pollard's Code, § 2817. No Virginia case directly in point is cited in either of the briefs, and there is a complete disagreement between counsel as to the bearing of the state decisions on the question here involved.

On the part of the railway company it is contended that interest could not have been recovered on this claim even in an action at law. On the authority of Calton v. Bragg, 15 East, 223, 13 Revised Rep. 451, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 541; Newton v. Wilson, 3 Hen. & M. 470; Quincy, M. & P. R. Co. v. Humphreys, 145 U. S. 82, 36 L. ed. 632, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787, and other like cases, it is argued that the right to interest is a matter of agreement, and can be recovered as a part of the debt only where it has been reserved in the contract, or where a promise is implied from the character of the note or instrument evidencing the debt. The railway therefore [265] insists that as the intervener sold the supplies, without taking a note and without securing a promise to pay interest, there was no right to recover interest as an incident of the debt, although a jury, as a matter of discretion, might have allowed it by way of damages for unreasonable delay in making payment.

On the other hand, counsel for the Iron & Steel Company contend that as these supplies were sold on a credit of thirty days, a promise was implied to pay interest after that date as an incident of the debt itself. From Chapman v. Shepherd, 24 Gratt. 383; Craufurd v. Smith, 93 Va. 623 (2), 23 S. E. 235, 25 S. E. 657; Tidball v. Shenandoah Nat. Bank, 100 Va. 741, 42 S. E. 867; Butler Bros.-Huff Co. v. Virginian R. Co. 113 Va. 28 (7), 73 S. E. 441; Roberts v. Cocke, 28 Gratt. 207, and Cooper v. Coates, 21 Wall. 111, 22 L. ed. 482, we reach the conclusion that whatever may have been the English and early American rule, the tendency in Virginia, as elsewhere in this country, is to allow interest on contracts to pay money from the date that the debt becomes due. 2 Minor's Inst. 381. The sale here of supplies on thirty days' credit was not, as argued, a mere agreement for the benefit of the buyer that it should not be sued before the expiration of that time, but was the fixing of a definite date for payment of the purchase money. The acceptance of the supplies, sold on those terms, was equivalent to a promise to pay the money on that day. Atlantic Phosphate Co. v. Graffin, 114 U. S. 500, 29 L. ed. 224, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 967. As payment was not then made, the railway company was in default, and interest began to accrue as an incident of the debt, recoverable as such, and not merely as damages to be allowed in the discretion of court or jury. This appears to have been the view of the circuit court of appeals, since the interest-bearing quality of the debt seems to be assumed in the question—"Is interest recoverable on such a claim for the period of receivership?"

In the discussion as to the answer which should be [266] given that question, the railway company insists that, whether treated as part of the debt or allowed as damages, interest can only be charged against the railway because of delay due to its own fault, while here the failure to pay was due to the act of the law in taking its property into custody and operating the same by receivers in order to prevent the disruption of a great public utility. And it is true, as held in Tredegar Co. v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 105 C. C. A. 501, 183 Fed. 290, that as a general rule, after property of an insolvent is in custodia legis interest thereafter accruing is not allowed on debts payable out of the fund realized by a sale of the property. But that is not because the claims had lost their interest-bearing quality during that period, but is a necessary and enforced rule of distribution, due to the fact that in case of receiverships the assets are generally insufficient to pay debts in full. If all claims were of equal dignity and all bore the same rate of interest, from the date of the receivership to the date of final distribution, it would be immaterial whether the dividend was calculated on the basis of the principal alone or of principal and interest combined. But some of the debts might carry a high rate and some a low rate, and hence inequality would result in the payment of interest which accrued during the delay incident to collecting and distributing the funds. As this delay was the act of the law, no one should thereby gain an advantage or suffer a loss. For that and like reasons, in case funds are not sufficient to pay claims of equal dignity, the distribution is made only on the basis of the principal of the debt. But that rule did not prevent the running of interest during the receivership; and if, as a result of good fortune or good management, the estate proved sufficient to discharge the claims in full, interest as well as principal should be paid. Even in bankruptcy, and in the face of the argument that the debtor's liability on the debt and its incidents terminated at the date of adjudication, and as a fixed liability [267] was transferred to the fund, it has been held, in the rare instances where the assets ultimately proved sufficient for the purpose, that creditors were entitled to interest accruing after adjudication. 2 Bl. Com. 488; Cf. Johnson v. Norris, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 111 C. C. A. 291, 190 Fed. 460 (5).

Digitized by Google

The principle is not limited to cases of technical bankruptcy, where the assets ultimately prove sufficient to pay all debts in full, but principal as well as interest, accruing during a receivership, is paid on debts of the highest dignity, even though what remains is not sufficient to pay claims of a lower rank in full. Central Trust Co. v. Condon, 14 C. C. A. 314, 31 U. S. App. 387, 67 Fed. 84; Richmond & I. Constr. Co. v. Richmond, N. I. & B. R. Co. 34 L.R.A. 625, 15 C. C. A. 289, 31 U. S. App. 704, 68 Fed. 116; First Nat. Bank v. Ewing, 43 C. C. A. 150, 103 Fed. 190.

The railway company relies on the statement in Thomas v. Western Car Co. 149 U. S. 96, 116, 37 L. ed. 663, 670, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 824, that "as a general rule after property of an insolvent passes into the hands of a receiver, interest is not allowed on claims against the fund." The court there refused to allow interest on car rentals, accruing during the receivership, under an old contract, because the funds were not sufficient to pay the bonds, saying (117): "We see no reason in departing from that [general] rule in a case like the present where the claim [for car rentals] would be paid out of the moneys that fall far short of paying the mortgage debt." But here, interest was paid on mortgage bonds and should therefore have been paid on a claim which by statute was given priority over the bonds. This was specially true where the property was in the hands of a receiver on the application of the debtor and of the mortgage trustees. For, manifestly, the law does not contemplate that either the debtor or the trustees can, by securing the appointment of receiver, stop the running of interest on claims of the highest dignity.

In the brief for the railway company attention is called to the fact that the road was not in custodia legis [268] under a creditors' suit, but in a proceeding to foreclose the equity of redemption. In view of that fact it is argued that the Iron & Steel Company should be remitted to its action at law against the company which is now in possession of the property. But this seems to involve matters not within the question certified by the circuit court of appeals. The property was returned to the railway company on condition that any creditor aggrieved by the failure to pay his claim might present his petition to the court and have it enforced "to the same extent as though the receivership had continued." As a fact interest was paid on the floating indebtedness, out of earnings made by the receivers appointed first under a bill which asked that the property be taken in charge by the court so that ultimately all creditors would be paid in full. We must assume that the court had the right to make these payments, and if so it had a like right in the case of the claim for railway supplies. No question is raised as to the power of the court to require payment of the principal of appellant's debt, and if the court could require a payment of the principal, it could also enforce the payment of the interest, which was but an incident of that debt. If the property had remained in the hands of the receiver, the lienor might have been permitted to intervene and share in the fund realized by the sale of property in the hands of receivers appointed, first, on the application of the railway, in the interest of all creditors, and continued by an order entered in the bill to foreclose the mortgage.

It is, however, not necessary to discuss that matter further than to say that on the facts stated, interest was recoverable on the American Iron & Steel Company's claim for the period of receivership. The question certified by the Circuit Court of Appeals is answered in the affirmative.

---

[269] WIRT FRANKLIN, Plff. in Err.,

v.

C. S. LYNCH and O. A. Simmons.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 269–273.)

Indians — restrictions on alienation — sale before allotment.

1. The removal by the act of April 21, 1904 (33 Stat. at L. 204, chap. 1402), of all restrictions upon the alienation of lands of all allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians who are not of Indian blood, did not empower a white member of the Choctaw Tribe to sell before allotment.

[For other cases, see Indians, VIII., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Indians — after- acquired title — effect on sale before allotment.

2. The after-acquired title of a white member of the Choctaw Nation cannot inure to the benefit of her grantee in a deed which, under the act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. at L. 641, chap. 1362), §§ 15, 16, was void when made because executed before allotment, notwithstanding the provision of Mansfield's Ark. Dig. § 642, that "if a person without title shall convey real estate and subsequently acquire title, the legal or equitable estate afterwards acquired shall immediately pass to the grantee as if the estate had been in the grantor at the time of the conveyance," since this statute was extended to the Indian territory by the act of February 19, 1903 (32 Stat. at L. 841, chap. 707), only so far as "not inconsistent with any law of Congress."

Digitized by Google

[For other cases, see Indians, VIII., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 553.]

Submitted February 25, 1914. Decided April 6, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Oklahoma to review a decree which reversed a decree of the District Court of McClain County, in that state, in favor of plaintiff in a suit to remove a cloud on title. Affirmed.

See same case below, 37 Okla. 60, 130 Pac. 599.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. H. A. Ledbetter submitted the cause for plaintiff in error:

An intermarried citizen of the Choctaw or Chickasaw nation, after the act of Congress of April 21, 1904, although he had no vested right in the nation that would prevent Congress from legislating with reference to such citizens as it saw fit, still had a vested equitable right to his just and equal share against strangers and fellow members of his tribe. Such a right of such a citizen was one in expectancy or equity that he may assign, and unless Congress legislates this expectancy or equity away before selection is made, we can see no good and valid reason why the after-acquired legal title would not inure to the benefit of the assignee or grantee.

32 Cyc. 1066; 4 Cyc. 12; McDonald v. McDonald, 58 N. C. (5 Jones, Eq.) 211, 75 Am. Dec. 434; Doe ex dem. Mann v. Wilson, 23 How. 457, 16 L. ed. 584; Crews v. Burcham, 1 Black, 352, 17 L. ed. 91; Jones v. Meehan, 175 U. S. 1, 44 L. ed. 49, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Webster v. Luther, 163 U. S. 331, 339, 41 L. ed. 179, 181, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 963; Barnes v. Poirier, 12 C. C. A. 9, 27 U. S. App. 500, 64 Fed. 14; Beley v. Naphtaly, 19 C. C. A. 392, 44 U. S. App. 232, 73 Fed. 120; McKennon v. Winn, 1 Okla. 327, 22 L.R.A. 501, 33 Pac. 582; Lamb v. Davenport, 18 Wall. 307, 21 L. ed. 759; Hussey v. Smith, 99 U. S. 20, 25 L. ed. 314; Shulthis v. McDougal, 95 C. C. A. 615, 170 Fed. 529; Southerland v. Whittington, 46 Ark. 285.

Where Congress legislates for the Indians in general, without mentioning the Five Civilized Tribes, they are excepted from its operation.

United States v. Joseph, 94 U. S. 614, 24 L. ed. 295.

Reading the act of Congress of April 21, 1904, with §§ 15 and 16 of the supplemental treaty of 1902, and § 19 of the act of 1906, necessitates the conclusion that the restrictions against the right of alienation had been removed.

Mullen v. United States, 224 U. S. 448, 56 L. ed. 834, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 494; Crews v. Burcham, 1 Black, 352, 17 L. ed. 91; Doe ex dem. Mann v. Wilson, 23 How. 457, 16 L. ed. 584; Jones v. Meehan, 175 U. S. 1, 44 L. ed. 49, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Rutherford v. Greene, 2 Wheat. 197, 4 L. ed. 218; Wray v. Doe, 10 Smedes & M. 452; Land v. Keirn, 52 Miss. 341; Francis v. Francis, 203 U. S. 233, 51 L. ed. 165, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 129; McAffee v. Lynch, 26 Miss. 257; Bonifer v. Smith, 92 C. C. A. 604, 166 Fed. 846; Beam v. United States, 89 C. C. A. 240, 162 Fed. 260; Johnson v. Collins, 12 Ala. 322; Atwood v. Beck, 21 Ala. 590.

Mr. S. T. Bledsoe submitted the cause for defendants in error:

An Indian tribe or a member thereof is incapable of making a valid conveyance of tribal lands.

Johnson v. M'Intosh, 8 Wheat. 543, 5 L. ed. 681.

Conveyances by Indians, members of the Five Civilized Tribes, of their interest in unallotted tribal land, are void and incapable of passing any interest.

Case v. Hall, 2 Ind. Terr. 8, 46 S. W. 180; Rogers v. Hill, 3 Ind. Terr. 562, 64 S. W. 536; Turner v. Gilliland, 4 Ind. Terr 606, 76 S. W. 253; Denton v. Capital Town Site Co. 5 Ind. Terr. 396, 82 S. W. 852; Harris v. Hardridge, 7 Ind. Terr. 532, 104 S. W. 826; Kelly v. Harper, 7 Ind. Terr. 541, 104 S. W. 829; Sayer v. Brown, 7 Ind. Terr. 675, 104 S. W. 877; Hayes v. Barringer, 7 Ind. Terr. 697, 104 S. W. 937, 93 C. C. A. 507, 168 Fed. 221; McKee v. Henry, 119 C. C. A. 412, 201 Fed. 75; Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S. 445, 43 L. ed. 1041, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 722; Gritts v. Fisher, 224 U. S. 640, 56 L. ed. 928, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 850; Muskrat v. United States, 219 U. S. 346, 55 L. ed. 246, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 250; Woodbury v. United States, 95 C. C. A. 498, 170 Fed. 302; Ligon v. Johnston, 90 C. C. A. 486, 164 Fed. 670; Fleming v. McCurtain, 215 U. S. 56, 57, 54 L. ed. 88, 90, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 16; Bledsoe v. Wortman, 35 Okla. 261, 129 Pac. 841.

Digitized by Google

The act of April 21, 1904, is not applicable to tribal lands.

Goat v. United States, 224 U. S. 458–468, 56 L. ed. 841–846, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 541; Deming Invest. Co. v. United States, 224 U. S. 471, 56 L. ed. 847, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 549; Mullen v. United States, 224 U. S. 448, 56 L. ed. 834, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 494; Heckman v. United States, 224 U. S. 413, 56 L. ed. 820, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 424.

If the conveyance from Emmer Sisney, under which the plaintiff claims, is void because made before the lands were alienable, or before the restrictions upon the right to alienate such land had been removed, the judgment of the supreme court of the state of Oklahoma should be affirmed.

Marchie Tiger v. Western Invest. Co. 221 U. S. 286, 55 L. ed. 738, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578; Heckman v. United States, 224 U. S. 413, 56 L. ed. 820, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 424; Mullen v. United States, 224 U. S. 448, 56 L. ed. 834, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 494; Goat v. United States, 224 U. S. 458, 56 L. ed. 841, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 541; Deming Invest. Co. v. United States, 224 U. S. 471, 56 L. ed. 847, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 549; Simmons v. Whittington, 27 Okla. 356, 112 Pac. 1018; Hooks v. Kennard, 28 Okla. 457, 114 Pac. 744; Howard v. Farrar, 28 Okla. 490, 114 Pac. 695; Smith v. Martin, 28 Okla. 836, 115 Pac. 866; Bledsoe v. Wortman, 35 Okla. 261, 129 Pac. 841.

Nor can such a conveyance be made effective on the doctrine of relation.

Starr v. Long Jim, 227 U. S. 613, 57 L. ed. 670, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 358; Monson v. Simonson, 231 U. S. 341, ante, 260, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 71; Bledsoe v. Wortman, 35 Okla. 261, 129 Pac. 841.

Conveyances made in violation of legislation imposing restrictions upon alienation are void; the purpose of such legislation is not only to prevent alienation during the restricted period, but to prevent the encumbrance of the restricted land by deed or contract during the period when alienation is prohibited from being effective after the expiration or removal of restrictions.

Marchie Tiger v. Western Invest. Co. 221 U. S. 286, 55 L. ed. 738, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578; Heckman v. United States, 224 U. S. 413, 56 L. ed. 820, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 424; Goodrum v. Buffalo, 89 C. C. A. 525, 162 Fed. 817; Hayes v. Barringer, 93 C. C. A. 507, 168 Fed. 221; Lewis v. Clements, 21 Okla. 167, 95 Pac. 769; Howard v. Farrar, 28 Okla. 490, 114 Pac. 695; Simmons v Whittington, 27 Okla. 356, 112 Pac. 1018; Harper v. Kelly, 29 Okla. 809, 120 Pac. 293; Turner v. Gilliland, 4 Ind. Terr. 606, 76 S. W. 253; Denton v. Capital Town Site Co. 5 Ind. Terr. 396, 82 S. W. 852; Sayer v. Brown, 7 Ind. Terr. 675, 104 S. W. 877; Harris v. Hardridge, 7 Ind. Terr. 532, 104 S. W. 826.

Mr. Justice Lamar delivered the opinion of the court:

Emmer Sisney, a white woman and widow of a Choctaw Indian, applied in 1899 to be admitted as a member of the tribe by intermarriage. Her application not having been granted, she employed Franklin & Apple, attorneys at law, to secure her enrolment. As compensation for their services she, on October 16, 1905, by warranty deed, conveyed to them her "entire interest in any and all lands, exclusive of homestead, which might finally be allotted to her by the Commissioners of the Five Civilized Tribes." This deed was duly recorded, together with an instrument by which she agreed to make conveyance when the land was actually allotted. Thereafter, on November 26, 1906, Emmer Sisney was enrolled as an intermarried citizen of the Choctaw Nation. She promptly made her selection, and on December 12, 1906, received a patent to land, all of which, except the homestead, she, on December 14, 1906, sold for value to Lynch & Simmons. Thereupon Franklin, who had acquired Apple's interest under the deed of 1905, brought this suit to have the deed to Lynch & Simmons canceled as a cloud on his title. The district court of Oklahoma entered a decree in his favor. That judgment was reversed by the supreme court, and the case is here on a writ of error to review that ruling.

Both parties claim title to land allotted in December, 1906, to a white member of the Choctaw Tribe. The plaintiff has the older warranty deed, but the defendants contend that as it was signed before allotment, the deed was void by virtue of the provisions in the Supplemental Agreement of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. at L. 641, §§ 15 and 16, chap. 1362), [271] that "lands allotted to members and freedmen [of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes] shall not be affected . . . by any deed, debt, or obligation of any character contracted prior to the time at which said land may be alienated under this act, nor shall said lands be sold except . . . (§ 16) after issuance of patent."

To this the plaintiff replies that, as Emmer Sisney was a white woman, this prohibition against sale by her had been repealed by the act of April 21, 1904 (33 Stat. at L. 204, chap. 1402), which provides that "all the restrictions upon the alienation of lands of all allottees of . . . the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, who are not of Indian blood, . . . are . . . hereby removed."

Digitized by Google

That statute did not authorize white members of the tribe to sell future acquired property, but did permit non-Indian allottees to sell what had been actually assigned to them in severalty. Cf. 34 Stat. at L. § 19, p. 144, chap. 1876. The distinction between a member and an allottee is not verbal, but was made in recognition of a definite policy in reference to these lands. The Revised Statutes (§ 2118) declare that no conveyance from an Indian tribe shall be of any validity in law or in equity unless authorized by treaty. As the tribe could not sell, neither could the individual members, for they had neither an undivided interest in the tribal land nor vendible interest in any particular tract. Gritts v. Fisher, 224 U. S. 641, 56 L. ed. 931, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 580. But in pursuance of the legislation following the Report of the Dawes Commission (Choate v. Trapp, 224 U. S. 665, 56 L. ed. 941, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565), provision was made for dividing and distributing the tribal land in severalty among the members of the tribe. But, recognizing the probability of improvident and hasty sales being made, Congress provided that the land could not be sold until after the patent had actually issued, and even then only one quarter could be sold in one year, three quarters in three years, and the balance in five years. The act of 1904, relied on by plaintiff, removed some of the restrictions, [272] and permitted those members of the tribe who were not of Indian blood to sell land after it had been actually allotted in severalty. But it did not permit even a non-Indian to sell a mere float or expectancy, since he would not likely receive the full value of what thereafter might be patented to him.

The plaintiff further contends that even if the deed was inoperative when made, yet, as Emmer Sisney was a white woman, she had the capacity of a white person of full age to convey an expectancy, so that when she acquired title in 1906 it inured to the benefit of Franklin and Apple, as the grantees under the deed of 1905. But the trouble with this contention is that Emmer Sisney cannot be treated as a white woman for the purpose of conveying an expectancy, and an Indian for the purpose of securing an allotment. When she applied to be enrolled as a citizen of the Choctaw Nation she, ipso facto, subjected herself to the restriction upon alienation of Indian land imposed upon all members of the tribe. All who dealt with her, as to land thereafter allotted to her, were charged with knowledge that the act of 1902 declared that such land should not be affected by any contract made before allotment. The deed of 1905 was therefore a nullity, and did not estop her or her assigns from showing that it had been made in direct violation of the statute. For, to permit an Indian's deed, void when made, to operate as a conveyance of title to lands subsequently allotted, would be to disregard the express language of the statute and defeat the protective purposes for which the law was passed. Starr v. Long Jim, 227 U. S. 624, 57 L. ed. 675, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 358. The result is not changed by the provision of § 642 of Mansfield's Digest that "if a person, without title, shall convey real estate, and subsequently acquire title, the legal or equitable estate afterwards acquired shall immediately pass to the grantee as if the estate had been in the grantor at the time of the conveyance." The chapter of Mansfield's Digest of [273] Arkansas Law containing this section was extended (32 Stat. at L. 841, chap. 707) to the Indian territory "so far as the same may be applicable and not inconsistent with any law of Congress." It has no effect here because it is inconsistent with the act of 1902, which declared that Indian land should not be affected by a deed made before patent. The deed to Franklin, having been made before allotment, was void, and the judgment is affirmed.

WILLIAM S. TEVIS, William H. McKittrick, the Pacific Surety Company, and the United Surety Company, Plffs. in Err.,

v.

JEPP RYAN, Thomas C. Ryan, and E. R. Ryan.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 273-291.)

Contracts — construction — stockholders' agreement.

1. A personal responsibility on the part of the minority stockholders, in case the project for rehabilitating the corporation then in financial straits should not succeed in two years, to see to it that the majority stockholders should be reinvested with the same proportionate interest in the corporate stock that they had previously held, was imported by an agreement between all the stockholders whereby, in consideration of a readjustment of the capital stock, involving the placing of a substantial part of such stock in the corporate treasury, to be sold by such minority stockholders for the benefit of the corporation at a price to be fixed by the directors, the said majority stockholders were to surrender both their stock control and their control of the directorate to such minority stockholders, who were to have two years in which to comply with all the requirements of the contract, and in case of default the interest of the said majority stockholders was to "reinvest in them in the same proportion and ratio as they held and were possessed of at the signing of this agreement."

NOTE.—Generally, on admissibility of parol evidence to vary, add to, or alter a written contract—see notes to Durkin v. Cobleigh, 17 L.R.A. 273, and Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mowry, 24 L. ed. U. S. 674.

Digitized by Google

[For other cases, see Contracts, II. d, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Evidence — parol to vary contract — admissibility under pleadings.

2. Parol evidence of previous promises by one of the defendants inconsistent with the terms of the written contract in suit are admissible where the pleadings upon which the parties went to trial relied not only upon the contract, but also upon alleged fraudulent conduct beginning with representations of the means and property of the defendants, on the strength of which the plaintiffs entered into the written agreement, followed by alleged fraudulent use of the control of the property turned over to the defendants in pursuance of the terms of such agreement.

[For other cases, see Evidence, VI. c; XIII. a, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Appeal — admission of evidence — rulings correct when made.

3. Rulings that certain evidence was admissible, which were correct when made, because relevant to an issue of fraud raised by the pleadings, do not become erroneous when the allegations of fraud are afterwards abandoned, or are held by the trial court not to be sufficiently supported.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VIII. m, 3, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Evidence — relevancy — fraud.

4. Evidence that stockholders who had surrendered their control of the corporate stock and directorate to certain minority stockholders in order to rehabilitate the company, reserving the right to resume control if the project should fail, were not given timely information of important suits against the corporation, is relevant to the question of fraud alleged to consist in fraudulent representations by such minority stockholders, on the strength of which the contract for surrender of control was entered into, followed by alleged fraudulent use of such control.

[For other cases, see Evidence, XI. e, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Imputed notice — joint contractors.

5. Notice to either one of two joint contractors is notice to both.

[For other cases, see Notice, II. b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Contracts — demand for performance.

6. An oral demand for reinvestment, made by majority stockholders who had surrendered their control of the corporate stock and directorate to the minority stockholders in order to rehabilitate the company, reserving the right to resume control in case the project should fail, is sufficient if it is specific enough fairly to warn such minority stockholders that they are called upon to perform their engagement under the reinvestment clause of the contract.

[For other cases, see Contracts, 677, 678, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Appeal — question not raised below — evidence.

7. A party cannot complain of the admission in evidence of a paper introduced to show a demand, and admissible for that purpose (in the absence of objections based upon the time of its delivery), where his only objection at the trial was that the paper contained matters irrelevant to the demand, since his proper course was to request an instruction limiting the effect that should be given to the paper by the jury, or, if intending to insist that it came too late to constitute a proper demand, then to exclude the paper from consideration.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VIII. j, 5, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Error to territorial supreme court — following decision below.

8. The Federal Supreme Court will not lightly disturb on writ of error the decision of a territorial supreme court, turning largely upon the local practice.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VIII. m, 1; Courts, VII. d, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 189.]

Argued January 23 and 26, 1914. Decided April 6, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the Territory of Arizona to review a judgment which affirmed, upon condition of the remittitur of a part of the damages recovered, a judgment of the District Court of Maricopa County in that territory, in favor of plaintiffs in an action on a contract. Affirmed.

See same case below, 13 Ariz. 120, 108 Pac. 461, on rehearing, 13 Ariz. 282, 114 Pac. 557.

Statement by Mr. Justice Pitney:

This action was brought by defendants in error against Tevis and McKittrick, two of the plaintiffs in error, in a district court of one of the counties of the then territory of Arizona. The trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiffs below for $132,000. On appeal, the supreme court of the territory held that because of error affecting the amount of the damages, $64,564.63 of the verdict ought to be remitted, and that upon the filing of a remittitur judgment should be entered in favor of plaintiffs below for the remaining sum of $67,435.37. 13 Ariz. 120, 108 Pac. 461. Both parties filed petitions for a rehearing, with the result that the court adhered to its former view. 13 Ariz. 282, 114 Pac. 557. Plaintiffs having filed the remittitur, judgment was entered in their favor for the last-mentioned sum, and the present writ of error was sued out.

Digitized by Google

The controversy arises out of the following transactions. In the year 1902 plaintiffs and defendants were stockholders in an Arizona corporation known as the Turquoise Copper Mining & Smelting Company, which owned mining properties in Cochise county, Arizona. The stock consisted of 100,000 shares, of the par value of $10 each, of which the Ryans together owned four [275] sevenths and Tevis and McKittrick owned three sevenths. The Ryans were in control of the board of directors. About $160,000 had been expended towards the development of the mines, and this had been contributed by the respective parties in proportion to their holdings of stock, plaintiffs having contributed about $90,000, defendants about $70,000. One Bryant had secured a judgment and levied execution upon the property of the company, under which the mines had been sold on July 30, 1902, to one McPherson, subject to redemption on or before January 31, 1903. In this situation of affairs plaintiffs met the defendant McKittrick in Wilcox, Arizona, on November 29, 1902, and, after some negotiation, a written contract was drawn up and by them signed. Defendant Tevis was not present at this meeting, and the agreement was made contingent upon his signing, as he did a few days later. It reads as follows:

"This agreement, made and entered into this 29th day of November, 1902, by and between W. S. Tevis and W. H. McKittrick of Bakersfield, California, parties of the first part, and Jepp Ryan, T. C. Ryan, and E. B. Ryan, of Leavenworth, Kansas, parties of the second part,

"Witnesseth, That, whereas, the parties above mentioned represent all the stock in the Turquoise Copper Mining & Smelting Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the territory of Arizona, and doing business in Cochise county, Arizona, and

"Whereas, the parties of the first part now own and control three sevenths of the capital stock of the said corporation, and the parties of the second part four sevenths of the capital stock thereof; and

"Whereas, the parties of the first part are desirous of securing the controlling interest of the said capital stock of the said corporation, and thereby obtain the full management of the affairs of the said corporation;

"Now, therefore, in consideration of, that the capital [276] stock of the said corporation shall be changed from its original capitalization to one million shares of the par value of one dollar each share, and that 240,000 of said shares of said capital stock shall be placed in the treasury of the said company, to be sold in whole or in part by the said parties of the first part, at such price or prices as the board of directors of said corporation may deem advisable, and the moneys received from such sale or sales shall be used as follows: First, to pay off and liquidate a certain judgment held by T. B. McPherson, of Omaha, Nebraska, or his assigns, against the said corporation, in the amount of about $25,532.47 dollars. Second, to use the next $20,000 received from the sale of said stock to develop the claims now owned and controlled by this company; the parties of the second part hereby agree to and with the parties of the first part, that the officers in the said corporation now representing the interest of the parties of the second part shall resign from said office or offices, and allow the parties of the first part to appoint or elect such officers in their place and stead as they may desire, said second parties agree to give the parties of the first part as their interest in the said company, a total of 280,500 shares of the capital stock thereof, and the parties of the second part shall receive as their portion 279,500 shares of capital stock of the said company. That the remaining 200,000 shares shall be divided between the parties hereto in the proportion of 101,000 shares to the first parties, and 99,000 shares to the parties of the second part; said 200,000 shares shall be issued to W. H. McKittrick, as trustee for the parties hereto. All of the parties hereto agree to use their best endeavors to sell as much of the said last-mentioned shares as possible, at not less than par value, and the proceeds of any of such sales of said block of stock shall be divided pro rata among the parties hereto, until they have been fully reimbursed for the money they now have expended upon this property, [277] amounting to about $160,000, when the remaining shares shall be divided equally among them, according to their respective interests, in the ratio aforesaid.

"It is further understood and agreed between the parties hereto that they shall not be allowed to sell any of their individual holdings of stock in this company until the block of 200,000 held in trust for all shall have been sold or apportioned, as above set forth. The parties of the second part shall not be liable for any expense connected with the operation of this company, excepting the expense of selling the stock held in trust for the parties hereto. The parties of the first part shall have a term of two years in which to comply with all the requirements of this contract. Should they fail or refuse to comply with all the agreements and stipulations herein mentioned within the period aforesaid, then this agreement shall become null and void and of no effect, otherwise to remain in full force and effect. Should this contract be annulled by any failure of the parties of the first part to do any and all things herein required of them, then the interest of the second parties shall reinvest in them in the same proportion and ratio as they held and were possessed of at the signing of this agreement.

Digitized by Google

"It is further understood and agreed by and between the parties hereto that W. S. Tevis, not being present upon the signing hereof, that ten days' time be allowed him in which to sign and ratify the same. Should he fail or refuse to do so within the period above mentioned, then this instrument shall be null and void in respect to all parties hereto. All erasures and changes and interlineations were made prior to the signing of this instrument.

"Witness our hands, the day and year first above mentioned."

In accordance with the agreement, a reorganization of the company was effected, the Ryans resigned as directors, control of the directorate passed to Tevis and McKittrick, [278] and the capital stock was changed so as to consist of 1,000,000 shares, of the par value of $1 each, which were allotted as prescribed by the contract, viz.:

To Tevis and McKittrick..	280,500	shares
To the Ryans	279,500	"
To McKittrick as trustee..	200,000	"
Treasury stock	240,000	"
Total	1,000,000	"

The mines of the company were redeemed from the sheriff's sale with $30,000 loaned for the purpose by Tevis upon the company's note. This note, with others given by the company for the interest upon it, was transferred by Tevis to the Western Company of California, a corporation controlled by him.

The reorganized Turquoise Company did not prosper. Defendants sold 32,000 shares of the treasury stock at 25c. per share, netting $8,000, and the remaining 208,000 shares at ¾c. per share, netting $1,560. This money was spent in operating the mines and in paying for a diamond drill, for patents, and for attorneys' fees. In May, 1905, the Western Company secured judgment against the company in a California court for the amount of the notes and interest, aggregating $44,078.05, and an action was brought on this judgment in Cochise county, Arizona, resulting on July 20, 1905, in a judgment for $44,549.43. On this same day McKittrick secured judgment against the company for $9,975 for services as general manager from May, 1903, to June, 1905. The following day (July 21, 1905) execution was levied against the mining properties to satisfy the judgments of McKittrick and the Western Company; and on July 11, 1906, the property was sold by the sheriff to that company. A few days later defendants, with others, organized the Tejon Mining Company under the laws of Arizona, and two years afterwards the Western Company conveyed the mining properties [279] formerly of the Turquoise Company to the Tejon Company.

The present action was commenced November 30, 1906, and, after repeated modifications of the pleadings, came on for trial upon a complaint which, besides setting up the above facts, averred that after two years from the 29th day of November, 1902, had elapsed, and after plaintiffs were informed that defendants had failed to sell the 240,000 shares of the Turquoise Company for sufficient funds to pay the money advanced by them to redeem the property of the company from the sheriff's sale, and before the action of the Western Company against the Turquoise Company was commenced in the California court, to wit, on February 15, 1905, plaintiffs informed defendants that they desired to be reinvested with their interest in the property of the Turquoise Company, and to be restored to their interest therein the same as before November 29, 1902, and informed defendants that they were then ready, able, and willing to pay defendants four sevenths of the sum of $25,262.60 paid to redeem the property from the sale of July 31, 1902; and that defendants ignored said request. There were allegations of fraudulent conduct, in support of which certain evidence was introduced, but these allegations seem to have been abandoned; at least the trial judge submitted the case to the jury solely upon the ground of a breach of the contract.

Mr. Edward H. Thomas argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Evans Browne, Alexander Britton, A. B. Browne, Ben Goodrich, and A. C. Baker, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

An agreement to pay dividends on preferred stock of a railroad out of the net earnings of the road does not mean the net earnings of the road as it was when the preferred stock was issued.

St. John v. Erie R. Co. 22 Wall. 136, 22 L. ed. 743.

Where a railroad company agreed to advance to trustees a certain sum of money to be used in running steamers, to be repaid out of a certain fund arising from the business, and to be secured by a pledge of stock, and no personal liability for said moneys was reserved as against any of the parties to the agreement, such parties are not liable for any portion of said moneys beyond the amount agreed to be contributed by them to such fund.

Digitized by Google

Ogdensburgh & L. C. R. Co. v. Nashau & L. R. Co. 112 U. S. 311, 28 L. ed. 740, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 161.

An agreement between the members of a "syndicate" formed to purchase the controlling interest in the stock of a mining corporation, that one of them should "control the management of the mine," is necessarily subject to such reasonable rules and regulations as the stockholders or directors may adopt for the government of the officers of the company.

Grant v. Parker, 115 U. S. 51, 29 L. ed. 346, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1170.

An undertaking to hold a person harmless from liability on a subscription to stock in an incorporated company, and from loss or damage or liability as a stockholder in such a company, or from loss or damage by reason of connection with the company as a stockholder, cannot be held to mean that the person so indemnified will be held harmless if the stock depreciates in market value, or for any reason becomes worthless in his hands.

Morris v. Veach, 111 Ga. 438, 36 S. E. 753.

The promissory representations raise no estoppel.

Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mowry, 96 U. S. 544, 24 L. ed. 674; Wigmore, Ev. § 2425; 1 Greenl. Ev. 12th ed. § 275; Starkie, Ev. 9th Am. ed. 587; Union Stock-Yards & Transit Co. v. Western Land & Cattle Co. 7 C. C. A. 660, 18 U. S. App. 438, 59 Fed. 57; Arthur v. Baron De Hirsch Fund, 58 C. C. A. 67, 121 Fed. 795; Pitcairn v. Philip Hiss Co. 61 C. C. A. 657, 125 Fed. 113; Oelricks v. Ford, 23 How. 49, 63, 16 L. ed. 534, 538; Parish v. United States, 8 Wall. 489, 490, 19 L. ed. 472, 473; Bast v. First Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 93, 96, 97, 25 L. ed. 794, 796, 797; Martin v. Cole, 104 U. S. 30, 38, 39, 26 L. ed. 647, 650, 651; Seitz v. Brewers' Refrigerating Mach. Co. 141 U. S. 510, 517, 518, 35 L. ed. 837, 840, 841, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 46; Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Bldg. Asso. 183 U. S. 308, 318–361, 46 L. ed. 213, 218–235, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133; Maryland v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 22 Wall. 105, 113, 22 L. ed. 713, 715; Union Selling Co. v. Jones, 63 C. C. A. 224, 128 Fed. 675.

The contract is complete, and the parol representations are not consistent with its terms.

Stowell v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 163 N. Y. 298, 57 N. E. 480; House v. Walch, 144 N. Y. 418, 39 N. E. 327; Thompson v. Libby, 34 Minn. 374, 26 N. W. 1; Naumberg v. Young, 44 N. J. L. 331, 43 Am. Rep. 380.

A guaranty cannot be added to a written contract by parol.

De Witt v. Berry, 134 U. S. 306, 312, 33 L. ed. 896, 899, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 536; Seitz v. Brewers' Refrigerating Mach. Co. 141 U. S. 510, 517, 35 L. ed. 837, 840, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 46; Van Winkle v. Crowell, 116 U. S. 42, 48, 49, 36 L. ed. 880, 882, 883, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18.

The admission of parol representations was prejudicial to defendants.

Renner v. Bank of Columbia, 9 Wheat. 581, 587, 588, 6 L. ed. 166–168; Deery v. Cray, 5 Wall. 795, 807, 808, 18 L. ed. 653, 657; Smith v. Shoemaker 17 Wall. 630, 639, 21 L. ed. 717, 719; Mexia v. Oliver, 148 U. S. 664, 673, 37 L. ed. 602, 605, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 754; United States v. Honolulu Plantation Co. 58 C. C. A. 279, 122 Fed. 583.

The remittitur does not cure the error.

Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Wesch, 85 Tex. 593, 22 S. W. 957.

The court below erred in sustaining the trial court's ruling admitting in evidence the written demand of plaintiffs upon defendants.

Rulofson v. Billings, 140 Cal. 452, 74 Pac. 35; Weller v. Weller, 4 Hun, 197; Bristor v. Bristor, 82 Ind. 277; Lissak v. Crocker Estate Co. 119 Cal. 444, 51 Pac. 688; Re James, 124 Cal. 655, 57 Pac. 578, 1008; Dempsey v. Dobson, 174 Pa. 122, 3 L.R.A. 761, 52 Am. St. Rep. 816, 34 Atl. 459; Chicago v. McKechney, 205 Ill. 372, 68 N. E. 954; Rollins v. Duffy, 14 Ill. App. 69; Hightower v. Ansley, 126 Ga. 8, 54 S. E. 939, 7 Ann. Cas. 927; Allen v. Killinger (Murphy v. Killinger) 8 Wall. 480, 19 L. ed. 470.

Nelson v. First Nat. Bank, 16 C. C. A. 425, 32 U. S. App. 554, 69 Fed. 803, does not sustain the instruction on measure of damages.

The theory of damages applied by the court below is incorrect.

Galigher v. Jones, 129 U. S. 193, 201, 32 L. ed. 658, 661, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 335; Barnes v. Brown, 130 N. Y. 382, 29 N. E. 760; Dyer v. Rich, 1 Met. 180; Huse & L. Ice & Transp. Co. v. Heinze, 102 Mo. 245, 14 S. W. 756; Brinkerhoff-Farris Trust & Sav. Co. v. Home Lumber Co. 118 Mo. 461, 24 S. W. 129; Butler v. Wright, 103 App. Div. 463, 93 N. Y. Supp. 113; Moffitt v. Hereford, 132 Mo. 513, 34 S. W. 252; Sedgw. Damages, 8th ed. § 257; 2 Thomp. Corp. § 2724; Evans v. George, 80 Ill. 51.

The court below erred in holding that plaintiffs were entitled to recover the value of shares of stock of the Turquoise Company under the facts alleged in the complaint.

22 Cyc. 563–565; Sheehy v. Mandeville, 7

Digitized by Google

Cranch, 208, 3 L. ed. 317; Alexander v. Harris, 4 Cranch, 299, 2 L. ed. 627; Sebree v. Dorr, 9 Wheat. 558, 6 L. ed. 160; Covington v. Comstock, 14 Pet. 43, 10 L. ed. 346; Ferguson v. Harwood, 7 Cranch, 409, 3 L. ed. 387; Southwick v. First Nat. Bank, 84 N. Y. 428.

The court below erred in refusing to sustain defendant's assignment of error that no sufficient demand for reinvestment was proved to have been made by plaintiffs upon defendants.

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 707, 708; Monnot v. Ibert, 33 Barb. 24; Hamilton v. Calhoun, 2 Watts, 139.

When the parties engage for the performance of distinct and several duties, mere words of plurality, such as "we bind ourselves," will not make the contract joint.

1 Addison, Contr. 8th ed. 30.

The amount of the excessiveness of the jury's verdict should be apparent to justify a remittitur by the prevailing party.

18 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 128; Re Holmes, 79 Ill. App. 59.

A verdict tainted by passion and prejudice cannot be cured by a remittitur of any supposed excess.

18 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 144; Stafford v. Pautucket Haircloth Co. 2 Cliff. 82, Fed. Cas. No. 13,275; Southern P. Co. v. Tomlinson, 4 Ariz. 126, 33 Pac. 710; Drumm v. Cessnum, 58 Kan. 331, 49 Pac. 78; Atchison v. Plunkett, 61 Kan. 297, 59 Pac. 646, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 241.

An erroneous instruction on the measure of damages is not obviated by a remittitur of an amount assumed to represent the excessiveness of the jury's verdict.

Jacoby v. Johnson, 56 C. C. A. 637, 120 Fed. 487; Reed v. Keith, 99 Wis. 672, 75 N. W. 392; Lauth v. Chicago Union Traction Co. 244 Ill. 244, 91 N. E. 431; Hughes v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 150 Iowa, 232, 129 N. W. 956.

Mr. Eugene S. Ives argued the cause and filed a brief for defendants in error:

Where two parties have made a contract which one of them has broken, the damages which the other ought to receive in respect to such breach of contract should be such as may fairly and reasonably be considered either as arising naturally—that is, according to the usual course of things—from such breach of contract itself, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the time they made the contract as the probable result of a breach of it.

Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 353, 2 C. L. R. 517, 23 L. J. Exch. N. S. 179, 18 Jur. 358, 2 Week. Rep. 302, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 502; 1 Sutherland, Damages, 3d ed. §§ 50, 52, 77, pp. 149, 165, 168, 229, 234; Jones v. George, 61 Tex. 345, 48 Am. Rep. 280; Doushkess v. Burger Brewing Co. 20 App. Div. 375, 47 N. Y. Supp. 312; Hedden v. Schneblin, 126 Mo. App. 478, 104 S. W. 887; Bank of Commerce v. Bright, 23 C. C. A. 586, 39 U. S. App. 483, 77 Fed. 949; Gallup v. Miller, 25 Hun, 299; Graham v. McCoy, 17 Wash. 63, 48 Pac. 780, 49 Pac. 235.

The value of the property, less the indebtedness of the corporation, is the value of the total issue of the capital stock of the corporation.

McDonald v. Danahy, 196 Ill. 133, 63 N. E. 648; Nelson v. First Nat. Bank, 16 C. C. A. 425, 32 U. S. App. 554, 69 Fed. 798; Hewitt v. Steele, 118 Mo. 463, 24 S. W. 440; 2 Cook, Corp. § 581; Crichfield v. Julia, 77 C. C. A. 297, 147 Fed. 73; Huse & L. Ice & Transp. Co. v. Heinze, 102 Mo. 245, 14 S. W. 756.

If there be no evidence as to the value of the stock, it will be presumed that its actual value is its par value.

Harris's Appeal, 9 Sadler (Pa.) 21 W. N. C. 189, 12 Atl. 743; Brinkerhoff-Farris Trust & Sav. Co. v. Home Lumber Co. 118 Mo. 447, 24 S. W. 129.

An instruction limiting appellees' right of recovery to the value of the additional stock would have done them substantial injustice.

Clark, Contr. p. 486; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 627, 633; Jones v. VanPatten, 3 Ind. 107; Paine v. Sherwood, 21 Minn. 225; Tuers v. Tuers, 100 N. Y. 201, 2 N. E. 922.

The actual damage which they sustained was the value of the interest which they lost.

Hampton Stave Co. v. Gardner, 83 C. C. A. 521, 154 Fed. 805; Griggs v. Day, 158 N. Y. 1, 52 N. E. 692; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Weedon, 24 C. C. A. 249, 47 U. S. App. 306, 78 Fed. 584, 2 Am. Neg. Cas. 688.

Defendants, having wrongfully withheld the management from the plaintiffs, were, after the demand in February, 1905, trustees by usurpation, and are responsible for damage to the property which occurred during such wrongful trusteeship.

4 Sutherland, Damages, 3d ed. § 1139, pp. 3325, 3326; 3 Sutherland, Damages, § 658, p. 1914.

The written demand in July, 1906, was sufficient to constitute a breach of contract.

Freeman v. Ingerson, 143 Mich. 7, 106 N. W. 278; Meherin v. San Francisco Produce Exch. 117 Cal. 215, 48 Pac. 1074.

Although the evidence is sufficient to sustain the finding of a demand upon Tevis, the demand upon McKittrick alone was sufficient.

Blood v. Goodrich, 9 Wend. 68, 24 Am.

Digitized by Google

Dec. 121; Ball v. Larkin, 3 E. D. Smith, 555; 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 214, note 2.

When an instrument has been correctly construed according to its terms, it is harmless error to admit incompetent testimony to show its interpretation.

Taylor v. Hodges, 105 N. C. 344, 11 S. E. 156; Allan v. State S. S. Co. 29 N. Y. S. R. 288, 8 N. Y. Supp. 803.

Moreover, the attention of the court was never called to any possible misconsideration of this evidence, and no instruction was asked limiting the consideration which the jury might give it. If counsel feared that the jury might (as now claimed) consider this evidence in determining the question of value, they should have asked an instruction limiting or explaining the purpose of the evidence, or the purpose for which it might be considered. Not having done so, defendants may not now complain.

Roos v. Lewyn, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 593, 23 S. W. 450, 24 S. W. 538; Walker v. Brown, 66 Tex. 556, 1 S. W. 797; Shumard v. Johnson, 66 Tex. 70, 17 S. W. 398.

The proper and only method of objecting to and correcting redundant, immaterial, or irrelevant allegations in a pleading is a motion to strike out the unnecessary matter, and not a demurrer, nor an exclusion of evidence at the trial.

Pom. Code Remedies, 4th ed. § 446; Dent v. South Bound R. Co. 61 S. C. 329, 39 S. E. 527.

The amount of damages did not become fixed at the time of the demand.

Wilcox v. Plummer, 4 Pet. 172, 182, 7 L. ed. 821, 824; Reformed Protestant Dutch Church v. Brown, 54 Barb. 197; 1 Sutherland, Damages, § 110, 4th ed. p. 312.

The damages for the destruction of the value of the stock holdings of the Ryans were recoverable by the Ryans in an action brought in their own name.

Ritchie v. McMullen, 25 C. C. A. 50, 47 U. S. App. 470, 79 Fed. 533.

Mr. Justice Pitney delivered the opinion of the court:

The trial judge in submitting the case to the jury [280] adopted the following construction of the contract of November 29, 1902: That it provided for a general scheme to be carried out within the period of two years; that control of the Turquoise Company was to be given to defendants McKittrick and Tevis, and with a board of directors of their own choosing they were to carry on the business of the company, and within two years were to carry out the plan for the rehabilitation of the company according to the stipulations of the agreement; that they did not guarantee successful results, but were simply to use their best endeavors to carry out the plan; that if there was a failure on their part to do the things contemplated within the two years, this of itself did not raise any legal obligation on their part to the plaintiffs; but that if, at the end of the two years, the scheme contemplated by the contract had not been accomplished, then defendants agreed to reinvest plaintiffs with the interest they had at the time of entering into the contract, provided plaintiffs demanded that reinvestment. The jury were instructed that they should first determine whether, at the expiration of the two years specified in the contract, the situation was such that defendants were obligated to reinvest plaintiffs with the four-sevenths interest in the company that they formerly held. That if so, the next question was whether plaintiffs ever demanded that they should be so reinvested; for if there was no demand, there was no liability on the part of defendants; but that if plaintiffs did make such demand within a reasonable time after the expiration of the two years, it was the duty of defendants to comply with it; that certain evidence introduced to show a written demand made at a time in the summer of 1906 should be rejected because such demand, if made, came too late; but that if the jury should find [as, in fact, certain other evidence tended to show] that a demand was made on defendants by plaintiffs a few months following the expiration of the [281] two years, and in the early part of 1905, that was a reasonable time in which to make the demand. The further instruction was that if there was a breach of the agreement by defendants in failing to reinvest plaintiffs as they ought to have done, the next question was the amount of the damages; and as to this, that what defendants agreed to do was to put plaintiffs back as nearly as might be in the situation they were in when the contract was made; that at that time the property was about to be foreclosed, and subsequently money was raised to redeem it from the judgment, and the money thus used became a debt against the company, and this should be considered by the jury, because plaintiffs ought not to be put back in possession of their interest in the property free and clear of any such encumbrance as stood upon it when the contract was made. "So, if you should come to this question of damages at all, you should ascertain the damages in this way: You should ascertain the value of this mining property, —this property that was owned by the Turquoise Copper Mining & Smelting Company —at the time the demand of the Ryans to be reinvested was made, if any such demand was made at all,—ascertain first the value of that property. Then deduct from that value the amount of this claim of the Western Company which loaned this money, with interest, which at that time amounted to at least $39,000. Then take that balance, if there is any,—the value of the property, from which deduct the $39,000, and if there is any balance left,—that belongs to the plaintiffs and defendants in the proportion that they owned the property,—that is, the Ryans four sevenths and Tevis and McKittrick three sevenths. So the Ryans would be entitled to four sevenths of the balance after you deduct from the value of the property the amount of this Western Company's claim,—this $39,000. And of course it follows that if the value of the property was not so much as $39,000, they would not be entitled to anything."

Digitized by Google

[282] There were no requests for particular instructions, and no specific objection to the instructions as given.

In the supreme court of the territory the principal question raised was as to the correctness of the instruction respecting the measure of damages. In passing upon this, the appellate court interpreted the contract as binding defendants (in the event of the failure of the scheme, and a demand made for reinvestment) to turn over to plaintiffs, not a four-sevenths interest in the mining property, but a four-sevenths interest in the capital stock of the company. At the same time it was held that the trial court, in apparently adopting as a measure of damages the four-sevenths interest in the property of the corporation, did not actually construe the reinvesting clause to extend to the property or the mines of the corporation, but that the instruction was tantamount to an instruction that plaintiffs were entitled to the value of four sevenths of the capital stock, which was the equivalent of, and was to be ascertained by determining from the evidence the value of, four sevenths of the net assets of the corporation. And the appellate court held, as to this, that the result was right, and hence the judgment ought not to be reversed, though the instruction as given might be open to criticism as to its form, and even though the jury might have based their verdict upon an incorrect theory.

But it was held that the measure of damages as applied by the trial court was erroneous in failing to deduct from the valuation of the four sevenths a proper allowance for the 279,500 shares of stock of the Turquoise Company that had been retained by the Ryans under the terms of the contract, and were still owned by them.

The court overruled certain minor contentions on the one side and on the other, and, finding that the proximate damage resulting from the breach of the contract was the loss of the value of the stock that was agreed to be returned, and that the loss of the value of the 279,500 shares [283] retained (attributed, as it was, to subsequent mismanagement, of the company by Tevis and McKittrick) was only a remote and indirect consequence, and not such as was in contemplation at the time of the making of the contract as a probable result of such breach, held that there was error (and error only) in including in the allowance of damages the loss of the value of the retained shares. The court further found that the evidence and the verdict of the jury afforded a basis for computing the correct sum to be awarded, in that the jury by its verdict found in effect that the value of the entire capital stock of 1,000,000 shares of the Turquoise Company at the time of the breach of the contract was $231,000 (four sevenths of this sum being $132,000, the amount of the verdict). Taking four sevenths of the entire number of shares (or 571,428 shares) and deducting the 279,500 shares retained by the plaintiffs, there remained 291,928 shares, which, computed upon the basis afforded by the verdict of the jury, yielded $67,435.37 as the proper amount of the recovery. And under the provisions of ¶ 1588 of the Revised Statutes of 1901 and the practice approved in Kennon v. Gilmer, 131 U. S. 22, 29, 33 L. ed. 110, 113, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 696, plaintiffs were put to their election to either remit the excess beyond that amount or submit to a new trial, with the result mentioned in the prefatory statement.

It is now contended by plaintiffs in error that the interpretation of the contract adopted by the trial court, and followed by the appellate court, respecting the question of liability, is unwarranted by anything in the language of the instrument. It is said that Tevis and McKittrick did not agree, as the trial court held they did, that they personally would use their best endeavors to do the things that were in contemplation. It is said that the directors of the corporation were to fix the price of the treasury stock, and to use the money derived from its sale in the manner indicated; that Tevis and McKittrick were to be merely [284] the agents of the board of directors (if that board should so determine), without authority to fix the price of the stock, pay the judgment, or use the money to develop claims, or in any other way for the company's benefit; that if the directors should fail to give such authority, Tevis and McKittrick could do nothing; that they did not covenant or agree that the stock would sell for any particular price, much less that it would sell for $20,000 more than the amount of the judgment; that the terms of the agreement show merely the expectations of the parties, which, as the event befell, were not realized, and that the agreement and all its stipulations were conditional upon the sale of the stock for a sufficient price to meet the purposes indicated. The insistence is that the Ryans simply sold and transferred a controlling interest in the stock in consideration of a future authority to sell the treasury stock for a price in nowise fixed, and that there was no agreement that Tevis and McKittrick were to contribute or pay anything to the company; that, as between the corporation and the shareholders, the 240,000 shares of treasury stock were contributed outright to the corporation, which, by the terms of the agreement, had the right to sell it; and that Tevis and McKittrick did not undertake to bind the company to return or pay for this stock.

Digitized by Google

The gist of the argument seems to be that Tevis and McKittrick incurred no personal liability except possibly to see to it that the capital stock of the company was changed from its original capitalization (100,000 shares, of the par value of $10 each) to 1,000,000 shares, of the par value of $1 each, that 250,000 of the new shares were placed in the treasury of the company, and that the board of directors of the corporation fixed a price for the sale of these shares.

The agreement shows on its face that it was not prepared by a skilled person, and it requires construction. But we think it was binding upon defendants, at least to [285] the extent that the decision of the territorial supreme court gave effect to it.

The argument for plaintiffs in error attributes too little force to what is referred to as the "reinvestment clause," viz.: "The parties of the first part shall have a term of two years in which to comply with all the requirements of this contract. Should they fail or refuse to comply with all the agreements and stipulations herein mentioned within the period aforesaid, then this agreement shall become null and void and of no effect; otherwise to remain in full force and effect. Should this contract be annulled by any failure of the parties of the first part to do any and all things herein required of them, then the interest of the second parties shall reinvest in them in the same proportion and ratio as they held and were possessed of at the signing of this agreement." This imports, at least, that if the project for rehabilitating the company, in contemplation of which the Ryans devested themselves for the time of the majority interest and control of the company, should come to naught, they should be reinvested with the same proportion of the stock of the company that they had held before. But the company was not named as a party to the agreement, and, even if treated as a party by implication, could hardly be supposed to covenant for a transfer of the outstanding stock. Hence the covenant quoted could bind Tevis and McKittrick, only, who themselves were to be placed in control of the company, and of the very stock that would need to be retransferred in order to fulfil the stipulation. Consequently, it imports a personal responsibility on their part to see to it that the Ryans were "reinvested" in accordance with the terms of the covenant.

It is insisted that if certain declarations of McKittrick, said to have been made during the negotiations that immediately preceded the signing of the contract, be eliminated, there is nothing in the terms of the instrument, [286] or in the circumstances under which it was made, to warrant the interpretation adopted. In this view we do not concur, for reasons already indicated.

The declarations referred to are also said to have been erroneously admitted. They were made by McKittrick in the absence of Tevis at the interview of November 29, 1902. Jepp Ryan, one of the plaintiffs, being called as a witness and asked to state the conversation between McKittrick and himself, testified: "He went out and had an agreement made and brought it up into our room. 'Now,' he says, 'Boys, Mr. Tevis is a multimillionaire and rich and influential, and by putting him in control of this property, or giving us control of the property, we will try to handle it so each of us can get all our money back.' I says, 'Captain, suppose you don't handle it, where do we come in.' He says, 'If we don't sell the stock we will return to you the property the same as it is to-day.'" It appeared that this was after the contract was drawn up and before it was signed. A motion was made to strike it out "because the contract speaks for itself." This, the only objection, was overruled. Each of the other plaintiffs was permitted, over the like objection, to give evidence of a similar import.

If the action had been based alone upon the written instrument there would be force in the objection to the introduction of parol evidence of previous promises inconsistent with the terms of the writing. But the action was not so limited. The pleading upon which the parties went to trial (the third cause of action in the third amended and supplemental complaint) relied not upon the contract alone, but also upon alleged fraudulent conduct, beginning with representations of the abundant means and property of the defendants, on the strength of which, as was said, the plaintiffs entered into the written agreement, and followed by alleged fraudulent use of the control of the company that was turned over to Tevis and McKittrick [287] in pursuance of the terms of the agreement. The evidence of the oral declarations of McKittrick was admissible upon this question; and the fact that the allegations of fraud were afterwards abandoned, or were held by the trial court not to be sufficiently supported, does not render erroneous the previous rulings upon the admissibility of the evidence referred to.

Digitized by Google

For like reasons we find no error in the testimony to show that the Ryans were not notified, until long afterwards, that suit had been brought by the Western Company against the Turquoise Company in California, or that suit had been brought upon this judgment in Cochise county, Arizona. Assuming, for argument's sake, that defendants were under no duty to keep plaintiffs informed in regard to the status of the company, and that the contract did not require that they should do so, it nevertheless was a circumstance of more or less significance upon the question of fraud, that events of such consequence to the company were not communicated to parties who held legal and equitable rights such as the Ryans concededly held.

It is contended that the appellate court erred in holding that there was sufficient evidence to show a demand for reinvestment made by plaintiffs upon defendants. The complaint alleged two such demands, one on February 15, 1905, the other on August 26, 1906. Plaintiffs introduced testimony in regard to an oral demand claimed to have been made in May, 1905, and it was upon this alone that the trial court permitted the case to go to the jury. It is contended that this demand was insufficient because not made in proper form, nor made in a proper place, and made only upon McKittrick, and not upon Tevis also. Assuming, as both courts held, that a special demand was necessary, it seems to us that the oral demand referred to is not open to the objections made to it. McKittrick and Tevis were joint contractors, so that notice to either was [288] notice to both. And there is no doubt that it was sufficiently specific to fairly warn defendants that they were called upon to perform their engagement under the reinvestment clause.

Objection is made to the trial court's ruling, sustained by the appellate court, admitting in evidence a written demand served by plaintiffs upon defendants, marked Exhibit "K." This was a letter, undated, but apparently written after July 11, 1906, and stated to have been served upon defendants in September of that year. Its admission was not objected to on the ground that it did not evidence a proper demand (this, indeed, was admitted), nor on the ground that the demand came too late, but only because of other matters contained in the letter. The trial court having refused to exclude it as evidence, subsequently instructed the jury that as a demand it came too late to furnish a proper support for plaintiffs' cause of action. The contention now is that because of self-serving declarations contained in it, Exhibit K ought to have been excluded entirely from the consideration of the jury, and that it was likewise inadmissible because it contained veiled charges of fraud on the part of the defendants, and also offers of compromise made by the plaintiffs. But we have already pointed out that the action was in part based upon fraud, and we are not prepared to say that the fact that Exhibit K contained insinuations attributing fraud to defendants, coupled with the fact that defendants did not respond to it, would not in some degree tend to support this charge. It is sufficient, however, to say that the paper was introduced as evidence of a demand, and was admissible for that purpose (in the absence of objection based on the time of its delivery), since it contained a notice that plaintiffs insisted that defendants should comply, as well as might then be done, with the provisions of the agreement. The fact (if it were a fact) that it also contained matters irrelevant to the demand would not [289] render the document inadmissible. The proper course would have been for defendants to request an instruction limiting the effect that should be given to it by the jury; or, if intending to insist that it came too late to constitute a proper demand, then to exclude the paper from consideration. The present objection was not properly raised at the trial.

It is insisted that the court erred in holding that plaintiffs, under the averments of the complaint, were entitled to recover the value of a four-sevenths interest in the stock of the company. The basis of the objection is that such a recovery was inconsistent with the cause of action set forth in the complaint, which, it is said, sought a recovery of a four-sevenths interest in the property of the Turquoise Company, and not the value of four sevenths of its share stock. This is a mere question of pleading, and is sufficiently disposed of in the opinion of the appellate court below.

It is contended that there was error in sustaining the trial court's instruction that the measure of plaintiff's damages was four sevenths of the value of the mining company's property, minus the indebtedness to the Western company. As already shown, however, the appellate court did not sustain this interpretation of the contract, but in terms rejected it; at the same time holding that the trial court, in referring to the value of a four-sevenths interest in the property of the corporation as a test for the measure of damages, in effect reached a correct result through the employment of inaccurate phraseology, and that although the jury may have found their verdict upon an incorrect theory, the error was harmless and the judgment should not be reversed, because under the evidence, the rule adopted made no substantial difference in the result, saving as to the 279,500 shares, and as to this the error was easily cured by applying the proper correction, as above mentioned.

Digitized by Google

[290] Finally, the point is made that, assuming the alleged error of the trial court could be cured by a remittitur, the ruling of the supreme court and the remittitur as entered accounted only for the 279,500 shares that were retained by the Ryans under the contract; and it is insisted that the 200,000 shares of trust stock to which McKittrick held the legal title, with the 240,000 shares of treasury stock, the legal title to which was in the company, and over which defendants had no control except in their capacity as directors of the company, should have been deducted from the entire share capital of 1,000,000 shares, and the plaintiffs allowed only the value of four sevenths of the difference, less the 279,500 shares that they retained. Without spending further time in discussion, we will simply say that in our opinion the view suggested is inconsistent with the terms of the covenant, which were that in the contingency provided for "the interest of the second parties shall reinvest in them in the same proportion and ratio as they held and were possessed of at the signing of this agreement." This, we think, contemplated that they should be restored to the same proportionate interest that they held prior to the making of the agreement.

In affirming the judgment we are not to be understood as holding that the rulings of the court below were undubitably correct. In dealing with the instructions of the trial court respecting the mode of ascertaining the damages, and in permitting the filing of a remittitur, and affirming the judgment for the residue of the verdict, the supreme court of the territory acted under Revised Statutes of Arizona 1901, ¶ 1588, which provides, in substance, that there shall be no reversal on an appeal or writ of error for want of form provided sufficient matter or substance be contained in the record to enable the court to decide the cause upon its merits; and also provides for remitting excessive damages pending the appeal. The record in the present case came fairly within the purview of [291] this provision. And we are not disposed to lightly disturb the decision of a territorial supreme court turning so largely, as this does, upon the local practice. Phœnix R. Co. v. Landis, 231 U. S. 578, 579, ante, 377, 380, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 179; Work v. United Globe Mines, 231 U. S. 595, 599, ante, 389, 392, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 274; Montoya v. Gonzales, 232 U. S. 375, 376, ante, 645, 649, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 413.

We have dealt with all the questions that appear to have been raised in the supreme court of the territory. Others we need not notice. Gila Valley, G. & N. R. Co. v. Hall, 232 U. S. 94, 98, ante, 521, 523, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 229.

Judgment affirmed.

SAMUEL LEWIS, Petitioner,

v.

G. OLIVER FRICK, United States Immigration Inspector, etc.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 291-304.)

Aliens — deportation — effect of previous residence.

1. An alien who, after having been domiciled some six years in the United States, departs from this country, even for a brief period, and on re-entering brings into the country a woman for the purpose of prostitution or other immoral purpose, subjects himself to the operation of the clauses of the immigration act of February 20, 1907 (34 Stat. at L. 898, chap. 1134), as amended by the act of March 26, 1910 (36 Stat. at L. 263, chap. 128, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 501), that relate to the exclusion and deportation of aliens, the same as if he had no previous residence or domicil in the United States.

[For other cases, see Aliens, VI., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Courts — deportation of alien — judicial review of findings.

2. The findings of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in proceedings for the deportation of an alien, that the latter imported and brought into the United States a woman for an immoral purpose, is binding on the courts if there was evidence to support it and the hearing was fairly conducted.

[For other cases, see Courts, 242-245, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

NOTE.—On conclusiveness of judgments generally—see notes to Sharon v. Terry, 1 L.R.A. 572; Bollong v. Schuyler Nat. Bank, 3 L.R.A. 142; Wiese v. San Francisco Musical Fund Soc. 7 L.R.A. 577; Morrill v. Morrill, 11 L.R.A. 155; Shores v. Hooper, 11 L.R.A. 308; Bank of United States v. Beverly, 11 L. ed. U. S. 76; Johnson Steel Street R. Co. v. Wharton, 38 L. ed. U. S. 429; and Southern P. R. Co. v. United States, 42 L. ed. U. S. 355.

On judgment in criminal action as res judicata in civil action—see notes to Micks v. Mason, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 653, and State v. Roach, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 670.

Digitized by Google

Aliens — deportation — importing woman for immoral purpose.

3. An alien, though not previously convicted of importing an alien for the purpose of prostitution or other immoral purpose under the immigration act of February 20, 1907, § 3, as amended by the act of March 26, 1910, making such importation a felony, and providing for the deportation of an alien who shall be convicted of such offense, may be deported for bringing a woman into the United States for an immoral purpose under the other provisions of the immigration act, which, in enumerating in § 2 the classes of aliens which shall be excluded from admission to the United States, specifically includes "persons who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes, or women or girls for the purpose of prostitution, or for any other immoral purpose," and in §§ 20, 21, provides for the deportation of any alien entering or found in the United States in violation of law.

[For other cases, see Aliens, VI., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Judgment — res judicata — identical issues — effect of acquittal on administrative inquiry.

4. An acquittal under an indictment charging an alien with the importation of another alien for an immoral purpose, contrary to the immigration act of February 20, 1907, § 3, as amended by the act of March 26, 1910, is not res judicata in a proceeding before the Department of Commerce and Labor to deport such alien, under the provisions of §§ 2, 21, of the immigration act, because he had brought a woman into the United States for an immoral purpose.

[For other cases, see Judgment, III. j, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Aliens — deportation — to what country.

5. Russia, not Canada, is the country to which should be deported, under the immigration act of February 20, 1907, §§ 20, 21, an alien who, some six years after coming to the United States from Russia, his native land, enters Canada and immediately re-enters the United States, bringing a woman for an immoral purpose, the three years' period prescribed by these sections for the return of the alien to "the country whence he came" manifestly limiting only the authority to deport, and not affecting the determination of the country to which the alien is to be deported, and the legislative intent, as indicated by § 35, being that aliens subject to deportation shall be taken to trans-Atlantic or trans-Pacific ports if they came thence, rather than to foreign territory on this continent, although it may have been crossed on the way to this country.

[For other cases, see Aliens, VI., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 208.]

Argued January 28, 1914. Decided April 6, 1914.

ON WRIT of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit to review a decree which reversed a decree of the Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Michigan for the discharge on habeas corpus of an alien in custody under a warrant for deportation. Affirmed.

See same case below, 115 C. C. A. 493, 195 Fed. 693.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Guy W. Moore argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Frederic S. Florian, H. P. Wilson, and Philip T. VanZile, filed a brief for petitioner:

The authority of the courts to review the decisions of the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor on habeas corpus is well established.

Re Panzara, 51 Fed. 275; Re Martorelli, 63 Fed. 437; Re Maiola, 67 Fed. 114; Re Ota, 96 Fed. 487; Illinois ex rel. McNichols v. Pease, 207 U. S. 100, 52 L. ed. 121, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58; United States ex rel. Nicola v. Williams, 173 Fed. 626; Ex parte Watchorn, 160 Fed. 1014; Redfern v. Halpert, 108 C. C. A. 262, 186 Fed. 150.

The question as to whether or not an alien returning to the United States after a temporary absence is an alien immigrant is one of law.

27 Ops. Atty. Gen. 49; 22 Ops. Atty. Gen. 357.

Inferences of law from undisputed facts are to be finally drawn by the courts, and not by the Department.

Ex parte Saraceno, 182 Fed. 955; Re Nicola, 106 C. C. A. 464, 184 Fed. 322.

Lewis is not an alien, amenable to the immigration laws, and is not subject to inspection and deportation while residing lawfully and peaceably in the United States, for the reason that he was admitted into the country lawfully and regularly in 1904. It is not claimed that he was guilty of any fraud, misrepresentation, or deception, and manifestly he does not stand in the class of those aliens who have entered the country fraudulently in the first instance, and who therefore can acquire no rights which the government must recognize. Neither is he within that class of aliens excludable under our laws, who are "detained" or "duly held" at our borders.

Redfern v. Halpert, 108 C. C. A. 262, 186 Fed. 150; Rodgers v. United States, 81 C. C. A. 454, 152 Fed. 346; Sprung v. Morton, 182 Fed. 330; United States v. Sprung, 110 C. C. A. 37, 187 Fed. 903; United States v. Aultman Co. 79 C. C. A. 457, 148 Fed. 1022; United States v. Nakashima, 87 C. C. A. 646, 160 Fed. 842; Lem Moon Sing v. United States, 158 U. S. 538, 39 L. ed. 1082, 15

Digitized by Google

Sup. Ct. Rep. 967; Lau Ow Bew v. United States, 144 U. S. 59, 61, 63, 36 L. ed. 344, 345, 346, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 517.

Errors of law by executive departments may be reviewed by the courts.

Botis v. Davies, 173 Fed. 1001; Gonzales v. Williams, 192 U. S. 1, 48 L. ed. 317, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 177; United States ex rel. Nicola v. Williams, 173 Fed. 626; Ex parte Koerner, 176 Fed. 478; Ex parte Watchorn, 160 Fed. 1014; United States ex rel. Huber v. Sibray, 178 Fed. 144; American School of Magnetic Healing v. McAnnulty, 187 U. S. 108, 47 L. ed. 96, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 33; Re Nicola, 106 C. C. A. 464, 184 Fed. 322; DeBruler v. Gallo, 106 C. C. A. 546, 184 Fed. 566.

It being conceded, as we assume it must be, that errors of law by the Department of Commerce and Labor may be reviewed by the courts, it cannot be urged that the decisions of the Secretary of the Department on all questions relating to aliens are conclusive and final. It is equally clear that any authority the Secretary may have must be found in the statute.

Botis v. Davies, 173 Fed. 996.

The statute makes no provision for the deportation of an alien because he is thought to have imported a woman for an immoral purpose, unless, as provided in § 3 of the act, the woman imported is an alien, and the party importing her has been convicted of so doing, which, under the law in such case, constitutes a felony.

Ex parte Saraceno, 182 Fed. 955.

Citizens cannot be refused admission into this country under the laws relating to aliens.

Re Nicola, supra.

Petitioner being lawfully in the country and a resident of the country, and never having been held at the border, could not be excluded under § 2, but must necessarily come within § 3, which provides for deportation only in case of conviction.

Wong You v. United States, 104 C. C. A. 535, 181 Fed. 313.

Where a warrant is not specific, or where sentence is illegal, the prisoner is entitled to his liberty.

United States ex rel. Huber v. Sibray, 178 Fed. 144.

The immigration laws clearly contemplate the deportation of aliens to the country whence they came when they illegally entered the United States, regardless of their nativity. The only exception is when an alien, intending to enter the United States, for the convenience of his voyage lands first in foreign territory contiguous to the United States.

United States ex rel. Ruiz v. Redfern, 186 Fed. 603.

Assistant Attorney General Wallace argued the cause and filed a brief for respondent:

The act of February 20, 1907 (34 Stat. at L. 898, chap. 1134), as amended by the act of March 26, 1910 (36 Stat. at L. 263, chap. 128, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 501), applies to resident aliens like the petitioner.

Lapina v. Williams, 232 U. S. 78, ante, 515, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 196; United States ex rel. Ueberall v. Williams, 187 Fed. 470.

The act of 1907, as amended by the act of 1910, does not make a conviction a condition precedent to the deportation of an alien like the petitioner, who imported a woman into the United States for immoral purposes at the time of his own entry.

United States v. Wong You, 223 U. S. 67, 56 L. ed. 354, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195; Ex parte Pouliot, 196 Fed. 437.

The acquittal of the petitioner under the indictment is not res judicata of the right to deport him.

Bugajewitz v. Adams, 228 U. S. 585, 57 L. ed. 978, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 607; Chantangeo v. Abaroa, 218 U. S. 476, 54 L. ed. 1116, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 34; Chin Kee v. United States, 196 Fed. 74; Coffey v. United States, 116 U. S. 436, 29 L. ed. 684, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437, 11 Columbia, L. Rev. 170; Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698, 37 L. ed. 905, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1016; Johannessen v. United States, 225 U. S. 227, 56 L. ed. 1066, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 613; Lilienthal v. United States, 97 U. S. 237, 24 L. ed. 901; Micks v. Mason, 145 Mich. 212, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 653, 108 N. W. 707, 9 Ann. Cas. 291; State v. Roach, 83 Kan. 606, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 670, 112 Pac. 150, 1 Ann. Cas. 1182; Stone v. United States, 167 U. S. 178, 42 L. ed. 127, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 778; United States v. Donaldson-Shultz Co. 148 Fed. 581; United States v. Reisinger, 128 U. S. 398, 32 L. ed. 480, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 99; Williams v. United States, 108 C. C. A. 457, 186 Fed. 479; Wong Wing v. United States, 163 U. S. 228, 41 L. ed. 140, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 977; Zakonaite v. Wolf, 226 U. S. 272, 57 L. ed. 218, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 31.

The petitioner was properly ordered deported to Russia.

(1) The question is not open on habeas corpus.

Re Bonner, 151 U. S. 242, 38 L. ed. 149, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 323; De Bara v. United States, 40 C. C. A. 194, 99 Fed. 942; Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 163, 21 L. ed. 872; Lavin v. LeFevre, 60 C. C. A. 425, 125 Fed. 693; Lui Lum v. United States, 92 C. C. A. 90, 166 Fed. 106; Re Mills, 135 U. S. 263, 34 L. ed. 107, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 762; Re Swan, 150 U. S. 637, 37 L. ed. 1207, 14 was "the country whence he came," within the meaning of the act.

Digitized by Google

The provisions that are especially pertinent are set forth in the margin.†

[295] The decision of the circuit court of appeals is attacked here on several grounds. The first is based upon the fact that the alien had an established domicil and residence in the United States dating from September 20, 1904, having obtained his admission into the country legally, and maintained a domicil here continuously from the date [296] of his entry until the time of his arrest; and it is insisted that the fact of his having crossed the river to Canada, even though it was done with the object of bringing a woman into this country for the purpose of prostitution, did not bring him within the reach of the immigration act, or subject him to the summary procedure therein prescribed.

This question is settled adversely to the contention of petitioner by our recent decision in Lapina v. Williams, 232 U. S. 78, ante, 515, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 196. That case arose under the act of February 20, 1907, while this arises under the same act as amended March 26, 1910. But the changes are not such as to affect the authority of that decision upon the present point.

In Lapina v. Williams it did appear that the alien had practised prostitution for many years before her temporary departure from the country, and that she not only returned with the intent to continue the practice, but did almost immediately engage in it, and continued it until her arrest under the provisions of the immigration act. But the real ground of decision was that Congress, in the act of 1903 [32 Stat. at L. 1213, chap. 1012], sufficiently expressed, and in the act of 1907 reiterated, the purpose of extending the prohibition against the admission of aliens of certain classes, and the mandate for their deportation, to all aliens within the descriptive terms of the excluding clause, irrespective of any qualification arising out of a previous residence or domicil in this country. This view was based (a) upon the legislative history of the act of 1903 (from which the material provisions of the 1907 act were taken), which was a re-enactment of previous laws, but with the deliberate omission of the word "immigrant" and of certain other qualifying phrases that had been construed by the courts as giving so limited meaning to the word "alien" as not to include aliens previously resident in this country, and who had temporarily departed with the intention of returning; (b) upon the clear language of the excluding clause of § 2 [297] of the act of 1907 (quoted in full, 232 U. S. 91); (c) upon the fact that none of the excluded classes (with the possible exception of contract laborers) would be any less undesirable if previously domiciled in the United States; and (d) upon the fact that the section contains its own specific provisos and limitations, which, upon familiar principles, tend to negative any other and implied exception.

---

†"An Act To Regulate the Immigration of Aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907, chap. 1134, 34 Stat. at L. 898, as amended by act of March 26, 1910, chap. 128, 36 Stat. at L. 263, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 501.

"Sec. 2. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States . . . persons who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes, or women or girls for the purpose of prostitution, or for any other immoral purpose. . . .

"Sec. 3. That the importation into the United States of any alien for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose is hereby forbidden; and whoever shall, directly or indirectly, import, or attempt to import, into the United States, any alien for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose, . . . shall, in every such case, be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof be imprisoned not more than ten years and pay a fine of not more than five thousand dollars. . . . Any alien who shall be convicted under any of the provisions of this section shall, at the expiration of his sentence, be taken into custody and returned to the country whence he came, or of which he is a subject or a citizen, in the manner provided in sections twenty and twenty-one of this act. . . .

"Sec. 20. That any alien who shall enter the United States in violation of law, . . . shall, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, be taken into custody and deported to the country whence he came at any time within three years after the date of his entry into the United States. . . .

"Sec. 21. That in case the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall be satisfied that an alien has been found in the United States in violation of this act, or that an alien is subject to deportation under the provisions of this act or of any law of the United States, he shall cause such alien, within the period of three years after landing or entry therein, to be taken into custody and returned to the country whence he came, as provided by section twenty of this act. . . .

"Sec. 35. That the deportation of aliens arrested within the United States after entry and found to be illegally therein, provided for in this act, shall be to the trans-Atlantic or trans-Pacific ports from which said aliens embarked for the United States; or if such embarkation was for foreign contiguous territory, to the foreign port at which said aliens embarked for such territory."

Digitized by Google

We hold, therefore, that the fact that the petitioner, Lewis, had been domiciled for six years or more in this country, he remaining still an alien, did not change his status so as to exempt him from the operation of the immigration act; and that if he departed from the country, even for a brief space of time, and on re-entering brought into the country a woman for the purpose of prostitution or other immoral purpose, he subjected himself to the operation of the clauses of the act that relate to the exclusion and deportation of aliens, the same as if he had had no previous residence or domicil in this country. In short, the period of three years from entry, prescribed by §§ 20 and 21, runs not from the date when the alien first entered the country, but from the time of the prohibited entry; that is to say, in the present case, the entry made by the alien when bringing in the woman.

The next question is whether there was sufficient evidence to fairly sustain the finding of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to the effect that petitioner did, on November 17, 1910, import and bring into the United States a woman for an immoral purpose. Upon this question, petitioner's contention was and is, that the woman is in fact his wife. He testified that he married her in Warsaw shortly before he came from Russia to this country, and that when he brought her across the river from Windsor he intended that he and she should live together in Detroit as husband and wife. The contention [298] of respondent was and is, that the story of the marriage was a pure fabrication, resorted to in the effort to conceal the fact that the woman was a prostitute and imported by petitioner for immoral purposes. There is much in the evidence to support this view. Petitioner admitted that his real name was not Lewis, but Prezysuskier, and his "other name" was Nossek; that he first used the name of Lewis after coming to this country; that his father's name was Chaskel Prezysuskier; that he knew his alleged wife as "Leah," and did not know her other name, if any; that he knew her father as "Isaac," but did not know whether he had any other name; that two friends were present at the ceremony, but he could not remember their names; that he lived with the woman in Warsaw for five or six months, and then separated from her because he heard stories of improper conduct on her part, and that he afterwards heard she had had children before the marriage. Being questioned concerning his life in New York he professed himself unable to give the names of several persons among those with whom he said he had come in contact, and who could presumably have been called either to corroborate or to contradict his testimony. He declared that he had not seen his alleged wife since coming to America until the occasion when he met her at Windsor. Being asked "How did you happen to meet her at that time?" he answered as follows: "I was home not working one day and Berman comes up and asks for me and I don't know how he got my address and I was surprised that a strange man should ask for my name but my cousin, Mrs. Newman, told him he should come back at night when I got home from work and he came back and said 'I have regards for you' and he said 'Are you Lewis' and I said 'Yes' and he asked me questions, if I was ever in Warsaw and I said 'Yes,' and he said, 'I have regards from your wife' and I pretended to say that I haven't got any, because I kept myself single, but still [299] when he mentioned the name I knew what it was and I said, 'Where is she, what does she want of me' and he said 'She is not here, she is in Canada, but I will let you know when she gets here.' On the 17th I went to work in the morning and at dinner time when I got back Mr. Berman was there waiting for me. I said, 'What is the matter' and he said, 'I received a telegram that my wife and your wife are coming here and I want you to come over with me to Windsor and meet them,' and I said, 'She will come over to the Immigration Office they should send for me over there and she could get out.' Well he said it was better for me to come over there, 'For you know how a woman is;' he said, 'She might make you trouble' and I didn't think about it, so I went there and met her and I went over to Windsor and stood there fifteen or twenty minutes and got a train to the station at Windsor and met her there but very cool and came over here to the Immigration Office."

The story is extraordinary. How it happened that the alleged wife, who had known him as Prezysuskier in Warsaw, was able through the good offices of an entire stranger to identify him as Lewis, in Detroit, more than six years later, was not explained. The alleged husband's readiness to accept her is equally suspicious. There were other circumstances tending to discredit the story of the marriage. And if that story fell, the inference of an unlawful purpose was irresistible. It should be mentioned that the exhibits introduced upon the examination on which the warrant of deportation was issued are not included in the record; but it does appear that among them was a statement made by the alien at police headquarters in Detroit on November 21, 1910. Were there doubt whether the testimony itself, without the documentary evidence, would support the action of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, we should be inclined to say that a court ought not set aside that action without at least requiring the [300] production of the exhibits that were presented to the Secretary. But, without regard to them, enough appears to show that he was fully justified in concluding as a matter of fact that the whole story of the marriage in Warsaw was a fabrication, and that in truth Lewis went from Detroit to Windsor upon information from which he inferred that the woman was an alien and a prostitute, willing to accompany him to Detroit for an immoral purpose, and that he brought her to Detroit for that purpose.

Digitized by Google

This being so, and there being no contention that the hearing was not fairly conducted, the finding of the Secretary upon the question of fact is binding upon the courts. Low Wah Suey v. Backus, 225 U. S. 460, 468, 56 L. ed. 1165, 1167, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 734; Zakonaite v. Wolf, 226 U. S. 272, 275, 57 L. ed. 218, 220, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 31.

Respecting the construction of the act, we cannot assent to the view entertained by the circuit court. Section 2 declares that certain classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States, and among them "persons who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes or women or girls for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose." This section applies only where an alien brings in a woman or girl for the purpose indicated. It does not declare that the woman or girl need be an alien. Section 3 prohibits the importation of "any alien" for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose. Of course, in order to constitute an offense against this section, the person brought in must be an alien. But the person need not be a woman or girl. This is clear from the changes made by Congress in § 3 when amending it in 1910. The section as it stood in the 1907 act (34 Stat. at L. 899, chap. 1134, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1909, p. 450) forbade and rendered felonious the importation or attempt to import "any alien woman or girl for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose;" the phrase "alien woman or girl" being repeated in other [301] clauses of the section; and one of the principal changes made in 1910 (36 Stat. at L. 264, chap. 128, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 502) was to eliminate the words "woman or girl," so that now the section prohibits the importation of "any alien" for the purposes referred to, and declares that whoever shall import or attempt to import "any alien for the purpose," etc., or shall hold or attempt to hold "any alien" for any such purpose, etc., or shall keep, etc., in pursuance of such illegal importation, "any alien," shall be deemed guilty of a felony. The purpose of the amendment is not to be mistaken. Moreover, the offense is made a felony irrespective of whether it is committed by an alien or by a citizen of this country, the only difference being that by one of the clauses any alien convicted under this section is, after the expiration of his sentence, to be returned to the country whence he came, or of which he is a subject or a citizen.

Again, § 20 provides "that any alien who shall enter the United States in violation of law" shall be deported "at any time within three years after the date of his entry into the United States." This certainly includes those who enter in violation of § 2; indeed, violators of § 3 may not have "entered" at all, within the meaning of the act.

Consequently, we deem that the circuit court erred in holding that the act does not provide for deporting an alien for the offense of procuring or attempting to bring in prostitutes, etc., in the absence of a conviction for the felony under § 3. Section 2, read in connection with §§ 20 and 21, is not thus conditioned. And, as just now pointed out, the offense aimed at in § 2 and that which is punishable under § 3 are not the same. In short, it cannot be said that out of a general class covered by § 2, Congress selected the particular class named in § 3, for the latter class is not entirely included within the former.

We agree with the circuit court of appeals that the [302] verdict and judgment acquitting petitioner under the indictment does not render the present controversy res judicata. The issue presented by the traverse of the indictment was not identical with the matter determined by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. And, besides, the acquittal under the indictment was not equivalent to an affirmative finding of innocence, but merely to an adjudication that the proof was not sufficient to overcome all reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused. The distinction between a criminal prosecution and an administrative inquiry by an executive department or subordinate officers thereof has been often pointed out. Zakonaite v. Wolf, 226 U. S. 272, 275, 57 L. ed. 218, 220, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 31, and cases cited; Williams v. United States, 108 C. C. A. 457, 186 Fed. 479.

The final contention is that petitioner should have been deported to Canada, whence he came upon the occasion of his unlawful entry into this country, rather than to Russia, the land of his birth, from which he came six years earlier. By § 20, the alien is to be "deported to the country whence he came at any time within three years after the date of his entry into the United States;" by § 21, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, upon being satisfied that an alien is subject to deportation, "shall cause such alien within the period of three years after landing or entry therein [within the United States] to be taken into custody and returned to the country whence he came, as provided by section twenty of this act;" by § 3, an alien convicted thereunder is, at the expiration of his sentence, to be "returned to the country whence he came, or of which he is a subject or citizen, in the manner provided in sections twenty and twenty-one of this act;" and by § 35, "The deportation of aliens arrested within the United States after entry and found to be illegally therein, provided for in this act, shall be to the trans-Atlantic or trans-Pacific ports from which said aliens embarked for the United States; or if such embarkation [303] was for foreign contiguous territory, to the foreign port at which said aliens embarked for such territory."

Digitized by Google

Petitioner not having been convicted under § 3, his destination is to be determined rather in the light of §§ 20, 21, and 35. And first, we take it to be clear (notwithstanding the peculiar phraseology of § 20) that the three-year period limits only the authority to deport, and does not affect the determination of the country to which an alien is to be deported. Respecting this matter, the sections are somewhat lacking in clearness. But, at least, § 35 indicates a legislative intent that aliens subject to deportation shall be taken to trans-Atlantic or trans-Pacific ports, if they came thence, rather than to foreign territory on this continent, although it may have been crossed on the way to this country. This was recognized by Rule 38 of the Immigration Regulations, in force December 12, 1910.

It is to be noted that the classes of aliens who are subject to deportation are not wholly made up of those who enter in violation of the law; in some cases cause for deportation may arise after a lawful entry. And in many cases the unlawfulness of the entry may not be discovered until afterwards. The theory of the act, as expressed in § 2, is that the undesirables ought to be excluded at the seaport or at the frontier; but §§ 20, 21, and 35 recognize that this is not always practicable. Of course, if petitioner's attempt to bring a woman into the country for an immoral purpose had been discovered in time, he might have been physically excluded from entry at Detroit upon his return from Windsor. In that event he would naturally have remained upon Canadian soil. But since his offense was not discovered in time to permit of his physical exclusion, so that he becomes subject to the provisions for deportation, his destination ought not be to controlled by the factitious circumstance that he went into Canada to procure the prostitute. And, upon the whole, it seems to [304] us that the act reasonably admits of his being returned to the land of his nativity, that being in fact "the country whence he came" when he first entered the United States. See Lavin v. Le Fevre, 60 C. C. A. 425, 125 Fed. 693, 696; Ex parte Hamaguchi, 161 Fed. 185, 190; Ex parte Wong You, 176 Fed. 933, 940; United States v. Ruiz, 121 C. C. A. 551, 203 Fed. 441, 444. We need go no further, and may therefore leave undecided the question whether the act leaves any room for discretion on the part of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

We have assumed, without deciding, that that part of the deportation order which determines the destination of the alien is open to inquiry upon habeas corpus.

Judgment affirmed.

SINGER SEWING MACHINE COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

ROBERT C. BRICKELL, Attorney General of the State of Alabama; C. Brooks Smith, Auditor of the State of Alabama; J. Lee Long et al., Composing the State Taxation Commission of Alabama, et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 304-318.)

Commerce — state regulation — sales by peddlers or agents.

1. The license or occupation tax imposed in each county upon the business of selling or delivering sewing machines, under Ala. act of March 31, 1911, § 32, is not an unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce as applied to a foreign corporation which maintains a store or regular place of business in each county, from which all of the local agents in such county are supplied with sewing machines and appurtenances to be taken into the rural districts

---

Note.—On peddlers and drummers, as related to interstate commerce—see notes to Stockard v. Morgan, 46 L. ed. U. S. 785; Re Spain, 14 L.R.A. 97; State v. Bayer, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 297; and Dozier v. State, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 265.

Generally, on statutes part valid and part invalid—see notes to Titusville Iron Works v. Keystone Oil Co. 1 L.R.A. 363, and Fayette County v. People's & D. Bank, 10 L.R.A. 196.

On discrimination by municipality between its own residents and other residents of the same state—see note to Sayre v. Phillips, 16 L.R.A. 49.

On discrimination against nonresidents by statute or municipal ordinance imposing license or occupation tax—see note to State v. Williams, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 279.

Digitized by Google

for sale or rent, all transactions entering into such sale or renting being completed within a single county.

[For other cases, see Commerce, IV. d, 4, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Statutes — construction favoring constitutionality — license tax.

2. The license or occupation tax imposed in each county by Ala. act of March 31, 1911, §§ 32, 33f, upon the business of selling or delivering sewing machines, may be construed, in order to avoid an unconstitutional meaning, as not intended to apply to that portion of the business conducted by a foreign corporation which involves transactions in interstate commerce, where its business as generally conducted is wholly intrastate and free from any element of interstate commerce, the single exception being the business conducted in a border county.

[For other cases, see Statutes, 145–147, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Statutes — invalid in part — license tax.

3. The invalidity, if applied to the interstate business conducted by a foreign corporation in a border county, of the license or occupation tax imposed by Ala. act of March 31, 1911, §§ 32, 33f, upon the business of selling or delivering sewing machines, does not affect the validity of the tax as applied to the business conducted by such corporation in the other counties in the state in which there is no element of interstate commerce, the statute dealing separately with the business as conducted in each county in the state, and providing for separate taxes to be laid for each county.

[For other cases, see Statutes, I. d, 4, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Constitutional law — equal protection of the laws — discrimination in license tax.

4. The exemption of merchants selling sewing machines at their regularly established places of business from the license or occupation tax imposed by Ala. act of March 31, 1911, §§ 32, 33f, upon the business of selling or delivering sewing machines, does not deny the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by U. S. Const., 14th Amend., as making an arbitrary discrimination.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, 360–368, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Constitutional law — discrimination — license tax.

5. An arbitrary discrimination forbidden by the Alabama Bill of Rights, §§ 1, 37, is not made by the exemption of merchants selling sewing machines at their regularly established places of business from the license or occupation tax imposed by Ala. act of March 31, 1911, §§ 32, 33f, upon the business of selling or delivering sewing machines.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, 360–368, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

License — occupation tax — sales by traveling salesmen.

6. A corporation engaged both in selling sewing machines at its regularly established places of business and in selling such machines by traveling salesmen is, with respect to the itinerant sales, subject to the license or occupation tax which Ala. act of March 31, 1911, §§ 32, 33f, imposes annually upon the business of selling and delivering sewing machines, with an additional tax for each wagon or team used in delivering or displaying the same, although merchants selling sewing machines at their regularly established places of business are specifically exempted from such tax.

[For other cases, see License, II., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 458.]

Argued January 12, 1914. Decided April 6, 1914.

APPEAL from the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Alabama to review a decree granting a part only of the relief sought by a bill to enjoin the enforcement of certain license or occupation taxes. Affirmed.

See same case below, on demurrer, 199 Fed. 654.

Statement by Mr. Justice Pitney:

Appellant, which is a New Jersey corporation carrying on a mercantile business in many places in the state of Alabama in the sale and renting of sewing machines, in part from regularly established places of business and in part by means of delivery wagons going from place to place in the respective counties in which its stores are located, filed its bill of complaint against appellees, who are the agents of the state, charged with the administration of the tax laws, and therein sought to restrain by [306] injunction the enforcement against it of the state tax prescribed by § 32 of an act for providing revenues, approved March 31, 1911 (Session Acts, p. 180), which reads as follows:

"Sec. 32. Sewing machines.—Each person, firm, or corporation selling or delivering sewing machines either in person or through agents, shall pay $50 annually, for each county in which they may sell or deliver said articles. And for each wagon and team used in delivering or displaying the same an additional sum in each county of $25 annually; but this section shall not apply to merchants selling the above enumerated articles at their regularly established places of business."

And also to enjoin the enforcement of county taxes, amounting to 50 per centum of the state tax prescribed by the above section, which might be imposed in the several counties for county purposes under § 33F of the same act.

The bill, as amended, besides showing diverse citizenship of the parties, avers that complainant is qualified under the state laws to do business within the state as a foreign corporation, and has established, in thirty counties of the state, thirty-six regular places of business or stores, which are conducted by it; that complainant buys sewing machines and parts to supply breakage and defects therein and a variety of sewing machine accessories without the state, causes them to be shipped to its places of business within the state, and keeps them at these places for sale to the general public.

Digitized by Google

In each of the counties, except the county of Russell, the business is conducted as follows: A resident agent is employed for the purpose of making contracts for the sale and renting of machines in that county and that county only; machines are delivered to such agents and placed aboard wagons and taken by the agents into the [307] rural districts for the purpose of soliciting customers either to purchase or to rent machines; when a buyer is found the machine is delivered by the agent to the customer, who either pays cash for it or executes an instalment note in which the company retains title to the machine, or an instalment note secured by a mortgage upon the machine and other property; such sale on credit is made subject to the approval of the company, and if not approved, the instalment note is returned to the maker and the machine returned to the company. If the agent makes a contract for the sale of the machine for cash, this also is subject to the approval or disapproval of complainant. The final consummation of all sales is at one of complainant's established places of business. The same agents are engaged also in renting machines and collecting the rent arising therefrom, and the greater portion of their time is consumed in such renting, this constituting at least 70 per centum of the business done by complainant in the state. Rented machines are placed aboard wagons and taken by the agents into the rural districts. Each of these agents is attached to some one of the stores or places of business operated by complainant, and the machines handled by the agent are sent to him from the place of business to which he is attached, or taken from that place of business by him upon the wagon which he drives. Besides this, complainant sells and rents machines at its regularly established places of business, and delivers such machines to the buyers or renters by the use of wagons and teams; and in those counties where complainant has established places of business, machines sold or rented at those places are delivered by the same agents and with the same wagons that are used in carrying machines into the rural districts. It is averred that the machines are of the average weight of 135 pounds. That there are many other merchants in the state who sell sewing machines of a different manufacture [308] at their places of business, and the average weight of these also is about 135 pounds; that on account of their weight it is the custom and practice of complainant, and of the other merchants also, to make delivery by the use of wagons and teams whether the sales are made at their places of business or otherwise, and that it is impracticable to conduct the business without delivery by wagon.

With respect to the business conducted in Russell county, Alabama, it is averred that complainant operates a regularly established place of business in the city of Columbus, Georgia, where sewing machines and accessories are kept for sale, and in connection with this business agents are employed to deliver machines and accessories in Russell county, which adjoins the Georgia state line; and that complainant does not sell or deliver any sewing machines or accessories in Russell county except in the following manner; namely, its agents use wagons and teams in going about and displaying sample machines, and thereby obtain orders for machines and accessories, which orders are transmitted by the agents to the complainant at Columbus, Georgia, for acceptance or rejection, and if accepted, the machines or other articles so ordered are taken out of stock there, placed upon wagons, and thereby delivered to the purchasers in Russell county.

The bill is based upon the contention that § 32 of the tax law violates the Constitution of the United States in that it is a regulation of interstate commerce, and contravenes the "due process" and "equal protection" clauses of the 14th Amendment, and also that it violates the Constitution of Alabama; and, finally, that appellant is within the exception of the statute.

To the original bill (prior to the amendments) demurrers were filed, and were sustained as to the whole bill except paragraph 6, which set forth the mode of conducting complainant's business in Russell county. As to this the court held that the facts showed a case of interstate [309] commerce, and that the act had no application to it. 199 Fed. 654.

The amendments having been made, the amended bill was submitted upon the same demurrers, which were made to apply to the bill as amended. Again the court sustained the demurrers except as to paragraph 6, relating to Russell county, and as to this overruled them. Defendants then filed an answer admitting the allegations of paragraph 6, and the cause was submitted upon bill and answer, with the result that by final decree relief was accorded to complainant as to the license tax sought to be collected in Russell county, and in other respects relief was denied and the bill dismissed. Because of the constitutional questions, a direct appeal to this court was taken under Judicial Code, § 238 [36 Stat. at L. 1157, chap. 1157, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 228].

Digitized by Google

Messrs. John R. Tyson and Henry Axtell Prince argued the cause, and, with Mr. W. A. Gunter, filed a brief for appellant:

The equal protection of the laws is denied when, all questions of police power being out of the way, a lawful business, or the use of property in a lawful way, is palpably and unjustly discriminated against in favor of other business or other use of the same property by the same or other owners.

A business may be taxed for revenue, or may be forbidden or regulated under the police power, and so with the use of property; but a business cannot be taxed on account of the manner of conducting it by one citizen while the same business conducted in a different and perhaps less efficient manner by other citizens is exempted. And so as to property. The use of wagons and teams for transporting sewing machines, for sale or display, cannot be taxed merely because they are used in such work, while untaxed when not so used, and when the same transportation and display may be effected without taxation in any other way.

Alabama Consol. Coal & I. Co. v. Herzberg, 177 Ala. 248, 59 So. 305; Montgomery v. Kelly, 142 Ala. 552, 70 L.R.A. 209, 110 Am. St. Rep. 43, 38 So. 67; Mefford v. Sheffield, 148 Ala. 539, 41 So. 970; Phœnix Carpet Co. v. State, 118 Ala. 143, 72 Am. St. Rep. 143, 22 So. 627.

Legislation cannot restrict or coerce industry as to its channels from pure whimsicality, or from any motive disconnected from the due exercise of the police power, and from taxation for revenue according to constitutional formulas.

Ibid.

A business or property cannot be taxed as a whole and then separately as to its constituents; as, a tax on wagons, and separately on the spokes of the wheels.

Montgomery v. Kelly, supra; Mefford v. Sheffield, supra; Mobile v. Richards, 98 Ala. 594, 12 So. 793; Gambill v. Endrich Bros. 143 Ala. 506, 30 So. 297.

No state statute can stand which, by its terms, will burden or regulate interstate commerce. And the courts cannot, by judicial limitation, preserve the statute in part by restricting its terms to a legitimate field of operation.

Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 3, 27 L. ed. 835, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18; United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. ed. 563; Employers' Liability Cases (Howard v. Illinois C. R. Co.) 207 U. S. 463, 52 L. ed. 297, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 1, 54 L. ed. 355, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 190; Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47–62, 35 L. ed. 649–654, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 851; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 136 U. S. 114–118, 34 L. ed. 394–396, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 178, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 958; Leloup v. Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 32 L. ed. 311, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 134, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1380; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Texas, 210 U. S. 217, 52 L. ed. 1031, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638; Brimmer v. Rebman, 138 U. S. 78–81, 34 L. ed. 862, 863, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 485, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Illinois C. R. Co. v. McKendree, 203 U. S. 514, 51 L. ed. 298, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 153; Butts v. Merchants & M. Transp. Co. 230 U. S. 126, 57 L. ed. 1422, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 964.

Contracts are made, and the "business of selling" is done, at the place where the contract receives the final assent of the mind which concludes the negotiation, converting it into a contract or sale.

Holder v. Aultman, M. & Co. 169 U. S. 81–88, 42 L. ed. 669–671, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269; 9 Cyc. 667.

Mr. Robert C. Brickell, Attorney General of Alabama, argued the cause and filed a brief for appellees:

The bill shows upon its face that the agents of the company travel around the state, and sell and deliver from wagons sewing machines which they carry with them. This is entirely distinct and separable from the agent going out and soliciting trade for the merchant, and the merchant making the sale, or the agent for him making the sale at a regularly established place of business; and it is essentially different from the delivery by the wagons and teams of sewing machines sold by the merchant from his regularly established place of business.

Cook v. Marshall County, 196 U. S. 261–274, 49 L. ed. 471–476, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 233; Armour Packing Co. v. Lacy, 200 U. S. 226, 50 L. ed. 451, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 232; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Quartlebaum v. State, 79 Ala. 4; Emert v. Missouri, 156 U. S. 296, 39 L. ed. 430, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 68, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 367.

An occupation tax on all dealers in sewing machines does not deprive dealers in those articles of their property without due process of law, or deny them the equal protection of the law, because a similar tax is not imposed on dealers in other articles.

Digitized by Google

Southwestern Oil Co. v. Texas, 217 U. S. 114, 54 L. ed. 688, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 496.

On the facts alleged in ¶ 6 of the bill, as to the conduct of the business of complainant in Russell county, § 32 of the statute under consideration has no application, the sales made to buyers in Russell county being made at complainant's regularly established place of business in Columbus, Georgia, and the articles sold and delivered to buyers in Russell county, Alabama. Said facts show a case of interstate commerce.

Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, 38 L. ed. 719, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 658, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829.

The unconstitutionality of said section, even if conceded, would not operate to bring the complainant within the class not intended by it.

Ballou v. State, 87 Ala. 144, 6 So. 393.

The Federal court cannot interfere with the enforcement of the statute simply because it may disapprove its terms or question the wisdom of its enactment, or because it cannot be sure as to the precise reasons inducing the state to enact it.

Southwestern Oil Co. v. Texas, 217 U. S. 114, 54 L. ed. 688, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 496.

Unless it is clear that the legislature has transcended its authority, it is our duty to declare its acts constitutional.

Sadler v. Langham, 34 Ala. 311; Stein v. Leeper, 78 Ala. 517.

The case at bar is of the same character as the one involved in Emert v. Missouri, 156 U. S. 296, 39 L. ed. 430, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 68, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 367.

Mr. Justice Pitney, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

With respect to the business conducted in Russell county, the decree of the district court is not now directly under review; but, at any rate, it was clearly correct under Crenshaw v. Arkansas, 227 U. S. 389, 57 L. ed. 565, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 294. With respect to the other counties, the correctness of the decision, so far as the commerce clause is concerned, seems to us equally clear under Emert v. Missouri, 156 U. S. 296, 39 L. ed. 430, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 68, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 367.

But it is argued that the courts cannot properly sustain a statute which in direct terms applies to all commerce, by restricting it to cases of actual interference with interstate dealings. To quote from the brief: "All such laws as will necessarily affect interstate commerce when it arises are void. We do not have to await actual results on actual commerce to pronounce them void. . . . And, of course, a statute of this character, which is void as a whole, from its unity of character, will as readily be so declared in a case in which only intrastate commerce may be actually involved as otherwise. The lower court was [313] thus clearly in error in limiting the invalidity of the statute to the dealing in Russell county."

This argument, we think, misses the point. The statute under consideration does not in direct terms or by necessary inference manifest an intent to regulate or burden interstate commerce. Full and fair effect can be given to its provisions, and an unconstitutional meaning can be avoided, by indulging the natural presumption that the legislature was intending to tax only that which it constitutionally might tax. So construed, it does not apply to interstate commerce at all. The statute provides for a license or occupation tax. Normally, as the averments of the bill sufficiently show, the occupation may be and is conducted wholly intrastate, and free from any element of interstate commerce. The fact that, as carried on in Russell county, a like occupation is conducted with interstate commerce as an essential ingredient, is wholly fortuitous.

Nor has the tax that "unity of character" upon which the argument necessarily depends. The cases cited in support of the insistence that the act must be adjudged totally void because, if applied in Russell county, it would burden interstate commerce, are readily distinguishable. In United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 221, 23 L. ed. 563, 565, there was a penal statute couched in general language broad enough to cover wrongful acts without as well as within the constitutional inhibition, and it was held that the court could not reject the unconstitutional part and retain the remainder, because it was not possible to separate the one from the other. In Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 82, 99, 25 L. ed. 550, 553, the court upon the same principle declined to sustain in part a trademark law, so framed as to be applicable by its terms to all commerce, by confining it to the interstate commerce that alone was subject to the control of Congress. In Leloup v. Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 647, 32 L. ed. 311, 314, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 134, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1380, the court held a general license tax imposed by the state [314] of Alabama upon the business of a telegraph company in part interstate and in part internal, to be unconstitutional, and held that since the tax affected the whole business without discrimination it could not be sustained with respect to that portion of the business that was internal and therefore taxable by the state. To the same effect are Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 136 U. S. 114, 119, 34 L. ed. 394, 397, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 178, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 958; Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 62, 35 L. ed. 649, 654, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 851; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Texas, 210 U. S. 217, 52 L. ed. 1031, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 1, 27, 54 L. ed. 355, 366, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 190. In Williams v. Talladega, 226 U. S. 404, 419, 57 L. ed. 275, 281, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 116, there was a state license tax that operated without exemption or distinction upon the privilege of carrying on a business, a part of which was that of an essential governmental agency constituted under a law of the United States. It was held that the tax necessarily included within its operation this part of the business, and since this was unconstitutional, the whole tax was rendered void.

Digitized by Google

The statute now under consideration differs materially, in that it deals separately with the business as conducted in each county of the state, and provides for separate taxes to be laid for each county. And the facts as averred in the bill of complaint show that with respect to all of the counties in which appellant does business, excepting only the county of Russell, there is no element of interstate commerce. In each county there is a store or regular place of business, from which all of the local agents for the same county are supplied with sewing machines and appurtenances that are to be taken into the rural districts for sale or renting, and all transactions that enter into the sale or renting are completely carried out within a single county.

It would be going altogether too far to say that appellant, being properly taxable, and without the least interference with interstate commerce, in twenty-nine counties of the state, could obtain immunity from all such taxation [315] by establishing in one county a system of business that involved transactions in interstate commerce.

So far as the 14th Amendment is concerned, the argument is confined to the "equal protection" clause. It is said there is no sufficient ground for a distinction, with respect to taxing the occupation, between the business of selling sewing machines from a regularly established store and the business of selling them from a delivery wagon. But there is an evident difference, in the mode of doing business, between the local tradesman and the itinerant dealer, and we are unable to say that the distinction made between them for purposes of taxation is arbitrarily made. In such matters the states necessarily enjoy a wide range of discretion, and it would require a clear case to justify the courts in striking down a law that is uniformly applicable to all persons pursuing a given occupation, on the ground that persons engaged in other occupations more or less like it ought to be similarly taxed. This is not such a case. Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 559, 562, 46 L. ed. 679, 689, 690, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Cook v. Marshall County, 196 U. S. 261, 274, 49 L. ed. 471, 476, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 233; Armour Packing Co. v. Lacy, 200 U. S. 226, 235, 50 L. ed. 451, 456, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 232; Southwestern Oil Co. v. Texas, 217 U. S. 114, 121, 54 L. ed. 688, 692, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 496.

In Quartlebaum v. State, 79 Ala. 1, a previous statute (subsec. 20 of § 14, act of December 12, 1884; Session Acts 1884–85, p. 17), which imposed an annual license fee of $25 upon "each sewing machine . . . company selling sewing machines . . . either themselves or by their agents, and all persons who engage in the business of selling sewing machines . . . but when merchants engaged in a general business keep sewing machines . . . they shall not be required to pay the tax herein provided," was sustained against the criticism that it discriminated between two classes of persons engaged in the business of selling sewing machines, namely, between persons who were "merchants engaged in a general business," and persons not so engaged; [316] the court saying as to the former: "If sewing machines be part of their stock in trade they are taxed for them as for other merchandise. Their business is in its nature stationary, and there is little or no risk in levying taxes upon their business, on the rule of percentage. That rule may be wholly unsuited and ineffectual for other pursuits and other lines of business. Much must be left to the discretion of the legislature, for exact equality of taxation can never be reached." And see Ballou v. State, 87 Ala. 144, 146, 6 So. 393.

The contention that the statute violates the state Constitution is grounded upon two sections of the Bill of Rights, viz., § 1, "That all men are equally free and independent; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness;" and § 37, "That the sole object and only legitimate end of government is to protect the citizen in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property, and when the government assumes other functions it is usurpation and oppression."

The bearing of these provisions upon the case in hand is not clear. The argument seems to be that since the tax law in question is not a police measure, but a revenue measure, the discriminations are arbitrary. To quote from the brief: "Selling sewing machines is the business, and it is taxed highly, and it may be in fact prohibitorily when it is done by the use of wagons and teams, and not at all when done at stores." There are other suggestions of a like import. They seem to be sufficiently answered by what has been already said respecting the "equal protection" clause of the 14th Amendment. The state has a wide range of discretion with respect to establishing classes for the purpose of imposing revenue taxes, and its laws upon the subject are not to be set aside as discriminatory unless it clearly appears that there is no rational basis for the classification.

Digitized by Google

[317] The cases cited from the state courts lend no support to appellant's argument. Mobile v. Craft, 94 Ala. 156, 10 So. 534; Tuscaloosa v. Holczstein, 134 Ala. 636, 32 So. 1007, and Gambill v. Endrich Bros. 143 Ala. 506, 39 So. 297, involved the construction of certain municipal charters and the powers of the respective municipalities thereunder, and have no direct bearing upon the present question. In Montgomery v. Kelly, 142 Ala. 552, 70 L.R.A. 209, 110 Am. St. Rep. 43, 38 So. 67, a municipal ordinance requiring each merchant who issued trading stamps in connection with his business to pay a license tax of $100, viewed in the light of another ordinance that fixed a license fee of $1,000 upon trading stamp companies, was held to be "a palpable attempt under the guise of a license tax to fix a penalty on the merchant for conducting his business in a certain way," and therefore unconstitutional. Mefford v. Sheffield, 148 Ala. 539, 41 So. 970, sustained a city ordinance that imposed a tax of $200 on wholesale dealers in illuminating oil, while fixing the license tax on dealers in goods, wares, or merchandise in general at $10. Alabama Consol. Coal & I. Co. v. Herzberg, 177 Ala. 248, 59 So. 305, declared unconstitutional § 33A of the revenue act of March 31, 1911, p. 181, which undertook to impose upon persons, firms, or corporations conducting a store at which their employees trade on checks, orders, or the like, an annual license fee varying according to the number of persons employed; the court saying: "The tax is not, therefore, imposed upon the business, or upon all engaged in a similar business, but is based solely upon the manner in which a party may conduct the business; and the foregoing section is repugnant to the state and Federal Constitu- -- under the authority of Montgomery v.

The other state decisions to which we are referred have been examined, and we are unable to find in them any basis for declaring § 32 of the act to be in contravention of the state Constitution.

[318] Finally, it is said that since it appears from the averments of the bill that all sales of sewing machines by appellant's agents in the field are executory only, and require the approval of appellant at its regularly established places of business, located in the various counties of the state, which are headquarters for all agents with their wagons and teams, it at the same time sufficiently appears that appellant is a merchant conducting a regular business at each of said stores, and therefore within the saving clause of § 32 of the act in question, which declares that "this section shall not apply to merchants selling the above enumerated articles at their regularly established places of business."

It is quite plain, however, from a reading of the entire section, that the business of selling sewing machines by traveling salesmen is intended to be taxed, and the business of selling them at established places of business is intended to be left untaxed, so far as this section is concerned, although the machines sold at these places be delivered by wagons. Complainant is engaged in doing business of both kinds; and with respect to the itinerant sales it is subject to the tax under the section referred to.

Decree affirmed.

E. A. O'SULLIVAN, Plff. in Err.,
v.
PAUL FELIX and William W. Stiles.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 318-325.)

Federal courts — rule of decision — state statute of limitations.

1. The application of a state statute of limitations is not precluded because the action depends upon or arises under the laws of the United States, in the absence of any limitation specifically prescribed by Congress.

[For other cases, see Courts, VII. c. 17; Limitation of Actions, I. d, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Note.—As to state decisions and laws as rules of decision in Federal courts—see notes to Elmendorf v. Taylor, 6 L. ed. U. S. 290; Jackson ex dem. St. John v. Chew, 6 L. ed. U. S. 583; United States ex rel. Butz v. Muscatine, 19 L. ed. U. S. 490; Clark v. Graham, 5 L. ed. U. S. 334; Mitchell v. Burlington, 18 L. ed. U. S. 351; Forepaugh v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 5 L.R.A. 508; and Snare & T. Co. v. Friedman, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 380.

Digitized by Google

Limitation of actions — action based on denial of civil rights — damages or penalties.

2. The one year's limitation prescribed by La. Civ. Code, art. 3536, for actions for damages, and not the five-year limitation prescribed by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1047, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 727, against penalties and forfeitures, must govern a civil action for an assault committed in attempting to prevent plaintiff from voting, contrary to title 24 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1259), securing equal rights to citizens, in view of the provisions of §§ 1979–1981, 5508, 5510 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 1262–1263, 3712, 3713), of those statutes, which provide criminal proceedings and punishment for the public wrong, and actions in law or equity for the redress of any private injury, without prescribing any specific limitation for such actions.

[For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, I. d, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 249.]

Submitted March 9, 1914. Decided April 13, 1914.

IN ERROR to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana, dismissing an action for an assault committed in attempting to prevent plaintiff from voting. Affirmed.

See same case below, 114 C. C. A. 166, 194 Fed. 88.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. S. Parkerson and E. A. O'Sullivan submitted the cause for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Charles S. Rice, R. B. Montgomery, and Alfred Billings submitted the cause for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

Action for damages for personal assault upon plaintiff in error, herein called plaintiff, by defendants in error, referred to as defendants, in the sum of $60,000.

The petition alleges that defendants and others were indicted for violating § 5508 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3712). The indictment is set out in the petition, and charges, with the usual verbosity of such instruments, [320] that an election was held in the parish of Jefferson, state of Louisiana, on November 3, 1908, for presidential electors, members of Congress, and certain municipal officers, under and in accordance with the laws and Constitution of the United States; that certain named persons were, as defendants well knew, qualified to vote at such election, that such persons were at the polling places with the intention and for the purpose of voting, and, knowing this, the defendants feloniously conspired and confederated with each other and other persons to intimidate and prevent, and did prevent, by the use of deadly weapons, such persons from voting.

It is alleged that the indictment further charged in a second count, a violation of § 5509 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3712), in that the defendants, with other named persons, conspiring to intimidate the voters named in the first count from voting at the election named, "did then and there, with force and arms, armed with dangerous weapons, to wit: pistols, guns, scissors, wilfully, maliciously, unlawfully, and feloniously and upon" the defendant commit an assault, and with the purpose and in the disposition described, "with a dangerous weapon, to wit: a pair of scissors, inflict a wound less than mayhem."

That the defendants herein were convicted on both counts and sentenced to fine and imprisonment, and upon appeal to the circuit court of appeals the conviction, sentence, and fine were affirmed.

That the defendants conspired to prevent and did prevent the voters named in the indictment from voting, and that in furtherance of the conspiracy plaintiff was maliciously and without cause or provocation "cut, bruised, beaten, his face and eye blackened, his beard cut, he knocked down senseless, and other indignities were heaped upon him" by the defendants, for which he has suffered damages in the sum of $60,000.

The plaintiff is sixty-five years of age, has practised [321] law and held positions of honor and trust in the state, having been district attorney, state senator, and city attorney for the city of New Orleans.

The petition recites the injuries plaintiff received in defending himself from the assault upon him, and that he "was forced to appear in public, in performing his duties, carrying on his person the signs of the degradation and humiliation placed upon him."

The items of damages are set out as follows: For the wounding less than mayhem, $25,000; for humiliation, degradation, and public ridicule and pain of mind, $25,000; punitive and exemplary damages, $10,000. Judgment was prayed for $60,000, the sum of these items.

Exception was filed to the petition on the ground that the damages having, as it is alleged, been inflicted November 3, 1908, more than two years and five months before the filing of the petition, the action is barred "by the prescription of one year from and after the day on which such damages were sustained, under the provisions of Articles 3536 and 3537 of the Civil Code of the state of Louisiana. Dismissal of the suit was prayed. The plea of prescription was sustained and the sole question pressed by counsel, and which we are called upon to decide, is the application of the state statute to the conceded cause of action. The court, in passing upon the application of the statute of limitations, said that plaintiff conceded that if the action was to be governed by the state statute it was prescribed, but he contended that it was an action for a penalty, and governed by the prescription of five years, established by § 1047 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 727). The court was of opinion that the action was for "remedial damages, and not for a penalty," and maintained the plea of prescription, citing Campbell v. Haverhill, 155 U. S. 610, 39 L. ed. 280, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 217; Brady v. Daly, 175 U. S. 148, 44 L. ed. 109, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 62, and dismissed the action with costs.

Digitized by Google

Judgment of the circuit court was affirmed by the [322] circuit court of appeals. The court decided that the action was one for damages, and not for a penalty, and the limitations of five years against penalties or forfeitures (§ 1047, Rev. Stat.) was not applicable. It followed, the court said, that the state statute, which prescribes the action in one year, must be applied, citing §§ 3536 and 3537 of the Civil Code of Louisiana. 114 C. C. A. 166, 194 Fed. 88.

The opinions of the lower courts exhibit the contentions in the case, and the short question presented is whether the action is for damages or for a penalty. If for a penalty, § 1047 of the Revised Statutes applies, which provides: "No suit or prosecution for any penalty or forfeiture, pecuniary or otherwise, accruing under the laws of the United States, shall be maintained . . . unless the same is commenced within five years from the time when the penalty or forfeiture accrued." If for damages, the provisions of the Louisiana Code are applicable. They are as follows: Article 3536. "The following actions are prescribed in one year:

"Those for injurious words, whether verbal or written, and those for damages caused by animals, or resulting from offenses or quasi offenses."

And the prescription runs from the day the damage is sustained. Section 3537.

That the action depends upon or arises under the laws of the United States does not preclude the application of the statute of limitations of the state is established beyond controversy by cases cited by the circuit court and by McClaine v. Rankin, 197 U. S. 158, 49 L. ed. 702, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410, 3 Ann. Cas. 500.

It is therefore not necessary to pursue in detail the argument of plaintiff based on the postulate that "the Sovereign alone can limit the right of action," and that because injury was inflicted on him in the course of violating Federal laws the limitation of the state could not apply. Congress, of course, could have, by specific provision, prescribed a limitation, but no specific provision is adduced. [323] The limitation of five years is asserted on the ground that the action is for a penalty, and that it is such is deduced from the provisions of title 24 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1259), securing equal civil rights to all citizens.

These provisions secure to all citizens the same rights that white citizens enjoy, and make every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage of any state or territory, deprives another of the rights secured, liable "to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress." Section 1979 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1262).

It is also provided that if a conspiracy be entered into between two or more persons to deprive another of the equal protection of the laws, or of equal privileges and immunities under the laws, and the persons conspiring to or cause to be done any act in furtherance of the object of the conspiracy whereby another is injured in his person or property, or deprived of having or exercising any right or privilege as a citizen of the United States, the party so injured or deprived may have an action for the recovery of damages, occasioned by such injury or deprivation, against any one or more of the conspirators. Section 1980 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1262).

Anyone having knowledge of the wrongs conspired to be done, and who, having power to prevent or aid in preventing the commission of the same, neglects or refuses to do so, shall be liable to the party injured or his legal representatives in an action on the case. Any number of defendants may be joined in the action. If the death of any party be caused by such act or neglect, the legal representatives of the deceased shall have an action therefor and may recover not exceeding $5,000 for the benefit of the widow of the deceased, if there be one, and, if there be no widow, then for the benefit of the next of kin. But no action under the provisions of the section can be sustained [324] which is not commenced within one year after the cause of action accrued. Section 1981 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1263).

Conspirators to injure, oppress, threaten or intimidate any citizen in the free exercise or enjoyment of his rights under the Constitution and laws of the United States, or because of his having so exercised the same, shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than ten years; and shall, moreover, be ineligible to office under the United States. Section 5508 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901 p. 3712).

Digitized by Google

If, in violating any of the provisions of the two preceding sections, any felony or misdemeanor be committed, the offender shall be punished as provided in the state laws.

And every person who, under color of any law, etc., subjects or causes to be subjected any inhabitant of any state or territory to the deprivation of rights under the laws and Constitution of the United States shall be fined not more than $1,000, or be imprisoned not more than one year, or both. Section 5510 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3713).

There are other criminal provisions not necessary to mention.

It will be observed, therefore, that the sections of the Revised Statutes which we have quoted provide criminal proceedings and punishment for the public wrong, and actions in law or equity for the redress of any private injury, with a limitation in one instance of the amount of recovery and of the time for commencing the action to one year.

The penal and remedial provisions are therefore distinct and cannot be confounded. The term "penalty" involves the idea of punishment for the infraction of the law, and is commonly used as including any extraordinary liability to which the law subjects a wrongdoer in favor of the person wronged, not limited to the damages suffered. United States v. Chouteau, 102 U. S. 603, 611, 26 L. ed. 246, 249; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 666, 667, 36 L. ed. 1127, 1128, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224. There is no justification for the contention of plaintiff, therefore, that the [325] remedy provided for a penalty and the limitation of time of bringing an action is five years under § 1047 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 727). It is very clear that the public wrong is punished by the fines and punishment prescribed, that the private injuries inflicted are to be redressed by civil suit, and the amount of recovery is determined by the extent of the injury received and the elements constituting it. This plaintiff indicates in his pleading, praying damages in the sum of $25,000 "for the wounding less than mayhem," $25,000 "for the humiliation, degradation, and public ridicule," and $10,000 "as punitive and exemplary damages."

Judgment affirmed.

KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
JACOB ANDERSON.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 325–330.)

Constitutional law — due process of law — penalizing refusal to pay claim.

1. Double liability and an attorney's fee may be exacted under the authority of Ark. Laws 1907, No. 61, p. 144, from a railway company refusing to pay for the killing of live stock by one of its trains within thirty days after the owner's demand, without denying the railway company the due process of law guaranteed by U. S. Const., 14th Amend., where the justice of the demand is fully established in the suit following the refusal to pay.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, IV. b, 4, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Constitutional law — equal protection of the laws — penalizing railway company's refusal to pay claim.

2. Singling out railway companies and subjecting them to the payment of double damages and attorneys' fees in case of their refusal to pay for the killing of live stock by their trains within thirty days after the owner's demand, as is done by Ark. Laws 1907, No. 61, p. 144, when litigants in general are not subject to the same burdens, does not deprive the railway companies of the equal protection of the laws.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, IV. a, 3, b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 319.]

Argued March 20, 1914. Decided April 13, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Arkansas to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Circuit Court of Little River County, in that state, penalizing a railway company's refusal to pay a claim for the killing of live stock by one of its trains. Affirmed.

See same case below, 104 Ark. 500, 149 S. W. 58.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Samuel W. Moore argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Frank H. Moore and James B. McDonough, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The act of the state of Arkansas which is drawn in question in this case has been held unconstitutional by this court, and is therefore void for all purposes.

Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Ander-

NOTE.—On constitutionality of statute imposing penalty or added liability for failure of railroad company to pay claim—see note to St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Wynne, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 102.

Digitized by Google

son, 104 Ark. 500, 149 S. W. 58; Meyer v. Wells, F. & Co. 223 U. S. 298, 56 L. ed. 445, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 218; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Wynne, 224 U. S. 354, 56 L. ed. 799, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 102, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Jackson Vinegar Co. 226 U. S. 217, 57 L. ed. 193, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40.

The Arkansas act which is drawn in question in this case is in conflict with the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 43 L. ed. 909, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Mazursky, 216 U. S. 122, 54 L. ed. 411, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 378; Bannon v. State, 49 Ark. 167, 4 S. W. 655; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Fidelity Mut. Life Asso. v. Mettler, 185 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 922, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 662; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Crider, 91 Tenn. 489, 19 S. W. 618; Kirby's Digest of Statutes, §§ 6773–6782, 7907; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 26, 32 L. ed. 585, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Missouri & N. A. R. Co. v. State, 92 Ark. 1, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 861, 135 Am. St. Rep. 164, 121 S. W. 930; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 29 L. ed. 463, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Williams, 49 Ark. 492, 5 S. W. 883; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Wynne, 90 Ark. 538, 119 S. W. 1127, 17 Ann. Cas. 631; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Seegars, 207 U. S. 73, 52 L. ed. 108, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28; Southern R. Co. v. Greene, 216 U. S. 400, 54 L. ed. 536, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 287, 11 Ann. Cas. 1247; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Jackson Vinegar Co. 226 U. S. 217, 57 L. ed. 193, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40.

This Arkansas act denies to defendant due process of law.

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Polt, 232 U. S. 165, ante, 554, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301; Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 52 L. ed. 714, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 932, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 441, 14 Ann. Cas. 764; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Tucker, 230 U. S. 340, 57 L. ed. 1507, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 961.

No brief was filed for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

Error to review a judgment of the supreme court of the state, affirming a judgment by which defendant in error was awarded against plaintiff in error (herein called the railway company) double damages and attorney's fee for a mare killed by one of the railway company's trains.

The judgment was recovered under a statute of the state which the railway company attacked in the courts below and attacks here, on the ground that it violates the due process clause of the Constitution of the United States. The statute provides that when any stock is killed or injured by railroad trains running in the state, the officers of the train shall cause the station master or overseer at the nearest station house to give notice of the fact by posting and by advertisement, and, on failure to so advertise, the owner shall recover double damages for all stock killed and not advertised. "And said railroad shall pay the owner of such stock within thirty days after notice is served on such railroad by such owner. Failure to do so shall entitle said owner to double the amount of damages [328] awarded him by any jury trying such cause, and a reasonable attorney's fee." [Ark. Laws, 1907, p. 1447.]

If a suit be brought after the thirty days have expired, and the owner recover "a less amount of damages than he sues for, then such owner shall recover only the amount given him by said jury, and not be entitled to recover any attorney's fee."

For its contention that the act offends the Constitution of the United States the railway company relies on St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Wynne, 224 U. S. 354, 56 L. ed. 799, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 102, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493.

In that case, however, there was a demand for $500 damages. The railway company refused to pay it. The owner sued for $400 and recovered a verdict for that amount, and the court, deeming the statute applicable, gave judgment for double that amount and an attorney's fee of $50. The supreme court sustained the judgment against the contention of the railway company that the statute so applied was repugnant to the due process clause of the Constitution of the United States. This court reversed the judgment, holding that so far as the statute was held to justify the imposition of double damages where there was demand for one sum and an action and judgment for less, it was void. The question was expressly reserved whether such would be the decision if the recovery corresponded to the demand; in other words, in the language of the opinion, "Where the prior demand is fully established in the suit following the refusal to pay." That question is involved in the present case, and we think it is determined by Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Seegers, 207 U. S. 73, 52 L. ed. 108, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28, and Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Jackson Vinegar Co. 226 U. S. 217, 57 L. ed. 193, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40. In both cases statutes (South Carolina and Missisippi) were sustained. Each provided for a penalty for failure to settle claims after certain time after demand, the penalty being $50 in one [329] statute and in the other $25, in addition to the actual damages. In the Seegers Case it was said: "It must be remembered that the purpose of this legislation is not primarily to enforce the collection of debts, but to compel the performance of duties which the carrier assumes when it enters upon the discharge of its public functions." In the other case it was said, the railroad company "has not been penalized for failing to accede to an excessive or extravagant claim, but for failing to make reasonably prompt settlement of a claim which, upon due inquiry, has been pronounced just in every respect." In Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Polt, 232 U. S. 165, ante, 554, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301, a statute of South Dakota was passed upon which makes a railroad liable for double damages if, within sixty days after demand, it does not pay the damage actually sustained for property destroyed by fire communicated from its locomotive engine. The plaintiff in the case got a verdict for less than he demanded, but for more than the railroad offered. Judgment for double the amount of the verdict was entered and sustained by the supreme court of the state. It was reversed by this court, the ruling of the Wynne Case, supra, being applied. We said: "The case is not like those in which a moderate penalty is imposed for failure to satisfy a demand found to be just. Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Jackson Vinegar Co. supra."

Digitized by Google

It is contended, however, that the statute having been declared unconstitutional as applied to one state of facts that properly raises the question, it is void for all purposes. The contention is based on the assumption that we decided the statute in the Wynne Case to be unconstitutional; but the ground of the decision was, as we have seen, that the statute was there applied to a case where the plaintiff in the action had recovered less than he demanded before suit. We declined to extend our opinion to a case where the amount of the judgment corresponded to the demand; [330] in other words, declined to pronounce the act entirely unconstitutional.

In Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Jackson Vinegar Co. supra, when urged again to extend our ruling beyond the facts and declare the Mississippi statute entirely void, we declined to do so, considering it a matter for the state court to decide "how far parts of it might be sustained if others fail."

In the case at bar the supreme court of the state has limited the statute, and has, indeed, declared that it had not intended in the Wynne Case to place upon the "statute a construction that would make it applicable to a case based upon a state of facts where a demand had been made before suit for a sum greater than that recovered upon a trial." And, further: "The construction and application of this statute, as made by this court, is therefore not such as to render it invalid under the decisions made by the Supreme Court of the United States."

It is also contended by the railway company that the statute deprives it of the equal protection of the laws in that it singles out railroads and subjects them to the payment of double damages and attorneys' fees when litigants in general are not subject to the same burdens. The contention is not tenable. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Seegers, supra.

We do not enter into a general discussion of the police power of the state. As we said in the Polt Case, "the states have a large latitude in the policy that they will pursue and enforce," and we do not think that the limit of their power has been transcended in the present case.

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. Justice Holmes and Mr. Justice Lamar dissent.

---

[331] HAMMOND PACKING COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
STATE OF MONTANA.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 331-334.)

Constitutional law — equal protection of the laws — discrimination in license tax.

A license tax of 1 cent per pound sold for carrying on the business of selling oleomargarin does not deny the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by U. S. Const., 14th Amend., because it puts oleomargarin in a class by itself, and discriminates between it and butter, although the tax is pronounced or assumed by the state courts to be a revenue measure.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, 360-368, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 278.]

NOTE.—On constitutionality of discriminations in statutory regulations concerning food products—see note to Freadrich v. State, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 651.

As to the validity of class legislation, generally—see notes to State v. Goodwill, 6 L.R.A. 621, and State v. Loomis, 21 L.R.A. 789.

As to constitutional equality of privileges, immunities, and protection, generally—see note to Louisville Safety Vault & T. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 14 L.R.A. 579.

Digitized by Google

Submitted March 11, 1914. Decided April 13, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Montana to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the District Court for the County of Silver Bow, in that state, in favor of the state in an action to recover a license tax. Affirmed.

See same case below, 45 Mont. 343, 123 Pac. 407.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. M. S. Gunn submitted the cause for plaintiff in error:

It is undoubtedly true that the oleomargarin sold, after having been received, stored, and held for sale in Silver Bow county, was subject to the taxing power of the state.

American Steel & Wire Co. v. Speed, 192 U. S. 500, 48 L. ed. 538, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 365; Kehrer v. Stewart, 197 U. S. 60, 49 L. ed. 663, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 403.

The oleomargarin sold, having been subject to the taxing power of the state, the motive of the legislative assembly in imposing this tax, and the reasonableness of the tax with respect to the amount of same, are not open to inquiry in this court.

McCray v. United States, 195 U. S. 53, 49 L. ed. 94, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 769, 1 Ann. Cas. 561.

Again, the legislative assembly of Montana is authorized to classify for the purpose of taxation, and may lawfully impose a tax upon one class of property or one occupation to the exclusion of other property and other occupations.

Southwestern Oil Co. v. Texas, 217 U. S. 114, 54 L. ed. 688, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 496.

It follows that the only inquiry is whether the placing of oleomargarin, butterin, and imitation of cheese in a separate class for the purpose of taxation is a legitimate exercise of the taxing power.

Oleomargarin is a wholesome article of food, a recognized article of commerce, and its manufacture and sale cannot be prohibited by a state.

Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 49, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757; Collins v. New Hampshire, 171 U. S. 30, 43 L. ed. 60, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 768.

The state can, in the exercise of the police power, provide reasonable regulations with reference to the manufacture and sale of oleomargarin in order to prevent deception and fraud, and in the interest of the health of the people of the state.

Capital City Dairy Co. v. Ohio, 183 U. S. 238, 46 L. ed. 171, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 120.

As oleomargarin is a pure and wholesome article of food, used as a substitute for butter, the reason for the discrimination made cannot have reference to the nature of the article or the use to which it is applied. The only reason that can be assigned for this classification is that oleomargarin is sold in competition with butter. The reason for the discrimination made is to create a monopoly in favor of butter, and is not a valid reason.

Cooley, Taxn. 3d ed. p. 1133.

No classification for the purpose of taxation is reasonable or justifiable unless all articles used for the same purpose, and which are sold in competition, are placed in the same class. Such a classification as is made by this statute under consideration does violence to the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment.

Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255.

If the legislative assembly of Montana can classify oleomargarin by itself and impose a license tax of 1 cent per pound for the sale of such article, it can increase the tax to such an amount as will prohibit the sale of the same. The validity of the statute is not to be determined by the amount of the tax imposed.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, supra.

Mr. D. M. Kelly, Attorney General of Montana, submitted the cause for defendant in error. Mr. J. H. Alvord was on the brief:

The state may regulate or prohibit the sale of oleomargarin manufactured within its borders.

Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257; Capital City Dairy Co. v. Ohio, 183 U. S. 238, 46 L. ed. 171, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 120.

This court has held that the distinction between the two substances, oleomargarin and butter, is so great as to justify a classification distinguishing between them.

McCray v. United States, 195 U. S. 27, 49 L. ed. 78, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 769, 1 Ann. Cas. 561.

Beyond question Congress cannot add to or detract from the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution of the United States, neither can it confer upon a state the power vested by the Constitution exclusively in Congress; but removing "an impediment to the enforcement of the state law" is not granting an additional power to the state.

Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, 35 L. ed. 572, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865.

The police and licensing powers of the state are as great within the limits of the state as are the powers of Congress within the territory subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. If, then, this law of the state is void as being an invasion of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, the act of Congress of February 9, 1902, must also be void for the same reason. Yet, the Supreme Court of the United States has twice sustained the constitutionality of this law of Congress.

Digitized by Google

McCray v. United States, supra; Cliff v. United States, 195 U. S. 159, 49 L. ed. 139, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1. See also People v. Freeman, 242 Ill. 373, 90 N. E. 366, 17 Ann. Cas. 1098; Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461, 39 L. ed. 223, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 590, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154.

The power of the state legislature, under the state Constitution, to impose a license for revenue or for regulation, cannot be successfully contested.

State ex rel. Toi v. French, 17 Mont. 54, 3 L.R.A. 415, 41 Pac. 1078; State v. Camp Sing, 18 Mont. 128, 32 L.R.A. 635, 56 Am. St. Rep. 551, 44 Pac. 516.

If all that can be said of this legislation is that it is unwise or unnecessarily oppressive to those manufacturing or selling wholesome oleomargarin as an article of food, their appeal must be to the legislature or to the ballot box, not to the judiciary. The latter cannot interfere without usurping powers committed to another department of government.

Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 686, 32 L. ed. 253, 257, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257.

The "equal protection of law," as expressed in the Constitution of the United States, simply requires that all persons subjected to such legislation shall be treated alike in like circumstances and conditions, both in the privilege conferred and the liabilities imposed.

Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283–293, 42 L. ed. 1037–1042, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594.

It requires the same means and methods to be applied impartially to all the constituents of a class, so that the law shall operate equally and uniformly upon all persons in similar circumstances.

Kentucky R. Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 321, 29 L. ed. 414, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57.

No doubt can be entertained of the right of a state legislature to tax trades, professions, or occupations in the absence of inhibition in the state Constitution in that regard.

Ficklen v. Taxing Dist. 145 U. S. 1, 36 L. ed. 601, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 79, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 810.

The state may, if it chooses, exempt certain classes of property altogether; may impose different specific taxes upon different trades or professions; may vary the rates of excise upon various products; may tax real and personal estate in a different manner; may tax visible property only, and not securities; may allow or not allow deductions for indebtedness. All such regulations and those of like character, so long as they proceed within reasonable limits and general usage, are within the discretion of the state legislature or the people of the state in confirming their Constitution.

Connelly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 562, 46 L. ed. 691, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Armour Packing Co. v. Lacy, 200 U. S. 235, 50 L. ed. 456, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 232; McLean v. Arkansas, 211 U. S. 539, 547, 53 L. ed. 315, 319, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action to recover a license tax of 1 cent per pound sold for carrying on the business of selling oleomargarin. The answer, with some allegations not now material, admitted the facts and set up that § 4064 of the Political Code of Montana, as amended, by which the tax was imposed, violates the 14th Amendment. That is the only question raised here, so that other incidental or preliminary matters need not be mentioned. Judgment was entered for the state on the pleadings and the judgment was affirmed by the supreme court of the state.

The argument for the plaintiff in error is that, the tax being pronounced or assumed by the state courts to be a tax for revenue, it is unjustifiable to put oleomargarin in a class by itself and to discriminate, for instance, between it and butter. But we see no obstacle to doing so in the Constitution of the United States. Apart from interference with commerce among the states, a state may restrict the manufacture of oleomargarin in a way in which it does not hamper that of butter. Capital City Dairy Co. v. Ohio, 183 U. S. 238, 245, 246, 46 L. ed. 171, 175, 176, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 120. It even may forbid the manufacture altogether. Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257. It may express and carry out its [334] policy as well in a revenue as in a police law. Quong Wing v. Kirkendall, 223 U. S. 59, 62, 56 L. ed. 350, 351, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192. The case really has been disposed of by previous decisions of this court. McCray v. United States, 195 U. S. 27, 62, 63, 49 L. ed. 78, 98, 99, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 769, 1 Ann. Cas. 561.

Judgment affirmed.

Digitized by Google

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE, & ST. PAUL RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
STATE OF IOWA.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 334–345.)

Commerce — local or interstate — continuity of transportation.

1. The reshipment by the consignee to other points within the state of coal consigned to it on interstate shipments to a distributing point within the state, although such reshipments are in the cars in which the coal was received, does not establish such continuity of transportation as to place such reshipments outside the pale of state regulation, where the consignee paid the freight to the point of reshipment to the initial carrier, which placed the cars on an interchange track, where they were held by the consignee until sales were made, when bills of lading were tendered to another railway company for the further transportation.

[For other cases, see Commerce, I. b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Error to state court — scope of review — statutory construction.

2. The determination of a state court of last resort that a state railroad commission was authorized by the state laws to make the order under review is conclusive upon the Federal Supreme Court on writ of error to the state court.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 2124–2151, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Commerce — state regulation — requiring carrier to accept reshipments in cars of other carrier — termination of interstate transportation.

3. An order of a state railroad commission requiring a railway company to accept without unloading and reloading into its own cars reshipments of coal in carload lots when tendered in the cars of other railway companies by which the coal had been brought into the state does not interfere with interstate commerce where there is such a termination of the interstate transportation at the point of reshipment that the further transportation is a purely intrastate service.

[For other cases, see Commerce, III., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Constitutional law — due process of law — liberty of contract — requiring carrier to accept reshipments in cars of other carrier.

4. A railway carrier is not deprived of its liberty of contract, nor of its property without due process of law, contrary to U. S. Const., 14th Amend., by an order of a state railroad commission requiring it to accept without unloading and reloading into its own cars reshipments of coal in carload lots when tendered in the cars of other railway companies.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, 516–518, 591–604, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Constitutional law — equal protection of the laws — requiring carrier to accept reshipments in cars of other carrier.

5. The equal protection of the laws guaranteed by U. S. Const., 14th Amend., is not denied to a railway carrier by an order of a state railroad commission requiring it to accept without unloading and reloading into its own cars reshipments of coal in carload lots when tendered in the cars of other railway companies.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, 266–291, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 176.]

Argued March 3, 1914. Decided April 13, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Polk County District Court, granting a mandatory injunction to require compliance with an order of a state railroad commission requiring a railway carrier to accept reshipments in the cars of other carriers. Affirmed.

See same case below, 152 Iowa, 317, 130 N. W. 802.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. O. W. Dynes argued the cause, and, with Messrs. C. S. Jefferson and Burton Hanson, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The board of railroad commissioners of the state of Iowa, and the courts of that state, could not construct contracts or impose contracts on the plaintiff in error which would restrict it in respect of whom it might rent cars from, and which would oblige it to rent and pay for cars when it could and desired to furnish its own cars instead.

Central Stock Yards Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 192 U. S. 571, 48 L. ed. 569, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 339; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R. Co. 110 U. S. 667, 680, 28 L. ed. 291, 296, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185.

There being no connecting line involved as to the shipments in the case at bar, but only a single line haul over the rails of the plaintiff in error alone, the Iowa statutes do not apply, and in the absence of abrogating legislation, the common law extends to the plaintiff in error the right to decline to use cars of other carriers, and insist upon using its own cars.

Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. v.

NOTE.—On shipments within a state as part of interstate or foreign transportation —see note to Missouri P. R. Co. v. Sherwood, T. & Co. 17 L.R.A. 643.

On what questions the Federal Supreme Court will consider in reviewing the judgments of state courts—see note to Missouri ex rel. Hill v. Dockery, 63 L.R.A. 571.

Digitized by Google

Northern P. R. Co. 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 249, 51 Fed. 465; Central Stock Yards Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 192 U. S. 568, 48 L. ed. 565, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 339; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R. Co. 110 U. S. 667, 680, 28 L. ed. 291, 296, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185.

The fact that the carload shipments in question had undergone previous transportation did not make the previous carriers connecting carriers with the plaintiff in error, for the previous contract of transportation had been consummated, the cargoes had reached their destination, and the consignee had paid the freight thereon, and claimed physical possession of them.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Texas, 204 U. S. 403, 51 L. ed. 540, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 360.

If it be not admitted that the previous carriage had been terminated and that the previous carrier is not a connecting carrier, then it would follow that these carloads of coal, having been carried originally from Illinois to Davenport, Iowa, would have the character of interstate commerce, and, therefore, would not be subject to regulation by the state of Iowa.

Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 29 L. ed. 715, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475; Southern P. Terminal Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 219 U. S. 498, 55 L. ed. 310, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 279; Railroad Commission v. Worthington, 225 U. S. 101, 56 L. ed. 1004, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 653; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Sabine Tram Co. 227 U. S. 111, 57 L. ed. 442, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 229.

An order made by a state commission under assumed authority of the state, which directly burdens or regulates interstate commerce, will be enjoined.

McNeill v. Southern R. Co. 202 U. S. 543, 50 L. ed. 1142, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 722.

In ordering the Chicago, Milwaukee, & St. Paul Railway Company to take and use the cars of the interstate carrier which brought the coal from Illinois to Davenport, Iowa, the board of railroad commissioners of the state of Iowa exceeded its powers in that it placed a burden on interstate commerce by depriving the interstate carrier of its vehicles of interstate commerce as an incident of the attempt to regulate intrastate commerce.

Central Stock Yards Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 192 U. S. 568, 571, 48 L. ed. 565, 569, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 339; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Central Stock Yards Co. 212 U. S. 132, 144, 53 L. ed. 441, 446, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 246; Southern R. Co. v. United States, 222 U. S. 20, 26, 56 L. ed. 72, 74, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 2, 3 N. C. C. A. 822; Minnesota Rate Cases (Simpson v. Shepard) 230 U. S. 352, 400, 57 L. ed. 1511, 1541, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1151, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729.

The order of the Iowa commission necessarily involves either taking from the interstate carrier its cars without compensation, or denying to plaintiff in error the privilege of supplying and using its own cars, with the consequence that its cars remain idle, and it is obliged to pay for the foreign cars. Either view of the significance of the order involves the taking of property without due process of law, contrary to the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Missouri P. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 164 U. S. 403, 417, 41 L. ed. 489, 495, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 130; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 589, 41 L. ed. 832, 835, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427.

Coal cars used in interstate commerce are instruments of such commerce, and regulating their use is regulating interstate commerce.

Interstate Commerce Commission v. Illinois C. R. Co. 215 U. S. 452, 474, 54 L. ed. 280, 289, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 155; Southern R. Co. v. United States, 222 U. S. 20, 26, 56 L. ed. 72, 74, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 2, 3 N. C. C. A. 822; Northern P. R. Co. v. Washington, 222 U. S. 370, 377, 56 L. ed. 237, 239, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 160.

The Congress of the United States having extended governmental regulations to include the use and distribution of coal cars used in interstate commerce, state regulation of the same is thereby excluded.

Minnesota Rate Cases (Simpson v. Shepard) 230 U. S. 352, 400, 57 L. ed. 1511, 1541, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1151, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729; Northern P. R. Co. v. Washington, 222 U. S. 370, 378, 56 L. ed. 237, 239, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 160; Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 473, 31 L. ed. 508, 510, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 804, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564; M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 415, 426, 4 L. ed. 603, 606.

The order of the board of railroad commissioners of Iowa deprives plaintiff in error of the equal protection of the laws, in contravention of the Constitution of the United States.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 698, 43 L. ed. 858, 864, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565.

Whatever transportation service or facility the law requires the carriers to supply they have the right to furnish. They can therefore use their own cars, and cannot be compelled to accept those tendered by the shipper on condition that a lower rate be charged.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. United States, 232 U. S. 199, ante, 568, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 291.

It is very doubtful whether this case falls within the law of Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co.

Digitized by Google

v. Texas, 204 U. S. 403, 51 L. ed. 540, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 360; Railroad Commission v. Texas & P. R. Co. 229 U. S. 336, 341, 57 L. ed. 1215, 1218, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Sabine Tram Co. 227 U. S. 111, 130, 57 L. ed. 442, 450, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 229; Southern P. Terminal Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 219, U. S. 498, 55 L. ed. 310, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 279; Railroad Commission v. Worthington, 225 U. S. 101, 56 L. ed. 1004, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 653.

Mr. George Cosson, Attorney General of Iowa, argued the cause, and, with Mr. Henry E. Sampson, filed a brief for defendant in error:

This court accepts as conclusive the interpretation placed upon a state statute by its highest judicial tribunal.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 183 U. S. 503, 508, 46 L. ed. 298, 302, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 95.

A reasonable regulation of public service corporations or persons, and a reasonable limitation of the right to contract, if made under the police power, in the interest of the public health, the public safety, the public morals, or the public welfare, convenience, necessity, or prosperity, is valid.

Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Michigan R. Commission, 231 U. S. 457, ante, 310, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152; Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 45 L. ed. 194, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 115; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. North Carolina Corp. Commission, 206 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 933, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585, 11 Ann. Cas. 398; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Solan, 169 U. S. 133, 42 L. ed. 688, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 289; Carroll v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 199 U. S. 401, 50 L. ed. 246, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 66; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 549, 55 L. ed. 328, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 259; Engel v. O'Malley, 219 U. S. 128, 55 L. ed. 128, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 190; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Commercial Mill. Co. 218 U. S. 406, 54 L. ed. 1088, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 220, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 59, 21 Ann. Cas. 815; Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 55 L. ed. 112, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1062, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487; Assaria State Bank v. Dolley, 219 U. S. 121, 55 L. ed. 123, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 189; Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Mississippi, 210 U. S. 187, 52 L. ed. 1016, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Zernecke, 183 U. S. 582, 46 L. ed. 339, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 229.

On the other hand, an arbitrary, unreasonable taking of property, or limiting of the right to contract, is invalid, especially where the statute bears no relation to correcting some public evil, or promoting the health, safety, morals, welfare, or prosperity of a state or community.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 687, 43 L. ed. 860, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565; Central Stock Yards Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 192 U. S. 568, 48 L. ed. 565, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 339; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 164 U. S. 403, 41 L. ed. 489, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 130; McNeil v. Southern R. Co. 202 U. S. 543, 561, 50 L. ed. 1142, 1148, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 722; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 579, 41 L. ed. 832, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Central Stock Yards Co. 212 U. S. 132, 53 L. ed. 441, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 246.

This case comes squarely under the doctrine of Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 45 L. ed. 194, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 115, and kindred cases, and is not controlled by the pronouncement in Central Stock Yards Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 192 U. S. 568, 48 L. ed. 565, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 339.

The order of the railroad commissioners of Iowa does not deprive plaintiff in error of property without due process, and plaintiff is not denied due process by reason of limiting its right to contract.

Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 300, 45 L. ed. 200, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 115; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Michigan R. Commission, 231 U. S. 457, ante, 310, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. North Carolina Corp. Commission, 206 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 933, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585, 11 Ann. Cas. 398; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Commercial Mill. Co. 218 U. S. 406, 54 L. ed. 1088, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 220, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 59, 21 Ann. Cas. 815; Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey, 82 Iowa, 312, 12 L.R.A. 436, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 584, 31 Am. St. Rep. 477, 48 N. W. 98; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 186 U. S. 257, 46 L. ed. 1151, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900.

Plaintiff in error can complain only of the injury which he himself may sustain, and may not strike down a statute as violative of the Federal Constitution because of its possible injury to someone else.

Standard Stock Food Co. v. Wright, 225 U. S. 540, 550, 56 L. ed. 1197, 1201, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 784.

The order of the commission in question does not offend against the 14th Amendment in that the railway company is denied the equal protection of the laws.

Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 45 L. ed. 194, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 115; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. North Carolina Corp. Commission, 206 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 933, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585, 11 Ann. Cas. 398; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Michigan R. Commission, 231 U. S. 457, ante, 310, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Commercial Mill. Co. 218 U. S. 406, 54 L. ed. 1088, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 220, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 59, 21 Ann. Cas. 815; Griffith v. Connecticut, 218 U. S. 563, 54 L. ed. 1151, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132; Kentucky Union Co. v. Kentucky, 219 U. S. 140, 55 L. ed. 137, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 171; German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Hale, 219 U. S. 307, 55 L. ed. 229, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 246; District of Columbia v. Brooke, 214 U. S. 138, 53 L. ed. 941, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 560; Brown-Forman Co. v. Kentucky, 217 U. S. 563, 54 L. ed. 883, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578; Field v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 194 U. S. 618, 48 L. ed. 1142, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 784; McLean v. Arkansas, 211 U. S. 546, 53 L. ed. 319, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206; Williams v. Arkansas, 217 U. S. 79, 54 L. ed. 673, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493, 18 Ann. Cas. 865; Carroll v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 199 U. S. 401, 50 L. ed. 246, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 66; Southwestern Oil Co. v. Texas, 217 U. S. 114, 54 L. ed. 688, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 496; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. May, 194 U. S. 267, 48 L. ed. 971, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638.

Digitized by Google

If the regulation is reasonable, and Congress has remained silent upon the specific matter, it is neither a burden to interstate commerce nor a conflict with the acts of Congress to regulate interstate commerce.

Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Michigan R. Commission, 231 U. S. 457, ante, 310, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152; Savage v. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, 56 L. ed. 1182, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715; Standard Stock Food Co. v. Wright, 225 U. S. 540, 56 L. ed. 1197, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 784; Reid v. Colorado, 187 U. S. 137, 147, 47 L. ed. 108, 114, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 506; Northern P. R. Co. v. Washington, 222 U. S. 370, 56 L. ed. 237, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 160; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Illinois, 177 U. S. 514, 44 L. ed. 868, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 722; Minnesota Rate Cases (Simpson v. Shepard) 230 U. S. 352, 57 L. ed. 1511, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1151, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729. See also New Mexico ex rel. McLean v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 203 U. S. 38, 55, 51 L. ed. 78, 88, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 31 L. ed. 508, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 804, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 32 L. ed. 238, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 238, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. New York, 165 U. S. 628, 41 L. ed. 853, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Hennington v. Georgia, 163 U. S. 299, 41 L. ed. 166, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1086.

Mr. Justice Hughes delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought by the state of Iowa to obtain a mandatory injunction requiring the Chicago, Milwaukee, & St. Paul Railway Company to comply with an order of the State Railroad Commission promulgated December 22, 1909. The defendant answered, denying the validity of [340] the order, and also filed a cross petition to set it aside, alleging that it was repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, as an attempt to regulate interstate commerce and to deprive the company of its property without due process of law, and, further, that the Commission was without authority under the laws of the state to make the order. Judgment, sustaining the action of the Commission and directing compliance, was affirmed by the supreme court of the state. 152 Iowa, 317, 130 N. W. 802.

It appeared that the railway company, in 1909, had refused to accept shipments of coal in carload lots at Davenport, Iowa, for points in that state when tendered in cars of other railroad companies by which the coal had been brought to Davenport from points in Illinois. The railway company insisted that it was entitled to furnish its own cars. The Clark Coal & Coke Company, operating a branch at Davenport, complained of this rule to the Railroad Commission, stating that it was a departure from the practice which had obtained for several years with respect to such shipments, that the Clark Company paid all charges to Davenport, and on receiving orders from its customers tendered written billing for transportation from Davenport to the designated points, and that it was unreasonable for the railway company to require in such cases that the coal should be unloaded and reloaded in its own cars. A hearing was had before the Commission at which other shippers intervened, adopting the coal company's complaint. The facts were presented in an agreed statement, as follows:

"The Clark Coal & Coke Company of Davenport, Iowa, have been making shipments of coal from points in Illinois to Davenport by the Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific Railway Company and the Chicago, Burlington, & Quincy Railroad Company; that said coal is then placed by the railroad bringing it into Iowa on an interchange track at Davenport; that all charges from point of origin [341] in Illinois to Davenport, Iowa, are paid by the Clark Coal & Coke Company to the railroad company bringing said coal; that thereupon complainant has notified the respondent railway company of the placement of said coal, and that it desired to ship said coal by the respondent railway company to different points on its own line, and tendered a written billing from Davenport to the point so designated; that thereupon respondent railway company has accepted said billing from Davenport to said point, and taken said cars from said interchange track to its own line, and transported the same in accordance with said written billing; that the respondent railway company has changed its method of doing business in the above respects by its printed order, and now refuses to accept said written billing and take said cars from said interchange track and transport them over its own line to the point designated by said billing, unless said coal is loaded in equipment belonging to respondent railway company. Respondent railway company, by its answer to the complaint, alleges that it 'will furnish cars for shipment of coal from Davenport to any point in Iowa, as provided by Iowa Distance Tariff, but will not accept shipments originating at Davenport, billed from Davenport, in the equipment of other carriers,' and its readiness and ability to furnish cars of its own for shipment is not controverted and will therefore be taken to be true. It will thus be observed that before the respondent railway company will take coal for transportation on its own line, in equipment other than its own, it requires that the same shall be unloaded and reloaded into its own cars."

Digitized by Google

Thereupon, the Commission rendered a decision in favor of the shipper and entered the following order, to which this controversy relates:

"In accordance with the conclusions heretofore expressed, it is therefore ordered by the Board of Railroad Commissioners of Iowa that upon arrival of loaded cars of [342] coal at the city of Davenport, upon any line of railroad, when said cars are placed upon the interchange track at Davenport, as ordered or requested by the owner or consignee of said cars, and the freight paid thereon, and the ordinary billing in use by the respondent railway is tendered to it for a billing of said cars so placed to a point on its own line within the state of Iowa, that the respondent railway company be and is hereby ordered and required to accept said billing, receive said car or cars so billed, and transport them on its own line to the point designated by the owner or consignee in said billing; and that it receive said car or cars in whatever equipment the same may be loaded, without requiring an unloading and reloading into its own equipment, and transport said car or cars over its own line to points within this state, so loaded, without unloading and reloading as above set forth, in the same manner that it receives cars from connecting lines, loaded in its own equipment. It is expressly understood, however, in this order, that no questions in relation to switching charges are determined."

The railway company contended, both before the Commission and in the state court, that the shipments in question were interstate; and it was alleged in its answer that the method of transportation resorted to was a device of shippers to secure, by adding the rate from the initial point in Illinois to Davenport to the rate established by the Iowa distance tariff from Davenport to other points in the state, a lower rate than that applicable to an interstate shipment from the point in Illinois to the point of final destination.

The Railroad Commission held that the transportation desired from Davenport was a purely intrastate service, saying: "Under the admitted facts, the city of Davenport became a distributing point for coal shipped by the consignor. The certainty in regard to the shipments of coal ended at Davenport. The point where the same was to be [343] shipped beyond Davenport, if at all, was determined after the arrival of the coal at Davenport. The coal was under the control of the consignee, and he could sell it in transit or at Davenport, or reconsign it to a point on respondent's railway, or any other railway, at his own discretion." Upon the trial of the present suit in the state court, the state introduced in evidence the proceedings, decision, and order of the Commission, and without further evidence both parties rested. The supreme court of the state took the same view of the facts that the Commission had taken, and accordingly held that the shipments were intrastate. The court said that the facts showed that the coal was originally consigned to the coal company in Davenport, that it was there held until sales were made, that the consignee had taken delivery, paying the freight to the initial carrier, and assuming full control. 152 Iowa, 317, 319, 130 N. W. 802.

The record discloses no ground for assailing this finding. It is undoubtedly true that the question whether commerce is interstate or intrastate must be determined by the essential character of the commerce, and not by mere billing or forms of contract. Railroad Commission v. Worthington, 225 U. S. 101, 56 L. ed. 1004, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 653; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Sabine Tram Co. 227 U. S. 111, 57 L. ed. 442, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 229; Railroad Commission v. Texas & P. R. Co. 229 U. S. 336, 57 L. ed. 1215, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837. But the fact that commodities received on interstate shipments are reshipped by the consignees, in the cars in which they are received, to other points of destination, does not necessarily establish a continuity of movement, or prevent the reshipment to a point within the same state from having an independent and intrastate character. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Texas, 204 U. S. 403, 51 L. ed. 540, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 360; Railroad Commission v. Worthington, 225 U. S. 101, 109, 56 L. ed. 1004, 1008, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 653; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Sabine Tram Co. 227 U. S. 111, 129, 130, 57 L. ed. 442, 449, 450, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 229. The question is with respect to the nature of the actual movement in the particular [344] case; and we are unable to say upon this record that the state court has improperly characterized the traffic in question here. In the light of its decision, the order of the Commission must be taken as referring solely to intrastate transportation originating at Davenport.

Digitized by Google

In this view, the validity of the Commission's order is challenged upon the ground that at common law the carrier was entitled to use its own equipment, and that the statute of the state of Iowa as to the receiving of cars from connecting carriers (Code, § 2116) is inapplicable for the reason that, with respect to the transportation in question, the plaintiff in error was the initial carrier. But the obvious answer is that what is required by the law of Iowa has been determined by the supreme court of that state. That court, examining the various provisions of the Iowa Code which have relation to the matter, has held that the order was within the authority of the Railroad Commission. 152 Iowa, 317, 320, 321, 130 N. W. 802.

Further, the plaintiff in error insists that the enforcement of the order would deprive it of its liberty to contract, and of its property, without due process of law, and would deny to it the equal protection of the laws, in violation of the 14th Amendment. We find these objections to be without merit. It was competent for the state, acting within its jurisdiction, and not in hostility to any Federal regulation of interstate commerce, to compel the carrier to accept cars which were already loaded and in suitable condition for transportation over its line. The requirement was a reasonable one. It cannot be said that the plaintiff in error had a constitutional right to burden trade by insisting that the commodities should be unloaded and reloaded in its own equipment. Upon this point the case of Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 45 L. ed. 194, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 115, is decisive. There is no essential difference, so far as the power of the state is concerned, between such an order as we have here and one compelling the [345] carrier to make track connections, and to receive cars from connecting roads, in order that reasonably adequate facilities for traffic may be provided. See also Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 186 U. S. 257, 263, 46 L. ed. 1151, 1156, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. North Carolina Corp. Commission, 206 U. S. 1, 19, 27, 51 L. ed. 933, 941, 945, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585, 11 Ann. Cas. 398; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 262, 54 L. ed. 472, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 330; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 231 U. S. 457, 468, ante, 310, 317, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152.

It is argued that it was unreasonable to subject the railway company to the expense incident to the use of the cars of another carrier when it was ready to furnish its own. The record affords no sufficient basis for this contention. What the expense referred to would be was not proved, and, in the absence of a suitable disclosure of the pertinent facts, no case was made which would justify the conclusion that, in its practical operation, the regulation would impose any unreasonable burden. On the other hand, the agreed statement makes it evident that prior to the change which gave rise to this controversy it was the practice of the company to accept such shipments.

Finally, it is said that the order of the Commission interferes with interstate commerce because the cars in question were the vehicles of that commerce, and were brought into the state as such. No question, however, is presented here as between the shippers and the owners of the cars, and no actual interference with interstate commerce is shown. Nor does it appear that any regulation under Federal authority has been violated.

The plaintiff in error has failed to establish any ground for invalidating the order of the Commission and the judgment must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

---

[346] LAURA G. WHITE, Appt.,
v.
ISLAND TRANSPORTATION COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 346–352.)

Admiralty jurisdiction — limiting liability.

1. A Federal district court has jurisdiction of proceedings for the limitation of a shipowner's liability for a personal injury to a passenger, instituted by a petition which alleged that the injury was occasioned without the owner's privity or knowledge, thus bringing the case within

NOTE.—On limitation of liability of shipowners—see note to Lawton v. Comer, 7 L.R.A. 59.

Digitized by Google

U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4283, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2943, although the claimant affirms in her answer that such injury was caused by the owner's negligence, and not otherwise, where, instead of insisting that the allegations of the petition be proved, the claimant expressly waived proof of them, thereby consenting that they be taken as true.

[For other cases, see Admiralty, I. f, 10, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Shipping — limiting liability of owner — single claim.

2. A single claim against a shipowner, founded upon a personal injury to a passenger, is sufficient to make applicable the provision of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4283, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2943, that the liability of a shipowner for any damage occasioned without his privity or knowledge shall in no case exceed the value of the vessel, notwithstanding the plurality of claims apparently contemplated by the terms of §§ 4284, 4285 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 2943, 2944), which require a pro rata distribution of the value of the vessel and freight when not sufficient to satisfy all claims, authorize proceedings to obtain the benefit of the statute, make the surrender of the vessel and freight for the benefit of the claimants a sufficient compliance with the statute on the part of the owner, and declare that upon such surrender all claims and proceedings against the owner shall cease.

[For other cases, see Shipping, V. c, 3, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 206.]

Submitted January 26, 1914. Decided April 13, 1914.

APPEAL from the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Washington to review a decree in favor of the shipowner in proceedings for the limitation of the shipowner's liability. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. M. J. Gordon submitted the cause for appellant. Messrs. P. C. Sullivan and E. B. Stevens were on the brief:

The claim which the appellant was asserting was one predicated on negligent construction by the owner, as contradistinguished from any negligence arising out of the conduct of the master and the crew.

Richardson v. Harmon, 222 U. S. 96, 56 L. ed. 110, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27.

It will not be gainsaid that the law devolved upon the appellee, as a common carrier of passengers for hire, the duty of providing safely constructed and properly equipped boats engaged in such carriage so far as the exercise of the highest degree of care, prudence, and foresight might contribute toward making them safe.

Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How. 485, 14 L. ed. 509, 10 Am. Neg. Cas. 602; The New World v. King, 16 How. 469, 14 L. ed. 1019, 10 Am. Neg. Cas. 614; Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 451, 26 L. ed. 141, 10 Am. Neg. Cas. 593; Stokes v. Saltonstall, 13 Pet. 181, 10 L. ed. 115; New Jersey R. & Transp. Co. v. Pollard, 22 Wall. 341, 22 L. ed. 877, 7 Am. Neg. Cas. 325; Williams v. Spokane Falls & N. R. Co. 39 Wash. 77, 80 Pac. 1100; Firebaugh v. Seattle Electric Co. 40 Wash. 658, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 836, 111 Am. St. Rep. 990, 82 Pac. 995, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 579.

Since the owner had the right to design and construct this vessel according to its own plan, it would seem to follow, as a necessary sequence, that an injury to a passenger which is the result of improper construction must be attributed to the fault of the owner, rather than to that of the master and crew.

Mr. Alpheus Byers, submitted the cause for appellee. Mr. Ovid A. Byers was on the brief:

The procedure taken by appellee was that provided by the 54th admiralty rule and outlined by this court in Providence & N. Y. S. S. Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co. 109 U. S. 578, 27 L. ed. 1038, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617, and we think is correct in every particular.

Allegations that the owners themselves were in fault cannot affect the jurisdiction of the court to entertain a cause of limited liability, for that is one of the principal issues to be tried in such cause.

Butler v. Boston & S. S. S. Co. 130 U. S. 527, 32 L. ed. 1017, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612.

The limitation of liability is pre-eminently a question of admiralty jurisdiction, and it has been held practically from the foundation of the government that admiralty jurisdiction can only be exercised under the laws of the United States.

Janney v. Columbian Ins. Co. 10 Wheat. 411, 6 L. ed. 354.

A motion to dismiss ought not to be granted, even if there be but one claim.

The Hoffmans, 171 Fed. 455; The Southside, 155 Fed. 364; Re Starin, 124 Fed. 101; The S. A. McCaulley, 99 Fed. 302; Quinlan v. Pew, 5 C. C. A. 438, 5 U. S. App. 382, 56 Fed. 111; Providence v. Boston & S. S. S. Co. 130 U. S. 527, 32 L. ed. 1017, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612.

Mr. Justice Van Devanter delivered the opinion of the court:

While a passenger on the steamboat Fairhaven, plying upon Puget sound, Laura G. White sustained a severe personal injury in being caught or thrown by a rod, called a hog-chain, extending through the deck and connecting with the paddle-wheel. To recover for the injury she brought an action against the Island Transportation [348] Company, the owner of the vessel, in the superior court for King county, in the state of Washington, naming $21,350.87 as her damages. The owner then filed a libel or petition in the district court of the United States for that district to secure the benefit of the statute limiting the liability of vessel owners. Rev. Stat. §§ 4283–4285, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 2943, 2944; admiralty rules, 53–57, 210 U. S. 562, Digest Sup. Ct. 1908, vol. 6, p. 33 Appx., 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. XLV. The petition referred to the action in the state court, and alleged that the damage claimant was insisting that her injury was caused by "the carelessness and negligence of the employees" of the owner in handling the vessel, in not furnishing the passengers with safe and proper facilities, and in not informing them of dangerous conditions. It also alleged that the claimant was injured through her own negligence, without any fault in the construction, equipment, management, control, or care of the vessel, and especially without the privity or knowledge of the owner; that there was a valid and meritorious defense to the claim; and that the value of the vessel did not exceed $10,000. The petition, while insisting upon the right of the owner, under admiralty rule 56, to contest its liability and that of the vessel in that proceeding, prayed for an appraisement of the vessel and her pending freight, for an order for the payment of the amount of the appraisement into court, or the giving of a stipulation with sureties for such payment whenever required, for the issuance of a monition in the usual form and upon the usual condition, for an order restraining the prosecution of the action in the state court, for a decree limiting the owner's liability, if any, and for other appropriate relief. Although laying no special basis for it, the petition also, in a general way, indicated that the owner apprehended other claims and actions of a like character, and the prayer for the monition and relief was so framed as to include them. After other steps in the proceeding, which need not be noticed, the claimant answered, alleging, in substance, that her [349] claim was founded solely upon the owner's negligence in that the hog-chain was part of the construction of the vessel, and, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the owner, was negligently left unboxed, uncovered, and unguarded, so that it endangered the passengers when upon the deck, in the place regularly assigned to them, and that her injury was caused by such negligence, and not by any fault of her own. In addition, the answer contained this paragraph: "8th. The respondent further alleges that the facts are such that the petitioner is not entitled to take the benefit of the limited liability acts, and joins issue with the petitioner thereon, and asks that the court determine this question before it proceeds further in the said matter." The claimant also moved to dismiss the proceeding for want of jurisdiction, upon the ground that the pleadings showed that the injury was attributable to negligence of the owner, and that the petition disclosed but one claim and laid no basis for apprehending the existence of others. The motion to dismiss was overruled, and an exception reserved. The claimant elected to stand upon the motion, and refused to move further in the proceeding, whereupon proof of the allegations of the petition "being waived," a final decree was entered for the owner, adjudging that the claimant take nothing by the proceeding. This appeal followed, and a certificate was granted showing the grounds of the motion, the court's ruling, and the exception. See Judicial Code, § 238 [36 Stat. at L. 1157, chap. 231, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 228].

Digitized by Google

The objection that the court was without jurisdiction, because the pleadings showed that the damage was occasioned by the negligence of the owner, evidently resulted from a misapprehension of what was in the pleadings. So far were they from settling where the fault lay that they put the matter directly in issue, the petition alleging that the injury was occasioned without the owner's privity or knowledge, and the answer affirming that it was caused by the owner's negligence, and not otherwise. If the fact was [350] as alleged in the petition, the case was within the statute, for § 4283 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2943) declares: "The liability of the owner of any vessel . . . for any act, matter, or thing, loss, damage, or forfeiture, done, occasioned, or incurred, without the privity or knowledge of such owner or owners, shall in no case exceed the amount or value of the interest of such owner in such vessel and her freight then pending." And while the claimant was at liberty, under admiralty rule 56, to contest the owner's right to a limitation of liability, the decision of the question necessarily rested with the court. Its jurisdiction was not ousted merely because the claimant took issue with what was alleged in the petition. Butler v. Boston & S. S. S. Co. 130 U. S. 527, 552, 553, 32 L. ed. 1017, 1022, 1023, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612. The questions of fact so presented were to be settled by a trial, and this was so whether the facts were jurisdictional or otherwise. But there was no trial. Instead of insisting that the allegations of the petition be proved, the claimant expressly waived proof of them, thereby consenting that they be taken as true. As they were plainly to the effect that the injury was without the privity or knowledge of the owner, there was no defect in the jurisdiction at that point.

Digitized by Google

The objection that the court could not entertain the proceeding because the petition disclosed only one claim arising out of the injury is grounded upon the terms of §§ 4284 and 4285 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 2943, 2944), which require a pro rata distribution of the value of the vessel and freight when not sufficient to satisfy all claims, authorize proceedings to obtain the benefit of the statute, make the surrender of the vessel and freight for the benefit of claimants a sufficient compliance with the statute on the part of the owner, and declare that upon such surrender all claims and proceedings against the owner shall cease. It must be conceded that these sections, if taken alone, give color to the objection, for, with a single exception, their words apparently contemplate a plurality of claims. But to a right understanding [351] of these sections it is essential that they be read with § 4283 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2943). It contains the fundamental provision on which the others turn. It broadly declares that "the liability . . . for any . . . damage . . . occasioned without the privity or knowledge of such owner . . . shall in no case exceed" the value of the vessel and freight. The succeeding sections are in the nature of an appendix, and relate to the proceedings by which the first is to be made effective. Therefore, they should be so construed as to bring them into correspondence with it. It was so held in Butler v. Boston & S. S. S. Co. 130 U. S. 550, 551, 1022, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612, where it became necessary to consider another difference in terms between them and it. In that case this court said, quoting from a decision of the supreme court of Rhode Island: "These sections [4284 and 4285], if we look only to the letter, apply only to injuries and losses of property. The question is, therefore, whether we shall by construction bring the three sections into correspondence by confining the scope of § 4283 to injuries and losses of property, or by enlarging the scope of the two other sections so as to include injuries to the person. We think it is more reasonable to suppose that the designation of losses and injuries in §§ 4284 and 4285 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 2943, 2944) is imperfect, a part being mentioned representatively for the whole, and consequently that those sections were intended to extend to injuries to the person as well as to injuries to property, than it is to suppose that § 4283 was intended to extend only to the latter class of injuries, and was inadvertently couched in words of broader meaning." In the lower Federal courts there has been some contrariety of opinion upon the point now being considered, but the prevailing view has been that due regard for the broad terms and dominant force of § 4283 requires that §§ 4284 and 4285 be construed as authorizing a proceeding for limitation of liability whether there be a plurality of claims or only one. Quinlan v. Pew, 5 C. C. A. 438, 5 U. S. App. 382, 56 Fed. 111, 120; The S. A. McCaulley, 99 [352] Fed. 302, 304; The Hoffmans, 171 Fed. 455, 457; Benedict Admiralty, 4th ed. § 533. In the recent case of Richardson v. Harmon, 222 U. S. 96, 56 L. ed. 110, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27, where there was but a single claim, it was assumed by both court and counsel that a plurality of claims was not essential. We think that is the true view of the statute.

Decree affirmed.

ANTHONY FARRUGIA, Plff. in Err.,
v.
PHILADELPHIA & READING RAILWAY COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 352-354.)

Error to district court — jurisdiction below.

A judgment of compulsory nonsuit in an action brought in a Federal district court under the employers' liability act of April 22, 1908 (35 Stat. at L. 65, chap. 149, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1322), which rests upon the ground that the evidence produced at the trial of the case does not disclose that plaintiff, at the time of the happening of the accident by which he received the injury complained of, was engaged in interstate commerce, does not present a question as to the power of that court as a Federal court to hear and determine the case, which is essential under the Judicial Code, § 238 (36 Stat. at L. 1157, chap. 231, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 228), to sustain a direct writ of error from the Federal Supreme Court, sued out on the ground that the jurisdiction below was in issue.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 895-914, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 823.]

Argued March 2, 1914. Decided April 13, 1914.

IN ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District

---

NOTE.—On direct review in Federal Supreme Court of judgments of district or circuit courts—see notes to Gwin v. United States, 46 L. ed. U. S. 741, and B. Altman & Co. v. United States, 56 L. ed. U. S. 894.

Digitized by Google

of Pennsylvania to review a judgment of compulsory nonsuit in an action based upon the Federal employers' liability act. Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George Demming argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. William Clarke Mason argued the cause, and, with Mr. Charles Heebner, filed a brief for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Van Devanter delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action against a railway company to recover for personal injuries. The right of action was predicated upon the Federal employers' liability act of April 22, 1908, 35 Stat. at L. 65, chap. 149, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1322, as amended April 5, 1910, 36 Stat. at L. 291, chap. 143, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1324, and it was alleged that the injuries were sustained while the defendant was engaged, and while the plaintiff was employed by it, in interstate commerce. There was a plea of not guilty, and a trial resulted in a judgment of compulsory nonsuit. The case is here upon a direct writ of error based upon a certificate that the court's decision was given upon a jurisdictional ground; namely, that "the evidence produced at the trial of the case did not disclose that plaintiff, at the time of the happening of the accident by which he received the injuries complained of, was engaged in interstate commerce."

Although counsel have presented the case as if it were properly here, it is manifest that it is not. The clause in § 238 of the Judicial Code [36 Stat. at L. 1157, chap. 231, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 228], providing for a direct writ of error "in any case in which the jurisdiction of the court is in issue," refers, as we have repeatedly held, to cases in which the power of the court, as a Federal court, to hear and determine the cause, is in controversy. Fore River Shipbuilding Co. v. Hagg, 219 U. S. 175, 178, 55 L. ed. 163, 164, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; United States v. Congress Constr. Co. 222 U. S. 199, 56 L. ed. 163, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 44; R. J. Darnell v. Illinois C. R. Co. 225 U. S. 243, 56 L. ed. 1072, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 760. No such issue is here disclosed. The power of the court, as a Federal court, to hear and determine the case, was not questioned. Nor did the court hold that it was without jurisdiction [354] in that sense. On the contrary, it proceeded to a hearing and decided that the plaintiff could not recover under the Federal act because one element of his asserted cause of action was without any evidence to sustain it. Had the action been brought in a state court, as it could have been, the same question would have arisen; and had the evidence been similarly insufficient, a like decision must have ensued. We say the action could have been brought in a state court, because § 6 of the Federal act declares: "The jurisdiction of the courts of the United States under this act shall be concurrent with that of the courts of the several states, and no case arising under this act and brought in any state court of competent jurisdiction shall be removed to any court of the United States." And we say the result must have been the same in a state court upon similar evidence, because the right of recovery given by the act (§ 1) is restricted to injuries suffered while the employee is employed in interstate commerce.

It follows that there was no basis for the direct writ of error. If a review of the decision was desired it should have been sought in the Circuit Court of Appeals.

Writ of error dismissed.

TENNESSEE COAL, IRON, & RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
WILEY GEORGE.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 354–361.)

Statutes — full faith and credit — venue of transitory action.

The enforcement by the Georgia courts of the cause of action given by Ala. Code, § 3910, to a servant against the master, for injuries occasioned by defective machinery, does not deny full faith and credit to the provision of § 6115 of that Code, that "all actions under § 3910 must be brought in a court of competent jurisdiction within the state of Alabama, and not elsewhere."

[For other cases, see Statutes, II. a, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1913 Supp.]

[No. 299.]

Argued March 17, 1914. Decided April 13, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the State of Georgia to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the City Court of Atlanta, in that State, in favor of plaintiff in an action founded on a provision of the Alabama Code giving a right of action to a servant against the master for injuries occasioned by defective machinery. Affirmed.

See same case below, 11 Ga. App. 221, 75 S. E. 567.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Alexander W. Smith argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The condition, or limitation, put upon a right of action created by statute, and not existing at common law, inheres in the right itself, and follows it into other jurisdictions.

Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Wallace, 223 U. S. 481, 490, 56 L. ed. 516, 522, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 205; The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, 30 L. ed. 358, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140; Davis v. Mills, 194 U. S. 451, 454, 48 L. ed. 1067, 1070, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 692; Munos v. Southern P. Co. 2 C. C. A. 163, 2 U. S. App. 222, 51 Fed. 188; Stern v. LaCompagnie General Transatlantique, 110 Fed. 996; The Edna, 185 Fed. 206; United States use of Gibson Lumber Co. v. Boomer, 106 C. C. A. 164, 183 Fed. 726; Coyne v. Southern P. R. Co. 155 Fed. 683.

Such a condition, or limitation, need not be contained in the same statute. It operates the same way if it be specially attached to such a statutory right of action subsequently and in a different statute.

Davis v. Mills, 194 U. S. 451, 454, 48 L. ed. 1067, 1070, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 692.

The courts of the United States take judicial notice of the public laws of each state of the Union.

Mills v. Green, 159 U. S. 651, 657, 40 L. ed. 293, 295, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132.

Where a limitation to local courts was affixed to a cause of action existing at the common law, and independently of the statute affixing it, the limitation was disregarded in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sowers, 213 U. S. 55, 53 L. ed. 695, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397. A well defined distinction exists between cases based on common-law liability and those depending on statutory rules of liability.

Charleston & W. C. R. Co. v. Miller, 113 Ga. 15, 38 S. E. 338; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 382, 28 L. ed. 787, 789, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 184; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 378, 379, 37 L. ed. 772, 777, 778, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Castle, 224 U. S. 541, 56 L. ed. 875, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 606; Employers' Liability Cases (Howard v. Illinois C. R. Co.) 207 U. S. 463, 537, 52 L. ed. 297, 326, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141; Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 49, 56 L. ed. 327, 345, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; Mobile & B. R. Co. v. Holborn, 84 Ala. 133, 4 So. 146, 13 Am. Neg. Cas. 125.

"Interstate venue," or venue as between different countries, is jurisdictional. "Municipal venue," or venue as between different places in the same jurisdiction, as a rule has to do with procedure merely.

Ellenwood v. Marietta Chair Co. 158 U. S. 105, 108, 39 L. ed. 913, 914, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 771; Companhia de Mocambique v. British South Africa Co. [1892] 2 Q. B. 358, 61 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 663, 66 L. T. N. S. 773, 40 Week. Rep. 650.

There is a profound distinction between the existence of jurisdiction in a given court and its proper exercise in a given case therein.

Smith v. McKay, 161 U. S. 355, 358, 40 L. ed. 731, 732, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 490; Louisville Trust Co. v. Knott, 191 U. S. 225, 233, 48 L. ed. 159, 162, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 119; United States v. Larkin, 208 U. S. 333, 338, 52 L. ed. 517, 519, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 417; Fore River Shipbuilding Co. v. Hagg, 219 U. S. 175, 55 L. ed. 163, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; Van Fleet, Collateral Attack, chap. 4.

The contention here does not militate against the soundness of the general doctrine established in the following cases, that whenever a right of action has become fixed and a legal liability incurred, that right of action may be pursued and that liability enforced in any court of competent jurisdiction. This is so because in not one of these cases was the right of action restricted or limited by the law which created it, and that restriction disregarded.

Dennick v. Central R. Co. 103 U. S. 11, 18, 26 L. ed. 439, 441; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 593, 36 L. ed. 829, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905; Stewart v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 168 U. S. 445, 42 L. ed. 537, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105; Whitman v. National Bank, 176 U. S. 559, 44 L. ed. 587, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 477.

The principle involved is closely analogous to that found in the decisions relative to the enforcement of "death statutes" enacted in one state and invoked in another. All restrictions and limitations therein found are enforced everywhere.

Slater v. Mexico Nat. R. Co. 194 U. S. 120, 126, 48 L. ed. 900, 902, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; Chambers v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 207 U. S. 142, 52 L. ed. 143, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 34.

So also, it is analogous to the application of statutes of limitations of the locus in the forum.

Davis v. Mills, 194 U. S. 451, 457, 48 L. ed. 1067, 1071, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 692; Selma, R. & D. R. Co. v. Lacey, 49 Ga. 106.

So also, it is analogous to the question of statutory venue of suits under the act of Congress authorizing actions on contractor's bonds in government work.

Digitized by Google

Davidson Bros. Marble Co. v. United States, 213 U. S. 10, 16, 53 L. ed. 675, 677, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 324; United States use of Gibson Lumber Co. v. Boomer, 106 C. C. A. 164, 183 Fed. 726; United States v. Congress Constr. Co. 222 U. S. 199, 56 L. ed. 163, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 44.

Mr. Reuben R. Arnold argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error:

The decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sowers, 213 U. S. 55, 53 L. ed. 695, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397, which was a decision upon a similar statute of New Mexico, is controlling.

There are many cases where the forum, in enforcing the law of another state, has enforced the substantive rights created by such state through statute, and has ignored attempted conditions imposed by the lex loci which deal only with the remedy.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Whitton, 13 Wall. 270, 20 L. ed. 571; Husted v. Missouri P. R. Co. 143 Mo. App. 623, 128 S. W. 282; Philes v. Missouri P. R. Co. 141 Mo. App. 561, 125 S. W. 555.

In the following cases the right of action was sustained in transitory actions in one state under the laws of another state, and various provisions of the lex loci regulating the remedy, which were claimed to be a part of the right itself, were disregarded.

Stewart v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 168 U. S. 445, 42 L. ed. 537, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105; Hollenbach v. Elmore & H. Contracting Co. 174 Fed. 845; Southern R. Co. v. Decker, 5 Ga. App. 21, 62 S. E. 678; Southern R. Co. v. Robertson, 7 Ga. App. 154, 66 S. E. 535; Holmes v. Barclay, 4 La. Ann. 63.

It is a universal rule that the lex loci relating to remedy, even though those laws may have been parcel of the same general enactment in which the rights were created, do not apply to the forum, and it is clear that the Federal Constitution and act of Congress upon the full faith and credit proposition are not in conflict with the general current of authority.

Minor, Confl. L. § 192, p. 476; Storey, Confl. L. §§ 539, 540, 556, 558; Stevens v. Brown, 20 W. Va. 450; Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hurd, 56 L.R.A. 196, note; Herrick v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 31 Minn. 11, 47 Am. Rep. 772, 16 N. W. 413.

It would be impossible to transplant all the remedies provided by the lex loci to the lex fori and make them parts and conditions of the rights granted. The jurisdiction and powers of the courts of the several states vary, and each state must apply its own machinery to rights granted in another state, as the machinery cannot be transferred. This applies to the forms of action, the process, the sufficiency of the pleadings, etc.

22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law pp. 1383, 1384; 4 Sutherland, Damages, § 4280.

[358] Mr. Justice Lamar delivered the opinion of the court:

Wiley George, the defendant in error, was an engineer employed by the Tennessee Coal, Iron, & Railroad Company at its steel plant in Jefferson county, Alabama. While he was under a locomotive repairing the brakes, a defective throttle allowed steam to leak into the cylinder, causing the engine to move forward automatically, in consequence of which he was seriously injured. He brought suit by attachment, in the city court of Atlanta, Georgia, founding his action on § 3910 of the Alabama Code, which makes the master liable to the employee when the injury is "caused by reason of any defect in the condition of the ways, works, machinery, or plant connected with or used in the business of the master or employer."

The defendant filed a plea in abatement in which it was set out that § 6115 of that Code also provided that "all actions under § 3910 must be brought in a court of competent jurisdiction within the state of Alabama, and not elsewhere." The defendant thereupon prayed that the action be abated because "to continue said case of said statutory cause of action given by the statutes of Alabama, and restricted by said statutes to the courts of Alabama, would be a denial so far as the rights of this defendant are concerned of full faith and credit to said public acts of the state of Alabama in the state of Georgia, contrary to the provisions of art. 4, § 1 of the Constitution of the United States." A demurrer to the plea in abatement was sustained and the judgment for the plaintiff thereafter entered was affirmed by the court of appeals. The case was then brought to this court.

The record raises the single question as to whether the full faith and credit clause of the Constitution prohibited the courts of Georgia and enforcing a cause of action [359] given by the Alabama Code, to the servant against the master, for injuries occasioned by defective machinery, when another section of the same Code provided that suits to enforce such liability "must be brought in a court of competent jurisdiction within the state of Alabama, and not elsewhere."

There are many cases where right and remedy are so united that the right cannot be enforced except in the manner and before the tribunal designated by the act. For the rule is well settled that "where the provision for the liability is coupled with a provision for the special remedy, that remedy, that alone, must be employed." Pollard v. Bailey, 20 Wall. 527, 22 L. ed. 378; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Wallace, 223 U. S. 490, 56 L. ed. 522, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 205; Stewart v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 168 U. S. 445, 42 L. ed. 537, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105; Fourth Nat. Bank v. Francklyn, 120 U. S. 753, 30 L. ed. 828, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757.

Digitized by Google

But that rule has no application to a case arising under the Alabama Code relating to suits for injuries caused by defective machinery. For, whether the statute be treated as prohibiting certain defenses, as removing common-law restrictions, or as imposing upon the master a new and larger liability, it is in either event evident that the place of bringing the suit is not part of the cause of action,—the right and the remedy are not so inseparably united as to make the right dependent upon its being enforced in a particular tribunal. The cause of action is transitory, and like any other transitory action can be enforced "in any court of competent jurisdiction within the state of Alabama . . ." But the owner of the defective machinery causing the injury may have removed from the state, and it would be a deprivation of a fixed right if the plaintiff could not sue the defendant in Alabama because he had left the state, nor sue him where the defendant or his property could be found because the statute did not permit a suit elsewhere than in Alabama. The injured plaintiff may likewise have moved from Alabama, and for that, or other, reason may have found it to his interest to [360] bring suit by attachment or in personam in a state other than where the injury was inflicted.

The courts of the sister state, trying the case, would be bound to give full faith and credit to all those substantial provisions of the statute which inhered in the cause of action, or which name conditions on which the right to sue depend. But venue is no part of the right; and a state cannot create a transitory cause of action and at the same time destroy the right to sue on that transitory cause of action in any court having jurisdiction. That jurisdiction is to be determined by the law of the court's creation, and cannot be defeated by the extraterritorial operation of a statute of another state, even though it created the right of action.

The case here is controlled by the decision of this court in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sowers, 213 U. S. 55, 70, 53 L. ed. 695, 702, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397, where the New Mexico statute, giving a right of action for personal injuries, and providing that suits should be brought after certain form of notice in a particular district, was preceded by the recital that "it has become customary for persons claiming damages for personal injuries received in this territory to institute and maintain suits for the recovery thereof in other states and territories, to the increased cost and annoyance and manifest injury and oppression of the business interests of this territory and the derogation of the dignity of the courts thereof." Despite this statement of the public policy of the territory, the judgment obtained by the plaintiff in Texas was affirmed by this court in an opinion wherein it was said that where an action is brought in "another jurisdiction, based upon common-law principles, although having certain statutory restrictions, such as are found in this [territorial] act, as to the making of an affidavit, and limiting the time of prosecuting the suit, full faith and credit is given to the law when the recovery is permitted, subject to the restrictions upon the right of action imposed in the territory enacting [361] the statute. . . . When it is shown that the court in the other jurisdiction observed such conditions, and that a recovery was permitted after such conditions had been complied with, the jurisdiction thus invoked is not defeated because of the provision of the statute" requiring the suit to be brought in the district where the plaintiff resides or where the defendant, if a corporation, has its principal place of business.

It is claimed, however, that the decision in the Sowers Case is not in point because the plaintiff was there seeking to enforce a common-law liability, while here he is asserting a new and statutory cause of action. But that distinction marks no difference between the two cases because in New Mexico common-law liability is statutory liability,—the adopting statute (Comp. Laws, § 1823) providing that "the common law, as recognized in the United States of America, shall be the rule of practice and decision."

The decision in the Sowers Case, however, was not put upon the fact that the suit was based on a common-law liability. The court there announced the general rule that a transitory cause of action can be maintained in another state even though the statute creating the cause of action provides that the action must be brought in local domestic courts.

In the present case the Georgia court gave full faith and credit to the Alabama act and its judgment is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Holmes dissents.

Digitized by Google

[362] CARONDELET CANAL & NAVIGATION COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
STATE OF LOUISIANA.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 362–388.)

Error to state court — final judgment.

1. A judgment of a state court ordering the delivery to the state by a canal company of the waterway in its entirety, and all appurtenant property and improvements, including the roadways upon the sides, which comprise practically all the property sued for, such judgment involving and disposing of the Federal right asserted by the canal company, possesses the requisite finality to sustain a writ of error from the Federal Supreme Court, although there is reserved for further adjudication a small piece of ground as to which there was a dispute as to whether it was appurtenant to the canal, and although an accounting of certain receipts and disbursements is ordered.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, I. d, 24, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Error to state court — Federal question — impairing contract obligations.

2. A decision of the highest state court that La. Acts 1858, No. 74, on which a canal company bases its contract right to compensation upon the reverting of its property to the state, gives the company no such right, is reviewable in the Federal Supreme Court as presenting the question of the impairment of contract obligations, although the state court does not refer to any subsequent legislation, where, by La. Acts 1906, No. 161, a board of control of the canal was created which, through the affirmative and repealing provisions of such statute, was to be the instrument and moving agency by which the state was to exercise its asserted right to control and take possession of the canal company's property without making compensation.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1376–1392, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Constitutional law — impairing contract obligations — right to compensation upon reversion to state.

3. A contract right to the payment of compensation as a condition precedent to the reversion to the state of the property rights of a canal company acquired under La. Acts 1852, No. 309, 1857, No. 160, 1858, No. 74, was given by § 4 of the latter act, which provides that "the said company shall enjoy corporate succession during fifty years from this date, after which time it may revert to the state upon due compensation being made," the pronoun "it" referring to the company, and not to the railroad which the company was authorized by § 2 to construct, but which in fact was never built.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, IV. g, 2, c, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 78.]

Argued March 16 and 17, 1914. Decided April 20, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana to review a judgment which, reversing a judgment of the Civil District Court of the Parish of Orleans, in that state, ordered the delivery to the state by a canal company of its canal and waterway, together with the appurtenant property and improvements. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

See same case below, 129 La. 279, 56 So. 137.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Edgar H. Farrar argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Benjamin T. Waldo and W. C. Dufour, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

This court will determine for itself what the contract claimed to be violated was.

Douglas v. Kentucky, 168 U. S. 502, 42 L. ed. 557, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 199; McGahey v. Virginia, 135 U. S. 662, 34 L. ed. 304, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 972; McCullough v. Virginia, 172 U. S. 110, 43 L. ed. 385, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 134; Vicksburg v. Vicksburg Waterworks Co. 202 U. S. 467, 50 L. ed. 1110, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 660, 6 Ann. Cas. 253.

This court will review the findings of fact by a state court where a conclusion of law as to a Federal right and the finding of fact are so intermingled as to make it necessary to analyze and dissect the facts for the purpose of passing on the Federal question.

Creswill v. Grand Lodge, K. P. 225 U. S.

NOTE.—On the general subject of writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4 L. ed. U. S. 97; Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884; and Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

On what adjudications of state courts can be brought up for review in the Supreme Court of the United States by writ of error to those courts—see note to Apex Transp. Co. v. Garbade, 62 L.R.A. 513.

As to what judgments of state courts are final for purposes of review in Federal Supreme Court—see note to Schlosser v. Hemphill, 49 L. ed. U. S. 1001.

On error to state courts in cases presenting questions of impairment of contract obligations—see note to Osborne v. Clark, 51 L. ed. U. S. 619.

Generally, as to what laws are void as impairing obligation of contracts—see notes to Franklin County Grammar School v. Bailey, 10 L.R.A. 405; Bullard v. Northern P. R. Co. 11 L.R.A. 246; Henderson v. State Soldiers & S. Monument Comrs. 13 L.R.A. 169; and Fletcher v. Peck, 3 L. ed. U. S. 162.

Digitized by Google

261, 56 L. ed. 1080, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822; Wood v. Chesborough, 228 U. S. 678, 57 L. ed. 1021, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 706.

The necessary corollary is that when the claim is that claimant has been deprived of property without due process of law, this court will find for itself what the claimant's property rights were, and how he has been deprived of them.

A comparison of La. Acts 1857, No. 160, § 26, and La. Acts 1858, No. 74, § 4, demonstrates that they are irreconcilably repugnant, and that the provisions of the earlier section are repealed by the later provisions.

Henrietta Min. & Mill. Co. v. Gardner, 173 U. S. 123, 43 L. ed. 637, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 327; United States v. Tynen, 11 Wall. 92, 20 L. ed. 154.

Even if the tenure by which the company held the waterway sued for was a lease, the state, as lessor, could not take the property at the end of the lease and keep the improvements made by the lessee, without making compensation therefor.

Ross v. Zuntz, 36 La. Ann. 888.

The grant of the territorial council to the Orleans Navigation Company was valid, and it would have been valid even if made by the state.

Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 37 L. ed. 463, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622.

To hold that the defendant cannot at this stage of the case, prosecute its writ of error to this court, would wholly defeat the appellate jurisdiction of this court under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Forgay v. Conrad, 6 How. 201, 12 L. ed. 404; Thomson v. Dean (Dean v. Nelson) 7 Wall. 342, 346, 19 L. ed. 94, 95; French v. Shoemaker, 12 Wall. 86, 98, 20 L. ed. 270. 271; Bostwick v. Brinkerhoff, 106 U. S. 3, 27 L. ed. 73, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 15; Grant v. Phœnix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 106 U. S. 429, 27 L. ed. 237, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 414; Winthrop Iron Co. v. Meeker, 109 U. S. 180, 27 L. ed. 898, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 111; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Southern Exp. Co. 108 U. S. 24, 28, 27 L. ed. 638, 639, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 6; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Dinsmore, 108 U. S. 30, 27 L. ed. 640, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 9; Keystone Manganese & Iron Co. v. Martin, 132 U. S. 91, 33 L. ed. 275, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 32; Bank of Lewisburg v. Sheffey, 140 U. S. 452, 35 L. ed. 496, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 755.

The fact that the state court did not pass on the Federal rights specially set up of record does not eliminate those questions from the case. This court will decide the Federal questions if the necessary effect of the judgment of the state court is to deny the Federal right so set up, and which, if recognized and enforced, would require a different judgment.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Illinois, 200 U. S. 561, 50 L. ed. 596, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 341, 4 Ann. Cas. 1175.

A judgment of a state court, even if it be authorized by a statute, whereby private property is taken for the state, or under its direction, for the public use, without compensation, is, upon principle and authority, wanting in the due process of law required by the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; Fayerweather v. Ritch, 195 U. S. 276, 49 L. ed. 193, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58; Union Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Kentucky, 199 U. S. 202, 50 L. ed. 152, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 36, 4 Ann. Cas. 493.

The same principle applies to a statute of a state.

Mr. Ruffin G. Pleasant, Attorney General of Louisiana, argued the cause, and, with Mr. Daniel Wendling, filed a brief for defendant in error:

There is a want of jurisdiction because of nonfinality of judgment.

Haseltine v. Central Nat. Bank, 183 U. S. 131, 46 L. ed. 117, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 49; Louisiana Nav. Co. v. Oyster Commission, 226 U. S. 99, 57 L. ed. 138, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 78; Missouri & K. I. R. Co. v. Olathe, 222 U. S. 185, 56 L. ed. 155, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 46; Norfolk & S. Turnp. Co. v. Virginia, 225 U. S. 264, 56 L. ed. 1082, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 828; Schlosser v. Hemphill, 198 U. S. 175, 49 L. ed. 1002, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654.

No Federal question is involved.

Beaupre v. Noyes, 138 U. S. 397, 34 L. ed. 991, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 296; Bacon v. Texas, 163 U. S. 207, 41 L. ed. 132, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1023; Cross Lake Shooting & Fishing Club v. Louisiana, 224 U. S. 632, 56 L. ed. 924, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 577; Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 110, 40 L. ed. 94, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 80; Chappell v. Bradshaw, 128 U. S. 132, 32 L. ed. 369, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40; Clark v. Pennsylvania, 128 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 487, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113; Commercial Bank v. Buckingham, 5 How. 317, 12 L. ed. 169; Des Moines v. Des Moines City R. Co. 214 U. S. 179, 53 L. ed. 958, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 553; Consolidated Turnp. Co. v. Norfolk & O. V. R. Co. 228 U. S. 599, 57 L. ed. 983, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; De Saussure v. Gaillard, 127 U. S. 222, 32 L. ed. 127, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1053; Deming v. Carlisle Packing Co. 226 U. S. 102, 57 L. ed. 140, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 80; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 87, 3 L. ed. 162; Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 147 U. S. 531, 37 L. ed. 267, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 353;

Digitized by Google

Kennebec & P. R. Co. v. Portland & K. R. Co. 14 Wall. 23, 20 L. ed. 850; Knox v. Exchange Bank, 12 Wall. 379, 20 L. ed. 414; Lehigh Water Co. v. Easton, 121 U. S. 388, 30 L. ed. 1059, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 916; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Louisiana Sugar Ref. Co. 125 U. S. 30, 31 L. ed. 612, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 741; Preston v. Chicago, 226 U. S. 447, 57 L. ed. 293, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 177; Ross v. Oregon, 227 U. S. 150, 57 L. ed. 458, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 220; Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 31 L. ed. 80, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep 21, 22; St. Paul Gaslight Co. v. St. Paul, 181 U. S. 149, 45 L. ed. 792, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 575; Turner v. Wilkes County, 173 U. S. 461, 43 L. ed. 768, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464; Wood v. Chesborough, 228 U. S. 672, 57 L. ed. 1018, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 706; Wilson v. North Carolina, 169 U. S. 586, 42 L. ed. 865, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 435; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 41, 45 L. ed. 415, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 256.

The judgment may be sustained without reference to the alleged Federal question, or giving effect to subsequent legislation.

Arkansas Southern R. Co. v. German Nat. Bank, 207 U. S. 270, 52 L. ed. 201, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 78; Beaupre v. Noyes, 138 U. S. 397, 34 L. ed. 991, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 296; Capital City Dairy Co. v. Ohio, 183 U. S. 238, 46 L. ed. 171, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 120; Consolidated Turnp. Co. v. Norfolk & O. V. R. Co. 228 U. S. 326, 57 L. ed. 857, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 510; Chappell Chemical & Fertilizer Co. v. Sulphur Mines Co. 172 U. S. 471, 43 L. ed. 519, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 265; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. McDonald, 214 U. S. 193, 53 L. ed. 964, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 546; Columbia Water Power Co. v. Columbia Electric Street R. Light & P. Co. 172 U. S. 475, 43 L. ed. 521, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247; Delaware City, S. & P. S. B. Nav. Co. v. Reybold, 142 U. S. 636, 35 L. ed. 1141, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 290; De Saussure v. Gaillard, 127 U. S. 222, 32 L. ed. 127, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1053; Fowler v. Lamson, 164 U. S. 252, 41 L. ed. 424, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 112; Fisher v. New Orleans, 218 U. S. 439, 54 L. ed. 1099, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57; Hammond v. Johnston, 142 U. S. 73, 35 L. ed. 941, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141; Iowa C. R. Co. v. Iowa, 160 U. S. 389, 40 L. ed. 467, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 344; Jenkins v. Loewenthal, 110 U. S. 222, 28 L. ed. 129, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638; Klinger v. Missouri, 13 Wall. 257, 20 L. ed. 635; Long Island Water Supply Co. v. Brooklyn, 166 U. S. 685, 41 L. ed. 1165, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 718; Miller v. Cornwall R. Co. 168 U. S. 131, 42 L. ed. 409, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 34; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 160 U. S. 556, 40 L. ed. 536, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389; Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Mississippi, 210 U. S. 187, 52 L. ed. 1016, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650; Murdock v. Memphis, 20 Wall. 590, 22 L. ed. 429; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Louisiana Sugar Ref. Co. 125 U. S. 18, 31 L. ed. 607, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 741; California Powder Works v. Davis, 151 U. S. 389, 38 L. ed. 206, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Preston v. Chicago, 226 U. S. 447, 57 L. ed. 293, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 177; Rutland R. Co. v. Central Vermont R. Co. 159 U. S. 630, 40 L. ed. 284, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113; Snell v. Chicago, 152 U. S. 191, 38 L. ed. 408, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 489; Simmerman v. Nebraska, 116 U. S. 54, 29 L. ed. 535, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 333; Tyler v. Cass County, 142 U. S. 288, 35 L. ed. 1016, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 225; Wood v. Chesborough, 228 U. S. 672, 57 L. ed. 1018, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 706; Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co. v. Skinner, 139 U. S. 293, 35 L. ed. 193, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 528.

The validity of Federal grants was not involved or passed on.

Chever v. Horner, 142 U. S. 122, 35 L. ed. 959, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 184; De Lamar's Nevada Gold Min. Co. v. Nesbitt, 177 U. S. 523, 44 L. ed. 872, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715; Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. Bell, 176 U. S. 328, 44 L. ed. 490, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399; Gill v. Oliver, 11 How. 529, 13 L. ed. 799; Little York Gold-Washing & Water Co. v. Keyes, 96 U. S. 199, 24 L. ed. 656; California ex rel. Hastings v. Jackson, 112 U. S. 233, 28 L. ed. 712, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113; McStay v. Friedman, 92 U. S. 723, 23 L. ed. 767; Murray v. Bluebird Min. Co. 45 Fed. 386; Miller v. Swann (Miller v. Anderson) 150 U. S. 132, 37 L. ed. 1028, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 52; Maney v. Porter, 4 How. 55, 11 L. ed. 873; Romie v. Casanova, 91 U. S. 379, 23 L. ed. 374; Theurkauf v. Ireland, 27 Fed. 769; Mace v. Merrill, 110 U. S. 581, 30 L. ed. 503, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 330.

If the canal company has not had due process of law in the state court, then it is difficult to know what that term means.

Bergemann v. Backer, 157 U. S. 655, 39 L. ed. 845, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 727; Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 110, 40 L. ed. 94, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 80; Head v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. 113 U. S. 26, 28 L. ed. 895, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 441; Londoner v. Denver, 210 U. S. 379, 52 L. ed. 1109, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 708; Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162, 36 L. ed. 925, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 54; Standard Oil Co. v. Missouri, 224 U. S. 270, 56 L. ed. 760, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 406, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 936; Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 110, 53 L. ed. 110, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 14; Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. ed. 678; West v. Louisiana, 194 U. S. 261, 48 L. ed. 968, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650.

The supreme court of Louisiana has correctly construed these statutes.

Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 338, 24 L. ed.

Digitized by Google

228; 2 Baudry, Lacantinerie, Du Contrat de Louage, p. 1, No. 1395; Blair. v. Chicago, 201 U. S. 471, 50 L. ed. 830, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Carondelet Canal & Nav. Co. v. Lugger 1st Chevere Tedesco, 37 La. Ann. 102; Carondelet Canal & Nav. Co. v. New Orleans, 38 La. Ann. 309; Carondelet Canal & Nav. Co. v. New Orleans, 44 La. Ann. 396, 10 So. 871; Cleveland v. Cleveland Electric R. Co. 204 U. S. 116, 51 L. ed. 399, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 202; New Orleans v. Carondelet Canal & Nav. Co. 36 La. Ann. 397; Dubuque & P. R. Co. v. Litchfield, 23 How. 66, 16 L. ed. 500; Elmendorf v. Taylor, 10 Wheat. 152, 6 L. ed. 289; Enfield v. Jordan, 119 U. S. 680, 30 L. ed. 523, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 358; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Chicago, 176 U. S. 659, 44 L. ed. 627, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509; Maxwell Land-Grant Case, 121 U. S. 325, 30 L. ed. 949, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1015; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. McCann, 174 U. S. 586, 43 L. ed. 1096, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 755; New Orleans Canal & Nav. Co. v. New Orleans, 12 La. Ann. 365; Orleans Nav. Co. v. New Orleans, 2 Mart. (La.) 10, 214, 1 Mart. (La.) 269; Rowan v. Runnels, 5 How. 139, 12 L. ed. 87; Ridings v. Johnson, 128 U. S. 212, 32 L. ed. 401, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 72; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 57, 38 L. ed. 352, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 548; Speers v. Flack, 34 Mo. 101, 84 Am. Dec. 74; State v. Orleans Nav. Co. 11 Mart. (La.) 107, 7 La. Ann. 679; Stein v. Bienville Water Supply Co. 141 U. S. 80, 35 L. ed. 627, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 892; Tallman v. Coffin, 4 N. Y. 134; Williams v. Eggleston, 170 U. S. 311, 42 L. ed. 1049, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617.

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

The state of Louisiana brought this suit in the civil district court of the parish of Orleans, state of Louisiana, against the Carondelet Canal & Navigation Company of New Orleans (herein called the canal company) for the recovery from the company, through its liquidators, of the Carondelet canal, Bayou St. John, and Old Basin, a waterway used by vessels for the transportation of freight and merchandise, and for its improvements and appurtenant properties.

The suit was dismissed by the civil district court as premature. On appeal to the supreme court of the state, that court reversed the judgment dismissing the suit, and ordered that a judgment be entered against the canal company, in liquidation, ordering the delivery to the state of the canal and waterway in their entirety, as they stood on March 10, 1908, together with all the property and improvements appurtenant thereto, including the roadway or roadways upon the side or sides of the canal.

The claims of the state to a triangular strip of ground hereafter mentioned, or to the proceeds thereof, or to any other property, movable or immovable, not appurtenant to the waterway and roadways, were reserved for further adjudication in the proceedings. And an accounting was ordered of the receipts and disbursements in the management of the property since March 10, 1908, and the case was remanded to the district court for further proceedings on all questions reserved as above stated, and "that the right of the plaintiff to obtain judgment for such [371] amount as may be found due upon defendant's accounting, and to take such further proceedings and obtain such further orders as may be required for the execution of this judgment, be reserved." 129 La. 279, 56 So. 137.

We refer to the opinion of the supreme court for the history of the canal, which, while interesting, is quite long. There is no question of the source and origin of the rights of the canal company; no question of the right of the state to take possession of the canal and its appurtenant properties upon complying with the contract alleged to exist between the state and the company. There is a question as to the extent of the rights of the company under the contract, and for what property the state must make compensation, and the factors in the solution of the question require quite an extended discussion.

We are met, however, at the outset, by a motion to dismiss, on the ground that the judgment is not final.

The judgment disposes of and orders the delivery of practically all of the property sued for: (1) The waterway in its entirety; (2) all the property and improvements appurtenant to it, including the roadway or roadways upon the sides of it. It reserves property not appurtenant and an accounting of certain disbursements. The reservation concerns only a small piece of ground upon which there was a dispute as to whether it was appurtenant to the canal,—a question the court apparently could not determine, as it was a question of fact. All else will be taken from the canal company and delivered to the state. That is, all was decreed that it was the purpose of the suit to have decreed, and which not only constituted its success, but which involved and disposed of the Federal right asserted by the canal company. The judgment, therefore, has a substantial finality. Is it not as well in form?

Cases are cited which, the state contends, require a negative answer to the question. They are distinguishable from that at bar.

Digitized by Google

[372] In Haseltine v. Central Nat. Bank, 183 U. S. 130, 46 L. ed. 117, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 49, the action was against a national bank to recover under § 5198 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3493), for usurious interest alleged to have been charged. There was judgment in favor of the plantiff in the action. It was reversed by the supreme court of the state on the ground that he had neither paid nor tendered the principal sum, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. The case, therefore, was remanded for a new trial in its entirety. It was ruled that the face of the judgment is the test of its finality, and that this court, cannot be called on to inquire whether, when a cause is sent back, the defeated party might or might not make a better case.

This rule was again expressed in Schlosser v. Hemphill, 198 U. S. 173, 49 L. ed. 1000, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654, in a case where a right to amend the pleadings existed and a new case could have been made.

In Missouri & K. Interurban R. Co. v. Olathe, 222 U. S. 185, 56 L. ed. 155, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 46, a demurrer was sustained to the plaintiff's pleadings in the trial court and the supreme court, but the latter court did not direct a dismissal of the suit, but left it stand in the court below. We held that the judgment sought to be reviewed was not one which finally determined the cause, and that we were without jurisdiction.

In Louisiana Nav. Co. v. Oyster Commission, 226 U. S. 99, 57 L. ed. 138, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 78, we repeated the test of finality to be the face of the judgment, and expressed the reason to be that this court cannot be called upon to review an action of the state court piecemeal. The language was appropriate to the condition presented by the case, for the pleading in the case was left open for amendment.

In the case at bar there is distinct and explicit finality, and the further proceedings are directed to apply only to the "questions reserved." And it is to be assumed this was purposely done to give finality to the questions not reserved, so that the decree could be immediately executed [373] upon the property involved requiring it to be delivered into the possession and administration of the state. This disposition, we can easily conceive, the court considered necessary to the rights which the state was adjudged to have, and the remedy commensurate with them. The decree, therefore, had a definiteness which did not exist in the cited cases, the Federal rights asserted by the canal company were injuriously disposed of. The ground of dismissal of the writ of error based on the judgment is not, therefore, sustained.

There are other grounds urged, to wit, that no Federal question is shown, and that, besides, the decision of the court below was rested on a non-Federal ground sufficient to sustain it. A consideration of this involves the issues in the case and their determination.

The suit involves, as we have said, the right to the canal and its appurtenant properties, and the controversy between the parties turns upon the construction of two acts of the legislature of the state, passed, respectively, in 1857 and 1858. Those acts will be referred to hereafter with some particularity. By virtue of those acts the canal company derived its rights and its corporate existence. The petition of the state presents the following propositions: (1) The act of 1857 gave the canal company a corporate existence of twenty-five years from October 17, 1857, with power in the state to take possession of the canal and appurtenant properties. If the state should not exercise such right at such time, then the company was to have existence for a second term of twenty-five years, at which time the canal and its appurtenant properties were to be surrendered to the state without compensation to be paid to the company. (2) By the act of 1858 the charter existence of the company was extended to fifty years, and at the expiration of such period the property was to be surrendered to the state without the necessity of compensation being made [374] therefor. (3) In 1906, in order that the state should be in a position to assume control and take possession of the property, the legislature passed an act creating a board of control of the canal, to be appointed by the governor. This board was appointed and the property demanded. (4) The company refused to comply with the demand on the ground that the state had not complied with certain alleged contract obligations which the canal company claimed under § 4 of the act of 1858, and which gave it greater rights to the property than did the act of 1857, and until such obligations were performed the company would refuse to deliver the property. (5) If such was the effect of the act of 1858, the act was void as being in violation of the constitution of the state; especially of articles 108 and 109, which prohibited the granting of aid by the state to companies and corporations formed for the purpose of making works of public improvement. And further, if the company have the right to demand compensation, it has no right to claim against the state the property and improvements connected with or which belong to the Carondelet canal, the Bayou St. John, and the Old Basin on Toulouse street, the state being sole owner of that part of the property. (6) The New Orleans Terminal Company, in a suit to expropriate a triangular piece of ground upon which stood the office building of the company, was condemned to pay $3,000, which sum was deposited in bank by agreement to await the determination of whether the state or the company should be entitled thereto. (7) The company has collected tolls through its liquidators since the expiration of its charter.

Digitized by Google

The state prayed an accounting of the revenues of the property after the expiration of the charter of the company, and that all the property and improvements connected with and appurtenant thereto, including the $3,000, the proceeds of the triangular piece of ground [375] referred to above, be delivered to the board of control created by the act of 1906, to be administered through the board.

Exceptions were filed to the petition of the state, and having been overruled an answer was filed. We need give only its basic allegations. They present, after denying the allegations of the petition of the state, the following propositions: (1) The state had no interest in the canal except under the contract between the canal company and the state, constituted of the acts of 1857 and 1858. (2) In 1857 the legislature, after anticipating the inability of a company called the New Orleans Canal & Navigation Company to carry out the terms of the purchase of the property under an act passed in 1852, passed the act of 1857, and that under those acts the canal company became possessed of the property. By § 4 of the act of 1858 (hereafter set out) it was provided that the company should have corporate existence during fifty years from the date of the act, after which time it might revert to the state upon due compensation being made according to award by three commissioners. (3) If the act of 1906 can be construed to authorize the board of control to take possession of the property without compensating the company therefor, it violates the contract clause of the Constitution of the United States. (4) The state never claimed any right or property in or to the canal and the improvements respectively made thereon by the Orleans Navigation Company and its successors, and whatever rights the state has are derived solely from the contracts between it and the canal company, as defined in the acts of 1857 and 1858. The state never spent a dollar on the canal, the basin, or the bayou, but the canal company has spent thereon a sum exceeding $750,000.

The state, as we have said, made a motion to dismiss on two grounds, one of which we have decided; the other is [376] that no Federal question is presented by the record, the canal company failing to distinguish, it is contended, between a subsequent act of the legislature impairing the contract, and the decision of the court construing it. The question, then, is whether the act of 1906, appointing the board of control and investing it with powers, was an act which impaired the obligation of the contract; and in the solution of the question we must assume that the act of 1858 constituted a contract between the state and the canal company. The negative of the question is urged by the attorney general in an argument of strength in which he contends the court did not consider or give any effect to the act of 1906, but considered only the act of 1858, and decided that the canal company did not acquire the rights under it which the company contends for. In other words, decided that the act of 1858 gave no rights which the state did not already have, and which it was entitled to possess upon the expiration of the charter of the canal company. There is, as we have said, strength in the contention; but, of course, the fact that the supreme court did not refer to the act of 1906 does not put it aside from consideration. If it was the assertion of legislative power against the contract of the company, and a legislative provision against the obligation of the contract, and was an essential, although unmentioned, element of the decision under review, it is a basis in the Federal question set up. Nor need bad motives be imputed to the legislature. It is not the motive which caused the enactment of the law which is of account, but the effect of the enactment, impairing the rights resting in the contract. And this, we think, was the effect of the act of 1906. It was treated as an important factor in the state's petition in both the charging part and the prayer. The board of control had something else to do besides to wait. It was an agency of invasion, and it was by its especial command that the attorney general made demand upon the company.† [377] And in this the board exer-

†"Messrs. A. J. Davidson, J. H. Elliott, and Hans Widmer, liquidators of the Carondelet Canal & Navigation Company, of New Orleans, Louisiana:

"Dear Sirs:—

"In view of the fact that the time during which the Carondelet Canal & Navigation Company of New Orleans has had the right to enjoy the possession and control of the Carondelet canal and Bayou St. John, together with the Old Basin, with all of the revenue derived therefrom, has expired, and that it becomes the duty of the state of Louisiana, through the board of control for cised the power given it; and to remove the impediments to the exercise of the power, "all laws and parts of laws in conflict with" the act of 1906, which conferred the power, were repealed. The repeal of a law which constitutes a contract is an impairment [378] of its obligation. "It may be laid down as a general principle that whenever a law is in its own nature a contract, and absolute rights have vested under it, a repeal of it cannot devest those rights, or annihilate or impair the title so acquired." 2 Story, Const. § 1391. The provision of the Constitution against the impairment of the obligation of contracts was intended "to prohibit every mode or device having such purpose. The prohibition is universal. It attempted no enumeration of the modes by which contracts might be impaired. It would have been unwise to have made such enumeration, since it might have been defective." Id. § 1386. The precaution was necessary. The prohibition is directed against the exertions of sovereignty which the citizens, unless protected by the organic law, would be impotent to resist, whether boldly declared in an explicit law or disguised in an ambiguous form. This case is an illustration. Here is a property sought to be taken from the canal company, and there can be no doubt that the board of control, through the affirmative and repealing provisions of the act of 1906, was to be the instrument and moving agency. The motion to dismiss must, therefore, be denied, and we are brought to the merits of the controversy—Did the acts of 1857 and 1858 constitute a contract?

Digitized by Google

In the consideration of that question we do not think it is necessary to discuss with any particularity the contributions, respectively, of the state and the canal company and its predecessors to the construction of the canal and its appurtenant properties. The case exhibits from the first conception and commencement of the enterprise by Governor Carondelet through its successive development and extension the interest the state had in its accomplishment and the difficulties which had to be overcome, two corporations going down to insolvency in the undertaking, the state being compelled to resume the [379] powers it had conferred, and make provision for granting them to more efficient instruments. In these circumstances we find the impelling causes of the act of 1857.

A word or two of the act of 1852 becomes pertinent. It provided that in case of a judgment of forfeiture against the Orleans Navigation Company a liquidating commissioner should be appointed who should take possession of the entire property of the company, real and personal, movable and immovable, and, after advertisement, sell the same in block at public auction. The conditions of sale were that the purchasers should "organize themselves into a corporation under the laws of the state for the period of twenty-five years for the purpose of carrying out and effecting all the improvements detailed and described in the reports and plans known as Harrison's reports and plans, including the construction of a new basin at the junction of Canal Carondelet and Bayou St. John, of the depths and dimensions set forth in said reports," and to actually complete them within the term of three years from the date of the charter of the corporation. It was provided that at the end of the term of twenty-five years the state should have the option of granting a renewal of the right of receiving the tolls for a second term of twenty-five years, or of purchasing for itself "the property and the improvements of the company" at the appraised value thereof, and provided further that if the said term the Bayou St. John and Carondelet canal and Old Basin, to take possession of the said Carondelet canal, Bayou St. John, and Old Basin, together with all the property and improvements connected therewith, or in any wise thereto belonging or appertaining, in order that the same may be controlled, managed, and administered by said board, for the use and benefit of the state, and in view of the further fact that, at a meeting of said board of control, held on the 1st day of October, 1908, a resolution was adopted requesting me, as attorney general of the state, to take such action as, in my judgment, would be proper to 'have the state put into possession of the Bayou St. John, Carondelet canal, and Old Basin, and all its properties and rights,' I now hereby make formal demand upon you to deliver into the possession and control of the said board of control of the Bayou St. John and Carondelet canal and Old Basin the said Bayou St. John and Carondelet canal and Old Basin, together with all the properties and improvements connected therewith or in any wise thereto belonging or appertaining. In default of your complying with this formal demand within a reasonable delay, I now notify you that I will institute suit for the purpose of recovering for the state, to be controlled, managed, and operated by the board of control aforesaid, the said Carondelet canal and Bayou St. John and Old Basin, together with all the properties and improvements connected therewith or thereto belonging or appertaining.

---

"Be pleased to let me hear from you at your earliest convenience, and oblige, (Signed) "Walter Guion.

"Yours truly,

"Attorney General."

Digitized by Google

of twenty-five years be granted, the whole property should revert to the state at the end of the second term, without any payment of compensation made to the company. Work and improvements were to be commenced within six months and completed within six years, otherwise the right, title, and interest acquired, together with the improvements that might be made, should vest in and belong to the state. The purchasers organized themselve into a corporation called the New Orleans Canal & Navigation Company.

[380] Then came the act of 1857. It organized the present canal company, making the capital stock of the company $500,000. The company was authorized to take possession of the canal for the purpose of completing the works of improvement undertaken and commenced by the New Orleans Canal & Navigation Company under the provisions of the act of 1852. The canal company was given authority to depart from the plan "of the improvement of said canal and bayou," designated as "Harrison's plan," so far as the plan proposes a basin at the junction of the said canal with the bayou, if the board of directors should determine that such works were not demanded by the interests, safety, or convenience of commerce.

It was provided that in case of the New Orleans Canal & Navigation Company's failure to perform the obligations undertaken by it, suit should be instituted to forfeit its charter, franchises, and privileges and property, including the interest in the Canal Carondelet and Bayou St. John and the works done and effected therein, which, after appraisement, should be sold and payment made therefor in the stock of the new corporation, the canal company. With expressions of detail, it was provided that the new company might take and have all and singular the rights, privileges, franchises, immunities, powers, and authority which had been at any time granted to and possessed and exercised by the Orleans Navigation Company under §§ 9-13 of the act of 1805, and those possessed and exercised under the acts of 1850 and 1852 by the New Orleans Canal & Navigation Company. The new company was to assume all of the debts and obligations imposed on the old one by the act of 1852, except in so far as the provisions of said act were modified or changed in and by the act of 1857.

The canal company was required to complete the works required by the act of 1852 within three years from and after the 17th of October, 1857, subject to the [381] modification provided, and in the case of failure the franchise, rights, privileges, and immunities granted should cease and be forfeited to and become the property of the state.

The canal company was given an existence of twenty-five years from and after the 17th of October, 1857, "provided that the state of Louisiana shall have the right to take possession of said Canal Carondelet and Bayou St. John, and all the property connected therewith, at the expiration of the term above mentioned, should the legislature determine so to do, paying to this corporation the value of said property, to be appraised by five competent persons, as experts, two to be appointed by this corporation and two by the governor, and the four thus appointed shall appoint a fifth; said experts shall be required to take an oath to discharge their duty faithfully. In the event that the state shall not determine to take possession of said property, as herein provided, then this corporation shall be in existence for twenty-five years from and after the expiration of the term in this section mentioned aforesaid, and at the end of such second term of twenty-five years, the said property shall become absolutely the property of the state of Louisiana, and no compensation required to be made to this corporation."

The act of 1858 comes next to be considered. It gives the right to construct layouts, basins, and half moons, for steam and any other water craft on the Bayou St. John, the basin and canal, and to extend them, provided public roads be constructed around them and be kept subject to the ordinance of the city of New Orleans.

The company was given (§ 2) the right to construct a railroad, with single or double track, on either side of the basin, canal, and Bayou St. John from the head of the basin, on Toulouse street, to the lake end, and transport freight and passengers for hire, and employ steam locomotives [382] within such limits of the city as the common council may prescribe.

After five years from the passage of the act, the city was prohibited from draining in the bayou except upon payment of indemnity. And the city is given the right to build bridges over the canal and bayou.

Section 4 is as follows: "That the said company shall enjoy corporate succession during fifty years from this date; after which time it [italics ours] may revert to the state, upon due compensation being made according to award, by three commissioners, one appointed by the governor of the state, one by the company, and the third by any court of record of New Orleans."

By subsequent section the company is given the right to tow vessels; exclusive power to carry out their works in conformity with such plan or plans as it may at any time adopt and deem best calculated to forward the interests of commerce; to impose fines for violation of its rules; to issue bonds and to secure them by hypothecating and mortgaging "all its property, privileges, and immunities whatever," the amount of bonds not to exceed $250,000; and the company shall be exempt from taxation.

Digitized by Google

The controversy centers in § 4 and turns upon the antecedent to the pronoun "it" in the sentence "after which time it may revert to the state."

The natural and grammatical use of a relative pronoun is to put it in close relation with its antecedent, its purpose being to connect the antecedent with a descriptive phrase. In the provision under discussion "it" stands in the place of something that is to revert to the state, and following, therefore, the natural and grammatical use of "it," its antecedent would be the noun "company" (said company). The supreme court of the state, however, considered that there was ambiguity in the relation of "it" and rejected "company" as the antecedent, and observed [383] that it could not relate to any of the things provided for in succeeding sections nor to the "layouts, basins, and half moons" mentioned in § 1, and decided that the antecedent was the railroad authorized to be constructed by the canal company by § 2. The court, after elaborate argument, expressed the view that the company could not revert to the state, and, as it had no property in the canal and its appurtenances, the only thing which could revert to the state was the railroad. "Whether this be the true solution of the problem or not," the court said, "we are unable to find anything else in the act of 1858 than the railroad to which the relative 'it,' as used in § 4, can in any way be made to relate." And it was further said that there being nothing else to which "it" could relate other than the railroad, and that, "having never been built, can afford no basis for . . . [its] demand for compensation and for a continuance of its possession of public property."

We are unable to concur in the learned court's conclusion. We have already pointed out that the first companies organized went down successively in bankruptcy. Neither the rights given them nor the purpose for which they were given averted financial disaster. The same rights and property, in the main contingent upon the same conditions, were conferred upon the canal company, the record shows, by the act of 1857, but they offered no prospect of success, and the company was about to abandon its charter, when the act of 1858 was passed. It was effective, and its effectiveness must have been due to the additive rights which it conferred and the security which it gave them. We have stated its provision and those of the acts which preceded it. Let us repeat them, for in them we shall find the answer to the question whether any property existed in the canal company which could revert to the state, under § 4 of the act of 1858, except the railroad. For the answer we need not go farther back than 1852. [384] In the act of that year the rights and property of the Orleans Navigation Company were conveyed through its liquidators after proper legal proceedings to certain individuals who were to organize themselves into a corporation for the term of twenty-five years, which was to undertake the construction of the work, with an option on the part of the state to grant a renewal of rights for another term of twenty-five years, "or of purchasing for itself the property and improvements of the company at the appraised value thereof." In case of the grant of a second term, at its end "the whole property" was to revert to the state "without any payment or compensation made to said company."

These provisions are a recognition of a property interest in the canal which would be acquired by the corporation that was to be organized. This is put beyond doubt by a subsequent provision. If the corporation did not complete the work in the time the act designated, it was provided that "all right, title, and interest acquired by the purchaser, under the provisions of this act, together with any improvements that may be made, shall vest in and belong to the state."

The corporation was organized, as we have said, and became the New Orleans Canal & Navigation Company. The latter company failing to perform its undertaking, the Carondelet Canal & Navigation Company, plaintiff in error, was, under the act of 1857, organized, and possession of the property was given to it for the purpose and with the rights, powers, and privileges as provided in the act of 1857. There was a provision in that act, as we have seen, as in the act of 1852, for successive corporate terms of twenty-five years. At the end of the first term the state should "have the right to take possession of said Canal Carondelet and Bayou St. John, and all the property and improvements connected therewith, . . . should the legislature determine so to do, upon paying the value [385] thereof," to be appraised in the manner provided. If the state did not elect to purchase the property as provided, the second term of twenty-five years began, at the end of which it was provided that the "said property may still become absolutely the property of the state of Louisiana, and no compensation required to be made" to the canal company.

Digitized by Google

These provisions were idle—barren of everything but mischief and misleading effect—if the contention now made is tenable that the canal company, and necessarily as well its predecessors in the work, could acquire no property because the Bayou St. John was navigable water and the improvements had become appurtenant to it. Under the comprehensiveness of the contention there were no "property and improvements" to appraise or purchase, although the act declared there were both; there was no property to revert to the state, although the act provided for it, and took the precaution of excluding the requirement of paying for it. These circumstantial provisions cannot be misunderstood. They were not a precaution against the assertion of unfounded rights; they were the recognition of rights to be purchased and paid for in one contingency, to revert to the state without "compensation made" in the other contingency.

There was something more, then, than a prospective railroad for "it" to relate to, and we might consider the contention of the state disposed of without the necessity of further discussion. The supreme court recognized that as "the act of 1858 contains no repealing clause, and the act of 1857 is in pari materia, the search for the vagrant antecedent [it was so considered by the court] might be prosecuted in the last-mentioned statute." The court, however, did not locate the antecedent there because of the view that the railroad was the only property that the canal company had which could revert to the state. But, we have seen, there was property provided [386] for in the act of 1857 substantial enough to have value to be appraised and purchased; substantial enough, therefore, to revert to the state. Not, it may be, property to be considered the antecedent looked for, but significantly determining it to be something else than the railroad, which was but a subordinate instrument in the scheme, and which might or might not be built.

The rights and property conveyed and provided for by the act of 1857 were then of substance and value, and yet the enterprise halted. We need not conjecture the cause. It is manifest that the failures of the past warned against the conditions of the act of 1857. A large sum of money was necessary. It was conceived it might be as much as $500,000, and to encourage its investment the act of 1858 was passed. This being its purpose, whatever changes it made in the act of 1857 it must be construed as having been adopted to effect such purpose. A prominent fact in it was that it contemplated a greater expenditure than the capital of the company, and authorized an issue of bonds of not exceeding $250,000. It is true that it was provided that the sum should be employed upon the improvement of the navigation of the canal and the building of the railroad; but, notwithstanding, the authorization of the bonds indicates the conception of the amount necessary for the undertaking.

The act of 1858 made other changes to which we have referred, and it may be assumed that all of them were of some value to the state or to the company or to both. The supreme court assigned a special value to the power given to the company to adopt its own plans instead of being confined to the Harrison report and plans. The record, however, affords no basis of estimating the importance of this choice; besides, by the act of 1857, the company had been authorized to depart from Harrison's plans in certain particulars, and what would have remained of them after exercises of the right we have no means of [387] knowing. But it was certainly not intended by the discretion conferred to give the company power to construct the works in a cheap and inefficient manner, and it is not intimated that the discretion was not wisely conferred or not wisely exercised.

We must look, therefore, for some other motive for the act of 1858, and we think, as said by Mr. Justice Provosty in his dissenting opinion, that it "will be sought for in vain, unless it is to be found in the purpose of prolonging the unconditional life of the company and the doing away with the clause for the reversion of its property without compensation." This conclusion is fortified by the structure of the act and the relation of its parts. We have seen that the natural and grammatical antecedent of "it" in § 4 is "said company," and that it was the intentional antecedent is clear from the French version of the statute, the practice of the state at that time being to publish statutes in French and English.

The use of "elle" in the French version is of strong significance. There is no neuter gender in the French language, every noun is masculine or feminine, and the pronoun which stands for it must agree with it in gender as in English; but in French there is more certain indication of the antecedent. The neuter it relative to a noun is il or elle, and therefore the use of elle in French version points unmistakably to an antecedent of the same gender—to "cette compagnie," and not to "un chemin de fer." Thus, wholly aside from which text is controlling, the context of both versions removes all doubt as to the meaning of the laws.

Digitized by Google

It is true, in a sense, that the company could not revert, for as a legal entity it would expire; but what it represented and possessed could revert, — the result of its investments and energies, the property it had acquired under legislative sanction and the property it had created under like sanction. The company stood for its attributes and property. [388] It may be that it did not own the canal, or the bayou, or the old basin. Indeed, ownership of their soil was disclaimed at the bar. But, we repeat, there was valuable property which the statute contemplated could revert and could be compensated for. Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 37 L. ed. 463, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622.

The attorney general separates in his argument the canal, the bayou, and the old basin from the other properties, and urges that at least as to them the state is entitled to take possession. And he seems to concede that the act of 1858 contemplated payment to the canal company not only for the railroad, but also for the "layouts, basins, and half-moons,"—giving "it" an antecedent of greater scope than did the supreme court. To the contention, however, that a distinction may be made between the properties, it must be answered that neither the act of 1857 nor that of 1858 makes such a distinction. The language of the act of 1858 is comprehensive and provides that all which is represented by "it" "may revert to the state upon due compensation being made according to award." And the same answer must be made to the contention that the company only has a lease of the properties, and that its relation to the state being that of lessee, it, therefore, "has no defense to the state's demand for possession of the property." Whatever the relation created, payment of compensation was a condition precedent of the reversion to the state. It certainly was not intended to remit the canal company to a claim against the state. How would it be enforced against the resistance of the state, the sovereignty or the state giving immunity from suit?

Judgment is reversed and the case remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

[389] GERMAN ALLIANCE INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

IKE LEWIS, as Superintendent of Insurance of the State of Kansas.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 389-434.)

Constitutional law — police power — regulating prices — business affected with public interest.

1. A business may be so far affected with a public interest as to permit legislative regulation of its rates and charges, although no public trust is imposed upon the property, and although the public may not have a legal right to demand and receive service.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, 608-615, 881-889, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Constitutional law — police power — regulating fire insurance rates.

2. The business of fire insurance is so far affected with a public interest as to justify legislative regulation of its rates.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, 608-615, 881-889, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Constitutional law — equal protection of the laws — classification — regulating fire insurance rates.

3. Exempting farmers' mutual insurance companies organized and doing business under the laws of the state, and insuring only farm property, from the legislative scheme for regulation of fire insurance rates, as is done by Kan. Laws 1909, chap. 152, does not render such legislation invalid as to other insurance companies, as denying the equal protection of the laws.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, 343-346, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 120.]

NOTE.—As to what kinds of business are affected with a public interest subjecting them to regulation and control in respect to rates or prices—see note to Ratcliff v. Wichita Union Stockyards Co. 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 834.

On power of legislature to regulate life insurance—see note to People v. Hartford L. Ins. Co. 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 778.

Generally, as to legislative power to fix tolls, rates, or prices—see note to Winchester & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Croxton, 33 L.R.A. 177.

For a discussion of police power, generally—see notes to State v. Marshall, 1 L.R.A. 51; Re Gannon, 5 L.R.A. 359; State v. Schlemmer, 10 L.R.A. 135; Ulman v. Baltimore, 11 L.R.A. 224; Electric Improv. Co. v. San Francisco, 13 L.R.A. 131; and Barbier v. Connolly, 28 L. ed. U. S. 923.

As to validity of class legislation, generally—see notes to State v. Goodwill, 6 L.R.A. 621, and State v. Loomis, 21 L.R.A. 789.

As to constitutional equality of privileges, immunities, and protection, generally—see note to Louisville Safety Vault & T. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 14 L.R.A. 579.

Digitized by Google

Argued December 10, 1913. Decided April 20, 1914.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kansas to review a decree which sustained a demurrer to, and dismissed, the bill in a suit to restrain the enforcement of a state statute regulating fire insurance rates. Affirmed.

See same case below, on demurrer, 189 Fed. 769.

Statement by Mr. Justice McKenna:

Bill in equity to restrain the enforcement of the provisions of an act of the state of Kansas entitled, "An Act Relating to Fire Insurance, and to Provide for the Regulation and Control of Rates of Premium Thereon, and to Prevent Discriminations Therein." Chap. 152 of the Session Laws of 1909.

The grounds of the bill are that the act offends the Constitution of the state and of the United States.

A summary of the requirements of the act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Every fire insurance company shall file with the superintendent of insurance general basis schedules showing the rates on all risks insurable by such company in the state, and all the conditions which affect the rates or the value of the insurance to the assured.

Sec. 2. No change shall be made in the schedules except after ten days' notice to the superintendent, which notice shall state the changes proposed and the time when they [391] shall go into effect. The superintendent may allow changes upon less notice.

Sec. 3. When the superintendent shall determine any rate is excessive or unreasonably high, or not adequate to the safety or soundness of the company, he is authorized to direct the company to publish and file a higher or lower rate, which shall be commensurate with the character of the risk; but in every case the rate shall be reasonable.

Sec. 4. No company shall engage or participate in insurance on property located in the state until the schedules of rates be filed, nor write insurance at a different rate than the rate named in the schedules, or refund or remit in any manner or by any device any portion of the rates; or extend to any insured or other person any privileges, inducements, or concessions except as specified in the schedules.

Sec. 5. Any company making insurance where no rate has been filed shall, within thirty days after entering into such contract, file with the superintendent a schedule of such property, showing the rate and such information as he may require. The schedule shall conform to the general basis of schedules, and shall constitute the permanent rate of the company.

Sec. 6. The schedules shall be open to the inspection of the public, and each local agent shall have and exhibit to the public copies thereof relative to all risks upon which he is authorized to write insurance.

Sec. 7. No company shall, directly or indirectly, by any special rate or by any device, charge or receive from any person a different rate of compensation for insurance than it charges or receives from any other person for like insurance or risks of a like kind and hazard under similar circumstances and conditions in the state. Any company violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination, which is declared unlawful.

Sec. 8. The superintendent may, if he finds that any [392] company, or any officer, agent, or representative thereof, has violated any of the provisions of the act, revoke the license of such offending company, officer, or agent, but such revocation shall not affect liability for the violation of any other section of the act; and provided that any action, decision, or determination of the superintendent under the provisions of the act shall be subject to review by the courts of the state as provided in the act.

Sec. 9. The superintendent shall give notice of any order or regulation made by him under the act, and any company, or any person, city, or municipality which shall be interested, shall have the right within thirty days to bring an action against the superintendent in any district court of the state to have the order or regulation vacated. Issues shall be formed and the controversy tried and determined as in other cases of a civil nature, and the court may set aside one or more or any part of any of the regulations or orders which the court shall find to be unreasonable, unjust, excessive, or inadequate to compensate the company writing insurance thereon for the risk assumed by it, without disturbing others. The order of the superintendent shall not be suspended or enjoined, but the court may permit the complaining company to write insurance at the rates which obtained prior to such order upon the condition that the difference in the rates shall be deposited with the superintendent to be paid to the company or to the holders of policies as, on final determination of the suit, the court may deem just and reasonable. During the pendency of the suit no penalties or forfeitures shall attach or accrue on account of the failure of the complainant to comply with the order sought to be vacated or modified until the final determination of the suit. Proceedings in error may be instituted in the supreme court of the state as in other civil cases, and that court shall examine the record, including the evidence, and render such judgment as shall be just and equitable. No action [393] shall be brought in the United States courts until the remedies provided by the act shall have been exhausted. If any company organized under the laws of the state, or authorized to transact business in a state, shall violate the section, the superintendent may cancel the authority of the company to transact business in the state.

Digitized by Google

Sec. 10. Infractions of the act are declared to be misdemeanors and punishable by a fine not exceeding $100 for each offense, provided that if the conviction be for an unlawful discrimination, the punishment may be by a fine or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding ninety days, or by both fine and imprisonment.

Sec. 11. No person shall be excused from testifying at the trial of any other person on the ground that the testimony may incriminate him, but he shall not be prosecuted on account of any transaction about which he may testify, except for perjury committed in so testifying; "provided, that nothing in this act shall affect farmers' mutual insurance companies, organized and doing business under the laws of this state, and insuring only farm property."

The bill alleged that it was brought by the German Alliance Insurance Company in behalf of itself and all other companies and corporations conducting a similar business and similarly situated, and that Charles W. Barnes was the duly elected superintendent of fire insurance of the state of Kansas. It alleged the jurisdictional amount, and that the controversy was one arising under the Constitution of the United States and of the state of Kansas. It alleged, further, the following facts, which we state in narrative form, omitting those which relate to the Constitution of the state, no assignment of error being based upon them. The appellant, to which we shall refer as complainant, was incorporated under the laws of New York as a fire insurance company in 1879, and immediately entered upon such business, and it has for long periods of [394] time conducted the business of fire insurance in Kansas and other states of the United States.

The business of fire insurance as conducted by it consists of making indemnity contracts against direct loss or damage by fire for a consideration paid, known as a premium; that the rate or premium is the amount charged for each $100 of indemnity. The property which is the subject of insurance is ordinarily known and designated as the risk. Complainant issues indemnity contracts or fire insurance policies covering all kinds and descriptions of improvements upon real estate and the contents thereof, and all kinds and descriptions of personal property, and also farm houses, barns, and granaries and their contents. The rate of premium varies with the kind of property covered, its physical characteristics and situation, its exposure, the presence or absence of fire protection, and many other causes.

The establishment of the basis rate for the premium to be charged is a matter of technical and mathematical deduction from the experience of all fire insurance companies, covering a long period of years, and, territorially, the whole civilized world. To make such deduction it is necessary not only to be in possession of the compiled statistics of fire insurance business, but also to be skilled in the mathematical "theory of probabilities" and in the "law of large numbers" so as to be able to apply with technical accuracy such laws and such data, and that no one not specially trained as an insurance statistician is competent to make such deductions.

A theoretically correct basis rate having thus been arrived at is subject to variation according to the risk, whether in town or country, and, if in the former, according to the class of town or city in which it is situated. The classification of towns and cities depends upon water supply, fire protection, and general physical conditions. In addition to ascertaining the individual risk, if a building [395] the size, material of which, and the manner in which it is constructed, the character of the occupancy, and the character of the occupancy and construction of adjacent buildings, also the character of the contents of the buildings, and the manner in which they are stored, and the precautions used to detect and prevent fires, are necessary to be ascertained.

Complainant and others engaged in the insurance business employ a large number of men skilled as inspectors to report upon individual risks, and it is impossible to fix and adjust a reasonable rate of premium for each and every individual risk without the information so obtained and having the same applied by experts. And such training and information are necessary to determine whether a basic rate or actual rate, as applied to any particular risk, is or is not reasonable, and the respondent is not possessed of the requisite information or special training necessary to qualify for such determination, and any conclusion to which he might come would be a mere guess or arbitrary determination; and the provisions of the act can only be properly administered in any event by the employment by the state of a corps of inspectors and experts specially trained in the business of fixing rates of fire insurance.

Digitized by Google

The complainant has complied with all of the laws of the state, and has received the regular license or authorization of the state, to transact the business of fire insurance therein.

It conducts its business by means of resident agents, of which it has seventy-two directly employed; it has a large and valuable established business to secure which it has expended a large sum of money, and to be compelled to give up its business would result in irreparable damage and injury to it. A large number of the fire insurance policies issued by complainant are written upon farm buildings and their contents, and in writing such business [396] it comes into direct competition with various farmers' mutual insurance companies organized and doing business under the laws of the state, and insuring only farm property.

The business of fire insurance is purely and exclusively a private business, and may be transacted by private persons in their individual capacity, or by unincorporated or incorporated companies; that the amount of indemnity and the premium is a matter of private negotiation and agreement, and the act of the legislature of the state of Kansas attempts to regulate the business in so far as the fixing of the rate of premium is concerned, and in the attempted regulation distinguishes between fire insurance companies and individuals and partnerships, and thereby denies to complainant and other companies the equal protection of the law, contrary to the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and is therefore unconstitutional and void.

Under the laws of Kansas, mutual fire insurance companies may be organized, that such companies having a guaranteed fund of $25,000 may do business on a cash basis and accept premiums in cash, and that such premium measures the total liability of the insured under the policy, either to the company or to its creditors; that by the 11th section of the act under review, it is provided "that nothing in this act shall affect farmers' mutual insurance companies, organized and doing business under the laws of this state, and insuring only farm property." The complainant and many other companies insure farm property and come into direct competition with farmers' mutual companies of the character specified, and the act of the legislature in excepting the latter companies deprives complainant of the equal protection of the laws, and is therefore repugnant to the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States and is unconstitutional and void.

[397] The business of fire insurance is private, with which the state has no right to interfere, and the right to fix by private contract the rate of premium is a property right of value; the business is not a monopoly, either legally or actually; it may not be legally conducted by the national government or by the state of Kansas or other states under their respective Constitutions, and is not a business included within the functions of government. Neither complainant nor others engaged in fire insurance receive or enjoy from the state of Kansas or any government, state or national, any privilege or immunity not in like manner and to like extent received and enjoyed by all other persons, partnerships, and companies, incorporated or unincorporated, respectively, engaged in the conduct of other lines of private business and enterprises. Complainant, therefore, is deprived of one of the incidents of liberty and of its property without due process of law, in violation of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The act distinguishes between fire insurance companies and other insurance companies, individuals and persons, and distinguishes between insurance and other lines of business and thereby offends the equality clause of the Constitution of the United States.

Complainant, under protest, filed the general basis schedules of its rates as required by the act, which were arrived at by the process hereinbefore set out. On the 19th of August, 1909, respondent made a reduction of 12 per cent from the rates as filed and from the rates filed by other companies, with the proviso that it should not apply to residence property, churches, schoolhouses, farm property, or special hazards. The order was to become effective September 1, 1909. And it was further ordered that on and after that date the exception of churches and dwelling houses should be eliminated. Complainant notified the superintendent by letter that it would, under [398] protest, and reserving the rights which it had under the law, comply with the provisions of the order.

The risks included in the order, and not excepted therefrom, comprise all ordinary mercantile risks in the state, and that the reduction of 12 per cent will result in a rate which is much less than the cost of carrying the risks.

Respondent is threatening to make further reductions, and it is proposed to revoke the license of any fire insurance company which may violate the provisions of the act, even though the rates fixed by him may be so low as to be confiscatory, and to inflict upon the officers of the company, including complainant, the penalties prescribed for such violation, and such companies and complainant, unless defendant be restrained by injunction, will be obliged to comply with the requirements of the act to their irreparable damage and injury.

Digitized by Google

Complainant finally alleges that it is not its purpose to attack the orders of respondent on the ground that they were not made in strict compliance with the provisions of the act, but to have the act in its entirety declared to be unconstitutional and void for the reasons alleged, and to have respondent restrained and orders made by him under the provisions of the act enjoined. And such an injunction is prayed.

Respondent filed a demurrer stating that he demurred to so much of the bill as charges the act of the state of Kansas to be repugnant to the Constitution of Kansas and the Constitution of the United States. The demurrer was sustained. Subsequently, upon the bill being amended, a general demurrer was filed, which was also sustained by the court, and the bill dismissed. Prior, however, to this action, it having been suggested that the term of office of Charles W. Barnes as superintendent of insurance had expired, and that Ike Lewis had succeeded to that office and to all of its duties and powers, he was made defendant in the place and stead of Charles W. Barnes.

Messrs. Thomas Bates and John G. Johnson argued the cause, and, with Mr. Seymour Edgerton, filed a brief for appellant:

The business of fire insurance is a private business, and the public has no legal right to demand its service.

American Surety Co. v. Shallenberger, 183 Fed. 636; Hunt v. Simonds, 19 Mo. 583; Orr v. Home Mut. Ins. Co. 12 La. Ann. 255, 68 Am. Dec. 770; Queen Ins. Co. v. State, 86 Tex. 250, 22 L.R.A. 483, 24 S. W. 397.

The state has not the power to fix the rates charged to the public either by corporations or individuals engaged in a private business, and the test as to whether a use is public or not is whether a public trust is imposed upon the property, and whether the public has a legal right to the use which cannot be denied.

Allen v. Jay, 60 Me. 124, 11 Am. Rep. 185; American Live Stock Commission Co. v. Chicago Live Stock Exch. 143 Ill. 210, 18 L.R.A. 190, 36 Am. St. Rep. 385, 32 N. E. 274; Arnsperger v. Crawford, 101 Md. 247, 70 L.R.A. 497, 61 Atl. 413; Avery v. Vermont Electric Co. 75 Vt. 235, 59 L.R.A. 817, 98 Am. St. Rep. 818, 54 Atl. 179; Brown v. Gerald, 100 Me. 351, 70 L.R.A. 472, 109 Am. St. Rep. 526, 61 Atl. 785; Burlington Twp. v. Beasley, 94 U. S. 310, 24 L. ed. 161; Chesapeake & P. Teleph. Co. v. Manning, 186 U. S. 238, 46 L. ed. 1144, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 881; Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455; Collister v. Hayman, 183 N. Y. 250, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1188, 111 Am. St. Rep. 740, 70 N. E. 20, 5 Ann. Cas. 344; Dutton v. Strong, 1 Black, 23, 17 L. ed. 29; Ex parte Quarg, 149 Cal. 79, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 183, 117 Am. St. Rep. 115, 84 Pac. 766, 9 Ann. Cas. 747; Fallsburg Power & Mfg. Co. v. Alexander, 101 Va. 98, 61 L.R.A. 129, 99 Am. St. Rep. 855, 43 S. E. 194; Farmers' Market Co. v. Philadelphia & R. Terminal R. Co. 142 Pa. 580, 21 Atl. 902, 989; Gaylord v. Sanitary Dist. 204 Ill. 576, 63 L.R.A. 582, 98 Am. St. Rep. 235, 68 N. E. 522; Howard Mills Co. v. Schwartz Lumber & Coal Co. 77 Kan. 599, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 356, 95 Pac. 559; Horney v. Nixon, 213 Pa. 20, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1184, 110 Am. St. Rep. 520, 61 Atl. 1088, 5 Ann. Cas. 349, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 496; Hurley v. Eddingfield, 156 Ind. 416, 53 L.R.A. 135, 83 Am. St. Rep. 198, 59 N. E. 1058; Jacobs v. Clearview Water Supply Co. 220 Pa. 388, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 410, 69 Atl. 870; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. West Coast Naval Stores Co. 198 U. S. 483, 49 L. ed. 1135, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 745; Ladd v. Southern Cotton Press & Mfg. Co. 53 Tex. 172; Pearce v. Spalding, 12 Mo. App. 141; People v. Steele, 231 Ill. 340, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 361, 121 Am. St. Rep. 321, 83 N. E. 236; Purcell v. Daly, 19 Abb. N. C. 301; Queen Ins. Co. v. State, 86 Tex. 250, 22 L.R.A. 483, 24 S. W. 397; Ryan v. Louisville & N. Terminal Co. 102 Tenn. 111, 45 L.R.A. 303, 50 S. W. 744; Shasta Power Co. v. Walker, 149 Fed. 568; Sholl v. German Coal Co. 118 Ill. 427, 59 Am. Rep. 379, 10 N. E. 199; New York & C. Grain & Stock Exch. v. Board of Trade, 127 Ill. 153, 2 L.R.A. 411, 19 N. E. 855; State ex rel. Star Pub. Co. v. Associated Press, 159 Mo. 410, 51 L.R.A. 151, 81 Am. St. Rep. 368, 60 S. W. 91; Tyler v. Beacher, 44 Vt. 648, 8 Am. Rep. 398; Ulmer v. Lime Rock R. Co. 98 Me. 579, 66 L.R.A. 387, 57 Atl. 1001; Weems S. B. Co. v. People's S. B. Co. 214 U. S. 345, 53 L. ed. 1024, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 661, 16 Ann. Cas. 1222.

The regulation of rates and charges in a private business is not within the police power of the state.

Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 175, 52 L. ed. 442, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764; Coffeyville Vitrified Brick & Tile Co. v. Perry, 69 Kan. 297, 66 L.R.A. 185, 76 Pac. 848, 1 Ann. Cas. 936; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Dobbins

Digitized by Google

v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 223, 49 L. ed. 169, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18; Ex parte Dickey, 144 Cal. 234, 66 L.R.A. 928, 103 Am. St. Rep. 82, 77 Pac. 924, 1 Ann. Cas. 428; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 535, 28 L. ed. 238, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 111, 292; Ex parte Berger, 193 Mo. 16, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 530, 112 Am. St. Rep. 472, 90 S. W. 759, 5 Ann. Cas. 383; Kreibohm v. Yancey, 164 Mo. 67, 55 S. W. 260; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 49 L. ed. 937, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Muller v. Oregon, 208 U. S. 412, 52 L. ed. 551, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 324, 13 Ann. Cas. 957; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; People v. Steele, 231 Ill. 340, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 361, 121 Am. St. Rep. 361, 83 N. E. 236; People ex rel. Rodgers v. Coler, 166 N. Y. 1, 52 L.R.A. 814, 82 Am. St. Rep. 605, 59 N. E. 716; State ex rel. Star Pub. Co. v. Associated Press, 159 Mo. 410, 51 L.R.A. 151, 81 Am. St. Rep. 368, 60 S. W. 91; Street v. Varney Electrical Supply Co. 160 Ind. 338, 61 L.R.A. 154, 98 Am. St. Rep. 325, 66 N. E. 895; West Branch Lumbermen's Exch. v. McCormick, 1 Pa. Dist. R. 542.

The Kansas rate law of 1909 cannot be sustained as a condition precedent to the right of a foreign corporation to do business in the state.

Ætna F. Ins. Co. v. Jones, 78 S. C. 445, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1147, 125 Am. St. Rep. 818, 59 S. E. 148; American Surety Co. v. Shallenberger, 183 Fed. 636; W. W. Cargill Co. v. Minnesota, 180 U. S. 452, 45 L. ed. 619, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 423; Carroll v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 199 U. S. 401, 50 L. ed. 246, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 66; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Security Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Prewitt, 202 U. S. 246, 50 L. ed. 1013, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 619, 6 Ann. Cas. 317; Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. ed. 451; National Council v. State Council, 203 U. S. 151, 51 L. ed. 132, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 46; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 43 L. ed. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Southern P. Co. v. Denton, 146 U. S. 202, 36 L. ed. 943, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 44; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 28, 44 L. ed. 657, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 518; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 1, 54 L. ed. 355, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 190.

The law cannot be sustained on the ground that it is within the power of the legislature of a state to impose such conditions as it likes upon corporations which derive their right to exist from the state.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. ed. 858, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565; People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 1, 5 L.R.A. 559, 15 Am. St. Rep. 460, 22 N. E. 670; State ex rel. Star Pub. Co. v. Associated Press, 159 Mo. 410, 51 L.R.A. 151, 81 Am. St. Rep. 368, 60 S. W. 91.

The business of fire insurance is not a monopoly.

Herriman v. Menzies, 115 Cal. 16, 56 Am. St. Rep. 81, 46 Pac. 730, 44 Pac. 660; United States v. American Tobacco Co. 164 Fed. 700.

The business of fire insurance is not a proper function of government, nor does it receive special privileges from the state.

Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 115 Ky. 787, 74 S. W. 1050; State ex rel. Monnett v. Guilbert, 56 Ohio St. 575, 38 L.R.A. 519, 60 Am. St. Rep. 756, 47 N. E. 551; Opinion of Justices, 155 Mass. 598, 15 L.R.A. 809, 30 N. E. 1142; Opinion of Justices (Re Municipal Fuel Plants) 182 Mass. 605, 60 L.R.A. 592, 66 N. E. 25.

A general public interest is not equivalent to a public use.

Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 39; Re New York, 135 N. Y. 253, 31 Am. St. Rep. 825, 31 N. E. 1043; Re Niagara Falls & W. R. Co. 108 N. Y. 375, 15 N. E. 429.

The power to regulate rates and charges is simply the power to take private property for public use.

Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 420, 9 L. ed. 773; Cole v. La Grange, 113 U. S. 1, 28 L. ed. 896, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 416; Dodge v. Mission Twp. 54 L.R.A. 242, 46 C. C. A. 661, 107 Fed. 827; 2 Kent, Com. 333; Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 39; Opinion of Justices, 155 Mass. 598, 15 L.R.A. 809, 30 N. E. 1142.

That the decision in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77, was based upon the monopolistic feature of the business conducted by the plaintiffs in error, is clearly shown by the opinion of Chief Justice Waite, and is most strongly emphasized by a consideration of Allmutt v. Inglis, 12 East, 527, 11 Revised Rep. 482, the leading authority cited by the court.

The following cases, American Live Stock Commission Co. v. Chicago Live Stock Exch. 143 Ill. 210, 18 L.R.A. 190, 36 Am. St. Rep. 385, 32 N. E. 274; Ladd v. Southern Cotton Press & Mfg. Co. 53 Tex. 172; Ex parte Dickey, 144 Cal. 234, 66 L.R.A. 928, 103 Am. St. Rep. 82, 77 Pac. 924, 1 Ann. Cas. 428; Queen Ins. Co. v. State, 86 Tex. 250, 22 L.R.A. 483, 24 S. W. 397; State ex rel. Star Pub. Co. v. Associated Press, 159 Mo. 410, 51 L.R.A. 151, 81 Am. St. Rep. 368, 60 S. W. 91; Horney v. Nixon, 213 Pa. 20, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1184, 110 Am. St. Rep. 520, 61 Atl. 1088, 5 Ann. Cas. 349, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 496; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. West Coast Naval Stores Co. 198 U. S. 483, 49 L. ed. 1135, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 745, and in fact all those cases cited under the second paragraph of this brief, clearly show the distinction between the Munn Case and the case at bar, and further show the distinction between a quasi public corporation and a private corporation, or between a corporation or individual whose business is impressed with a public use and an individual or corporation whose business is purely private.

Digitized by Google

In decisions of this court rendered subsequent to that of Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77, and in which the decision and opinion in that case are commented upon, this court has made clear what was there meant by the somewhat indefinite phrases, "a use in which the public has an interest," "a public use of property," and "property affected with a public interest."

Burlington Twp. v. Beasley, 94 U. S. 310, 24 L. ed. 161; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. ed. 244, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 31, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 4; Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. ed. 841, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 56, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1028; Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 247, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468.

Mr. John S. Dawson, Attorney General of Kansas, argued the cause, and, with Messrs. S. N. Hawks, F. S. Jackson, and Charles Blood Smith, filed a brief for appellee:

The act complained of is within the police power of the state.

Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 112, 575, 55 L. ed. 117, 341, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1062, 1065, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186, 299, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487, 489; German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Hale, 219 U. S. 307, 55 L. ed. 229, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 246; Carroll v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 199 U. S. 401, 411, 50 L. ed. 246, 250, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 66; Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 27, 31, 49 L. ed. 643, 650, 651, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 358, 3 Ann. Cas. 765; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 285, 297, 43 L. ed. 702, 706, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 465; Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Clay, 197 Fed. 435; German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Barnes, 189 Fed. 769.

The act is not repugnant to § 1 of the 14th Amendment, as the state has full power of classification.

Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 30 L. ed. 578, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Walston v. Nevin, 128 U. S. 578, 32 L. ed. 544, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192; Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 33 L. ed. 892, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 533; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 35 L. ed. 1035, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 810, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 250; Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 37 L. ed. 599, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 726; Columbus Southern R. Co. v. Wright, 151 U. S. 470, 38 L. ed. 238, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 396; Marchant v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 153 U. S. 380, 38 L. ed. 751, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 894; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 41 L. ed. 611, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 243; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 99, 43 L. ed. 910, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Paul, 173 U. S. 404, 43 L. ed. 746, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 419.

The act is not repugnant to either the due process clause of the 14th Amendment or the equal protection clause.

Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 561, 43 L. ed. 554, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 208, 209, 32 L. ed. 107, 108, 109, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 26, 32 L. ed. 585, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 389, 42 L. ed. 780, 790, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 179, 19 L. ed. 357, 359; Ducat v. Chicago, 10 Wall. 410, 415, 19 L. ed. 972, 973; Liverpool & L. Life & F. Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts (Liverpool & L. Life & F. Ins. Co. v. Oliver) 10 Wall. 566, 573, 19 L. ed. 1029, 1031; Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 43 L. ed. 432, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165; Santa Clara County v. Southern P. R. Co. 118 U. S. 394, 30 L. ed. 118, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1132; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 35 L. ed. 649, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 851; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 10 L. ed. 274; Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 727, 28 L. ed. 1137, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 739; Fire Asso. of Philadelphia v. New York, 119 U. S. 110, 30 L. ed. 342, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 108; Fritts v. Palmer, 132 U. S. 282, 33 L. ed. 317, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 93; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 32, 28 L. ed. 925, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Soon Hing v.

Digitized by Google

Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 28 L. ed. 1145, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730; Kentucky R. Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 322, 29 L. ed. 414, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57; Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 606, 33 L. ed. 1031, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 593; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 35 L. ed. 1035, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 810, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 250; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 562, 43 L. ed. 554, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 571, 38 L. ed. 274, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437.

The validity of the act can be sustained under the police power of the state, as well as under the power of the state to regulate corporations created by it, or permitted by it to do business within its borders.

British America Assur. Co. v. Bradford, 60 Kan. 85, 55 Pac. 335; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 58 Kan. 447, 49 Pac. 602, 3 Am. Neg. Rep. 27; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 155, 41 L. ed. 668, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Atkinson v. Woodmansee, 68 Kan. 74, 64 L.R.A. 325, 74 Pac. 640; Fidelity Mut. Life Asso. v. Mettler, 185 U. S. 322, 46 L. ed. 931, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 662; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 43 L. ed. 909, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 43 L. ed. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 28, 44 L. ed. 657, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 518; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Cravens, 178 U. S. 394, 44 L. ed. 1118, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 962; John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Warren, 181 U. S. 73, 45 L. ed. 755, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 535; Com. v. Vrooman, 164 Pa. 306, 25 L.R.A. 250, 44 Am. St. Rep. 603, 30 Atl. 217; Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co. 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. ed. 148; State v. Missouri P. R. Co. 33 Kan. 176, 5 Pac. 772; Leavenworth v. Leavenworth City & Ft. L. Water Co. 62 Kan. 643, 64 Pac. 66; Wayland v. Middlesex County Comrs. 4 Gray, 500; Lake Koen Nav. Reservoir & Irrig. Co. v. Klein, 63 Kan. 484, 65 Pac. 684; West v. Topeka Sav. Bank, 66 Kan. 524, 63 L.R.A. 137, 97 Am. St. Rep. 385, 72 Pac. 252.

The classification made by the legislature is not unreasonable.

4 Enc. U. S. Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Heath & M. Mfg. Co. v. Worst, 207 U. S. 354, 52 L. ed. 243, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 114; Ozan Lumber Co. v. Union County Nat. Bank, 207 U. S. 256, 52 L. ed. 197, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 89; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 238; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. May, 194 U. S. 267, 48 L. ed. 971, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638.

Is insurance affected by public interest?

State v. Vigilant Ins. Co. 30 Kan. 585, 2 Pac. 840; State v. Phipps, 50 Kan. 619, 18 L.R.A. 657, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 299, 34 Am. St. Rep. 152, 31 Pac. 1097; Blaker v. Hood, 53 Kan. 509, 24 L.R.A. 854, 36 Pac. 1115; Freund, Pol. Power, §§ 400, 401; Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Hardison, 199 Mass. 181, 85 N. E. 407, 199 Mass. 190, 127 Am. St. Rep. 478, 85 N. E. 410; Selected Essays in Anglo-American Legal History, vol. 3, p. 108; Zartman, Yale Readings in Insurance, pp. 9–10; 1 Arnould, Marine Ins. p. 102; 7 Enc. U. S. Sup. Ct. Rep. 78; 4 Enc. U. S. Sup. Ct. Rep. 77; Northwestern Nat. L. Ins. Co. v. Riggs, 203 U. S. 243, 51 L. ed. 168, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 126, 7 Ann. Cas. 1104; Phœnix Assur. Co. v. Fire Department, 117 Ala. 631, 42 L.R.A. 468, 23 So. 843; Exempt Firemen's Benev. Fund v. Roome, 93 N. Y. 313, 45 Am. Rep. 217; Firemen's Benev. Asso. v. Lounsbury, 21 Ill. 511, 74 Am. Dec. 115; Fire Department v. Helfenstein, 16 Wis. 136; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77.

The legislature may fix rates.

Note to Winchester & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Croxton, 33 L.R.A. 177; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Smith, 128 U. S. 174, 32 L. ed. 377, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 47; Hale, De Portibus Maris, 1 Hargraves Law Tracts, 78; Mobile v. Yuille, 3 Ala. 137, 36 Am. Dec. 441; Laurel Fork & S. H. R. Co. v. West Virginia Transp. Co. 25 W. Va. 324; Allnutt v. Inglis, 12 East, 527, 11 Revised Rep. 482; People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 1, 5 L.R.A. 559, 15 Am. St. Rep. 460, 22 N. E. 670, 143 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 247, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468; Re Annon, 50 Hun, 415, 2 N. Y. Supp. 275, affirmed in 26 N. Y. S. R. 554; Spring Valley Waterworks v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347, 38 L. ed. 173, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48; Brass v. North Dakota, 153 U. S. 391, 38 L. ed. 757, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 670, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 857, affirming 2 N. D. 482, 52 N. W. 408.

The right to regulate prices, as well as the right to demand service, are each evidence of a public business, but neither is necessary to make a vocation subject to public control.

Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 247, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468, 117 N. Y. 1, 5 L.R.A. 559, 15 Am. St. Rep. 460, 22 N. E. 670; Freund, Pol. Power, §§ 304, 378; People v. Formosa, 61 Hun, 272, 16 N. Y. Supp. 753, 131 N. Y. 478, 27 Am. St. Rep. 612, 30 N. E. 492; Boswell v. Security Mut. L. Ins. Co. 193 N. Y. 465, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 946, 86 N. E. 532; Winchester & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Croxton, 98 Ky. 739, 33 L.R.A. 182, 34 S. W. 518; West Branch Lumbermen's Exch. v. Fisher, 150 Pa. 475, 24 Atl. 735; Craig v. Kline, 65 Pa. 399, 3 Am. Rep. 636; Henry v. Roberts, 50 Fed. 902; Genesee-Fork Improv. Co. v. Ives, 144 Pa. 114, 13 L.R.A. 427, 22 Atl. 887; Mobile v. Yuille, 3 Ala. 137, 36 Am. Dec. 441; Brass v. North Dakota, 153 U. S. 391, 38 L. ed. 757, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 670, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 857; McCarter v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 74 N. J. Eq. 372, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1194, 135 Am. St. Rep. 708, 73 Atl. 80, 414, 18 Ann. Cas. 1048; Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 62, 27 L. ed. 856, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18.

Digitized by Google

Associations having all the power to fix fire insurance rates have been authorized by the legislatures of numerous states of the Union, and have been generally upheld and recognized by the courts as valid.

New York Fire Underwriters v. Higgins, 130 App. Div. 78, 114 N. Y. Supp. 506; Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Hellner, 159 Ala. 447, 49 So. 297, 17 Ann. Cas. 793; Continental Ins. Co. v. Parkes, 142 Ala. 650, 39 So. 204; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 565, 43 L. ed. 555, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Dobney, 189 U. S. 301, 47 L. ed. 821, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28, 28 L. ed. 923, 924, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357.

That there is a relation between the number of fires, or "fire losses," and insurance rates, does not admit of doubt. If an owner can insure his property more cheaply than he can protect it, he will continue to insure and neglect improvement or protection.

Zartman, Yale Lectures on Fire Insurance, 1909, p. 213.

After stating the case as above, Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

The specific error complained of is the refusal of the district court to hold that the act of the state of Kansas is unconstitutional and void as offending the due process clause of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. To support this charge of error, [405] complainant asserts that the business of fire insurance is a private business, and, therefore, there is no constitutional power in a state to fix the rates and charges for services rendered by it. An exercise of such right, it is contended, is a taking of private property for a public use. The contention is made in various ways, and, excluding possible countervailing contentions, it is urged that the act under review cannot be justified as an exercise of the police power or of the power of the state to admit foreign corporations within its borders upon such terms as it may prescribe, or of any other power possessed by the state; that no state has the power to impose unconstitutional burdens either upon private citizens or private corporations engaged in a private business.

The basic contention is that the business of insurance is a natural right, receiving no privilege from the state, is voluntarily entered into, cannot be compelled, nor can any of its exercises be compelled; that it concerns personal contracts of indemnity against certain contingencies merely. Whether such contracts shall be made at all, it is contended, is a matter of private negotiation and agreement, and necessarily there must be freedom in fixing their terms. And "where the right to demand and receive service does not exist in the public, the correlative right of regulation as to rates and charges does not exist." Many elements, it is urged, determine the extending or rejection of insurance; the hazards are relative and depend upon many circumstances upon which there may be different judgments, and there are personal considerations as well,—"moral hazards," as they are called.

It is not clear to what extent some of these circumstances are urged as affecting the power of regulation in the state. It would seem to be urged that each risk is individual, and no rule of rates can be formed or applied. The bill asserts the contrary. It in effect admits that there can be standards and classification of risks, determined by the [406] law of averages. Indeed, it is a matter of common knowledge that rates are fixed and accommodated to those standards and classifications in prearranged schedules, and, granted the rates may be varied in particular instances, they are sufficiently definite and applicable as a general and practically constant rule. They are the product, it is true, of skill and experience, but such skill and experience a regulating body may have as well as the creating body. Indeed, an allegation in the original bill that the superintendent of insurance could not have the requisite technical and mathematical training to determine whether a basic rate or an actual rate as applied to any particular risk was or was not reasonable, and that his conclusion, therefore, "would be a mere guess or arbitrary determination," was omitted by an amendment. It would indeed be a strained contention that the government could not avail itself, in the exercise of power it might deem wise to exert, of the skill and knowledge possessed by the world. We may put aside, therefore, all merely adventitious considerations and come to the bare and essential one, whether a contract of fire insurance is private, and as such has constitutional immunity from regulation. Or, to state it differently and to express an antithetical proposition, is the business of insurance so far affected with a public interest as to justify legislative regulation of its rates? And we mean a broad and definite public interest. In some degree the public interest is concerned in every transaction between men, the sum of the transactions constituting the activities of life. But there is something more special than this, something of more definite consequence, which makes the public interest that justifies regulatory legislation. We can best explain by examples. The transportation of property—business of common carriers—is obviously of public concern, and its regulation is an accepted governmental power. The transmission of intelligence is of cognate character. There are other [407] utilities which are denominated public, such as the furnishing of water and light, including in the latter gas and electricity. We do not hesitate at their regulation nor of the fixing of the prices which may be charged for their service. The basis of the ready concession of the power of regulation is the public interest. This is not denied, but its application to insurance is so far denied as not to extend to the fixing of rates. It is said, the state has no power to fix the rates charged to the public by either corporations or individuals engaged in a private business, and the "test of whether the use is public or not is whether a public trust is imposed upon the property, and whether the public has a legal right to the use which cannot be denied;" or, as we have said, quoting counsel, "Where the right to demand and receive service does not exist in the public, the correlative right of regulation as to rates and charges does not exist." Cases are cited which, it must be admitted, support the contention. The distinction is artificial. It is, indeed, but the assertion that the cited examples embrace all cases of public interest. The complainant explicitly so contends, urging that the test it applies excludes the idea that there can be a public interest which gives the power of regulation as distinct from a public use, which, necessarily, it is contended, can only apply to property, not to personal contracts. The distinction, we think, has no basis in principle (Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 55 L. ed. 112, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1062, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487), nor has the other contention that the service which cannot be demanded cannot be regulated.

Digitized by Google

Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77, is an instructive example of legislative power exerted in the public interest. The Constitution of Illinois declared all elevators or storehouses, where grain or other property was stored for a compensation, to be public warehouses, and a law was subsequently enacted fixing rates of storage. In other words, that which had been private property had from its [408] uses become, it was declared, of public concern, and the compensation to be charged for its use prescribed. The law was sustained against the contention that it deprived the owners of the warehouses of their property without due process of law. We can only cite the case and state its principle, not review it at any length. The principle was expressed to be, quoting Lord Chief Justice Hale, "that when private property is 'affected with a public interest, it ceases to be juris privati' only" and it becomes "clothed with a public interest when used in a manner to make it of public consequence, and affect the community at large;" and, so using it, the owner "grants to the public an interest in that use, and must submit to be controlled by the public for the common good." And it was said that the application of the principle could not be denied because no precedent could be found for a statute precisely like the one reviewed. It presented a case, the court further said, "for the application of a long-known and well-established principle in social science, and this statute simply extends the law so as to meet this new development of commercial progress." The principle was expressed as to property, and the instance of its application was to property, but it is manifestly broader than that instance. It is the business that is the fundamental thing; property is but its instrument, the means of rendering the service which has become of public interest.

That the case had broader application than the use of property is manifest from the grounds expressed in the dissenting opinion. The basis of the opinion was that the business regulated was private and had "no special privilege connected with it, nor did the law ever extend to it any greater protection than it extended to all other private business." The argument encountered opposing examples, among others, the regulation of the rate of interest on money. The regulation was accounted for on the ground that the act of Parliament permitting the charging [409] of some interest was a relaxation of a prohibition of the common law against charging any interest; but this explanation overlooked the fact that both the common law and the act of Parliament were exercises of government regulation of a strictly private business in the interest of public policy,— a policy which still endures and still dictates regulating laws. Against that conservatism of the mind which puts to question every new act of regulating legislation, and regards the legislation invalid or dangerous until it has become familiar, government—state and national—has pressed on in the general welfare; and our reports are full of cases where in instance after instance the exercise of regulation was resisted and yet sustained against attacks asserted to be justified by the Constitution of the United States. The dread of the moment having passed, no one is now heard to say that rights were restrained or their constitutional guaranties impaired.

Digitized by Google

Munn v. Illinois was approved in many state decisions, but it was brought to the review of this court in Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 247, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468, and its doctrine, after elaborate consideration, reaffirmed, and against the same arguments which are now urged against the Kansas statute. Nowhere have these arguments been, or could be, advanced with greater strength and felicity of expression than in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Brewer. Every consideration was adduced, based on the private character of the business regulated, and, for that reason, its constitutional immunity from regulation, with all the power of argument and illustration of which that great judge was a master. The considerations urged did not prevail. Against them the court opposed the everexisting police power in government and its necessary exercise for the public good, and declared its entire accommodation to the limitations of the Constitution. The court was not deterred by the charge (repeated in the case at bar) that its decision had the sweeping and dangerous comprehension of subjecting to [410] legislative regulation all of the businesses and affairs of life and the prices of all commodities. Whether we may apprehend such result by extending the principle of the cases to fire insurance we shall presently consider.

In Brass v. North Dakota, 153 U. S. 391, 38 L. ed. 757, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 670, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 857; Munn v. Illinois and Budd v. New York were affirmed. A law of the state of North Dakota was sustained which made all buildings, elevators, and warehouses used for the handling of grain for a profit public warehouses, and fixed a storage rate. The case is important. It extended the principle of the other two cases and denuded it of the limiting element which was supposed to beset it,—that to justify regulation of a business the business must have a monopolistic character. That distinction was pressed and answered. It was argued, the court said. "that the statutes of Illinois and New York [passed on in the Munn and Budd Cases] are intended to operate in great trade centers, where, on account of the business being localized in the hands of a few persons in close proximity to each other, great opportunities for combinations to raise and control elevating and storage charges are afforded, while the wide extent of the state of North Dakota and the small population of its country towns and villages are said to present no such opportunities." And it was also urged that the method of carrying on business in North Dakota and the Eastern cities was different, that the elevators in the latter were essentially means of transporting grain from the lakes to the railroads, and those who owned them could, if uncontrolled by law, extort such charges as they pleased, and stress was laid upon the expression in the other cases which represented the business as a practical monopoly. A contrast was made between those conditions and those which existed in an agricultural state where land was cheap and limitless in quantity. It was replied that this difference in conditions was "for those who make, not for those who interpret, the laws." And considering [411] the expressions in the other cases which, it was said, went rather to the expediency of the laws than to their validity, yet, it was further said, the expressions had their value because the "obvious aim of the reasoning that prevailed was to show that the subject-matter of these enactments fell within the legitimate sphere of legislative power, and that so far as the laws and Constitution of the United States were concerned, the legislation in question deprived no person of his property without due process of law."

The cases need no explanatory or fortifying comment. They demonstrate that a business, by circumstances and its nature, may rise from private to be of public concern, and be subject, in consequence, to governmental regulation. And they demonstrate, to apply the language of Judge Andrews in the Budd Case (117 N. Y. 27, 5 L.R.A. 559, 15 Am. St. Rep. 460, 22 N. E. 670), that the attempts made to place the right of public regulation in the cases in which it has been exerted, and of which we have given examples, upon the ground of special privilege conferred by the public on those affected, cannot be supported. "The underlying principle is that business of certain kinds hold such a peculiar relation to the public interest that there is superinduced upon it the right of public regulation." Is the business of insurance within the principle? It would be a bold thing to say that the principle is fixed, inelastic, in the precedents of the past, and cannot be applied though modern economic conditions may make necessary or beneficial its application. In other words, to say that government possessed at one time a greater power to recognize the public interest in a business and its regulation to promote the general welfare than government possesses to-day. We proceed, then, to consider whether the business of insurance is within the principle.

Digitized by Google

A contract for fire insurance is one for indemnity against loss, and is personal. The admission, however, does not [412] take us far in the solution of the question presented. Its personal character certainly does not of itself preclude regulation, for there are many examples of government regulation of personal contracts, and in the statutes of every state in the Union superintendence and control over the business of insurance are exercised, varying in details and extent. We need not particularize in detail. We need only say that there was quite early (in Massachusetts, 1837, New York, 1853) state provision for what is known as the unearned premium fund or reserve; then came the limitation of dividends, the publishing of accounts, valued policies, standards of policies, prescribing investment, requiring deposits in money or bonds, confining the business to corporations, preventing discrimination in rates, limitation of risks, and other regulations equally restrictive. In other words, the state has stepped in and imposed conditions upon the companies, restraining the absolute liberty which businesses strictly private are permitted to exercise.

Those regulations exhibit it to be the conception of the lawmaking bodies of the country without exception that the business of insurance so far affects the public welfare as to invoke and require governmental regulation. A conception so general cannot be without cause. The universal sense of a people cannot be accidental; its persistence saves it from the charge of unconsidered impulse, and its estimate of insurance certainly has substantial basis. Accidental fires are inevitable and the extent of loss very great. The effect of insurance—indeed, it has been said to be its fundamental object—is to distribute the loss over as wide an area as possible. In other words, the loss is spread over the country, the disaster to an individual is shared by many, the disaster to a community shared by other communities; great catastrophes are thereby lessened, and, it may be, repaired. In assimilation of insurance to a tax, the companies have been said to be [413] the mere machinery by which the inevitable losses by fire are distributed so as to fall as lightly as possible on the public at large, the body of the insured, not the companies, paying the tax. Their efficiency, therefore, and solvency, are of great concern. The other objects, direct and indirect, of insurance, we need not mention. Indeed, it may be enough to say, without stating other effects of insurance, that a large part of the country's wealth, subject to uncertainty of loss through fire, is protected by insurance. This demonstrates the interest of the public in it, and we need not dispute with the economists that this is the result of the "substitution of certain for uncertain loss," or the diffusion of positive loss over a large group of persons, as we have already said to be certainly one of its effects. We can see, therefore, how it has come to be considered a matter of public concern to regulate it, and, governmental insurance has its advocates and even examples. Contracts of insurance, therefore, have greater public consequence than contracts between individuals to do or not to do a particular thing whose effect stops with the individuals. We may say in passing that when the effect goes beyond that, there are many examples of regulation. Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Griffith v. Connecticut, 218 U. S. 563, 54 L. ed. 1151, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132; Muller v. Oregon, 208 U. S. 412, 52 L. ed. 551, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 324, 13 Ann. Cas. 957; Mutual Loan Co. v. Martell, 222 U. S. 225, 56 L. ed. 175, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 74, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 529; Schmidinger v. Chicago, 226 U. S. 578, 57 L. ed. 364, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 182; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 549, 55 L. ed. 328, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 259; Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 55 L. ed. 112, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1062, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487.

Complainant feels the necessity of accounting for the regulatory state legislation and refers it to the exertion of the police power; but, while expressing the power in the broad language of the cases, seeks to restrict its application. Counsel states that this power may be exerted to "pass laws whose purpose is the health, safety, morals, and the general welfare of the people." The admission is very comprehensive. What makes for the general welfare is [414] necessarily in the first instance a matter of legislative judgment, and a judicial review of such judgment is limited. "The scope of judicial inquiry in deciding the question of power is not to be confused with the scope of legislative considerations in dealing with the matter of policy. Whether the enactment is wise or unwise, whether it is based on sound economic theory, whether it is the best means to achieve the desired result, whether, in short, the legislative discretion within its prescribed limits should be exercised in a particular manner, are matters for the judgment of the legislature, and the earnest conflict of serious opinion does not suffice to bring them within the range of judicial cognizance." Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 540, 569, 55 L. ed. 328, 339, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 259.

Digitized by Google

The restrictions upon the legislative power which complainant urges we have discussed, or rather, the considerations which take, it is contended, the business of insurance outside of the sphere of the power. To the contention that the business is private we have opposed the conception of the public interest. We have shown that the business of insurance has very definite characteristics, with a reach of influence and consequence beyond and different from that of the ordinary businesses of the commercial world, to pursue which a greater liberty may be asserted. The transactions of the latter are independent and individual, terminating in their effect with the instances. The contracts of insurance may be said to be interdependent. They cannot be regarded singly, or isolatedly, and the effect of their relation is to create a fund of assurance and credit, the companies becoming the depositories of the money of the insured, possessing great power thereby, and charged with great responsibility. How necessary their solvency is, is manifest. On the other hand, to the insured, insurance is an asset, a basis of credit. It is practically a necessity to business activity and enterprise. It is, therefore, essentially different from ordinary commercial [415] transactions, and, as we have seen, according to the sense of the world from the earliest times,—certainly the sense of the modern world,—is of the greatest public concern. It is therefore within the principle we have announced.

But it is said that the reasoning of the opinion has the broad reach of subjecting to regulation every act of human endeavor and the price of every article of human use. We might, without much concern, leave our discussion to take care of itself against such misunderstanding or deductions. The principle we apply is definite and old, and has, as we have pointed out, illustrating examples. And both by the expression of the principle and the citation of the examples we have tried to confine our decision to the regulation of the business of insurance, it having become "clothed with a public interest," and therefore subject "to be controlled by the public for the common good."

If there may be controversy as to the business having such character, there can be no controversy as to what follows from such character if it be established. It is idle, therefore, to debate whether the liberty of contract guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States is more intimately involved in price regulation than in the other forms of regulation as to the validity of which there is no dispute. The order of their enactment certainly cannot be considered an element in their legality. It would be very rudimentary to say that measures of government are determined by circumstances, by the presence or imminence of conditions, and of the legislative judgment of the means or the policy of removing or preventing them. The power to regulate interstate commerce existed for a century before the interstate commerce act was passed, and the Commission constituted by it was not given authority to fix rates until some years afterwards. Of the agencies which those measures were enacted to [416] regulate at the time of the creation of the power, there was no prophecy or conception. Nor was regulation immediate upon their existence. It was exerted only when the size, number, and influence of those agencies had so increased and developed as to seem to make it imperative. Other illustrations readily occur which repel the intimation that the inactivity of a power, however prolonged, militates against its legality when it is exercised. United States ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Delaware & H. Co. 213 U. S. 366, 53 L. ed. 836, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 527. It is oftener the existence of necessity rather than the prescience of it which dictates legislation. And so with the regulations of the business of insurance. They have proceeded step by step, differing in different jurisdictions. If we are brought to a comparison of them in relation to the power of government, how can it be said that fixing the price of insurance is beyond that power and the other instances of regulation are not? How can it be said that the right to engage in the business is a natural one when it can be denied to individuals and permitted to corporations? How can it be said to have the privilege of a private business when its dividends are restricted, its investments controlled, the form and extent of its contracts prescribed, discriminations in its rates denied, and a limitation on its risks imposed? Are not such regulations restraints upon the exercise of the personal right— asserted to be fundamental—of dealing with property freely, or engaging in what contracts one may choose, and with whom and upon what terms one may choose?

We may venture to observe that the price of insurance is not fixed over the counters of the companies by what Adam Smith calls the higgling of the market, but formed in the councils of the underwriters, promulgated in schedules of practically controlling constancy which the applicant for insurance is powerless to oppose, and which, therefore, has led to the assertion that the business of insurance is of monopolistic character and that "it is illusory [417] to speak of a liberty of contract." It is in the alternative presented of accepting the rates of the companies or refraining from insurance, business necessity impelling if not compelling it, that we may discover the inducement of the Kansas statute; and the problem presented is whether the legislature could regard it of as much moment to the public that they who seek insurance should no more be constrained by arbitrary terms than they who seek transportation by railroads, steam, or street, or by coaches whose itinerary may be only a few city blocks, or who seek the use of grain elevators, or to be secured in a night's accommodation at a wayside inn, or in the weight of a 5 cent loaf of bread. We do not say this to belittle such rights or to exaggerate the effect of insurance, but to exhibit the principle which exists in all and brings all under the same governmental power.

Digitized by Google

We have summarized the provisions of the Kansas statute, and it will be observed from them that they attempt to systematize the control of insurance. The statute seeks to secure rates which shall be reasonable both to the insurer and the insured, and as a means to this end it prescribes equality of charges, forbids initial discrimination or subsequently by the refund of a portion of the rates, or the extension to the insured of any privilege; to this end it requires publicity in the basic schedules and of all of the conditions which affect the rates or the value of the insurance to the insured, and also adherence to the rates as published. Whether the requirements are necessary to the purpose, or—to confine ourselves to that which is under review—whether rate regulation is necessary to the purpose, is a matter for legislative judgment, not judicial. Our function is only to determine the existence of power.

The bill attacks the statute of Kansas as discriminating against complainant because the statute excludes from its provisions farmers' mutual insurance companies, organized [418] and doing business under the laws of the state and insuring only farm property. The charge is not discussed in the elaborate brief of counsel, nor does it seem to have been pressed in the lower court; it is, however, covered by the assignments of error.

The provision of the statute is, "That nothing in this act shall affect farmers' mutual insurance companies, organized and doing business under the laws of this state, and insuring only farm property." The distinction is therefore between co-operative insurance companies insuring a special kind of property and all other insurance companies. It is only with that distinction that we are now concerned. There are special provisions in the statutes of Kansas for the organization of co-operative companies, and if the statute under review discriminates between them the German Alliance Company cannot avail itself of the discrimination. A citation of cases is not necessary, nor for the general principle that a discrimination is valid if not arbitrary, and arbitrary in the legislative sense, that is, outside of that wide discretion which a legislature may exercise. A legislative classification may rest on narrow distinctions. Legislation is addressed to evils as they may appear, and even degrees of evil may determine its exercise. Ozan Lumber Co. v. Union County Nat. Bank, 202 U. S. 623, 50 L. ed. 1176, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 768. There are certainly differences between stock companies, such as complainant is, and the mutual companies described in the bill, and a recognition of the differences we cannot say is outside of the constitutional power of the legislature. Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 43 L. ed. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281.

Decree affirmed.

Mr. Justice Lurton was not present when this case was argued, and took no part in its decision.

Mr. Justice Lamar, dissenting:

I dissent from the decision and the reasoning upon which it is based. The case does not deal with a statute affecting [419] the safety or morals of the public. It presents no question of monopoly in a prime necessity of life, but relates solely to the power of the state to fix the price of a strictly personal contract. The court holds that fire insurance, though personal, is affected with a public interest, and therefore that the business may not only be regulated, but that the premium or price to be paid to the insurer for entering into that personal contract can be fixed by law.

The fixing of the price for the use of private property is as much a taking as though the fee itself had been condemned for a lump sum; that taking, whether by fixing rates for the use or by paying a lump sum for the fee, has always heretofore been thought to be permissible only when it was for a public use. But the court in this case holds that there is no distinction between the power to take for public use and the power to regulate the exercise of private rights for the public good. That is the fundamental proposition on which the case must stand, and the decision must therefore be considered in the light of that ruling and of the results which must necessarily flow from the future application of that principle. For if the power to regulate, in the interest of the public, comprehends what is intended in the power to take property for public use, it must inevitably follow that the price to be paid for any service or the use of any property can be regulated by the general assembly. This is so because the power of regulation is all-pervading, as witness the statute of frauds, the recording acts, weight and measure laws, pure food laws, hours of service laws, and innumerable other enactments of that class. And if this power be as extensive as is now, for the first time, decided, then the citizen holds his property and his individual right of contract and of labor under legislative favor rather than under constitutional guaranty. The principle is applied here to the case of insurance; but the nature of that business [420] and the intangible character of its contracts are such as to indicate the farreaching effect of the principle announced, and warrants a statement of some of the grounds of dissent.

Digitized by Google

Insurance is not production; nor manufacture; nor transportation; nor merchandise. And this court in New York L. Ins. Co. v. Deer Lodge County at the present term [231 U. S. 495, ante, 332, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 167] reaffirmed its previous rulings that "insurance is not commerce," "not an instrumentality of commerce," "not a transaction of commerce," "but simply contracts of indemnity against loss by fire." Such a contract is personal, and in the state whose statute is under consideration, insurance companies are classed among those "strictly private." Leavenworth County v. Miller, 7 Kan. 520, 12 Am. Rep. 425. The fact that insurance is a strictly private and a personal contract of indemnity puts it on the extreme outside limit, and removes it as far as any business can be from those that are in their nature public. So that if the price of a private and personal contract of indemnity can be regulated,—if the price of a chose in action can be fixed,—then the price of everything within the circle of business transactions can be regulated. Considering, therefore, the nature of the subject treated and the reasoning on which the court's opinion is based, it is evident that the decision is not a mere entering wedge, but reaches the end from the beginning, and announces a principle which points inevitably to the conclusion that the price of every article sold and the price of every service offered can be regulated by statute.

And such laws are not without English precedent. For while no statute ever before attempted to fix the price of a contract of indemnity,† yet under a Parliament that sat as a perpetual constitutional convention, with power [421] to pass bills of attainder to take property for private purposes, and to take it without due process of law, many statutes approaching that now under review were adopted and enforced. Acts were passed by Parliament fixing the price of many commodities that were convenient or useful. These laws did not stop at fixing the price of property, but, like the present act, they fixed the price of private contracts, and by statute prescribed the rate of wages, and made it unlawful for the employee to receive or for the employer to give more than the wage fixed by law. It is needless to say that these laws were felt to be an infringement upon the rights of men; that they were bitterly resisted by buyer and seller, by employer and employee, and were a source of perpetual irritation often leading to violence. But the fact that the English Parliament had the arbitrary power to pass such statutes made them valid in law, though they were in violation of the inherent rights of individual. In time, the great injustice in this was so far recognized that these laws, fixing the price of strictly private contracts, seem to have been repealed, and Lord Ellenborough, while enforcing, as proper, a rate for public wharves, was able to say, in Allnutt v. Inglis, 12 East, 535, "that the general principle is favored that every man may fix whatever price he pleases for his own property or for the use of it." But what was a favor in England, that might at any time be withdrawn, was in this country made a constitutional right that could not be withdrawn. For although the practice of fixing prices may have prevailed in some of the colonies "up to the time of independence," yet, as Judge Cooley says, since independence "it has been commonly supposed that a general power in the state to regulate prices was inconsistent with constitutional liberty." Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. 807; Stickney, State Control of Trade, p. 3, and the abstract of English price-fixing statutes, pp. 9 et seq. That common supposition is rightly founded on the fact [422] that the Constitution recognizes the liberty to contract and right of private property. They include not only the right to make contracts with which to acquire property, but the right to fix the price of its use while it is held, and the further †The statute fixing the premium rates on surety bonds was held to be void in American Surety Co. v. Shallenberger, 183 Fed. 636.

Digitized by Google

right to fix the price if it is to be sold. To deprive any person of either is to take property, since there can be no liberty of contract and true private ownership if the price of its use or its sale is fixed by law. That right is an attribute of ownership. State Freight Tax Case, 15 Wall. 278, top, 21 L. ed. 162.

But it may be said that, though insurance is a contract of indemnity, and personal, its personal character has not been thought to preclude the many regulatory measures adopted and sustained during the past hundred years.

This is most freely conceded. But it is equally true that the failure for more than one hundred years to attempt to fix the rates of insurance is indubitable evidence of the general public and legislative conception that the business of insurance did not belong to the class whose rates could be fixed. That settled usage is not an accident. For rate-making is no new thing, and neither is insurance. Its use in protecting the owner of property against loss; its value as collateral in securing loans; its method of averages and distributing the risk between many persons widely separated, and all contributing small premiums in return for the promise of a large indemnity, has been known for centuries. All these considerations were recently pressed upon the court in an effort to secure a ruling that insurance was commerce. In refusing to accede to the sufficiency of the argument, the court, in the Deer Lodge Case, pointed out that the size of the business of insurance did not change the inherent nature of the business itself, saying that "the number of transactions do not give the business any other character than magnitude."

The character of insurance, therefore, as a private and personal contract of indemnity, has not been changed by [423] its magnitude or by the fact that more policies and for greater amounts are now written than in the centuries during which no effort has ever before been made to fix their rates. It is, however, undoubtedly true that during all of that period regulatory statutes were, from time to time, adopted to protect the public against conditions and practices which were subject to regulation. The public had no means of knowing whether these corporations were solvent or not, and statutes were passed to require a publication of the financial condition. The policies were long and complicated, with exceptions and qualifications and provisos. They were often unread by the policy holder and sometimes not understood when read. Statutes were accordingly passed providing for a standard form of policy in order to protect the assured against his inexperience, to prevent hard bargains, and to avoid vexatious litigation; and as similar evils appear they may be dealt with by regulatory or prohibitory legislation just as statutes were passed, and can still be passed to punish combinations, pooling arrangements, and all those practices which amount to unfair competition.

But these and those referred to in McCarter v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 74 N. J. Eq. 372, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1194, 135 Am. St. Rep. 708, 73 Atl. 80, 414, 18 Ann. Cas. 1048, furnish instances of the exercise of this power to regulate which can be exerted against any person, trade, or business, no matter great or small. This power to regulate is so much oftener exerted against the large business, because the evils are then more apparent, that the size of the business and the number of persons interested is sometimes referred to as indicating that the business is affected with a public interest. But there is no such limitation. For the power to regulate is the essential power of government which can be exerted against the whole body of the public or the smallest business. And if, as seems to be implied, the fact that a business may be regulated is to be the test of the power to fix rates, it would follow, since all can be [424] regulated, the price charged by all can be regulated. Or if great size is the test, if the number of customers is the test, if the scope of the business throughout the nation is the test, if the contributions of the many to the value of the business is the test,—or if it takes a combination of all to meet the condition,—then every business with great capital and many customers distributed throughout the country, and making a large business possible, must be treated as affected with a public interest, and the price of the goods on its shelves can be fixed by law. Then could the price of newspapers, magazines, and the like be fixed, because certainly nothing is more affected with a public interest, nothing is so dependent on the public, nothing reaches so many persons, and so profoundly affects public thought and public business. Such a business is, indeed, affected with a public interest,—justifying regulation (Lewis Pub. Co. v. Morgan, 229 U. S. 288, 57 L. ed. 1190, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 867), but not the fixing of the price of the paper or periodical or the rates of advertising. For great and pervasive as is the power to regulate, it cannot override the constitutional principle that private property cannot be taken for private purposes. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 164 U. S. 403, 41 L. ed. 489, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 130. That limitation on the power of government over the individual and his property cannot be avoided by calling an unlawful taking a reasonable regulation. Indeed, the protection of property is an incident of the more fundamental and important right of liberty guaranteed by the Constitution, and which entitled the citizen freely to engage in any honest calling, and to make contracts as buyer or seller, as employer or employee, in order to support himself and family.

Digitized by Google

It said, however, that the validity of rates statutes has often been recognized, notably in the Munn Case (94 U. S. 126, 24 L. ed. 84), where a statute was sustained which regulated the price to be charged for storing grain in elevators.

The Munn Case is a landmark in the law. It is accepted [425] as an authoritative and accurate statement of the principle on which the right to fix rates is based. But the statute there under review did not undertake to fix the price of a personal contract, but to fix the price for the use of property, once private, but then public. The reasoning of the court clearly shows that in order to regulate rates, two things must concur—(1) the business must be affected with a public interest; and (2) the property employed in such business must be devoted to a public use. The basic principle of the decision was the oft-quoted saying of Lord Hale that "when private property is 'affected with a public interest, it ceases to be juris privati only.'" The decision in the Munn Case was but an application of that terse statement, and was applied in a case where the elevators had been devoted to a public use. This will distinctly appear from the statement by the court of the question involved and decided. For after reviewing and applying Lord Hale's pithy saying, and reviewing the other authorities, the court said (italics ours):

"Enough has already been said to show that when private property is devoted to a public use it is subject to public regulation. It remains only to ascertain whether the warehouses of these plaintiffs in error and the business which is carried on there come within the operation of this principle."

Not only does the Munn Case show that the right to fix prices depends on the concurrence of public interest and the employment of property devoted to a public use, but, with the exception of the Louisiana Bread Case, Guillotte v. New Orleans, 12 La. Ann. 432, it is believed that every American rate statute since the requirement that property should not be taken without due process of law related to a business which was public in its character and employed visible and tangible property which had been devoted to a public use.

The list of rate-regulated occupations is not too long to be here given. It includes canals, waterways, and [426] booms; bridges and ferries; wharves, docks, elevators, and stockyards; telegraph, telephone, electric, gas, and oil lines; turnpikes, railroads, and the various forms of common carriers, including express and cabs. To this should be added the case of the innkeeper (as to which no American case has been found where the constitutional question as to the right to fix his rates has been considered), the confessedly close case of the irrigation ditches for distributing water (San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Jasper, 189 U. S. 439, 47 L. ed. 892, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 571), and the toll mill acts. This, of course, does not include the case of condemnation for governmental purposes or for roads and ways where no question of rates is involved. There may be other instances not found, but it is believed that the foregoing numeration exhausts the list of what has heretofore been treated as a public business justifying the exercise of the price-fixing power against persons or corporations.

It is to be noted that in each instance the power to regulate rates is exercised against a business which in every case used tangible property devoted to a public use. Some of them had a monopoly (Spring Valley Waterworks v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 354, 28 L. ed. 176, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48). Some of them had franchises. Most of them used public ways or employed property which they had acquired by virtue of the power of eminent domain. They were therefore subject to the correlative obligation to have the use, of what had been thus taken by law, fixed by law. And as further pointing out the characteristics of the public use justifying the fixing of prices, it will be noted that, with the exception of toll mills (which, however, do employ property devoted to a public use), they all have direct relation to the business or facilities of transportation or distribution,—to transportation by carriers of passengers, goods, or intelligence by vehicle or wire; to distribution of water, gas, or electricity through ditch, pipe, or wire; to wharfage, storage, or accommodation of property before the journey begins, when it ends, or along the way.

[427] When thus enumerated, they appear to be grouped around the common carrier as the typical public business, and all employing in some way property devoted to a public use.

It will be seen, too, that the size of the business is unimportant, for the fares of a cabman, employing a broken-down horse and a dilapidated vehicle, can be fixed by law as well as the rates of a railroad with millions of capital and thousands of cars transporting persons and property across the continent.

Digitized by Google

The fact that rate statutes, enacted and sustained since the adoption of constitutional government in this country, all had some reference to transportation or distribution, is a practical illustration of the accepted meaning of "public use" when that phrase was first employed in American Constitutions, and when turnpikes and carriers, wharfingers and ferrymen, had rates, tolls, and fares fixed by law. No change was made in the meaning of the words or in the principle involved when it opened to take in new forms and facilities of transportation, whether by vehicle, pipe, or wire, and new forms of storage, whether on the wharf or in the grain elevator.

But it is said that business is the fundamental thing, with the property but an instrument, and that there is no basis for the distinction between a public interest and a public use. But there is a distinction between a public interest—justifying regulation—and a public use—justifying price fixing. "Public interest and public use are not synonymous." Re Niagara Falls & W. R. Co. 108 N. Y. 385, 15 N. E. 429. And since the case here involves the validity of a Kansas statute, it is well to note that the supreme court of that state in Howard Mills Co. v. Schwartz Lumber & Coal Co. 77 Kan. 599, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 356, 95 Pac. 559, recognizes that there is a difference, and adjudges accordingly. It there cited numerous decisions from other states, and in defining a public use made the following quotation from the opinion of the supreme court of Maine:

[428] "'Property is devoted to a public use when, and only when, . . . all the public has a right to demand and share in' [it] . . . In a broad sense it is the right in the public to an actual use, and not to an incidental benefit."

The effect of the difference between public use and public interest appears from the application; for the supreme court of Kansas, on the authority of this and numerous other cases, held that a steam flour mill was not such a public use as would authorize its owners to exercise the power of eminent domain, though it was a useful and important business instrumentality which contributed to the growth and development of the locality where the [mills] are situated. This may also be said, however, of every legitimate business. To a limited extent every honest industry adds to the general sum of prosperity and promotes the public welfare.

Nothing more can be said of insurance—nor can the power to take the private property of insurers by fixing rates be enlarged by a legislative declaration that the business is affected with a broad and definite public interest. For since the contract of insurance is private and personal, it is almost a contradiction in terms to say that the private contract is public, or that a business which consists in making such private contracts is public in the constitutional sense. The fundamental idea of a public business, as well declared by the supreme court of Kansas (77 Kan. 608), is that "all of the public have a right to demand and share in it." That means that each member of the public, on demand and upon equal terms, without written contract, without haggling as to terms, may demand the public service, and secure the use of the facility devoted to public use. If the company can make distinctions and serve one and refuse to serve another, the business ex vi termini is not public. The common carrier has no right to refuse to haul a passenger even if he has been [429] convicted of arson. But if an insurance company is indeed public, it is bound to insure the property of the man who is suspected of having set fire to his own house, or whose statements of value it is unwilling to take. This is manifestly inconsistent with the contract of insurance, which requires the utmost good faith, not only in making truthful answers to questions asked, but in not concealing anything material to the risk. If the company has the discretion to insure or the right to refuse to insure, then, by the very definition of the terms, it is not a public business. If, on the other hand, the company is obliged to insure bad risks or the property of men of bad character, of doubtful veracity, or known to be careless in their handling of property, the law would be an arbitrary exertion of power in compelling men to enter into contract with persons with whom they did not choose to deal where confidence is the very foundation of a contract of indemnity. Indeed, it seems to be conceded that a person owning property is not entitled to demand insurance as a matter of right. If not, the business is not public, and not within the provision of the Constitution which only authorizes the taking of property for public purposes—whether the taking be of the fee, for a lump sum assessed in condemnation proceedings, or whether the use be taken by rate regulation, which is but another method of exercising the same power.

The suggestion that the public interest is found in the characteristics of the business of insurance justifies a brief examination of those characteristics and a statement of the results that logically must follow from such a test. For if the power is to develop out of the characteristics, it must necessarily follow that other occupations, having similar characteristics, must be subject to the same rate regulating power.

Digitized by Google

The elements which are said to show that insurance is affected with a public interest do not arise out of the size of any one company, but out of the volume of the aggregate [430] business of all the companies doing business within the state and beyond its borders. If that test be applied, and if the sum of the units is to determine whether or not a business is affected with a public interest (which is said to be the equivalent of a public use), then if the principle of the decision be applied to the business of farming, all can see to what end it leads. In view of the amount of property employed and the aggregate number of persons engaged in agriculture, and the public's absolute dependence upon that pursuit, it would follow that, farming being affected with a broad and definite public interest, the price of wheat and corn; cotton and wools; beef, pork, mutton, and poultry; fruit and vegetables,—could be fixed. Or if we take the aggregate of those who labor, and consider the public's absolute dependence upon labor, it would inevitably follow that it, too, was affected with a broad and definite public interest, and that wages in the United States of America in this 20th century could be fixed by law, just as in England between the 14th and 18th centuries. And inasmuch as the prices of agricultural products are dependent on the price of land and labor, and as the price of labor is closely related to the cost of rent and food and clothes and the comforts of life, there would be the power to take the further step and regulate the cost of everything which enters into the cost of living. Of course, it goes without saying that if the rates for fire insurance can be fixed, then the rates for life and marine insurance can be fixed. By a parity of reasoning, the rates of accident, guaranty, and fidelity insurance could also be regulated. There seems no escape from the conclusion that the asserted power to fix the price to be paid by one private person to another private person or private corporation for a private contract of indemnity, or for his product, or his labor, or for his private contracts of any sort, will become the center of a circle of price-making legislation that, in its application, will destroy the right of [431] private property, and break down the barriers which the Constitution has thrown around the citizen to protect him in his right of property,—which includes his right of contract to make property,—his right to fix the price at which his property shall be used by another. By virtue of the liberty which is guaranteed by the Constitution, he also has the right to name the wage for his labor and to fix the terms of contracts of indemnity,—whether they be contracts of indorsement or suretyship, or contracts of indemnity against loss by fire, flood, or accident.

In view of what Judge Cooley calls the general supposition that "the right to fix prices was inconsistent with constitutional liberty," it is not surprising that little is to be found in the books relating to a statute like this. It is, however, somewhat curious that among the few expressions to be found on the subject is the intimation by Lord Ellenborough in Allnutt v. Inglis, 12 East, 535, that insurance rates were not on the same basis as a public business using property devoted to a public use. For in answering the argument that if the rates of a public wharf could be fixed, insurance rates could also be fixed, he clearly intimates that this could not be done, since the wharf was a monopoly, and "the business of insurance and of counting-houses may be carried on elsewhere."

In the following cases the statutes fixing prices have been held to be void: Ex parte Dickey, 144 Cal. 234, 66 L.R.A. 928, 103 Am. St. Rep. 82, 77 Pac. 924, 1 Ann. Cas. 428, fixing the price to be charged by an employment bureau; Ex parte Quarg, 149 Cal. 79, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 183, 117 Am. St. Rep. 115, 84 Pac. 766, 9 Ann. Cas. 747; People v. Steele, 231 Ill. 340, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 361. 121 Am. St. Rep. 321, 83 N. E. 236, prohibiting the sale of theater tickets at a price higher than that charged by the theater; State v. Fire Creek Coal & Coke Co. 33 W. Va. 188, 6 L.R.A. 359, 25 Am. St. Rep. 891, 10 S. E. 288, limiting the profits on sales to employees. See also State v. McCool, 83 Kan. 430, bot., 111 Pac. 477, where, in sustaining a statute regulating the weight of bread, the court called attention to the fact that the statute did not attempt to fix the price. To these could be added a multitude of decisions showing that the power [432] to regulate is limited by the constitutional prohibition against the taking of private property. Guillotte v. New Orleans, 12 La. Ann. 432, is the only American case found which sustains the right to fix prices for other than a commodity or service furnished by a public utility company of the kind already pointed out. In that case the court said that the city could fix the price of bread, and that if the baker did not desire to do business within the limits of such city, he could go elsewhere. That reasoning would support any statute, for every citizen at least has the right to go out of business. But it has been repeatedly held by this court that such an answer cannot sustain an invalid statute, the Constitution being intended to secure the citizen against being driven out of business by an unconstitutional statute or regulation.

Digitized by Google

There is, in the opinion, an allusion to usury laws as instances of fixing rates for other than public service corporations. We do not understand that the opinion is founded on that proposition, for even the usury laws do not fix a flat rate, but only a maximum rate, and do not require lenders to make loans to all borrowers, similarly situated, at the same rate of interest. Moreover, interest laws were in their inception not a restriction upon the right of contract, but an enlargement, permitting what theretofore had been regarded both as an ecclesiastical and civil offense. This fact may have been coupled with the idea that as the sovereign had the prerogative to coin money and make legal tender for all claims, he could fix the price that should be charged for the use of that money.

At any rate, interest laws had been long recognized before the Constitution, and have been prevalent ever since. They therefore fall within the rule that contemporary practice, if subsequently continued and universally acquiesced in, amounts to an interpretation of the Constitution. But the same character of long-continued acquiescence [433] and settled usage that sustains a usury law also sustains the right of the contracting parties to agree upon the charge for insurance. For centuries before the Constitution, and continuously ever since, they have themselves fixed this charge, and this makes most strongly in favor of their right to continue to agree upon the price of a private contract of indemnity against loss by fire.

The act now under review not only takes property without due process of law, but it unequally and arbitrarily selects those from which such property shall be taken by price fixing. Although including all other fire insurance companies, it excepts certain mutual insurance companies. Persons engaged in doing an insurance business are not within its terms. In Kansas, the right to do a fire insurance business is not limited to corporations, but may be conducted by persons, individuals, partners, companies, and associations, whether incorporated or not. Gen. Stat. (Kan.) (1909) §§ 4086, 4091, 4122. And if it could be true that the legislature could fix the price of insurance, it would seem to be doubly necessary that all doing an insurance business should be treated alike. There is no difference in principle and none by statute in the character of the contract, whether it is made by one man, or the Lloyds, or a corporation. There is no difference in the character of the contract made by a stock company and a mutual company. In each instance the contract is one of indemnity against loss for a fixed premium. If the policy holder is a stockholder in an ordinary corporation, he may get back some of his premium by way of dividends; if he is a member of a mutual company, he pays his premium and gets back his share of the earnings. But to say that the state may fix the price to be charged for insurance by a stock company, and that it will not fix the price to be charged by mutual companies or by the Lloyds, who do an enormous business of exactly the same nature, on exactly [434] the same sort of property, and on exactly the same terms, is to make a discrimination which amounts to a denial of the equal protection of the law.

The CHIEF JUSTICE and Mr. Justice Van Devanter concur in this dissent.

LAURA WHEELER and Charles P. Howland, Executors of the Will of Charles C. Tiffany, Plffs. in Err.,

v.

WILLIAM SOHMER, Comptroller of the State of New York.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 434-447.)

Constitutional law — due process of law — inheritance tax — debts due nonresident testator — notes given by nonresident.

Consistent with due process of law is the imposition under the authority of N. Y. Laws 1905, chap. 368, § 1, amending Laws

---

NOTE.—Due process of law in succession tax.

A succession tax need not operate with absolute uniformity in order to satisfy constitutional guaranties against the denial of due process of law.

Thus, an inheritance tax law may exempt from its provisions property devised to religious, educational, or charitable corporations, and not extend such exemption to nonresident corporations, without violating the due process provision of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Re Speed, 216 Ill. 23, 108 Am. St. Rep. 189, 74 N. E. 809, affirmed in 203 U. S. 553, 51 L. ed. 314, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 171, 8 Ann. Cas. 157.

And an inheritance tax law which discriminated between life tenants with remainder to lineal descendants, and life tenants with remainder to collateral heirs or strangers, by imposing the tax on the first, and excluding the second from its operation, is not unconstitutional as depriving the class affected of their property without due 1896, chap. 908, § 220, of a transfer tax upon promissory notes left by a nonresident testator in a safe deposit box in New York, although such notes were made either by a resident of Chicago, secured by mortgages of Chicago land to Illinois trustees, or by a Virginia corporation.

Digitized by Google

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, 532-535, 554-556; Taxes, I. c, 6, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 45.]

Argued November 5 and 6, 1913. Decided April 20, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Surrogates' Court of New York County, in the State of New York, to review a judgment entered pursuant to the mandate of the Court of Appeals of that state, which had affirmed a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming the surrogate's order imposing a transfer tax. Affirmed.

See same case below, in Appellate Division, 143 App. Div. 327, 128 N. Y. Supp. 106; in Court of Appeals 202 N. Y. 550, 95 N. E. 1140.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles P. Howland argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

Jurisdiction of a state for purposes of transfer or inheritance taxation is limited to "property within the state," in the sense in which that phrase has been recognized.

Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. New Orleans, 205 U. S. 395, 51 L. ed. 853, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499.

Promissory notes are only evidences of debt, and not the debts themselves. Their situs, therefore, is not the situs of the debts; the situs of the debts is at the residence of one or the other of the parties to the relation.

Buck v. Beach, 206 U. S. 392, 51 L. ed.

---

process of law. Billings v. People, 189 Ill. 472, 59 L.R.A. 807, 59 N. E. 798, affirmed in 188 U. S. 97, 47 L. ed. 400, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 272.

So, in Gelsthorpe v. Furnell, 20 Mont. 299, 39 L.R.A. 170, 51 Pac. 267, it was held that a succession tax did not take property without due process of law, when it was imposed upon all property which passed by will or intestate laws except when the estate was less than a specified sum.

The death of the testator before the enactment of the succession tax law is not an insuperable obstacle to its application. Thus, in Cahen v. Brewster, 203 U. S. 543, 51 L. ed. 310, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 174, 8 Ann. Cas. 215, affirming 115 La. 377, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1181, 39 So. 37, 5 Ann. Cas. 871, it was held that a Louisiana inheritance tax law imposing a tax on all successions not finally closed and administered upon, and on all successions thereafter opened, did not deprive universal legatees under the will of a person who had died before the enactment of the law, of their property without due process of law, though, under the Louisiana Civil Code, the ownership of the property passed to such legatees upon the death of the testator.

The interest of those who will take under a will or deed upon failure of a donee of a power of appointment therein to exercise it is not so far vested that the imposition of a succession tax upon the passing to them of the estate, in case of such failure, can be considered as a taking of property without due process of law. Minot v. Treasurer & Receiver General (Minot v. Stevens) 207 Mass. 588, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 236, 93 N. E. 973.

In Re Vanderbilt, 50 App. Div. 246, 63 N. Y. Supp. 1079, affirmed without opinion in 163 N. Y. 597, 57 N. E. 1127, and in Re Potter, 51 App. Div. 212, 64 N. Y. Supp. 1013, an inheritance tax law taxing the exercise of the power of appointment derived from the disposition of property, made before the passage of the act, as though the property belonged absolutely to the donee of the power, was held not to take property without due process of law.

None of the provisions of U. S. Const., 14th Amend., are infringed by the provision of the New York transfer tax law for taxation of the exercise of the power of appointment derived from the disposition of property, made either before or after the passage of that act, as though the property belonged absolutely to the donee of the power, and had been bequeathed or devised by him by will, although construed by the highest court of the state to apply to the exercise by a son among his children of a power of appointment given him in the will of his father, who, under the law as it stood at the time of his death, had a legal right to transfer by will his property to such appointees, without any limitation then imposed upon the exercise of that right. Orr v. Gilman, 183 U. S. 278, 46 L. ed. 196, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213.

A tax on gifts, legacies, and collateral inheritances, which operates alike on all property and persons similarly situated, and which is made by a judicial officer, after notice and opportunity to be heard, does not conflict with the provisions of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. Wallace v. Myers, 4 L.R.A. 171, 38 Fed. 184.

And a statute which vested the interest of the state in a succession tax at the time of the decedent's death did not take property without due process of law, where it provided for an appraisement after notice to all persons known to be interested, and afforded them an opportunity to be heard before the tax could be collected. Trippet v. State, 149 Cal. 521, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1210, 86 Pac. 1084.

Digitized by Google

1106, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 712, 11 Ann. Cas. 732; Pelham v. Way, 15 Wall. 196, 21 L. ed. 55.

The distinction between a debt and the evidence establishing it has long been recognized.

Wyman v. Halstead (Wyman v. United States) 109 U. S. 654, 27 L. ed. 1068, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 417; Atty. Gen. v. Bouwens, 4 Mees. & W. 171, 1 Hayw. & H. 319, 7 L. J. Exch. N. S. 297; Hunter v. Board of Supervisors, 33 Iowa, 376, 11 Am. Rep. 132; Hanson, Death Duties, 4th ed. p. 239.

A note is the representative of a debt as a warehouse receipt is the representative of personal property, but such a receipt cannot be taxed at the value of the goods, on the theory that "in some way it represents them."

Selliger v. Kentucky, 213 U. S. 200, 53 L. ed. 761, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 449.

Undoubtedly the field of inheritance taxation is broader than that of annual taxation. Tangible chattels may be taxed at the domicil of the owner where they come under the universal succession, or in the jurisdiction of their own situs.

Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189, 47 L. ed. 439, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277.

In the case of choses in action, the state of the owner's domicil levies one tax (Re Swift, 137 N. Y. 77, 18 L.R.A. 709, 32 N. E. 1096), while the state of the debtor's domicil levies a tax "not because of any theoretical speculation concerning the whereabouts of the debt, but because of the practical fact of its power over the person of the debtor,"—in other words, because it grants a practical privilege by providing means for the collection of the debt.

What gives the debt validity? Nothing but the fact that the law of the place where the debtor is will make him pay.

Blackstone v. Miller, supra; Re Houday-

So, in State v. Hamlin, 86 Me. 495, 25 L.R.A. 632, 41 Am. St. Rep. 569, 30 Atl. 70, it was held that an inheritance tax law which provided for an appraisal of the estate subject to the tax upon application to the probate court by anyone interested in the estate, and gave that court jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions that might arise, subject to appeal as in other cases, satisfied the requirement of due process of law.

And in Union Trust Co. v. Wayne Probate Judge, 125 Mich. 487, 84 N. W. 1101, a succession tax law was held not to be unconstitutional as taking property without due process of law, because it did not provide for personal notice and opportunity to resist the assessment, upon the ground that it was not taking the property of the legatee, but was only imposing a condition upon the acquisition of property.

And in Gelsthorpe v. Furnell, 20 Mont. 299, 39 L.R.A. 170, 51 Pac. 267, an inheritance tax statute was held not to take property without due process of law, where it made provision for notice to the persons interested, and an opportunity was given to be heard in relation to the value of the property and the amount of the tax.

In Hostetter v. State, 26 Ohio C. C. 702, reversed on other grounds in 72 Ohio St. 448, 74 N. E. 650, an inheritance tax statute was held not to take property without due process of law, though it gave the probate court power to order an appraisement of the property of a deceased for the purpose of fixing the tax to which the same was liable, without giving notice to the executors or next of kin, where other sections thereof provided for a review of all matters before such court and for an appeal, and where, by general law, certain courts had jurisdiction to enjoin the illegal levy of tax assessments, and to entertain actions to recover them back when collected.

On the other hand, in Ferry v. Campbell, 110 Iowa, 290, 50 L.R.A. 92, 81 N. W. 604, a collateral inheritance tax law which failed to provide for any notice to the persons interested was held to be unconstitutional as taking property without due process of law.

Property is not taken without due process of law, contrary to U. S. Const., 14th Amend., by the imposition of the tax authorized by N. Y. Laws 1896, chap. 908, when property is transferred by deed intended to take effect upon the death of the grantor. Keeney v. New York, 222 U. S. 525, 56 L. ed. 299, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1139, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105.

A safe deposit company is not arbitrarily charged, without due process of law, with a duty to supervise the delivery and to determine the ownership of property over which it has no control, by the provisions of the Illinois inheritance tax law of July 1, 1909, under which the contents of safe deposit boxes cannot be removed after the death of the renter, whether standing solely in his name or in the joint name of the decedent and others, or in the name of a partnership of which he was a member, except after ten days' notice to the attorney general and state treasurer, and even then, not without retaining possession of enough of the assets to pay the tax, where in law and by contract the safe deposit company stood in such relation to the property as to make it liable for allowing unauthorized persons to take possession. National Safe Deposit Co. v. Stead, 232 U. S. 58, ante, 504, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 209.

Prohibiting a safe deposit company from permitting the removal of the contents of a safe deposit box after the death of the renter, whether standing solely in his name or in the joint name of the deceased and others, or in the name of a partnership of which he was a member, without retaining assets sufficient to pay the state inheritance tax, as is done by Ill. act of July 1, 1909, does not deprive the company of its property without due process of law, nor arbitrarily burden it with a liability. Ibid.

Digitized by Google

er, 150 N. Y. 37, 34 L.R.A. 235, 55 Am. St. Rep. 642, 44 N. E. 718.

In this case the state of New York had no control over the persons of the debtors. That control was in the states of Illinois and Virginia, respectively (Buck v. Beach, 206 U. S. 392, 407, 51 L. ed. 1106, 1114; 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 712, 11 Ann. Cas. 732; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 715, 43 L. ed. 1144, 1146, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 797); and as neither the universal succession nor the control over the means of enforcement was granted or could be regulated by the state of New York, that state had no power to tax.

The situs of bonds appears to determine the situs of the debts they symbolize, but bonds have always been sharply distinguished from promissory notes in that regard.

Re Bronson, 150 N. Y. 1, 34 L.R.A. 238, 55 Am. St. Rep. 632, 44 N. E. 707; Re Fearing, 200 N. Y. 340, 93 N. E. 956; State Tax on Foreign-held Bonds, 15 Wall. 300, 21 L. ed. 179; Buck v. Beach, 206 U. S. 392, 403, 51 L. ed. 1106, 1112, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 712, 11 Ann. Cas. 732; Selliger v. Kentucky, 213 U. S. 200, 204, 53 L. ed. 761, 763, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 449.

A promissory note may be the subject of larceny.

People ex rel. Westbrook v. Ogdensburgh, 48 N. Y. 390.

This consideration, however, is not near enough to the question involved to change the law in regard to the taxation of property, and make that property within the state, which we think is clearly outside it.

Buck v. Beach, 206 U. S. 407, 51 L. ed. 1114, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 712, 11 Ann. Cas. 732.

Indeed, at common law a promissory note was not within the law of larceny, for larceny could not be committed of an instrument which had no value of its own, and was only the evidence of a chose in action.

Reg. v. Watts, 6 Cox, C. C. 304.

Larceny is no criterion, for certificates of stock, warehouse receipts, and policies of insurance are unquestionably the subjects of larceny, yet none of them is the property whose situs determines the power of annual or of inheritance taxation.

Re James, 144 N. Y. 6, 38 N. E. 961; Selliger v. Kentucky, 213 U. S. 200, 53 L. ed. 761, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 449; Re Horn, 39 Misc. 133, 78 N. Y. Supp. 979.

Taxation rests upon protection as a correlative, and when no protection is either practically or theoretically possible, taxation should not be laid; this is the broad basis for the rules limiting taxation.

Union Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Kentucky, 199 U. S. 194, 50 L. ed. 150, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 36, 4 Ann. Cas. 493; Re Bronson, 150 N. Y. 1, 34 L.R.A. 238, 55 Am. St. Rep. 632, 44 N. E. 707; Cooley, Taxn. 3d ed. p. 3.

In this case Connecticut may tax, and indeed does so because, as the state of the testator's domicil, it protects the universal succession. The states of Illinois and Virginia may tax, because they protect the debts by affording recourse to their respective courts.

Re Daly, 100 App. Div. 373, 91 N. Y. Supp. 858, affirmed in 182 N. Y. 524, 74 N. E. 1116; Re Clinch, 180 N. Y. 300, 73 N. E. 35.

But New York has protected nothing. If such taxation is allowed, triple taxation on many kinds of choses in action is possible; in the case of a bill of exchange issued in multiplicate, the domiciliary states of the owner and of the primary obligor would be able to tax, and also each state within which one of the multiplicate bills happened to be found at the owner's death.

Mr. William Law Stout argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error:

Promissory notes, kept by a nonresident decedent in the state of New York, are properly assessed and taxed as personal property under the declaratory statutes of the state of New York.

Re Jones, 172 N. Y. 575, 60 L.R.A. 476, 65 N. E. 570; Re Whiting, 150 N. Y. 27, 34 L.R.A. 232, 55 Am. St. Rep. 640, 44 N. E. 715; Re Bronson, 150 N. Y. 1, 34 L.R.A. 238, 55 Am. St. Rep. 632, 44 N. E. 707; Re Romaine, 127 N. Y. 80, 12 L.R.A. 401, 27 N. E. 759; Re Morgan, 150 N. Y. 36, 44 N. E. 1126.

The maxim, Mobilia personam sequuntur, is not an inflexible rule, but, upon the contrary, may be modified or disregarded by the declaratory laws of the state in defining promissory notes as tangible personal property when held or located within its domain.

Savings & Loan Soc. v. Multnomah County, 169 U. S. 421, 42 L. ed. 803, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 392; New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 44 L. ed. 174, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; Bristol v. Washington County, 177 U. S. 133, 44 L. ed. 701, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585; Eidman v. Martinez, 184 U. S. 578, 46 L. ed. 697, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 515; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189–206, 47 L. ed. 439–445, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277; Re Whiting, 150 N. Y. 27, 34 L.R.A. 232, 55 Am. St. Rep. 640, 44 N. E. 715; Re Bronson, 150 N. Y. 1, 34 L.R.A. 238, 55 Am.

Digitized by Google

St. Rep. 632, 44 N. E. 707; Re Houdayer, 150 N. Y. 37, 34 L.R.A. 235, 55 Am. St. Rep. 642, 44 N. E. 718; Re Blackstone, 171 N. Y. 682, 64 N. E. 1118; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18–22, 35 L. ed. 613–616, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 595, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876; Tappan v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 19 Wall. 490, 22 L. ed. 189; People ex rel. Hoyt v. Tax & A. Comrs. 23 N. Y. 224.

The power of taxation of a sovereign state is over persons, property, and business within its domain. It is within the sovereign power of each state to designate and classify all objects of property within its domain which shall be subject to taxation. It is not necessary that both owner and thing assessed be within the jurisdiction of the state.

State Tax on Foreign-held Bonds, 15 Wall. 300, 21 L. ed. 179; Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 29 L. ed. 715, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475; State R. Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575, 23 L. ed. 663; Dewey v. Des Moines, 173 U. S. 193–204, 43 L. ed. 665–668, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379; Bristol v. Washington County, 177 U. S. 133–141, 44 L. ed. 701–705, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585; Louisville & J. Ferry Co. v. Kentucky, 188 U. S. 385–396, 47 L. ed. 513–518, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 463; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 613, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 595, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876; Tappan v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 19 Wall. 490, 22 L. ed. 189.

It is within the power of a state to create a situs for property, tangible or intangible, in so far as it is able to obtain jurisdiction and dominion over the object of transfer as a basis for the imposition of a transfer or inheritance tax.

There is no provision in the Federal Constitution forbidding a state to give to the promissory note the attribute of tangible personal property, or forbidding the state to impose either a direct tax thereon when actually located in the state, or to impose a transfer tax upon the transfer effected by the death of the owner, whether resident or nonresident.

State Assessors v. Comptoir National d'Escompte, 191 U. S. 388, 48 L. ed. 232, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109.

If justification for legislation be found, a statute will not be dissected to show how little or how much benefit has accrued or may accrue to the taxpayer.

Union Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Kentucky, 199 U. S. 194, 50 L. ed. 150, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 36, 4 Ann. Cas. 493.

The power of taxation is exercised upon the assumption of an equivalent rendered in the protection of property and person of the taxpayer.

Ibid.

The fundamental differences between a negotiable and a non-negotiable promissory note, and between these notes and ordinary choses in action, have justified the recognition of a promissory note as tangible personal property when held or located within the state of New York.

Norton, Bills & Notes, 3d ed. 7; Friedlander v. Texas & P. R. Co. 130 U. S. 416, 32 L. ed. 991, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570; Russell v. Whipple, 2 Cow. 536; Goodwin v. Robarts, L. R. 10 Exch. 337; Southern P. Co. v. Kentucky, 222 U. S. 63, 56 L. ed. 96, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 13.

The state of New York, in its sovereign power over all property within its domain, may declare by appropriate legislation that promissory notes held and located within its domain shall be recognized as tangible personal property; such legislation does not offend any of the rights of the plaintiffs in error under the Constitution of the United States.

People ex rel. Hoyt v. Tax & A. Comrs. 23 N. Y. 224; Re Clinch, 180 N. Y. 303, 73 N. E. 35.

Promissory notes by usage and custom, apart from declaratory statutes, are recognized generally as tangible personal property, and establish by their physical presence a situs for all purposes of taxation in the state where located.

New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 44 L. ed. 174, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189, 47 L. ed. 439, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277; State Assessors v. Comptoir National d'Escompte, 191 U. S. 388–402, 48 L. ed. 232–238, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109; Selliger v. Kentucky, 213 U. S. 200, 53 L. ed. 761, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 449; Re Whiting, 2 App. Div. 590, 38 N. Y. Supp. 131, reversed in 150 N. Y. 27, 34 L.R.A. 232, 55 Am. St. Rep. 640, 44 N. E. 715; People ex rel. Burke v. Wells, 184 N. Y. 275, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 905, 121 Am. St. Rep. 840, 77 N. E. 19, affirmed in 208 U. S. 14, 52 L. ed. 370, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 193; People ex rel. Westbrook v. Ogdensburgh, 48 N. Y. 390; People ex rel. Jefferson v. Smith, 88 N. Y. 576.

By the decisions of the New York courts, irrespective of its declaratory statutes, promissory notes are considered personal property where they are kept.

People ex rel. Burke v. Wells, 184 N. Y. 275, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 905, 121 Am. St. Rep. 840, 77 N. E. 19, affirmed in 208 U. S. 14, 52 L. ed. 370, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 193; People ex rel. Jefferson v. Smith, 88 N. Y. 576; Re Fearing, 200 N. Y. 340, 93 N. E. 956.

There are fundamental differences between a property tax and an inheritance or succession tax. The conditions deemed essential to establish a situs in the taxing state as a basis for a property tax are not essential to justify the imposition of a transfer, succession, or inheritance tax.

Digitized by Google

Cahen v. Brewster, 203 U. S. 552, 51 L. ed. 314, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 174, 8 Ann. Cas. 215; Orr v. Gilman, 183 U. S. 278, 46 L. ed. 196, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 44 L. ed. 969, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073; Wallace v. Meyer, 4 L.R.A. 171, 38 Fed. 184; Hertz v. Woodman, 218 U. S. 205–219, 54 L. ed. 1001–1007, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 621.

The court of appeals of the state of New York has construed the statute imposing this tax as a tax upon the right to particular successions, and not upon the property.

Re Swift, 137 N. Y. 77, 18 L.R.A. 709, 32 N. E. 1096; Re Merriam, 141 N. Y. 479, 36 N. E. 505; Re Hoffman, 143 N. Y. 329, 38 N. E. 311; Re Cullum, 145 N. Y. 593, 40 N. E. 163; Re Sherman, 153 N. Y. 1, 46 N. E. 1032; Re Dows, 167 N. Y. 227, 52 L.R.A. 433, 88 Am. St. Rep. 508, 60 N. E. 439; Re Vanderbilt, 172 N. Y. 69, 64 N. E. 782.

This interpretation of the tax as a tax upon the right of testamentary successions has been uniformly recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mager v. Grima, 8 How. 490, 12 L. ed. 1168; Wallace v. Myers, 4 L.R.A. 171, 38 Fed. 184; United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 628–630, 41 L. ed. 287–289, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 55, 57, 59, 44 L. ed. 969, 975–977, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189–203, 47 L. ed. 439–444, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277; Plummer v. Coler, 178 U. S. 115–122, 44 L. ed. 998–1003, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Chanler v. Kelsey, 205 U. S. 466, 51 L. ed. 882, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 550; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton, 218 U. S. 36, 54 L. ed. 921, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 84, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 676; United States v. Fox, 94 U. S. 315, 24 L. ed. 192; Billings v. Illinois, 188 U. S. 97–104, 47 L. ed. 400–403, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 272.

The enactment of rules, regulations, and principles governing the transmission of property by will, intestacy, or other conveyances testamentary in character and effect, is within the exclusive province of the state. The Supreme Court of the United States will look to the statutes of the state for the rules governing the descent and testamentary transfer, alienation, and succession of property. This court will not only adopt but is bound by the decisions of the highest courts of the states as to the effect and interpretation of wills and instruments of title.

Orr v. Gilman, 183 U. S. 278–290, 46 L. ed. 196–202, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; De Vaughn v. Hutchinson, 165 U. S. 566–570, 41 L. ed. 827–829, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461; Clarke v. Clarke, 178 U. S. 186–190, 44 L. ed. 1028–1030, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Adams, 181 U. S. 580–583, 45 L. ed. 1011, 1012, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729; Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Ebaugh, 185 U. S. 114–122, 46 L. ed. 830–833, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton, 218 U. S. 36, 54 L. ed. 921, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 84, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 676; Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black, 599–603, 17 L. ed. 261, 262; Randall v. Brigham, 7 Wall. 523–541, 19 L. ed. 285–293; Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162–167, 36 L. ed. 925, 927, 928, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 54; Moffitt v. Kelly, 218 U. S. 400, 405, 54 L. ed. 1086, 1087, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1179, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 79.

This court will also be bound by the decision of the highest court of the state that there is nothing in the statute or its enforcement in conflict with the Constitution of the state, and that the proceedings taken therein for its ascertainment did not deprive the plaintiffs in error of their property without due process of law within the meaning of the state Constitution.

New York ex rel. Metropolitan Street R. Co. v. New York State Tax Comrs. 199 U. S. 1–47, 50 L. ed. 65–79, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 705, 4 Ann. Cas. 381; Orr v. Gilman, 183 U. S. 278–283, 46 L. ed. 196–200, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Carpenter v. Pennsylvania, 17 How. 456, 15 L. ed. 127; Wallace v. Myers, 4 L.R.A. 171, 38 Fed. 184; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Adams, 181 U. S. 580–583, 45 L. ed. 1011, 1012, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729.

Buck v. Beach went no further than to hold that, under the facts presented by the record, the promissory notes were held but temporarily in the state of Indiana, and that therefore a situs as a basis for a property tax had not been established.

Selliger v. Kentucky, 213 U. S. 200, 53 L. ed. 761, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 449.

The interpretation and construction placed by the highest court of the state upon its statutes is conclusive upon this court.

Digitized by Google

Smiley v. Kansas, 196 U. S. 447, 49 L. ed. 546, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 289; Hibben v. Smith 191 U. S. 310, 48 L. ed. 195, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 88; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189–207, 47 L. ed. 439–445, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277; Watson v. Maryland, 218 U. S. 173–175, 54 L. ed. 987–989, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644; Kentucky Union Co. v. Kentucky, 219 U. S. 140–151, 55 L. ed. 137–153, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 171; Tilt v. Kelsey, 207 U. S. 43–56, 52 L. ed. 95–101, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Lindsley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co. 220 U. S. 61, 55 L. ed. 369, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 337, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 160; Moffitt v. Kelly, 218 U. S. 400, 54 L. ed. 1086, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1179, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 79; Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Ebaugh, 185 U. S. 114–122, 46 L. ed. 830–833, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566; Chanler v. Kelsey, 205 U. S. 477, 51 L. ed. 888, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 550; Cahen v. Brewster, 203 U. S. 551, 51 L. ed. 313, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 174, 8 Ann. Cas. 215.

In respect to the succession to property by death, the states are sovereign, and may give to their courts authority to determine finally, as against all the world, all questions which arise therein, subject to applicable constitutional limitations.

McElroy, Transfer Tax Law, 2; Tilt v. Kelsey, 207 U. S. 43, 52 L. ed. 95, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Gulf & S. I. R. Co. v. Hewes, 183 U. S. 66–76, 46 L. ed. 86–91, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 26; Bristol v. Washington County, 177 U. S. 133–141, 44 L. ed. 701–705, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585.

The objection that the statutory construction law, now general construction law, might, under its terms, without further test, comprehend various instruments of title without legal justification, cannot be made by transferees of promissory notes.

Re Keeney, 194 N. Y. 281, 87 N. E. 428, affirmed in 222 U. S. 525, 56 L. ed. 299, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1139, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105.

The 14th Amendment does not affect or control the states in the exercise of their sovereign authority to regulate inheritances, and to determine the persons or objects upon which an inheritance tax shall be imposed.

Campbell v. California, 200 U. S. 94, 50 L. ed. 387, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 182; Heath & M. Mfg. Co. v. Worst, 207 U. S. 338–354, 52 L. ed. 236–243, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 114.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the judgment of the court:

This proceeding began with a petition by an executor, acting under ancillary letters, for the appointment of an appraiser to determine the amount, if any, of the transfer tax due from the estate of the deceased testator, Charles C. Tiffany. Tiffany was not a resident of New York at the time of his death, but left in a safe deposit box in New York four promissory notes made by Pottinger, a resident of Chicago, secured by mortgages of Chicago land to Illinois trustees, and promissory notes of the Southern Railway Company, a Virginia corporation. The appraiser held these notes taxable under the New York Laws of 1905, chap. 368, § 1, amending § 220 of an earlier law, and imposing a tax "when the transfer is by will or intestate law, of property within the state, and the decedent was a nonresident of the state at the time of his death." The surrogate [438] confirmed the appraiser's report, and his order was affirmed by the appellate division and the court of appeals. 143 App. Div. 327, 128 N. Y. Supp. 106; 202 N. Y. 550, 95 N. E. 1140. The executors contend that the tax deprives them of their property without due process of law.

In support of this position it was argued that if bonds were subject to taxation simply because of their presence within the jurisdiction, it was due to the survival of primitive notions that identified the obligation with the parchment or paper upon which they were written; that bills and notes had a different history, and that there was no ground for extending the conceptions of the infancy of the race to them. It was pointed out that the power to tax simple contracts depends upon power over the person of one of the parties, and does not attach to documentary evidence of such contracts that may happen to be within the jurisdiction. Cases were cited in which this court has pronounced bills and notes to be only evidences of the simple contracts that they express (Pelham v. Way, 15 Wall. 196, 21 L. ed. 55; Wyman v. Halstead [Wyman v. United States] 109 U. S. 654, 656, 27 L. ed. 1068, 1069, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 417); and the precise issue was thought to be disposed of by Buck v. Beach, 206 U. S. 392, 51 L. ed. 1106, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 712, 11 Ann. Cas. 732. We shall discuss this case, but for the moment it is enough to say that for the purposes of argument we assume that bills and notes stand as mere evidences at common law.

But we are bound by the construction given to the New York statutes by the New York courts, and the question is whether a statute that we must read as purporting to give to bills and notes within the state the same standing as bonds for purposes of taxation goes beyond the constitutional power of the state. Again, for the purposes of argument we may assume that there are limits to this kind of power; that the presence of a deed would not warrant a tax measured by the value of the real estate that it had conveyed, or even that a memorandum of a contract required by the statute of frauds would not support [439] a tax on the value of the contract because it happened to be found in the testator's New York strong box. But it is plain that bills and notes, whatever they may be called, come very near to identification with the contract that they embody. An indorsement of the paper carries the contract to the indorser. An indorsement in blank passes the debt from hand to hand so that whoever has the paper has the debt. It is true that in some cases there may be a recovery without producing and surrendering the paper, but so may there be upon a bond in modern times. It is not primitive tradition alone that gives their peculiarities to bonds, but a tradition laid hold of, modified and adapted to the convenience and understanding of business men. The same convenience and understanding apply to bills and notes, as no one would doubt in the case of bank notes, which technically do not differ from others. It would be an extraordinary deduction from the 14th Amendment to deny the power of a state to adopt the usages and views of business men in a statute on the ground that it was depriving them of their property without due process of law. The necessity of caution in cutting down the power of taxation on the strength of the 14th Amendment often has been adverted to. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 197 U. S. 430, 434, 49 L. ed. 819, 821, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 466. Unless we are bound by authority, we think the statute, so far as we now are concerned with it, plainly within the power of the state to pass.

Digitized by Google

As to authority, it has been asserted or implied, again and again, that the states had the power to deal with negotiable paper on the footing of situs. "It is well settled that bank bills and municipal bonds are in such a concrete, tangible form that they are subject to taxation where found, irrespective of the domicil of the owner; . . . Notes and mortgages are of the same nature . . . we see no reason why a state may not declare that, if found within its limits, they shall be subject to taxation." New [440] Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 322, 323, 44 L. ed. 174, 181, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; Bristol v. Washington County, 177 U. S. 133, 141, 44 L. ed. 701, 705, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585; State Assessors v. Comptoir National d'Escompte, 191 U. S. 388, 403, 404, 48 L. ed. 232, 238, 239, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. New Orleans, 205 U. S. 395, 400, 402, 51 L. ed. 853, 855, 856, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499. This is the established law unless it has been overthrown by the decision in Buck v. Beach, supra.

No such effect should be attributed to that case. The Ohio notes in Buck's hands that were held not to be taxable in Indiana were moved backward and forward between Ohio and Indiana with the intent to avoid taxation in either state. 206 U. S. 402. They really were in Ohio hands for business purposes (id. 395), and sending them to Indiana was spoken of by Mr. Justice Peckham as improper and unjustifiable. Id. 402. Their absence from Ohio evidently was regarded as a temporary absence from home. Id. 404. And the conclusion is carefully limited to a refusal to hold the presence of the notes "under the circumstances already stated" to amount to the presence of property within the state. A distinction was taken between the presence sufficient for a succession tax like that in this case, and that required for a property tax such as then was before the court, and the only point decided was that the notes had no such presence in Indiana as to warrant a property tax. See New York ex rel. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Miller, 202 U. S. 584, 597, 50 L. ed. 1155, 1160, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 714. If Buck v. Beach is not to be distinguished on one of the foregoing grounds, as some of us think that it can be, we are of opinion that it must yield to the current of authorities to which we have referred.

In the case at bar it must be taken that the safe deposit box in which the notes were found was their permanent resting place, and therefore that the power of the state so repeatedly asserted in our decisions could come into play.

Judgment affirmed.

[441] Mr. Justice McKenna, concurring:

I concur in the result, but cannot concur in the reasoning of the opinion, or rather, its controlling proposition, unmodified. I might pass it by in silence if it did not have larger consequence than the decision of the pending case. The opinion is rested on the proposition, said to be based on authority, that the states have power to deal "with negotiable paper on the footing of situs;" that is, to regard such paper so far concrete and tangible as to be of itself a subject of taxation, irrespective of the domicil of its owner, or, I add, the locality of the debt which it represents. For the proposition announced, Mr. Justice Brewer, in New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 44 L. ed. 174, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110, is quoted from. Other cases are cited and it is said to be established law unless it has been overthrown by the decision in Buck v. Beach, 206 U. S. 392, 51 L. ed. 1106, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 712, 11 Ann. Cas. 732. I refrain from meeting the judgment of my brethren by simply opposing assertion, and I feel constrained to review the cases, including Buck v. Beach. I will do so in the order of their decision.

Digitized by Google

Commencing with the Stempel Case I may immediately say of it that its facts did not call for the broad and general declaration it is adduced to sustain. The statute passed on did not attempt to tax negotiable paper simply because of its presence in the state. It regarded the origin and use of such paper, and declared its (the statute's) purpose to be that no nonresident, by himself or through an agent, should transact business in the state "without paying to the state a corresponding tax with that exacted of its own citizens;" and, to execute the purpose, declared: "All bills receivable, obligations or credits arising from the business done in the state, are hereby declared assessable within this state, and at the business domicil of said nonresident, his agent or representative."

The property assessed was inherited by Stempel's wards, they and she being residents of the state of New York. It [442] was assessed to the estate of the grandfather of the wards, and was $15,000, "money in possession, on deposit, or in hand," and $8,000, "money loaned or advanced, or for goods sold; and all credits of every description." The contention was that "the situs of the loans and credits was in New York, the place of residence of the guardian and wards, and, therefore, being loans and credits without the state of Louisiana, they were not subject to taxation therein."

The question presented by the contention, this court said, was whether, under the statute as interpreted by the supreme court of the state, the properties were subject to taxation, and, if so subject, whether any rights secured by the Federal Constitution were thereby infringed. The tax was sustained, but it will be observed that negotiable paper was not assessed at all or dealt with as an entity separate from what it represented. The notes which represented the credits taxed were, it is true, in New Orleans, but in possession of the agent of Stempel. Not they, but the rights of which they were the evidence, were taxed. The broad declaration, therefore, that negotiable paper had such tangibility as to be of itself a taxable entity was not called for. The true value of the case and its application to the case at bar can be estimated when we consider the other cases.

In Bristol v. Washington County, 177 U. S. 133, 44 L. ed. 701, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585, notes secured by mortgages in the state (Minnesota) were taxed. The question was of their situs. The state court put its decision on the ground that the notes were in the state for collection or renewal with a view of reloaning the money and keeping it invested as a permanent business. And this court in its decision said that "credits secured by mortgages, the result of the business of investing and reinvesting moneys in the state, were subject to tax as having a situs there." The ruling was affirmed. We said, by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller: "Persons are not permitted [443] to avail themselves for their own benefit of the laws of a state in the conduct of business within its limits, and then to escape their due contribution to the public needs through action of this sort, whether taken for convenience or by design."

In State Assessors v. Comptoir National d'Escompte, 191 U. S. 388, 48 L. ed. 232, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109, credits in the form of checks were taxed under the same statute considered in the Stempel Case. They were held in the state for investment and reinvestment, and this was the basis of the decision. The checks, it was said, became a credit for money loaned, localized in Louisiana, protected by it, and within the scope of its taxing laws as construed by the supreme court. And we further said, after reviewing the Stempel Case and the Bristol Case: "From these cases it may be taken as the settled law of this court that there is no inhibition in the Federal Constitution against the right of the state to tax property in the shape of credits where the same are evidenced by notes or obligations held within the state, in the hands of an agent of the owner for the purpose of collection or renewal with a view to new loans and carrying on such transactions as a permanent business." (p. 403.)

In Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. New Orleans, 205 U. S. 395, 51 L. ed. 853, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499, the assessment was also under the act passed on in the Stempel Case. I will not pause to detail the facts. It is enough to say that the credits taxed were loans (evidenced by notes) by the insurance company to its policy holders in Louisiana. The tax was not eo nomine on the notes, but was expressed to be on "credits, money loaned, bills receivable," etc., and its amount was ascertained by computing the sum of the face value of all the notes held by the company at the time of the assessment.

The purpose of the taxing law was said to be to lay the burden of taxation equally upon those who do business within the state. And, after comment, it was said: "Thus it is clear that the measure of taxation [444] designed by the law is the fair average of the capital employed in the business." In other words, the investments in the state were taxed, and the legality of the tax was determined by their situs, not by the locality of the notes which represented them, the notes being in New York, at the home of the insurance company.

Digitized by Google

It was the situs of the debt which determined the legality of the taxation in all of the cases, and united them under the principle expressed in Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. New Orleans, that the law regards the place of the origin of negotiable paper as its true home, to which it will return to be paid, and its temporary absence can be left out of account. They do not support the broad proposition that to negotiable paper can be ascribed such tangibility and entity as so to make it a taxable object of itself in a jurisdiction other than that of the obligation it represents. This broad generality is necessary to sustain the tax in the present case if it can be regarded a direct tax on property, for Illinois, not New York, is the situs of the debts of which the notes taxed are the evidence, and of the mortgages which secure them.

That broad proposition was asserted in Buck v. Beach and rejected. The notes involved had their origin in Ohio and represented investments in that state. Their owner died, and one of the two trustees of his will resided in Indiana. The notes were kept in the custody of the latter except that at the time of assessment of taxes in that state they were sent to Ohio, and after the lapse of a few days returned to him. They were taxed in Indiana. The tax was sustained by the state supreme court, but declared invalid by this court.

The proposition presented for decision was stated thus by Mr. Justice Peckham for the court: "The sole question, then, for this court, is whether the mere presence of the notes in Indiana [the taxing state] constituted the debts of which the notes were the written evidence, property [445] within the jurisdiction of that state, so that such debts could be therein taxed." The prior cases were considered, and it was said: "There are no cases in this court where an assessment such as the one before us has been involved. We have not had a case where neither the party assessed nor the debtor was a resident of or present in the state where the tax was imposed, and where no business was done therein by the owner of the notes or his agent relating in any way to the capital evidenced by the notes assessed for taxation. We cannot assent to the doctrine that the mere presence of evidences of debt, such as these notes, under the circumstances already stated, amounts to the presence of property within the state." And it was pointed out that the prior cases, which were specifically reviewed, gave no support to the rejected doctrine. It was not overlooked that certain specialty debts, state and municipal bonds and circulating notes of banking institutions, have sometimes been treated as property where they were found, though removed from the domicil of the owner, and State Tax on Foreign-held Bonds, 15 Wall. 300, 324, 21 L. ed. 188, was cited. Promissory notes were held not to be within the rule.

It is, however, asserted that the circumstances of the case showed that the notes were fugitives from taxation, alternately from Indiana and Ohio, and that their stay in Indiana was in evasion of their obligations to Ohio, and was "a transit, although prolonged." But the bad motive of the possessor of the notes was not made a ground of decision. If the court felt a retributive impulse to deny the notes sanctuary in Indiana, it was suppressed. The court declared that the motive for sending the notes to Indiana was of no consequence, and that the attempt to escape proper taxation in Ohio did not confer jurisdiction on Indiana to tax them (page 402).

But we are not required to overrule Buck v. Beach, nor make it yield in any particular in order to sustain the [446] tax in the case at bar. It, in effect, reserved from its principle inheritance or succession taxing acts by rejecting as not in point cases which involved them. We said: "The foundation upon which such acts rest is different from that which exists where the assessment is levied upon property. The succession or inheritance tax is not a tax upon property, as has been frequently held by this court (Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 44 L. ed. 969, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189, 47 L. ed. 439, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277), and therefore the decisions arising under such inheritance tax cases are not in point."

The tax under review is of that kind. In other words, it is not a tax on property, but a tax upon the transfer of the property by the will of the testator of plaintiffs in error, as provided by the laws of the state. The will was probated in Connecticut, where the deceased was a resident, but ancillary letters of administration were issued to plaintiffs in error by the surrogates' court, county of New York, state of New York, and the taxed notes were part of the property disposed of by his will. It appears, therefore, that the property is in the control of the courts of New York. In other words, the laws of New York are invoked, accomplish its transfer, and subject it to the dispositions of the will, and make effectual the purposes of the testator. Blackstone v. Miller, supra.

Digitized by Google

I am dealing with the power of taxation under our decisions. If there be injustice in its exercise by measuring the tax by the value of the credits represented by the notes, it is an injustice which this court cannot redress.

I am authorized to say that Mr. Justice Pitney concurs in this opinion.

Mr. Justice Lamar (dissenting):

I concur in Mr. Justice McKenna's analysis of Buck v. Beach and the other cases, but am of the opinion that the principle there decided applies as well to inheritance and [447] transfer taxes on notes as to direct taxes; and that therefore the judgment in the present case should be reversed.

I am authorized to say that the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Van Devanter concur in this dissent.

RAFAEL MARTINEZ NADAL, Plff. in Err.,
v.
DAVID W. MAY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 447–454.)

Federal courts — following decisions of Porto Rico courts — date when statute takes effect.

Decisions of the supreme court of Porto Rico that the Civil Code of March 1, 1902, went into effect on July 1, 1902, would be followed by the Federal Supreme Court as having become a rule of property, even if the latter court did not think, as it does, that probably the certificate of the Secretary of Porto Rico to that effect expressed the legislative will.

[No. 130.]

Submitted December 12, 1913. Restored for reargument January 26, 1914. Reargued April 6 and 7, 1914. Decided April 20, 1914.

IN ERROR to the District Court of the United States for Porto Rico to review a judgment in favor of defendant in a suit to establish title to real property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. N. B. K. Pettingill and F. L. Cornwell for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Felix Frankfurter and Wolcott H. Pitkin, Jr., Attorney General of Porto Rico, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit by the plaintiff in error to establish his title to one-half interest in a plantation called "Carmen," as devisee of his aunt, Altagracia Nadal. It is alleged that the plantation was bought with the separate money of Altagracia Nadal by her husband, after marriage; that she became the owner of one undivided half, subject to [451] the administration of her husband until the termination of the conjugal partnership, and that this half passed to her devisee at her death. The complaint admits that after the purchase the husband purported to convey the whole plantation to a third person, but alleges that the wife did not consent to the conveyance, and that therefore her rights remained.

It appears that on May 1, 1901, Altagracia Nadal brought a suit against her husband for an account of her paraphernal property, alleging, among other things, that he had recorded in his favor the estate Carmen, acquired by a deed of October 25, 1900, and praying judgment that it was her private property because bought with her separate funds, and for a cautionary notice to be entered in the registry. On November, 10, 1901, a settlement was made by which it was stated that the husband had received $10,000 as the product of the wife's paraphernal property, had paid her $5,000 and given a mortgage for the other $5,000, and in view thereof, she "renounces all the rights and interests which she might have against her husband because of the facts stated in the said complaint." The instrument was presented to the court with a prayer that the court would hold that the parties had desisted from continuing the action and that the cautionary notice be canceled, which was granted on November 21. There had been conveyances of Carmen, without consideration, it was testified; there was a reconveyance to the husband, and on June 2, 1902, he conveyed it, without his wife's consent, to Elisa Sanjurjo, who, on August 29 of the same year, conveyed it to the people of Porto Rico, for valuable consideration, there being then no cautionary notice on record. On April 10, 1906, the wife assigned to the plaintiff the mortgage received by her on the above settlement, and on April 27, 1906, made the will under which the plaintiff claims.

By this will the testatrix left to the plaintiff a mortgage [452] described, with all its rights and actions (así como todos sus derechos y acciones) and also the mortgage assigned on April 10, in case the assignment should not have been effective in favor of her said nephew Rafael Martinez y Nadal, todos los derechos y acciones que puedan caberme en los bienes míos que estén á nombre de mi esposo Isidro Fernandez Sanjurjo, en virtud de la transacción celebrada con mi dicho esposo.

Digitized by Google

The plaintiff's claim is founded on these last words. The official translation accepted by the court reads that she leaves the mortgage "in case the assignment shall not have become effective, all the rights and actions which may pertain to me in my properties which are in the name of my husband Isidro Fernandez Sanjurjo, by virtue of the settlement made with my said husband." The plaintiff contends that the word "and" should be read in before "all the rights and actions" on the notion that an y has dropped out or should be implied. He argues that the estate Carmen was not embraced in the settlement, because community property in which the wife had and retained a community interest, and that the last words devise it—en virtud de signifying more nearly in spite of the settlement than by virtue of it.

On the other hand, it is argued that the settlement renounced all claim by the wife to Carmen, if any she had; that the last words of the will have an import similar to that of those used in connection with the previous mortgage; that en virtud de means by virtue of, that if the wife had a claim it was outside the settlement, and those words would not describe it, even if, at the date of the will, the estate had still stood in the husband's name, where notoriously, and as she well knew, it had not stood for years. The government also claims as a bona fide purchaser without notice. It is obvious, we think, from this summary, that these arguments against the plaintiff's claim are hard to meet, and they were not met. But it is [453] not necessary absolutely to decide on their validity as the case is disposed of by a preliminary point.

Both sides agree that the wife's assent to a conveyance by her husband was made necessary for the first time by § 1328 of the Civil Code of March 1, 1902. Unless that Code went into effect at its date, it did not apply to the conveyance of June 2. The plaintiff argues with much force that it was in effect then, and that the decisions to the contrary are all based on a mistaken certificate of the Secretary of Porto Rico; but we are of opinion that the considerations on the other side must prevail. On the last day of its session the legislature passed four codes making material changes in the existing law,—the Political Code, the Penal Code, the Code of Criminal Procedure, and the Civil Code, which, although in form separate acts, were published in one volume and constituted a large part of a system. Two of these Codes fixed July 1, 1902, as the time for their taking effect. It was the duty of the Secretary to promulgate the laws (act of Congress of April 12, 1900, chap. 191, § 19, 31 Stat. at L. 77, 81), and he was directed by an act of the same date as that of the Codes to revise and arrange the provisions of the Codes for publication along with the Joint Codes Committee of the legislature; the arrangement to be completed as soon as practicable after April 1, and publication being expected on or before August 1. A resolution of the day before shows that they had to be enacted before enrolment with manuscript corrections. Rev. Stat. & Codes of Porto Rico, 1902, p. 299. The Secretary certified that they were in effect on and after July 1, 1902. But the injustice of making the Civil Code operative before its contents could be known and before the revision contemplated by the law was so manifest that on February 24, 1903, an act was passed purporting to validate all conveyances of real estate and in general all acts that required certification by a notary executed after March 1, 1902, and on or before January 1, 1903, [454] if they would have been valid by the laws in force on February 28, 1902. This court assumed that the Civil Code went into effect on July 1, in Ortega v. Lara, 202 U. S. 339, 343, 50 L. ed. 1055, 1056, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 707, and the supreme court of Porto Rico has decided the same point twice. Morales v. Registrar of Property, 16 P. R. R. 109, 114; Busó v. Busó, 18 P. R. R. 864, 837, 868. It is impossible to know how many or how important transactions may have taken place on the faith of these repeated solemn assurances, and apart from the general unwillingness of this court to overrule the local tribunals upon matters of purely local concern (Sante Fé C. R. Co. v. Friday, 232 U. S. 694, 700, ante, 802, 803, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468), it is not too much to say that the decisions have become a rule of property, even if we did not think, as we do, that probably the Secretary's certificate expressed the legislative will.

Judgment affirmed.

SAN JOAQUIN & KINGS RIVER CANAL & IRRIGATION COMPANY, Incorporated, Appt.,

v.

COUNTY OF STANISLAUS, in the State of California, et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 454–461.)

Estoppel — by silence — judicial relief against rate regulation.

1. The failure of an irrigation company to offer any evidence as to its water rights at the hearing before the boards of supervisors by whom its rates were fixed does not prevent it from asserting as a ground for judicial relief that the value of such water rights was not taken into account,—especially where the supervisors contend that the company is entitled to no compensation for such rights.

Digitized by Google

[For other cases, see Estoppel, III. b, 5, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Waters — municipal regulation of irrigation rates — valuation — water rights.

2. The right of an irrigation company as against riparian proprietors, acquired either by purchase or prescription, to withdraw the water that it distributes through its canals, must be included in the valuation of its property in determining whether the water rates fixed by county boards of supervisors will yield the 6 per cent return upon the value of its property to which the company is entitled, under Cal. act of March 12, 1885, empowering such boards to fix the rates, notwithstanding the declaration in Cal. Const. 1879, that water appropriated for sale is appropriated to a public use.

[For other cases, see Waters, III. b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 303.]

Argued March 18, 1914. Decided April 27, 1914.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of California to review a decree dismissing a bill to restrain the enforcement of municipal regulation of irrigation rates. Reversed.

See same case below, 191 Fed. 875.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Edward F. Treadwell argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Frank H. Short, Garret W. McEnerney, Aldis B. Browne, and Alexander Britton, filed a brief for appellant:

The contention of counsel for appellees and the decision of the trial court are based on certain decisions of Judge Ross, circuit judge of the southern district of California, as to the meaning of the California constitutional provisions, which have been disapproved by the supreme court of California, and (previous to the decision in the case at bar) by the United States circuit court of appeals of the ninth circuit, and, in fact, by Judge Morrow, as a judge of the latter court, and by the railroad commission of California.

People v. Stephens, 62 Cal. 209; McCrary v. Beaudry, 67 Cal. 120, 7 Pac. 264; Fresno Canal & Irrig. Co. v. Rowell, 80 Cal. 114, 13 Am. St. Rep. 112, 22 Pac. 53; Fresno Canal & Irrig. Co. v. Dunbar, 80 Cal. 530, 22 Pac. 275; San Diego Flume Co. v. Chase, 87 Cal. 561, 25 Pac. 756, 20 Pac. 825; Clyne v. Benicia Water Co. 100 Cal. 310, 34 Pac. 714; Balfour v. Fresno Canal & Irrig. Co. 109 Cal. 221, 41 Pac. 876; People ex rel. Ricks Water Co. v. Elk River Mill & Lumber Co. 107 Cal. 221, 48 Am. St. Rep. 125, 40 Pac. 531; Merrill v. South Side Irrig. Co. 112 Cal. 426, 44 Pac. 720; Fairbanks v. Rollins, 6 Cal. Unrep. 99, 54 Pac. 79; San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 556, 38 L.R.A. 460, 62 Am. St. Rep. 261, 50 Pac. 633; Fresno Canal & Irrig. Co. v. Park, 129 Cal. 437, 62 Pac. 87; Fellows v. Los Angeles, 151 Cal. 52, 90 Pac. 137; Stanislaus Water Co. v. Bachman, 152 Cal. 716, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 359, 93 Pac. 858; Leavitt v. Lassen Irrig. Co. 157 Cal. 82, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 213, 106 Pac. 404; Lassen Irrig. Co. v. Long, 157 Cal. 94, 106 Pac. 409; Thayer v. California Development Co. 164 Cal. 117, 128 Pac. 21; Wilterding v. Green, 4 Idaho, 773, 45 Pac. 134; San Diego Land & Town Co. v. National City, 74 Fed. 79, 174 U. S. 739, 43 L. ed. 1154, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 804; Lanning v. Osborne, 76 Fed. 319; Osborne v. San Diego Land & Town Co. 178 U. S. 22, 44 L. ed. 961, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 860; San Diego Flume Co. v. Souther, 32 C. C. A. 548, 61 U. S. App. 134, 90 Fed. 164, 44 C. C. A. 143, 104 Fed. 707, 112 Fed. 228; Boise City Irrig. & Land Co. v. Clark, 65 C. C. A. 399, 131 Fed. 415; Imperial Water Co. v. Holabird, 116 C. C. A. 526, 197 Fed. 4; Palmer v. Southern California Mountain Water Co. (decided Jan. 21, 1913, Cal. R. Com.)

A water right, whether acquired by appropriation, purchase, prescription, or condemnation, is property, and the canal company appropriating it is the proprietor thereof.

Black's Pomeroy, Water Rights, §§ 58–61; People ex rel. Ricks Water Co. v. Elk River Mill & Lumber Co. 107 Cal. 221, 48 Am. St. Rep. 125, 40 Pac. 531; State v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 81 Minn. 422, 84 N. W. 302. Strickler v. Colorado Springs, 16 Colo. 61, 25 Am. St. Rep. 245, 26 Pac. 313; Gould, Water Rights, § 324; Bigelow v. Draper, 6 N. D. 152, 69 N. W. 570; Buffalo v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 39 N. Y. Supp. 4; Hallock v. Suitor, 37 Or. 9, 60 Pac. 384; Wyatt v. Larimer & W. Irrig. Co. 1 Colo.

NOTE.—On state regulation generally of tolls, rates, and prices—see note to Winchester & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Croxton, 33 L.R.A. 177.

On treatment of franchises, water rights, and miscellaneous intangibles in public service property valuations—see note to Home Teleph. Co. v. Carthage, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1063.

On reasonableness of governmental regulation of water rates—see note to Knoxville v. Knoxville Water Co. 53 L. ed. U. S. 371.

Digitized by Google

App. 480, 29 Pac. 906; Rigney v. Tacoma Light & Water Co. 9 Wash. 570, 26 L.R.A. 425, 38 Pac. 147; New Whatcom v. Fairhaven Land Co. 24 Wash. 493, 54 L.R.A. 190, 64 Pac. 735; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 10 Pac. 674; St. Helena Water Co. v. Forbes, 62 Cal. 182, 45 Am. Rep. 659; Gould v. Stafford, 91 Cal. 146, 27 Pac. 543; Winnipiseogee Lake Cotton & Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Gilford, 64 N. H. 337, 10 Atl. 849; Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Concord, 66 N. H. 562, 32 L.R.A. 621, 34 Atl. 241; Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 984; Paine Lumber Co. v. United States, 55 Fed. 854; Sulliman Timber Co. v. Mobile, 110 Fed. 186; Union Depot Street R. & Transfer Co. v. Brunswick, 31 Minn. 297, 47 Am. Rep. 789, 17 N. W. 626; Bradshaw v. Duluth Imperial Mill Co. 52 Minn. 59, 53 N. W. 1068; Meyers v. St. Louis, 8 Mo. App. 266; Emporia v. Soden, 25 Kan. 588, 37 Am. Rep. 265; Water Supply & Storage Co. v. Tenney, 24 Colo. 344, 51 Pac. 505; Mud Creek Irrig. Agri. & Mfg. Co. v. Vivian, 74 Tex. 170, 11 S. W. 1078; North Point Consol. Irrig. Co. v. Utah & S. L. Canal Co. 16 Utah, 246, 40 L.R.A. 851, 67 Am. St. Rep. 607, 52 Pac. 168; Montecito Valley Water Co. v. Santa Barbara, 144 Cal. 578, 77 Pac. 1113; Nevada Ditch Co. v. Bennett, 30 Or. 59, 60 Am. St. Rep. 777, 45 Pac. 472; Albuquerque Land & Irrig. Co. v. Gutierrez, 10 N. M. 177, 61 Pac. 357; Thayer v. California Development Co. 164 Cal. 117, 128 Pac. 21; Palmer v. Southern California Mountain Water Co. (decided Jan. 21, 1913, Cal. R. Com.); Wilterding v. Green, 4 Idaho, 773, 45 Pac. 134; San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 556, 38 L.R.A. 460, 62 Am. St. Rep. 261, 50 Pac. 633; Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 124 Fed. 574.

The right to collect rates or compensation for the use of water is a franchise, which vested in the company upon its incorporation. Disconnected with any water which the company owned and which it could sell, this franchise was only of nominal value; but when the company acquired the absolute right to divert the water, the franchise became a valuable property right.

San Joaquin & K. River Canal & Irrig. Co. v. Merced County, 2 Cal. App. 593, 84 Pac. 285; People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 41, 2 L.R.A. 255, 7 Am. St. Rep. 684, 18 N. E. 692; Montgomery County v. Schuylkill Bridge Co. 110 Pa. 54, 20 Atl. 407; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 37 L. ed. 463, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 544, 42 L. ed. 819, 848, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 124 Fed. 594; Consolidated Gas Co. v. Mayer, 146 Fed. 150; Consolidated Gas Co. v. New York, 157 Fed. 849; Willcox v. Consolidated Gas Co. 212 U. S. 19, 53 L. ed. 382, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1134, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192, 15 Ann. Cas. 1034; Kennebec Water Dist. v. Waterville, 97 Me. 220, 60 L.R.A. 856, 54 Atl. 6.

The right to divert this water increased the value of the tangible property of the company to the extent of the value of the right to divert the same. The water carried in the canal is as much tangible property as the earthwork and structures.

Fudickar v. East Riverside Irrig. Dist. 109 Cal. 29, 41 Pac. 1024; Lower Kings River Water Ditch Co. v. Kings River & F. Canal Co. 60 Cal. 408; Williams v. Harter, 121 Cal. 47, 53 Pac. 405; Jacob v. Lorenz, 98 Cal. 332, 33 Pac. 119; 2 Kinney, Irrig. & Water Rights, § 773.

The water rights owned by complainant have added to the value of its property as a "going concern" to the extent of the value of such water rights.

National Waterworks Co. v. Kansas City, 62 Fed. 853; Gloucester Water Supply Co. v. Gloucester, 179 Mass. 365, 60 N. E. 977; Norwich Gas & Electric Co. v. Norwich, 76 Conn. 565, 57 Atl. 746; Kennebec Water Dist. v. Waterville, 97 Me. 220, 60 L.R.A. 856, 54 Atl. 19; C. H. Venner Co. v. Urbana Waterworks, 174 Fed. 348; Omaha v. Omaha Water Co. 218 U. S. 180, 54 L. ed. 991, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1084, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 615.

Riparian rights are well established in California, and must be extinguished by the canal company.

Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 10 Pac. 674; Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal & Irrig. Co. 155 Cal. 59, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 391, 99 Pac. 502; Miller v. Bay Cities Water Co. 157 Cal. 256, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 772, 107 Pac. 115.

Riparian rights are extinguished by condemnation.

Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 10 Pac. 674; Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal & Irrig. Co. 155 Cal. 64, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 391, 99 Pac. 502; Stevinson v. San Joaquin & K. River Canal & Irrig. Co. 162 Cal. 141, 121 Pac. 398, 164 Cal. 221, 128 Pac. 924.

Return on water rights is permitted in other cases.

Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 124 Fed. 575, 192 Fed. 137; San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 556, 38 L.R.A. 460, 62 Am. St. Rep. 261, 50 Pac. 633; Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Mateo Waterworks, 64 Cal. 123, 28 Pac. 447; Katz v. Walkinshaw, 141 Cal. 123, 64 L.R.A. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 35, 70 Pac. 663, 74 Pac. 766.

Digitized by Google

Messrs. Garret W. McEnerney, Frank H. Short, and Edward F. Treadwell filed a separate brief for appellant:

Appellees' contention that the company is only entitled to a return on its investment, and not upon the present value of its property, is contrary to their position in the former case between the same parties, and is contrary to the uniform decisions of this court since that time.

Knoxville v. Knoxville Water Co. 212 U. S. 1, 53 L. ed. 371, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148; Minnesota Rate Case (Simpson v. Shepard) 230 U. S. 352, 57 L. ed. 1511, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1151, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729; San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 556, 38 L.R.A. 460, 62 Am. St. Rep. 261, 50 Pac. 633; Stanislaus County v. San Joaquin & K. River Canal & Irrig. Co. 192 U. S. 201, 48 L. ed. 406, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 241; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 544, 42 L. ed. 848, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Willcox v. Consolidated Gas Co. 212 U. S. 19, 53 L. ed. 382, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1134, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192, 15 Ann. Cas. 1034; Ashland v. Ashland W. Co. 4 Wis. R. C. R. 273; Tighe v. Clinton Tel. Co. 3 Wis. R. C. R. 117.

The contention of appellees that the waters acquired by the canal company by appropriation, prescription, or contract were "public waters" is entirely unfounded under the laws of the state of California.

Palmer v. Southern California Mountain Water Co. (decided Jan. 21, 1913, Cal. R. Com.)

A canal company acquires its water right by extinguishment, in toto or pro tanto, of the rights of the riparian owners; and whether it acquires them by prescription, by grant, or by condemnation, it does not succeed to the riparian right, but extinguishes the right of the riparian owner to object to the diversion, and in the case of a public service company the tacit consent of the riparian owner to the diversion is, for all practical purposes, equivalent to a grant.

Duckworth v. Watsonville Water & Light Co. 150 Cal. 525, 89 Pac. 338; Fresno Street R. Co. v. Southern P. R. Co. 135 Cal. 202, 67 Pac. 773; Southern California R. Co. v. Slauson, 138 Cal. 342, 94 Am. St. Rep. 58, 71 Pac. 352; Katz v. Walkinshaw, 141 Cal. 136, 64 L.R.A. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 35, 70 Pac. 663, 74 Pac. 766; Crescent Canal Co. v. Montgomery, 143 Cal. 248, 65 L.R.A. 940, 76 Pac. 1032; Montecito Valley Water Co. v. Santa Barbara, 144 Cal. 578, 77 Pac. 1113; Newport v. Temescal Water Co. 149 Cal. 531, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1098, 87 Pac. 372; Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal & Irrig. Co. 155 Cal. 59, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 391, 99 Pac. 502; Barton v. Riverside Water Co. 155 Cal. 509, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 331, 101 Pac. 790; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 10 Pac. 674; Miller & Lux v. Enterprise Canal & Land Co. 142 Cal. 208, 100 Am. St. Rep. 115, 75 Pac. 770; Miller & Lux v. Enterprise Canal & Land Co. — Cal. —, decided Dec. 20, 1913.

The dedication of property to a public use does not vest title to the property in the public.

Pacific Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Eshleman, 166 Cal. 640, 137 Pac. 1119.

The argument that, if the water rights of the canal company were condemned, the damages would go to the irrigators, and not to the canal company, and that therefore the canal company does not own them, is without foundation in law or fact.

Leavitt v. Lassen Irrig Co. 157 Cal. 82, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 213, 106 Pac. 404.

The claim that the complainant cannot claim a due return upon its property for the alleged reason that the claim was not made before the supervisors at the time of the passage of the ordinance fixing the rates is unfounded.

Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 82 Cal. 286, 6 L.R.A. 756, 16 Am. St. Rep. 116, 22 Pac. 910, 1046; San Diego Land & Town Co. v. National City, 74 Fed. 79; San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 556, 38 L.R.A. 460, 62 Am. St. Rep. 261, 50 Pac. 633.

Mr. James P. Langhorne argued the cause, and, with Messrs. L. J. Maddux, Parker S. Maddux, Denver S. Church, M. F. McCormick, and H. S. Shaffer, filed a brief for appellees:

Assuming, for the argument, that complainant was the owner of the alleged water right at the time the rates were fixed by the county supervisors, nevertheless it has no standing in the Federal court to complain of the noninclusion of the value of such water right, because, when the rates complained of were being fixed by the county supervisors upon appellant's own initiative and petition, it wholly failed to claim before the rate boards that it owned any water right, or to submit to them any evidence of the value of any such water right.

Home Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Los Angeles, 211 U. S. 265, 53 L. ed. 176, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50; Knoxville v. Knoxville Water Co. 212 U. S. 1, 8, 53 L. ed. 371, 378, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148.

The word "appropriation," as used in the state Constitution, has been construed by the supreme court of the state of California as not referring to the act of taking or the method of acquiring water, but as meaning "devoted to."

Merrill v. South Side Irrig. Co. 112 Cal. 433, 44 Pac. 720.

The appropriation of water is made and is complete if the water be actually taken from the stream with the intent to appropriate it for a beneficial use, and if it shall be applied to such use.

Digitized by Google

McDonald v. Bear River & A. Water & Min. Co. 13 Cal. 220, 1 Mor. Min. Rep. 626; Watterson v. Saldunbehere, 101 Cal. 112, 35 Pac. 432.

An appropriator of water obtains a good title to its use by prescription as against the riparian owner of five years' open, continuous, and adverse use of it.

Duckworth v. Watsonville Water & Light Co. 150 Cal. 530, 89 Pac. 338.

Complainant water company, having dedicated its water rights to the use of the public, has forever dedicated them to a public use, and is not entitled to have them valued as part of its plant, or otherwise, in a proceeding to fix the rates to be charged the public.

San Diego Land & Town Co. v. National City, 74 Fed. 79; Leavitt v. Lassen Irrig. Co. 157 Cal. 82, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 213, 106 Pac. 404; Lassen Irrig. Co. v. Leavitt, 157 Cal. 94, 106 Pac. 409; San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 567, 38 L.R.A. 460, 62 Am. St. Rep. 261, 50 Pac. 633; Boise City Irrig. & Land Co. v. Clark, 65 C. C. A. 399, 131 Fed. 415.

The supreme court of the state of California has decided in the cases of Leavitt v Lassen, 157 Cal. 82, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 213, 106 Pac. 404, and Lassen Irrig. Co. v. Long, 157 Cal. 94, 106 Pac. 409, that a water company which has appropriated (dedicated) its waters to public use can have thereafter, as between itself and the public, no private right of the water, can give no preferential rights to the water, and is but the purveyor of the water, and the instrumentality for its distribution to the public.

Complainant is not entitled to have its alleged water rights valued as its franchise. Complainant introduced no proof as to franchises or their value. Complainant's franchises cost it nothing.

Willcox v. Consolidated Gas Co. 212 U. S. 19, 53 L. ed. 382, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1134, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192, 15 Ann. Cas. 1034.

Complainant has a monopoly of furnishing water in the territory under the flow of its canals, and hence is not entitled to any valuation of "going concern" or "good will."

Ibid; Contra Costa Water Co. v. Oakland, 159 Cal. 323, 113 Pac. 668.

The master having found that complainant has not come into court with clean hands, and his findings being fully supported by the evidence, defendants are entitled to a dismissal of the bill of complaint on that ground, aside from the ground that complainant has wholly failed to establish its case that the rates are unreasonably low.

Clarke v. White, 12 Pet. 178, 9 L. ed. 1046; Galloway v. Finley, 12 Pet. 297, 9 L. ed. 1092; Wheeler v. Sage, 1 Wall. 518, 17 L. ed. 646; Kitchen v. Rayburn, 19 Wall. 254, 22 L. ed. 64; Manhattan Medicine Co. v. Wood, 108 U. S. 218, 27 L. ed. 706, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 436; Roberts v. Northern P. R. Co. 158 U. S. 13, 39 L. ed. 877, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 756; New York v. Pine, 185 U. S. 103, 46 L. ed. 825, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 592; Creath v. Sims, 5 How. 192, 12 L. ed. 111.

If a water company makes a contract with a consumer to furnish water at less than the rate established by public authority, it should, in a proceeding attacking the rate as unreasonably low, be held by the court to have actually received the public rate, and not the lesser special contract rate.

Willcox v. Consolidated Gas Co. supra; Knoxville v. Knoxville Water Co. 212 U. S. 1, 53 L. ed. 371, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148; Boise City Irrig. & Land Co. v. Clark, 65 C. C. A. 399, 131 Fed. 415; San Diego Land & Town Co. v. National City, 74 Fed. 79; Contra Costa Water Co. v. Oakland, 159 Cal. 323, 113 Pac. 668.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill to restrain the enforcement of orders passed by the boards of supervisors of the three defendant counties, Stanislaus, Fresno, and Merced, establishing water rates to be charged by the plaintiff, the appellant; the ground of the bill being that the orders deprive the plaintiff of its property without due process of law. By a statute of March 12, 1885, the boards are authorized to fix these rates for their several counties, but so that the returns to the parties furnishing the water shall be not less than 6 per cent upon the value of the "canals, ditches, flumes, chutes, and all other property actually used and useful to the appropriation and furnishing of such water." The rates when fixed are binding for one year and until established anew or abrogated. The bill concerns rates fixed in 1907, and the question before the court has been narrowed to a single issue. If the plaintiff is entitled to 6 per cent upon its tangible property alone it is agreed that the orders must stand. But if the plaintiff has water rights that are to be taken into account, the rates fixed will fall short of giving it what it is entitled to and must be set aside. The circuit court dismissed the bill (191 Fed. 875), and on this appeal figures are immaterial, the only question being whether the principle adopted is right.

Digitized by Google

[459] It was suggested, to be sure, at the argument, that it does not appear that the plaintiff offered any evidence as to water rights at the hearing before the supervisors, and therefore that it ought not to be allowed to complain now that nothing was allowed for them. But this evidently is an afterthought. In general, a party may wait until a law is passed or regulation is made, and then insist upon his constitutional rights. Prentis v. Atlantic Coast Line Co. 211 U. S. 210, 227, 229, 53 L. ed. 150, 159, 160, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 67. This we understand to be the view of the California courts as to these very boards. Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 82 Cal. 286, 315, 6 L.R.A. 756, 16 Am. St. Rep. 116, 22 Pac. 910, 1046; San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 558, 564, 38 L.R.A. 460, 62 Am. St. Rep. 261, 50 Pac. 633. Moreover, as the defendants contend that the plaintiff is entitled to no compensation for water rights, to offer evidence would have been an idle form.

It is not disputed that the plaintiff has a right as against riparian proprietors to withdraw the water that it distributes through its canals. Whether the right was paid for, as the plaintiff says, or not, it has been confirmed by prescription and is now beyond attack. It is not disputed, either, that if the plaintiff were the owner of riparian lands to which its water was distributed, it would have a property in the water that could not be taken without compensation. But it is said that as the plaintiff appropriates this water to distribution and sale, it thereby dedicates it to public use under California law, and so loses its private right in the same. It appears to us that when the cases cited for this proposition are pressed to the conclusion reached in the present case, they are misapplied. No doubt it is true that such an appropriation and use of the water entitles those within reach of it to demand the use of a reasonable share on payment. It well may be true that if the waters were taken for a superior use by eminent domain those whose lands were irrigated would be compensated for the loss. But even if the rate paid is not to be determined as upon a purchase of water from the plaintiff, [460] still, at the lowest, the plaintiff has the sole right to furnish this water, the owner of the irrigated lands cannot get it except through the plaintiff's help, and it would be unjust not to take that fact into account in fixing the rates. We are not called upon to decide what the rate shall be, or even the principle by which it shall be measured. But it is proper to add a few words.

The declaration in the Constitution of 1879 that water appropriated for sale is appropriated to a public use must be taken according to its subject-matter. The use is not by the public at large, like that of the ocean for sailing, but by certain individuals for their private benefit respectively. Thayer v. California Development Co. 164 Cal. 117, 128, 128 Pac. 21; Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 161, 41 L. ed. 369, 389, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56. The declaration, therefore, does not necessarily mean more than that the few within reach of the supply may demand it for a reasonable price. The roadbed of a railroad is devoted to a public use in a stricter sense, yet the title of the railroad remains, and the use, though it may be demanded, must be paid for. In this case it is said that a part of the water was appropriated before the Constitution went into effect, and that a suit now is pending to condemn more as against a riparian proprietor, for which, of course, the plaintiff must pay. It seems unreasonable to suppose that the Constitution meant that if a party, instead of using the water on his own land, as he may, sees fit to distribute it to others, he loses the rights that he has bought or lawfully acquired. Recurring to the fact that in every instance only a few specified individuals get the right to a supply, and that it clearly appears from the latest statement of the supreme court of California (Palmer v. Railroad Commission, January 20, 1914 [— Cal. —, 138 Pac. 997]) that the water when appropriated is private property, it is unreasonable to suppose that the constitutional declaration meant to compel a gift from the former owner to the users, and that in [461] dealing with water "appropriated for sale" it meant that there should be nothing to sell. See San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 556, 567, 38 L.R.A. 460, 62 Am. St. Rep. 261, 50 Pac. 633; Fresno Canal & Irrig. Co. v. Park, 129 Cal. 437, 443, et seq. 62 Pac. 87; Stanislaus Water Co. v. Bachman, 152 Cal. 716, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 359, 93 Pac. 858; Leavitt v. Lassen Irrig. Co. 157 Cal. 82, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 213, 106 Pac. 404.

Decree reversed.

Mr. Justice Pitney did not sit in this case.

THADDEUS DAVIDS COMPANY, Petitioner,

v.

CORTLANDT I. DAVIDS and Walter I. Davids, Trading as Davids Manufacturing Company.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 461–472.)

Trademarks — registration — surnames — ten years' exclusive use.

1. Marks which, like ordinary surnames, are not the subject of exclusive appropriation as a common-law trademark, could be registered as trademarks under the 4th proviso of the act of February 20, 1905 (33 Stat. at L. 724, chap. 592, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1459), § 5, that nothing therein should prevent the registration of any mark used in interstate or foreign commerce, or in commerce with the Indian tribes, which was in actual and exclusive use for ten years next preceding the passage of the act, since this proviso, although not having the effect of limiting the exceptions in that section with respect to marks of a scandalous sort and those embracing public insignia, must be deemed to modify the general prohibition contained in the 2d proviso in that section against the registration of marks consisting of names of persons, firms, or corporations, of terms descriptive of character or quality, or geographical names or terms.

Digitized by Google

[For other cases, see Trademark, VI., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Trademarks — registration — protection.

2. One who, by virtue of ten years' actual and exclusive use, is entitled under the 4th proviso of the act of February 20, 1905, § 5, to register as a trademark a mark which was not the subject of exclusive appropriation as a common-law trademark, becomes, on due registration, the "owner" of the "trademark," and is entitled to the protection in its use as such which, by §§ 16 and 19, is afforded to an "owner."

[For other cases, see Trademark, VI., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Trademarks — infringement of registered mark — surname — colorable imitation.

3. The protection against colorable imitation given to the owner of a registered trademark by the act of February 20, 1905, § 16, extends to all trademarks within the act, including those which, like surnames, are registerable under the 4th proviso of § 5 by virtue of the ten-year clause, although not the subject of exclusive appropriation as a common-law trademark, provided they are not used contrary to § 21, "in unlawful business," or "upon any article injurious in itself," or "with the design of deceiving the public," and have not been "abandoned."

[For other cases, see Trademark, IV., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Trademarks — registration of marks not technical trademarks — infringement.

4. The reproduction, copy, or imitation which, under the act of February 20, 1905, § 16, constitutes an infringement of a registered trademark, must be such as is calculated to mislead the public with respect to the origin or ownership of the goods, and thus to invade the right of the registrant to the use of the name or term as a designation of his merchandise, where the mark, consisting of names or terms having a double significance, and being susceptible of legitimate uses with respect to their primary sense, could only have been registered under the 4th proviso of § 5, as having been in actual and exclusive use for ten years.

[For other cases, see Trademark, IV. a, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Trademark — registration of surname — infringement.

5. A mark consisting of a surname which, though not the subject of exclusive appropriation as a common-law trademark, has been registered as a trademark by virtue of the ten years' clause in the 4th proviso of the act of February 20, 1905, § 5, is not reproduced, copied, or imitated, contrary to § 16, where a person bearing the same name uses it in his own business, although dealing in similar goods, if the name is not used in a manner tending to mislead, and it is clearly made to appear that the goods are his own, and not those of the registrant.

[For other cases, see Trademark, IV. a, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Trademark — registration of surname — infringement.

6. The trademark "Davids" being a surname registered under the ten years' clause in the 4th proviso of the act of February 20, 1905, § 5, and placed by the registrant prominently at the top of its labels on ink manufactured by it, is colorably imitated, contrary to § 16 of that act, by persons bearing the same surname, who put "C. I. Davids" in the same position on their ink labels, and at the bottom of such labels put "Davids Mfg. Co."

[For other cases, see Trademark, IV., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Injunction — against colorable infringement of registered trademark — extent of relief.

7. The owner of a registered trademark in the surname "Davids," as applied to inks, who places such mark prominently at the top of his labels, is entitled to an injunction to restrain persons bearing the same surname from violating the prohibitions of the act of February 20, 1905, § 16, against colorable imitation by the use of the words "Davids Mfg. Co.," and by the use of the word "Davids" at the top of their labels in connection with the business of making and selling inks.

[For other cases, see Injunction, I. m; II. b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 184.]

Argued January 22, 1914. Decided April 27, 1914.

ON WRIT of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit to review a decree which, on a second appeal, reversed a decree of the NOTE.—On injunctive relief against infringement of trademark—see notes to McLean v. Fleming, 24 L. ed. U. S. 828; Lawrence Mfg. Co. v. Tennessee Mfg. Co. 34 L. ed. U. S. 997; Coats v. Merrick Thread Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 847; and Dr. S. A. Richmond Nervine Co. v. Richmond, 40 L. ed. U. S. 155.

Digitized by Google

Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, enjoining the infringement of a registered trademark. Decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals reversed and that of the Circuit Court affirmed.

See same case below, 114 C. C. A. 355, 192 Fed. 915.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. P. Preble argued the cause and filed a brief for petitioner.

Mr. Emerson R. Newell argued the cause and filed a brief for respondent.

Mr. Justice Hughes delivered the opinion of the court:

Thaddeus Davids Company, manufacturer of inks, etc., brought this suit for the infringement of its registered trademark "DAVIDS." It was alleged that the complainant was the owner of the trademark; that it had been used in interstate commerce by the complainant and its predecessors in business for upwards of eighty years; that on January 22, 1907, it had been registered by the complainant [464] as a trademark, applicable to inks and stamp pads, under the act of February 20, 1905 (chap. 592, 33 Stat. at L. 724, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1459); that the complainant was entitled to such registration under § 5 of the act by reason of actual and exclusive use for more than ten years prior to the passage of the act; and that the defendants, Cortlandt I. Davids and Walter I. Davids, trading as Davids Manufacturing Company, were putting inks upon the market with infringing labels. The bill also charged unfair competition. Upon demurrer, the validity of the trademark was upheld by the circuit court of appeals (102 C. C. A. 249, 178 Fed. 801), and on final hearing, upon pleadings and proofs, complainant had a decree. 190 Fed. 285. This decree was reversed by the circuit court of appeals, which held that there was no infringement of the registered trademark, and that the suit, if regarded as one for unfair competition, was not within the jurisdiction of the court, the parties being citizens of the same state. 114 C. C. A. 355, 192 Fed. 915. Certiorari was granted.

As the mark consisted of an ordinary surname, it was not the subject of exclusive appropriation as a common-law trademark (Brown Chemical Co. v. Meyer, 139 U. S. 540, 542, 35 L. ed. 247, 248, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625; Howe Scale Co. v. Wyckoff, Seamans & Benedict, 198 U. S. 118, 134, 135, 49 L. ed. 972, 984, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609); and the complainant derived its right from the fourth proviso of § 5. This section, at the time of the registration, was as follows: [1]

"Sec. 5. That no mark by which the goods of the owner of the mark may be distinguished from other goods of the same class shall be refused registration as a trademark on account of the nature of such mark unless such mark—

"(a) Consists of or comprises immoral or scandalous matter;

"(b) Consists of or comprises the flag or coat of arms or [465] other insignia of the United States, or any simulation thereof, or of any state or municipality, or of any foreign nation: Provided, That trademarks which are identical with a registered or known trademark owned and in use by another, and appropriated to merchandise of the same descriptive properties, or which so nearly resemble a registered or known trademark owned and in use by another, and appropriated to merchandise of the same descriptive properties, as to be likely to cause confusion or mistake in the mind of the public, or to deceive purchasers, shall not be registered: Provided, That no mark which consists merely in the name of an individual, firm, corporation, or association, not written, printed, impressed, or woven in some particular or distinctive manner or in association with a portrait of the individual, or merely in words or devices which are descriptive of the goods with which they are used, or of the character or quality of such goods, or merely a geographical name or term, shall be registered under the terms of this act: Provided further, That no portrait of a living individual may be registered as a trademark, except by the consent of such individual, evidenced by an instrument in writing: And provided further, That nothing herein shall prevent the registration of any mark used by the applicant or his predecessors, or by those from whom title to the mark is derived, in commerce with foreign nations or among the several states, or with Indian tribes, which was in actual and exclusive use as a trademark of the applicant or his predecessors from whom he derived title for ten years next preceding the passage of this act."

The fourth proviso, or ten-year clause, has manifest reference to marks which are not technical trademarks; otherwise, it would have no effect. The owner of a trademark valid at common-law and used in commerce with foreign nations, or among the several states, or with Indian tribes, may obtain its registration under the act [466] without showing the user of ten years required by this clause. Secs. 1, 2. Congress evidently had in mind the fact that marks, although not susceptible of exclusive appropriation at common law, frequently acquired a special significance in connection with particular commodities; and the language of the fourth proviso was carefully chosen in order to bring within the statute those marks which, while not being technical trademarks, had been in "actual and exclusive use" as trademarks for ten years next preceding the passage of the act.[2] See [467] Re Cahn, 27 App. D. C. 173, 177; Worster Brewing Corp. v. Rueter, 30 App. D. C. 428, 430, 431; Re Wright, 33 App. D. C. 510.

[1] Section 5 has been amended by the acts of March 2, 1907, chap. 2573, 34 Stat. at L. 1251, February 18, 1911, chap. 113, 36 Stat. at L. 918, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1462; January 8, 1913, chap. 7, 37 Stat. at L. 649.

Digitized by Google

It is suggested, however, that the privilege accorded by this proviso is limited to marks which lie outside the positive prohibitions contained in the earlier clauses of § 5. Thus, it is said that the exceptions with respect to marks of a scandalous sort, and as to those embracing public insignia, are plainly intended to apply to all marks of the described character, whether or not they had been used for the preceding ten years (Re Cahn, supra); and it is urged that if this be so, the prohibitions of the provisos which precede the ten-year clause must likewise be deemed to restrict its scope. The emphasis in the present case is placed upon the second proviso in § 5. This, in substance, prohibits the registration of marks consisting merely of individual, firm, or corporate names, not written or printed in a distinctive manner, or of designations descriptive of the character or quality of the goods with which they are used, or of geographical names or terms; and it thus contains, as the court of appeals said, "a fairly complete list" of the marks used by dealers in selling their goods, which are not valid trademarks at common law. If the ten-year proviso be construed as not to apply to any marks within this comprehensive description, the clause would have little or nothing to act upon, and we can conceive of no reason for its insertion.

We think that the intent of Congress is clear. In the opening clause of § 5, it is provided that no mark by which the goods of the owner may be distinguished from other goods of the same class shall be refused registration as a trademark, on account of its nature, unless it consists of, or comprises: (a) immoral or scandalous matter; or (b) certain public insignia. The marks within these excepted classes are withdrawn from the purview of the act. Then, [468] in dealing with the marks which remain, limitations upon registrability are defined by the first, second, and third provisos; and the restrictions thus imposed are in turn qualified by the fourth proviso or ten-year clause. It follows that the fourth proviso in no way detracts from the force of the exceptions contained in clauses (a) and (b) which were plainly intended to be established without qualification; but the generality of the succeeding prohibitions is qualified. It may well be that this qualification, by reason of its terms, does not affect the first proviso, which relates to cases of conflicting trademarks, as the ten-year clause explicitly requires that the use shall have been "exclusive." But there can be no doubt that this clause does modify the general limitations contained in the second proviso with respect to the use of marks consisting of names of persons, firms, or corporations, of terms descriptive of character and quality, or of geographical names or terms. Marks of this sort, notwithstand-

---

[2] In the bill as it passed the House of Representatives, the fourth proviso in § 5 read as follows: "And provided further, that nothing herein shall prevent the registration of any trademark used by the applicant or his predecessors, or by those from whom title to the trademark is derived, in commerce with foreign nations or among the several states or with Indian tribes, which was in actual and lawful use as a trademark of the applicant, or his predecessors from whom he derived title, over ten years next preceding February twentieth, nineteen hundred and five." The bill was amended in the Senate so as to substitute the word "mark" for the word "trademark," where it is italicised above, and also by striking out the words "and lawful." The conference committee recommended that the House recede from its disagreement to these amendments and that the words "and exclusive" should be substituted for the words "and lawful." The managers on the part of the House made the following statement in explanation:

"On amendments Nos. 2 and 3: The word 'mark' is substituted in each instance for the word 'trademark' in the bill as passed the House, for the reason that the use of the word 'trademark' in this connection would not have accomplished the purposes of the proviso of the section in question.

"On amendment No. 4: The words 'and lawful' were stricken out by the Senate amendment, and by the conference report it is recommended that the words 'and exclusive' be substitued therefor. The purpose of this amendment is to prohibit the registration of any marks which are not technical trademarks unless the applicant has used such mark exclusively for the period of ten years. The words 'next preceding' are inserted in place of the words 'prior to' the passage of the act, so as to require the exclusive use of the mark for the ten years immediately preceding the passage of this act." Cor Rec. vol. 39, pp. 1399, 2412.

Digitized by Google

ing the general prohibition, were made registrable when the applicant or his predecessors had used them, actually and exclusively, as trademarks for the described period.

In this view, the complainant was entitled to register its mark. We need not stop to discuss the contention that the complainant's use had not been exclusive, or that the mark had not been used in interstate commerce, or the further defense that the complainant should be denied relief because it had deceived the public. It is enough to say that these contentions were without adequate support in the evidence and were properly overruled by the circuit court.

Having the right to register its mark, the complainant was entitled to its protection as a valid trademark under the statute. As defined in § 29, "the term 'trademark' includes any mark which is entitled to registration under the terms of this act." The defendants, [469] however, insisted below, and urge here, that although the mark was registrable, it was not susceptible of ownership, and hence that the complainant could not maintain a suit for injunction, profits, and damages, as provided in the statute, for the reason that the remedies it affords are available only to "owners" (§§ 16, 19). That is to say, that registration was expressly permitted, but that protection to the registrant was denied. This interpretation, of course, would render the ten-year proviso meaningless by stripping it of practical effect. It was not the intention of Congress thus to provide for a barren notice of an ineffectual claim, but to confer definite rights. The applicant who, by virtue of actual and exclusive use, is entitled to register his mark under this clause, becomes on due registration the "owner" of a "trademark" within the meaning of the act, and he is entitled to be protected in its use as such.

The further argument is made that, assuming that the complainant has a valid registered trademark, still the protection is limited to its use when standing alone (as the complainant has used it on its labels), and that there can be no infringement unless it is used in this precise manner. The statutory right cannot be so narrowly limited. Not only exact reproduction, but a "colorable imitation" is within the statute; otherwise, the trademark would be of little avail, as by shrewd simulation it could be appropriated with impunity. The act provides (§ 16): "Any person who shall, without the consent of the owner thereof, reproduce, counterfeit, copy, or colorably imitate any such trademark . . . and shall use, or shall have used, such reproduction, counterfeit, copy, or colorable imitation in commerce among the several states . . . shall be liable. . . ." This provision applies to all trademarks that are within the act, including those which come under the ten-year clause, provided they are not used "in unlawful business," or "upon any article injurious in itself," or [470] "with the design of deceiving the public," and have not been "abandoned" (§ 21).

But, while this is true, the inquiry as to the extent of the right thus secured by the statute, in the case of marks which are admitted to registration under the ten-year clause, is not completely answered. It is apparent that, with respect to names or terms coming within this class, there may be proper uses by others than the registrant, even in connection with trade in similar goods. It would seem to be clear, for example, that the registration for which the statute provides was not designed to confer a monopoly of the use of surnames, or of geographical names, as such. It is not to be supposed that Congress intended to prevent one from using his own name in trade, or from making appropriate reference to the town or city in which his place of business is located; and we do not find it necessary to consider the question of the validity of such an attempt if one were made. Congress has admitted to registration the names or terms belonging to the class under consideration simply because of their prior use as trademarks, although they had not been such in law. Their exclusive use as trademarks for the stated period was deemed, in the judgment of Congress, a sufficient assurance that they had acquired a secondary meaning as the designation of the origin or ownership of the merchandise to which they were affixed. And it was manifestly in this limited character only that they received statutory recognition, and, on registration, became entitled to protection under the act.

In the case, therefore, of marks consisting of names or terms having a double significance, and being susceptible of legitimate uses with respect to their primary sense, the reproduction, copy, or imitation which constitutes infringement must be such as is calculated to mislead the public with respect to the origin or ownership of the goods, and thus to invade the right of the registrant to the use [471] of the name or term as a designation of his merchandise. This we conceive to be the meaning of the statute. It follows that where the mark consists of a surname, a person having the same name and using it in his own business, although dealing in similar goods, would not be an infringer, provided that the name was not used in a manner tending to mislead, and it was clearly made to appear that the goods were his own, and not those of the registrant. This is not to say that, in this view, the case becomes one simply of unfair competition, as that category has been defined in the law; for, whatever analogy may exist with respect to the scope of protection in this class of cases, still the right to be protected against an unwarranted use of the registered mark has been made a statutory right, and the courts of the United States have been vested with jurisdiction of suits for infringement, regardless of diversity of citizenship. Moreover, in view of this statutory right, it could not be considered necessary that the complainant, in order to establish infringement, should show wrongful intent in fact on the part of the defendant, or facts justifying the inference of such an intent. Lawrence Mfg. Co. v. Tennessee Mfg. Co. 138 U. S. 537, 549, 34 L. ed. 997, 1004, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 396; Singer Mfg. Co. v. June Mfg. Co. 163 U. S. 169, 41 L. ed. 118, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1002; Elgin Nat. Watch Co. v. Illinois Watch Case Co. 179 U. S. 665, 674, 45 L. ed. 365, 379, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 270. Having duly registered under the act, the complainant would be entitled to protection against any infringing use; but, in determining the extent of the right which the statute secures, and what may be said to constitute an infringing use, regard must be had, as has been said, to the nature of the mark, and its secondary, as distinguished from its primary, significance.

Digitized by Google

The distinction between permissible and prohibited uses may be a difficult one to draw in particular cases, but it must be drawn in order to give effect to the act of Congress. That the distinction may readily be observed in practice is apparent. In this case, for instance, if the defendants [472] had so chosen, they could have adopted a distinct mark of their own, which would have served to designate their inks and completely to distinguish them from those of the complainant. It was not necessary that, in exercising the right to use their own name in trade, they should imitate the mark which the complainant used, and was entitled to use under the statute, as a designation of its wares; or that they should use the name in question upon their labels without unmistakably differentiating their goods from those which the complainant manufactured and sold.

We agree with the circuit court that infringement was shown. The complainant put its mark "DAVIDS'" prominently at the top of its labels. The defendants, in the same position on its labels, put "C. I. DAVIDS.'" At the bottom of their labels the defendants placed "DAVIDS MFG. CO." The use of the name in this manner was a mere simulation of the complainant's mark which it had duly registered; it constituted a "colorable imitation" within the meaning of the act. The decree of the circuit court accordingly restrained the defendants from the use of the words "Davids Manufacturing Company," and from the use of the word "Davids" at the top of their labels in connection with the business of making and selling inks. We think that the complainant was entitled to this measure of protection.

The decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals must therefore be reversed and that of the Circuit Court affirmed.

It is so ordered.

---

[473] ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY v. JOSEPH BEHRENS, Administrator, etc.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 473–478.)

Master and servant — employers' liability act — employee must be engaged in interstate commerce.

1. Congress intended, by the provisions of the employers' liability act of April 22, 1908 (35 Stat. at L. 65, chap. 149, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1322), making every common carrier by railroad while engaged in interstate commerce liable in damages to any person "suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce," to confine its action to injuries occurring when the particular service in which the employee was engaged was a part of interstate commerce.

[For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1913 Supp.]

Master and servant — employers' liability act — when servant is employed in interstate commerce.

2. A fireman employed by an interstate railway carrier on a switching engine, who was killed while aiding in the work of moving several cars all loaded with intrastate freight, between two points in the same city, was not employed in interstate commerce within the meaning of the Federal employers' liability act of April 22, 1908, making every common carrier by railroad, while engaged in interstate commerce, liable to an employee "suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce," although upon completion of that task the switching crew was to have gathered up and taken to other points several other cars as a step or link in both interstate and intrastate transportation.

[For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1913 Supp.]

[No. 241.]

NOTE.—On the constitutionality, application, and effect of the Federal employers' liability act—see note to Lamphere v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 38.

Digitized by Google

Argued March 6, 1914. Decided April 27, 1914.

ON A CERTIFICATE from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, presenting the question whether a railway employee was engaged in interstate commerce within the meaning of the employers' liability act. Answered in the negative.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Blewett Lee argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Hunter C. Leake and Gustave Lemle, filed a brief for the Illinois Central Railroad Company:

Congress was engaged in regulating the relations between common carriers and their servants in the matter of liability for personal injuries, and the scope of congressional power was limited to the sphere of interstate commerce. Unless the employee was engaged in such commerce, he does not fall within the provisions of the act, or of the power of Congress to make a regulation in his favor. If the liberal interpretation should be adopted that any employee who is employed in interstate commerce part of the time is to be regarded as employed in such commerce all the time, the result might be to make the employers' act of 1908 unconstitutional for the same reasons which invalidated the employers' liability act of June 11, 1906, and which overthrew it in the Employers' Liability Cases (Howard v. Illinois C. R. Co.) 207 U. S. 463, 52 L. ed. 297, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141.

Since the engine and cars and their contents all had their origin and destination in the state of Louisiana, the transaction was wholly one of intrastate commerce.

United States v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 205 Fed. 428.

Since the facts make it perfectly plain that Behrens was engaged in intrastate commerce at the time he was killed (indeed, it would be difficult to conceive of a clearer case), aside from the constitutional question involved, the reason why the court should attempt to separate and distinguish between interstate and intrastate commerce is that Congress has made liability turn upon that distinction. The particular defect in the statute, that it does not apply when the employee is engaged in intrastate commerce, is fundamental so far as the present act is concerned. A man is not "employed" in interstate commerce except when he is engaged in interstate commerce.

Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 177, 52 L. ed. 436, 442, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764; Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. ed. 327, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; Colasurdo v. Central R. Co. 180 Fed. 832; Employers' Liability Cases (Howard v. Illinois C. R. Co.) 207 U. S. 463, 498, 52 L. ed. 297, 309, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141; Pedersen v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 229 U. S. 146, 150, 57 L. ed. 1125, 1127, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648, 3 N. C. C. A. 779; St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 57 L. ed. 1129, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651; Van Brimmer v. Texas & P. R. Co. 190 Fed. 394; Bennett v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 197 Fed. 578; Myers v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 162 N. C. 343, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 987, 78 S. E. 280; Wright v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 94 Neb. 317, 143 N. W. 220; Gray v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 153 Wis. 637, 142 N. W. 505; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Strange, 156 Ky. 439, 161 S. W. 239.

Messrs. Alfred L. Becker, Maurice C. Spratt, and Lester F. Gilbert filed a brief as amici curiæ:

This court held in Southern R. Co. v. United States, 222 U. S. 20, 56 L. ed. 72, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 2, 3 N. C. C. A. 822, that the power to regulate commerce among the states is not exceeded by that provision of the safety appliance act which prohibits the use upon the railroad of any interstate carrier of any car not equipped with the safety appliances required by the act. On an appeal involving solely the constitutionality of the act,—not its construction,—the railway company contended that Congress had no power to legislate with respect to the equipment of cars used in intrastate commerce on the line of an interstate carrier. The Supreme Court held, however, that the effective regulation of interstate commerce with respect to safety appliances required as an incident the regulation of the equipment of all cars in use on the interstate railroad. The court pointed out that an accident to an intrastate train due to lack of safety appliances would have a tendency to affect interstate traffic, and sustained the constitutionality of the act upon such ground. The principle applied was, that where a power conferred upon Congress cannot be effectively exercised without an incidental regulation of matters which would otherwise fall within the reserved powers of the states, such incidental regulation is constitutional.

On the other hand, this court held in the Employers' Liability Cases (Howard v. Illinois C. R. Co.) 207 U. S. 463, 52 L. ed. 297, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141, that the power to regulate commerce was exceeded by an act which attempted to establish the liability of interstate carriers to all of their employees, whether or not engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the accident giving rise to the cause of action. The Supreme Court held that the power to establish the liability of an interstate carrier to its employees, while both were engaged in interstate commerce, had been conferred upon Congress, but that the effective exercise of such power did not require as an incident thereto the regulation of the liability of an interstate carrier towards its employees while not engaged in interstate commerce.

Digitized by Google

The opposite results reached in the two cases must be ascribed to a basic difference between the essential characters of the two acts. The safety appliance act is a regulation of the conduct of the carrier's business. An employers' liability act is merely an establishment of the rules of law governing the liabilities of employers to their employees.

The safety appliance act, like the act requiring carriers to report to the Interstate Commerce Commission the earnings of not only their interstate but also their intrastate business (Interstate Commerce Commission v. Goodrich Transit Co. 224 U. S. 194, 56 L. ed. 729, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 436), is constitutional, because any effective regulation of these matters cannot be split up into two parts, one exclusively administered by the Federal authorities and one exclusively administered by the state authorities. The possibilities of conflicting regulations as to the patterns of couplers, height of drawbars, and the forms of air brakes to be used, demand uniform regulation of all the operations of any carrier whose railroad as a whole is an interstate railroad, or one engaged in interstate commerce. But the effective regulation of liability does not require that all operations of an interstate railroad, whether or not such operations be of an interstate character, shall be conducted subject to one rule of liability. That it does not was implicitly held in the (first) Employers' Liability Cases, supra.

An intention to assume the regulation of intrastate commerce as an incident to the regulation of interstate commerce is not to be inferred in the absence of language clearly expressing such intention.

Minnesota Rate Cases (Simpson v. Shepard) 230 U. S. 352, 57 L. ed. 1511, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1151, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729.

Though a servant be in the general employ of one master, if his services are temporarily loaned to another, no matter for how brief a time, no matter how exceptional the occurrence, the rules of liability may be fundamentally different.

Standard Oil Co. v. Anderson, 212 U. S. 215, 53 L. ed. 480, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252.

In determining the meaning of the present employers' liability act, we are not to assume that it was passed in order to promote the safety and despatch of interstate commerce; for at most that was only a remote consideration. That the act might have such a consequence was perhaps of importance in determining whether any act establishing rules of liability could be sustained under the power to regulate commerce. Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. ed. 327, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875. But, without doubt, the chief purpose of the act was to remedy what the people have come to consider a social injustice worked by the common-law rules of negligence in master and servant cases. And one of the chief motives in the mind of Congress was to obviate all questions of constitutionality,—to keep within undebatable territory of constitutional power.

It is the function of this court to interpret and apply the law already enacted, but not, under the guise of construction, to provide a more comprehensive scheme of regulation than Congress has decided upon.

Minnesota Rate Cases, supra.

Mr. Armand Romain argued the cause and filed a brief for Joseph Behrens:

The statute is remedial in its character, and it should be so construed as to prevent the mischief and advance the remedy.

St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Conley, 110 C. C. A. 97, 187 Fed. 951; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Vreeland, 227 U. S. 65, 57 L. ed. 419, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192; Johnson v. Southern P. Co. 196 U. S. 21, 49 L. ed. 371, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 412; Gibson v. Jenney, 15 Mass. 205; Schlemmer v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co. 205 U. S. 10, 51 L. ed. 685, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 407; United States v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. 189 Fed. 964; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. United States, 231 U. S. 119, ante 147, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 26; 1 White, Personal Injuries on Railroads, p. 817.

From the very nature of the occupation, it is impossible for the company to separate one line of work from the other.

Hanley v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. 187 U. S. 620, 47 L. ed. 335, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 214.

At the time of his injury, Behrens and the railroad company were both engaged in the furtherance of an interstate service.

Southern R. Co. v. United States, 222 U. S. 27, 56 L. ed. 74, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 2, 3 N. C. C. A. 822; United States v. Southern

Digitized by Google

R. Co. 164 Fed. 347; United States v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 162 Fed. 185; United States v. Great Northern R. Co. 145 Fed. 438; United States v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 154 Fed. 516; Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 51, 56 L. ed. 346, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; Pedersen v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 229 U. S. 146, 57 L. ed. 1125, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648, 3 N. C. C. A. 779; Lamphere v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1, 116 C. C. A. 156, 196 Fed. 336; Zikos v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 179 Fed. 893; Central R. Co. v. Colasurdo, 113 C. C. A. 379, 192 Fed. 901; St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 57 L. ed. 1129, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651; McNeill v. Southern R. Co. 202 U. S. 543, 50 L. ed. 1142, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 722; Johnson v. Southern P. Co. 196 U. S. 21, 49 L. ed. 371, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 412.

Mr. Justice Van Devanter delivered the opinion of the court:

In an action in the circuit court for the eastern district of Louisiana, under the Federal employers' liability act of April 22, 1908 (35 Stat. at L. 65, chap. 149, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1322), against a railroad [476] company, by a personal representative to recover for the death of his intestate, the plaintiff prevailed, and the defendant took the case by writ of error to the circuit court of appeals. That court, desiring instruction upon a question of law arising in the case, certified the question here under § 239 of the Judicial Code [36 Stat. at L. 1157, chap. 231, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 228]. The facts shown in the certificate are these: The intestate was in the service of the railroad company as a member of a crew attached to a switch engine operated exclusively within the city of New Orleans. He was the fireman, and came to his death, while at his post of duty, through a head-on collision. The general work of the crew consisted in moving cars from one point to another within the city over the company's tracks and other connecting tracks. Sometimes the cars were loaded, at other times empty, and at still other times some were loaded and others empty. When loaded the freight in them was at times destined from within to without the state or vice versa; at other times was moving only between points within the state, and at still other times was of both classes. When the cars were empty the purpose was usually to take them where they were to be loaded or away from where they had been unloaded. And oftentimes, following the movement of cars, loaded or empty, to a given point, other cars were gathered up and taken or started elsewhere. In short, the crew handled interstate and intrastate traffic indiscriminately, frequently moving both at once and at times turning directly from one to the other. At the time of the collision the crew was moving several cars loaded with freight which was wholly intrastate, and upon completing that movement was to have gathered up and taken to other points several other cars as a step or link in their transportation to various destinations within and without the state. The question of law upon which the circuit court of appeals desires instruction is whether, upon these facts, it can be said that the intestate, at the time of his fatal injury, was employed in [477] interstate commerce within the meaning of the employers' liability act.

Considering the status of the railroad as a highway for both interstate and intrastate commerce, the interdependence of the two classes of traffic in point of movement and safety, the practical difficulty in separating or dividing the general work of the switching crew, and the nature and extent of the power confided to Congress by the commerce clause of the Constitution, we entertain no doubt that the liability of the carrier for injuries suffered by a member of the crew in the course of its general work was subject to regulation by Congress, whether the particular service being performed at the time of the injury, isolatedly considered, was in interstate or intrastate commerce. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 221 U. S. 612, 618, 55 L. ed. 878, 882, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 621; Southern R. Co. v. United States, 222 U. S. 20, 26, 56 L. ed. 72, 74, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 2, 3 N. C. C. A. 822; Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. ed. 327, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Goodrich Transit Co. 224 U. S. 194, 213, 56 L. ed. 729, 737, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 436; Minnesota Rate Cases (Simpson v. Shepard) 230 U. S. 352, 432, 57 L. ed. 1511, 1555, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1151, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729. The decision in Employer's Liability Cases (Howard v. Illinois C. R. Co.) 207 U. S. 463, 52 L. ed. 297, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141, is not to the contrary, for the act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stat. at L. 232, chap. 3073, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1316), there pronounced invalid, attempted to regulate the liability of every carrier in interstate commerce, whether by railroad or otherwise, for any injury to any employee, even though his employment had no connection whatever with interstate commerce.

Digitized by Google

Passing from the question of power to that of its exercise, we find that the controlling provision in the act of April 22, 1908, reads as follows: "That every common carrier by railroad while engaging in commerce between any of the several states . . . shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce, or, in case of the death of such employee, to his or her personal representative, . . . for such injury or death resulting [478] in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment." Giving to the words "suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce" their natural meaning, as we think must be done, it is clear that Congress intended to confine its action to injuries occurring when the particular service in which the employee is engaged is a part of interstate commerce. The act was so construed in Pedersen v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 229 U. S. 146, 57 L. ed. 1125, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648, 3 N. C. C. A. 779. It was there said (p. 150): "There can be no doubt that a right of recovery thereunder arises only where the injury is suffered while the carrier is engaged in interstate commerce and while the employee is employed by the carrier in such commerce." Again (p. 152): "The true test always is: Is the work in question a part of the interstate commerce in which the carrier is engaged?" And a like view is shown in other cases. Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. ed. 327, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875: Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Moore, 228 U. S. 433, 57 L. ed. 907, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 580; St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 158, 57 L. ed. 1129, 1133, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651; North Carolina R. Co. v. Zachary, 232 U. S. 248, 256, ante, 591, 594, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305; Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. Lindsay, 233 U. S. 42, ante, 838, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581.

Here, at the time of the fatal injury the intestate was engaged in moving several cars, all loaded with intrastate freight, from one part of the city to another. That was not a service in interstate commerce, and so the injury and resulting death were not within the statute. That he was expected, upon the completion of that task, to engage in another which would have been a part of interstate commerce, is immaterial under the statute, for by its terms the true test is the nature of the work being done at the time of the injury.

The question is accordingly answered in the negative.

---

[479] BAER BROTHERS MERCANTILE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
DENVER & RIO GRANDE RAILROAD COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 479-491.)

Interstate Commerce Commission — reparation order — omission to fix future rates.

1. There is no such necessary connection between the subjects of reparation for unreasonable interstate freight rates charged and collected, and the fixing of new and just rates for the future, as will render void a reparation order of the Interstate Commerce Commission because of the error, if any, in omitting any concurrent provision fixing future rates.

[Matters as to Interstate Commerce Commission, see Interstate Commerce Commission.]

Interstate Commerce Commission — authority over local rates — through shipment — common arrangement.

2. The Interstate Commerce Commission had jurisdiction to pass upon the reasonableness of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Company's freight rate from Pueblo to Leadville, both in the state of Colorado, on beer received at St. Louis by the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company to be delivered in Leadville, although no through rate or through route had been established, and although the freight was received by the first-named carrier at Pueblo as an independent shipment originating at that point, and was forwarded as an intrastate shipment on a local waybill, where all this was in accordance with a long-continued course of dealing between the two carriers under which they divided the freight according to their local rates, with the knowledge that it had been paid as compensation for the single haul.

[Matters as to Interstate Commerce Commission, see Interstate Commerce Commission, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Judgment — conclusiveness — voluntary nonsuit.

3. A voluntary dismissal of an action brought by a shipper against a carrier to recover damages for collecting unreasonable freight rates is not a bar to a subsequent suit between the same parties to enforce a reparation order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, based upon a finding that such rates were excessive.

---

NOTE.—On conclusiveness of judgments, generally—see notes to Sharon v. Terry, 1 L.R.A. 572; Bollong v. Schuyler Nat. Bank, 3 L.R.A. 142; Wiese v. San Francisco Musical Fund Soc. 7 L.R.A. 577; Morrill v. Morrill, 11 L.R.A. 155; Shores v. Hooper, 11 L.R.A. 308; Bank of United States v. Beverly, 11 L. ed. U. S. 76; Johnson Steel Street R. Co. v. Wharton, 38 L. ed. U. S. 429; and Southern P. R. Co. v. United States, 42 L. ed. U. S. 355.

Digitized by Google

[For other cases, see Judgment, III. f, 2, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 140.]

Argued December 16 and 17, 1913. Decided April 27, 1914.

IN ERROR to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit to review a judgment which reversed a judgment of the Circuit Court for the District of Colorado, enforcing a reparation order of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Judgment of Circuit Court of Appeals reversed and that of the Circuit Court affirmed.

See same case below, 109 C. C. A. 337, 187 Fed. 486.

Statement by Mr. Justice Lamar:

Between July, 1902, and March, 1907, the Baer Brothers Mercantile Company was engaged in the liquor business at Leadville, Colorado. During those years it purchased beer from a brewing company in St. Louis, Missouri, which delivered the same in carload lots to the Missouri Pacific, which acknowledged the receipt of the beer "in good order to be delivered to the Baer Brothers Company at Leadville, Colorado, via the Denver & Rio Grande." No through bill of lading was issued, and as the two companies had not established a through route, each shipment was waybilled to Pueblo, Colorado, 923 miles distant, on the Missouri Pacific's local rate of 45 cents per cwt. The car was then delivered to the Denver & Rio Grande with an expense bill which described the shipment and disclosed the charges paid by or due to the Missouri Pacific. The Denver & Rio Grande then forwarded the beer to Leadville, Colorado, 160 miles from Pueblo, at its local rate of 45 cents per cwt., naming the Missouri Pacific as consignor and the Baer Company as consignee. Whether collected in advance at St. Louis or at destination in Leadville, the freight was always divided between the two companies according to their local rates, the Denver & Rio Grande in every instance receiving 45 cents per cwt. on every shipment.

The Baer Company insisted that the rate was unreasonable in fact and unjustly discriminatory, and in 1906 brought suit, in the United States circuit court for the district of Colorado, against both carriers, to recover from them $6,300, the amount of the unreasonable rate alleged to have been paid on beer. That suit was voluntarily dismissed by plaintiff upon the publication of the decision in the Abilene Case, 204 U. S. 426, 51 L. ed. 553, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350, 9 Ann. Cas. 1075. [481] The Baer Company then instituted proceedings before the Commerce Commission in which it prayed that the 90 cent rate should be declared unreasonable and unjust; that the Commission would establish a new and just rate on beer between St. Louis and Leadville, and that the two companies be required to pay plaintiff $7,299 as reparation for excess freight paid on beer shipped over the two lines between July, 1902, and March, 1907.

At the hearing it was admitted that the Missouri Pacific's charge of 45 cents for the haul of 923 miles from St. Louis to Pueblo was reasonable. In view of this admission the subsequent proceedings before the Commission involved an investigation as to the reasonableness of the Denver & Rio Grande's charge of 45 cents for hauling beer a distance of 160 miles, from Pueblo, Colorado, to Leadville, Colorado. The carrier insisted that in each instance the beer had been received by it as an independent shipment at Pueblo, Colorado, where a new waybill was issued and the car forwarded as an intrastate shipment to Leadville on an intrastate rate. It claimed that the Commission had no jurisdiction to inquire as to the reasonableness of such intrastate rate. It further contended that the rate of 45 cents was just and fair.

It appeared that although no through route had been established by the two roads, the regular filed tariff of the Missouri Pacific named 45 cents as the rate on beer between St. Louis and Pueblo. The Denver & Rio Grande had filed no tariff under the commerce act, but, in compliance with the request of the Commission, addressed to all railroads, it had furnished a copy of tariffs showing its intrastate rates generally, and that the local rate on beer from Pueblo to Leadville was 45 cents per cwt.

At the conclusion of the hearing, the Commission held (13 Inters. Com. Rep. 329) that, even though no through route or through rate had been established, the Denver & Rio Grande, in hauling this beer, was engaged in interstate [482] commerce; that the mountainous character of the country through which the road was built and the steep grades made the cost of operation higher than for a similar distance on the Missouri Pacific, but ruled that, while this was true, the rate of 45 cents from Pueblo to Leadville was excessive to the extent of 15 cents per cwt. The report concluded as follows:

"The prayer of the complaint is, among other things, that the Commission fix 'a just rate for the through transportation of beer in carload lots from said city of St. Louis to said city of Leadville.' There is no suggestion either in the complaint or in the prayer looking to the establishment of a joint rate, and that subject was not referred to either upon the trial or in the argument. This being so, we ought not to establish a joint through rate, and we do not think that we should undertake by our order to fix in this proceeding the locals which will make up the charge for the through movement in the future. There has been no practical difficulty in making these shipments over this route in the past. If the Denver & Rio Grande does not reduce its charges in accordance with this report, or if suitable through facilities are denied, the complainant can file its petition asking the establishment of a joint through route and rate."

Digitized by Google

Thereupon the following reparation order was entered April 6, 1908:

"This case being at issue upon complaint and answers on file, and having been duly heard and submitted by the parties, and full investigation of the matters and things involved having been had, and the Commission having, on the date hereof, made and filed a report containing its conclusions thereon:

"It is ordered that the defendant, the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Company, be and it is hereby notified and required to pay unto the complainant, the Baer Brothers Mercantile Company, of Leadville, Colorado, on [483] or before the 1st day of June, 1908, the sum of $3,438.27, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from May 6, 1907, as reparation for excessive and unreasonable charges for the transportation of 2,292,178 pounds of beer from Pueblo, Colorado, to Leadville, Colorado as part of a through transportation from St. Louis, Missouri, to said Leadville, as more fully and at large appears in the report of the Commission in this case."

The Denver & Rio Grande refused to pay the amount of reparation awarded, and thereupon the Baer Company brought suit against it in the United States circuit court for the district of Colorado, attaching to the complaint a copy of the award of the Commission.

By demurrer and plea the defendant attacked the jurisdiction of the Commerce Commission to pass upon the reasonableness of its rate between Pueblo and Leadville. It further contended that the Commission could not make an order of reparation unless at the same time, and as a part of such order, it fixed a through rate to be charged in the future. These objections were overruled, and thereupon the plaintiff introduced the report and order of the Commission, proved the weight of the beer shipped, the rate of freight paid, and that the freight on beer for the longer distance between St. Louis and Salt Lake City, via the Missouri Pacific and the Denver & Rio Grande, was 70 cents per cwt.

The defendant then offered evidence to show that Leadville was not on the through line, and was reached by a road 4½ miles long, the operation of which was unusually expensive because of the very steep grade throughout its entire length.

Defendant also introduced testimony for the purpose of showing that the beer, though forwarded by the Missouri Pacific to be delivered in Leadville, was actually received at Pueblo by the Denver & Rio Grande as an independent shipment, as though originating at Pueblo, [484] and was then forwarded as an intrastate shipment on a local waybill. The court overruled the various contentions of the defendant, and directed a verdict for the plaintiff for $3,761.45, being amount of the reparation order, with interest. The court also allowed attorney fees to the plaintiff. The case was then taken by the Denver & Rio Grande to the circuit court of appeals which held (109 C. C. A. 337, 187 Fed. 486) that it was not necessary to decide whether the Interstate Commerce Commission had jurisdiction to pass upon the reasonableness of the rate of 45 cents from Pueblo, Colorado, to Leadville, Colorado, saying that "an order of reparation without such an establishment of a reasonable maximum rate is beyond the power of the Commission and void; and as no such rate was prescribed and no order forbidding the future use of an excessive rate was made in the case in hand, the Commission's order of reparation in this case was beyond its power and void. This conclusion disposes of the case in hand and renders it impossible for a judgment to be obtained against the railroad company upon the reparation order of the Commission upon which the action is based. It is therefore unnecessary to consider the other questions in the case and the judgment below is reversed." A mandate issued in which it was "ordered that this case be and the same is hereby remanded to the said circuit court with direction for further proceedings in accordance with the views expressed in the opinion of this court."

The Baer Brothers Company then brought the case here by writ of error.

Mr. William B. Harrison argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The duty imposed upon the Commission by § 15 of the act to regulate commerce, as amended in 1906, to prescribe the rate regulation or practice for the future, and to forbid a departure therefrom, refers exclusively to complaints made under that section for that purpose, and has no application to complaints seeking reparation under § 16 of said amended act.

Digitized by Google

Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 10 Inters. Com. Rep. 83; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 167 U. S. 479, 42 L. ed. 243, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 896; Albert Steinfeld & Co. v. Illinois C. R. Co. 20 Inters. Com. Rep. 12.

A duty imposed by law upon a tribunal becomes specific only when, in the opinion of that tribunal, a case or state of circumstances exists proper for its discharge. In the case at bar the Commission was of the opinion that a proper occasion had not arisen for the immediate exercise of the duty to prescribe the rate for the future. Beyond controversy, this conclusion was within the scope of its delegated authority, and this court has said that it cannot, under the guise of exerting judicial power, usurp the functions of the Commission upon its conception as to whether the power has been wisely exercised.

Interstate Commerce Commission v. Illinois C. R. Co. 215 U. S. 452, 54 L. ed. 280, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 155; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Union P. R. Co. 222 U. S. 541, 56 L. ed. 308, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 108; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 206 U. S. 441, 51 L. ed. 1128, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 700; Procter & G. Co. v. United States, 225 U. S. 282, 56 L. ed. 1091, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 761.

The Abilene decision (Texas & P. R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co. 204 U. S. 426, 51 L. ed. 553, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350, 9 Ann. Cas. 1075) only required that the Commission should first declare the rate to be unreasonable, and have the opportunity to exert its administrative functions; when this was done, the foundation for reparation, as provided in the interstate commerce act, was established. In other words, the court decided that in certain cases the Commission primarily had exclusive jurisdiction, but it did not decide or say how that jurisdiction should be exercised.

Southern R. Co. v. Tift, 206 U. S. 428, 51 L. ed. 1124, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 709, 11 Ann. Cas. 846; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. United States, 215 U. S. 481, 54 L. ed. 292, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164.

The constitutional guaranty of the right to trial by jury in an action for damages was intended for the benefit of the plaintiff as well as the defendant. Ordinarily the question as to this right of the plaintiff arises on motion for a compulsory nonsuit. the wrongful granting of which is unlawful because the plaintiff is thereby denied the right of trial by jury.

Doe ex dem. Elmore v. Grymes, 1 Pet. 469, 7 L. ed. 224; D'Wolf v. Rabaud, 1 Pet. 498, 7 L. ed. 236; Crane v. Morris, 6 Pet. 598, 8 L. ed. 514; Castle v. Bullard, 23 How. 172, 16 L. ed. 424; Mercantile Mut. Ins. Co. v. Folsom, 18 Wall. 237, 21 L. ed. 827; Oscanyan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. 103 U. S. 261, 26 L. ed. 539; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 24, 35 L. ed. 55, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478.

It was not competent, under the act and under the complaint before the Commission, for that body to establish the local rate of the defendant to be applied to the through transportation in future.

Merchants Traffic Asso. v. New York, N. H. & H. R. R. Co. 13 Inters. Com. Rep. 225.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is an inferior tribunal whose jurisdiction depends upon facts which it is required to ascertain and settle. The decision of such a tribunal upon the facts essential to the existence of its jurisdiction is conclusive against collateral attack.

Pettus v. McClannahan, 52 Ala. 55; Re Grove Street, 61 Cal. 438; Evansville, I. & C. Straight Line R. Co. v. Evansville, 15 Ind. 395; Mullikin v. Bloomington, 72 Ind. 161; Delphi v. Startzman, 104 Ind. 343, 3 N. E. 937; Dowdy v. Wamble, 110 Mo. 280, 19 S. W. 489; State ex rel. Brown v. Wilson, 216 Mo. 215, 115 S. W. 567; Comstock v. Crawford, 3 Wall. 396, 18 L. ed. 34; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 796, 49 Fed. 177.

When the jurisdiction of an inferior court has once attached, its subsequent proceedings are presumed to be as regular as those of a court of general jurisdiction. The jurisdiction existing, the subsequent action of the court is the exercise of its judicial authority, and can only be questioned in a direct proceeding.

Comstock v. Crawford, 3 Wall. 396, 18 L. ed. 34; Smith v. Engle, 44 Iowa, 265, Mankin v. State, 2 Swan, 206; Couchman v. Bush, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1277, 83 S. W. 1039; Porter v. Rountree, 111 Ga. 369, 36 S. E. 761; Cromwell v. Sac County, 94 U S. 352, 24 L. ed. 197; United States v. Reyburn, 6 Pet. 352, 8 L. ed. 424; Pearse v Hill, 163 Mass. 493, 40 N. W. 765; Harshman v. County Ct. (United States ex rel. Harshman v. County Ct.) 122 U. S. 317, 318, 30 L. ed. 1154, 1155, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1171; Freeman, Judgm. §§ 16–249, 531; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Union P. R. Co. 222 U. S. 541, 56 L. ed. 308, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 108.

Prior to the amendment of 1906, § 14 of the act required the Commission to include in its report the findings of fact upon which its conclusions both of law and fact were based; and § 16 authorized the court to enforce only lawful orders of the Commission, and, if a jury was waived, to try the issues in the case. Under this state of the law, and when it was supposed to be optional with the shipper whether he would seek redress from the Commission or the courts, it was held that only lawful orders could be enforced, and that the suit for enforcement of the order must be tried de novo as to the law as well as the facts.

Digitized by Google

Western New York & P. R. Co. v. Penn Ref. Co. 70 C. C. A. 23, 137 Fed. 343; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 796, 49 Fed. 177.

The right of trial by jury secured by the Federal Constitution is a trial according to the course of the common law, and is confined to matters of fact only.

Re Martin, 2 Paine, 348, Fed. Cas. No. 9,154.

The general equity jurisdiction of the Federal courts to grant injunctions in cases involving interstate commerce exists independent of this provision of the Hepburn act.

Re Lennon, 166 U. S. 548, 41 L. ed. 1110, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 658.

The Commission and the courts have both condemned the practice by carriers of withholding their defenses until after the hearing before the Commission, and producing them subsequently at the hearing before the court.

Independent Refiners' Asso. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 6 Inters. Com. Rep. 52; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U. S. 196, 40 L. ed. 939, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 391, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 700.

Both the Supreme Court and the Commission have held that, under the act as it existed prior to the amendments of 1906, the suit to enforce an order of reparation was a continuation of the proceedings before the Commission; and that, when the Court is of opinion that the Commission has erred in its interpretation of the law, the case should be remanded to the Commission for reconsideration under proper instructions.

Cattle Raisers' Asso. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 10 Inters. Com. Rep. 83; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U. S. 197, 40 L. ed. 940, 5 Inters Com. Rep. 405, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 666; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Behlmer, 175 U. S. 648, 44 L. ed. 309, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 209; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co. 204 U. S. 426, 51 L. ed. 553, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350, 9 Ann. Cas. 1075.

The practice would be much simplified, and the burden placed where it belongs, and where we believe it is placed by the Hepburn act, if the order of reparation were regarded as a final adjudication by a court of competent jurisdiction, and not subject to review in the suit to enforce the order in respect to any question except the question of damages. If the carrier is dissatisfied with the Commission's interpretation of the law, it should bring suit against the Commission and the shipper to enjoin and set aside the order of reparation.

The case should not now be remanded to the Commission because on subsequent complaint by plaintiff the rate in question was established.

Baer Bros. Mercantile Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co. 17 Inters. Com. Rep. 225; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 195 Fed. 968.

The transportation in question was interstate commerce and subject to the commerce act and to the jurisdiction of the Commission.

The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall. 557, 19 L. ed. 999; Board of Trade v. Alabama Midland R. Co. 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 6, 6 I. C. C. Rep. 348; Phelps v. Texas & P. R. Co. 6 Inters. Com. Rep. 48; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U. S. 184, 40 L. ed. 935, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 391, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 700; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U. S. 197, 40 L. ed. 940, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 405, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 666; Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 209 U. S. 56, 52 L. ed. 681, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 428; United States ex rel. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Seaboard R. Co. 82 Fed. 563; Augusta Southern R. Co. v. Wrightsville & T. R. Co. 74 Fed. 522; United States v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 153 Fed. 625; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 218 U. S. 88, 54 L. ed. 946, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U. S. 184, 40 L. ed. 935, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 391, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 700.

There can be no question that the shipments of beer involved in this case were made on through bills of lading, or the equivalent of through bills of lading.

5 Cyc. 707; Merchants' & M. Bank v. Hewitt, 3 Iowa, 93, 66 Am. Dec. 49.

Mr. E. N. Clark argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Joel F. Vaile and J. G. McMurry, filed a brief for defendant in error:

Digitized by Google

It is immaterial in this case whether the rate had been established or not.

Texas & P. R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co. 204 U. S. 426, 428, 51 L. ed. 553, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350, 9 Ann. Cas. 1075; Langdon v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 186 Fed. 240.

It cannot be conceded that this court can or ought to take judicial knowledge or give any force to a case not brought to this court in the record presented.

Robinson v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 222 U. S. 506, 511, 56 L. ed. 288, 290, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 114.

This court is without power to overlook the failure of the Commission to establish the maximum rate, and can do nothing to make this order of the Commission a valid one. Upon a suit to enforce an order of the Commission, the court is without power to revise or supplement the order, or to overlook the deficiencies in the order.

Southern P. Co. v. Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. 42 C. C. A. 12, 101 Fed. 779; Southern P. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 200 U. S. 536, 551, 50 L. ed. 585, 592, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 330; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Illinois C. R. Co. 215 U. S. 452, 54 L. ed. 280, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 155; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. United States, 215 U. S. 481, 494, 54 L. ed. 292, 297, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 134 Fed. 942; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 174 Fed. 687.

The shipments in question, so far as they moved over the railroad of defendant, were not within the interstate commerce act.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 190, 6 L. ed. 23, 68; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Texas, 204 U. S. 403, 51 L. ed. 540, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 360; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co. 204 U. S. 426, 51 L. ed. 553, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350, 9 Ann. Cas. 1075.

The Commission had no power to deal with defendant's local rate from Pueblo to Leadville.

The Commission could not have made an order directly purporting to fix the divisions. Congress did not intend to confer upon the Commission power to do by indirection what it could not do directly.

Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 171 Fed. 688.

Mr. Justice Lamar, after making the foregoing statement of facts, delivered the opinion of the court:

In proceedings before the Commerce Commission the plaintiff secured an order requiring the defendant to pay it $3,438.27 as reparation for unreasonable freight rates charged and collected, the fixing of a new and just rate being left for future decision. The carrier failed to make the payment required, and the plaintiff thereupon brought suit and recovered judgment for the sum awarded, together with interest and attorneys' fees. This judgment was reversed by the circuit court of appeals, which held that the order was void on its face, and could not be the basis of a recovery for the reason that, while reparation had been awarded on the ground that the old rate was unreasonable, the Commission had not fixed a new and just rate for the future.

1. That the two subjects of reparation and rates may be dealt with in one order is undoubtedly true. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co. 204 U. S. 446, 51 L. ed. 561, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350, 9 Ann. Cas. 1075; Robinson v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 222 U. S. 509, 56 L. ed. 289, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 114. But awarding reparation for the past and fixing rates for the future involve the determination of matters essentially different. One is in its nature private and the other public. One is made by the Commission in its quasi judicial capacity to measure past injuries sustained by a private shipper; the other, in its quasi legislative capacity, to prevent future injury to the public. But testimony showing the unreasonableness of a past rate may also furnish information on which to fix a reasonable future rate, and both subjects can be, and often are, disposed of by the same order. This, [487] however, is not necessarily so. Indeed, under the original commerce act, the two matters could not possibly be combined in a single order for the reason that, while at that time the Commission could order the carrier to desist from unreasonable practices and award damages, it could not fix rates. This brought about an anomalous state of affairs. For if the shipper obtained his order of reparation because of unreasonable charges which the railroad company was ordered to discontinue, a slightly different, but still unreasonable, rate might be put in for the future, which the shipper had to pay and again institute proceedings for reparation. 24 Stat. at L. 384, § 15, chap 104, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3165.

2. This situation was dealt with by the Hepburn act, which, in addition to the existing power to make reparation, conferred upon the Commission the new power to make rates for the future. But the two matters were treated as different subjects and were dealt with in separate sections. Section 4 conferred the power of making rates. Section 5 gave the Commission power to make reparation orders. 34 Stat. at L. 589, 590, §§ 4, 5, chap. 3591, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, pp. 1297, 1301. Not only were the two functions separately treated, but an analysis of the act shows that there is no such necessary connection between them as to make the quasi judicial order for reparation depend for its validity upon being joined with a quasi legislative order fixing rates. Persons entitled to one may have no interest in the other. Persons interested in both may be entitled to reparation, and not to a new rate; or to a new rate, and not to reparation. For example, § 13 permits "any mercantile, agricultural, or manufacturing society or any body politic or municipal organization to make complaints against the carrier." On the application of such bodies, old rates might be declared unjust and new rates established; but, of course, no reparation would be given, for the reason that such [488] complainants were not shippers, and therefore not entitled to an award of pecuniary damages. Cf. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 227 U. S. 89, 57 L. ed. 431, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185. Then, too, there are cases in which a rate, reasonable when made, becomes unreasonable as the result of a gradual change in conditions, so that no reparation is ordered even though a new rate be established for the future. Anadarko Cotton Oil Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 20 Inters. Com. Rep. 43. Conversely, there may be cases where what was an unreasonable rate in the past is found to be reasonable at the date of the hearing. In such a case reparation would be awarded for past unreasonable charges collected, but no new rate would be established for the future.

Digitized by Google

3. It may, however, be said that even in such a case, the order, while condemning the rate for the past, should contain a provision validating it for the future. But while this consideration might show that it was erroneous not to name the new rate, it would not follow that the order awarding reparation was void. The Hepburn act treats the two subjects as related, but independent. The grounds of complaint may be joint or separate, and the very fact that they may sometimes be separate shows that the presence of both is not jurisdictional, and that the absence of a provision for one need not operate to invalidate an order as to the other.

This conclusion is strengthened by considering the hardships that would result from nullifying a reparation order for error in omitting a provision for the future rate. It would punish the shipper for the failure of the Commission. It would deprive him of his award of damages for his private injury, because of the Commission's omission to make a rate for the benefit of the public. The shipper might or might not intend to remain in business. He might or he might not be interested in future rates. He might have been able to prove unreasonableness as to the past without being able to furnish evidence as to what [489] would be reasonable for the future. Or, the Commission might be in position to say with certainty that the rates had been unreasonable, and award reparation accordingly, but it might require a protracted and lengthy hearing to establish what would be just for the future. To make the shipper wait on such a finding, and deprive him of his present right to reparation, until the determination of an independent question, would work a hardship not contemplated by the act and not required by any of its provisions.

The present case illustrates some of these features. The plaintiff's petition asked for reparation and that the Commission would establish just rates. On the hearing it appeared that there was no through route or joint rate, and that the established local charge of one of the carriers was just, while that of the other had not been established or included in a filed tariff and was also unjust. The evidence was sufficient to sustain a finding of damages against such carrier, but it did not show how the through rate should be divided between the two companies, one of which hauled 923 miles and the other 160 miles. The carriers did not ask for an extension of the time within which the reparation should be paid. The fact that they were given an opportunity to agree on a through rate and how it should be divided ought not to deprive plaintiff of its rights to damages for the past, under a reparation order which could not, by any possibility, be changed by any subsequent finding as to rates for the future.

The report and order gave the plaintiff no preference over other shippers, since they showed that 15 cents of the rate charged by the Denver & Rio Grande was unreasonable. If such a finding of unreasonableness was not sufficiently general to inure to the benefit of all other shippers, they could, on application, have secured such a modification as to enable them to maintain a suit for the recovery of damages for unjust charges and collections in the past. [490] So far as the future operation of the order was concerned, all shippers were left in the same position, where, from the necessity of the case, the old rate had to be paid until the time had elapsed within which a new and just through rate could be put into effect. But, however desirable it may have been to deal with the entire matter at one time, the joinder of the two subjects was not jurisdictional. There was no such necessary connection between the two as to make the order of reparation void because of the absence of a concurrent provision establishing a rate for the future.

Digitized by Google

This conclusion makes it necessary to consider what judgment should have been entered by the circuit court of appeals (Baker v. Warner, 231 U. S. 588, ante, 384, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 175). That necessitates an examination of the other assignments of error relied on by the railroad company.

4. The Denver & Rio Grande claimed in the record in the court of appeals that the order was void on its face for the reason that the Commission was without jurisdiction to pass upon the reasonableness of the rate from Pueblo, Colorado, to Leadville, Colorado. But while there was no through rate and no through route, there was in fact a through shipment from St. Louis, Missouri, to Leadville, Colorado. Its interstate character could not be destroyed by ignoring the points of origin and destination, separating the rate into its component parts, and by charging local rates and issuing local waybills, attempting to convert an interstate shipment into intrastate transportation.

For where goods shipped "from a point in one state to a point in another are received in transit by a state common carrier, under a conventional division of the charges, such carrier must be deemed to have subjected its road to an arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment within the meaning of the act to regulate commerce." Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Interstate [491] Commerce Commission, 162 U. S. 193, 40 L. ed. 938, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 391, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 700. This common arrangement does not depend upon the establishment of a through route or the issue and recognition of a through bill of lading, but may be otherwise manifested. Ibid.

That there was a common arrangement between the two carriers here was shown by the long-continued course in dealing, and the division of the freight, with the knowledge that it had been paid as compensation for the single haul. If there had been a failure on the part of one of the carriers to file the tariffs, that did not defeat the jurisdiction of the Commission to award reparation against that same carrier, when it was shown that its unreasonable charge of 45 cents per cwt. formed a part of the total rate of 90 cents per cwt. actually paid by the Baer Company.

5. The dismissal of the suit brought in 1906, for the recovery of damages for collecting unreasonable freight rates, was not a bar to this proceeding for the reason that a voluntary dismissal of an action at law is in the nature of a nonsuit, and does not operate as a judgment on the merits. Haldeman v. United States, 91 U. S. 584, 23 L. ed. 433; Jacobs v. Marks, 182 U. S. 583, 591, 45 L. ed. 1241, 1246, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865.

There were other assignments of error in the circuit court of appeals, but as they are not discussed in the brief for the railroad company, they may be treated as abandoned here.

The judgment of the Circuit Court of appeals is reversed and that of the Circuit Court affirmed.

---

[492] SEABOARD AIR LINE RAILWAY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
JAMES T. HORTON.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 492-508.)

Appeal — return day in writ of error — citation.

1. Making the writ of error to a state court and the citation thereon returnable "within thirty days from the date hereof," without inserting a day certain as the return day, is a substantial compliance with the provision of United States Supreme Court rule 8, clause 5, that (with certain exceptions in favor of the more distant states and territories) "all appeals, writs of error, and citations must be made returnable not exceeding thirty days from the day of signing the citation, whether the return day fall in vacation or in term time."

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, IV. e, 6; IV. j, 3, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Error to state court — decision of Federal question — suit based on Federal statute.

2. A writ of error will lie from the Fed-

Note.—On the general subject of writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4 L. ed. U. S. 97; Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884; and Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

On what adjudications of state courts can be brought up for review in the Supreme Court of the United States by writ of error to those courts—see note to Apex Transp. Co. v. Garbade, 62 L.R.A. 513.

On how and when questions must be raised and decided in a state court in order to make a case for a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States—see note to Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. McGrew, 63 L.R.A. 33.

On the practice and procedure governing the transfer of causes to the Federal Supreme Court on writ of error or appeal—see note to Wedding v. Meyler, 66 L.R.A. 833.

On the constitutionality, application, and effect of the Federal employers' liability act—see note to Lamphere v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 38.

Digitized by Google

eral Supreme Court to review a decision of the highest state court, which sustained the action of the trial court in overruling certain contentions made by the plaintiff in error asserting a construction of the Federal employers' liability act of April 22, 1908 (35 Stat. at L. 65, chap. 149, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1322), as amended by the act of April 5, 1910 (36 Stat. at L. 291, chap. 143, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1324), which, if acceded to, would presumably have produced a verdict in favor of plaintiff in error, and consequent immunity from the action.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1436-1445, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Commerce — employers' liability — conflicting state and Federal legislation.

3. Since Congress, by the act of April 22, 1908, took possession of the field of the employers' liability in interstate transportation by rail, all state laws upon the subject are superseded.

[For other cases, see Commerce, I. c, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Commerce — employers' liability — conflicting legislation — safe place or appliances.

4. The limitation of the responsibility of a railway carrier under the employers' liability act of April 22, 1908, § 1, for injuries to its employees resulting from defects or insufficiency in places of work or appliances to those caused by such defects and insufficiencies as are "due to its negligence," governs an action brought under that statute regardless of the measure of responsibility prescribed by the local statutes.

[For other cases, see Commerce, I. c, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Master and servant — employers' liability — assumption of risk — contributory negligence — violation of statutes.

5. Federal statutes only were intended by the phrase "any statute enacted for the safety of employees" in the employers' liability act of April 22, 1908, §§ 3, 4, abolishing the defenses of contributory negligence and assumption of risk in any case where the violation by the carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to the injury or death of an employee.

Master and servant — employers' liability — assumption of risk.

6. The elimination of the defense of assumption of risk by the employers' liability act of April 22, 1908, § 4, in any case where the violation by the carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of the employees contributed to the injury or death of the employee, plainly evidences the legislative intent that in all other cases such assumption of risk shall have its former effect as a complete bar to the action.

Commerce — employers' liability — conflicting legislation — assumption of risk.

7. The common-law rule with respect to the employee's assumption of risk of injury from a defective appliance governs an action brought under the employers' liability act of April 22, 1908, where such appliance is not covered by any Federal statute enacted for the safety of employees, to the exclusion of any state statutes which, like N. C. Revisal 1905, § 2646, abolished the assumption of risk as a bar to an action by a railway employee for an injury attributable to defective appliances furnished by the employer, since otherwise the subject-matter would be controlled by the laws of the several states, and not by the Federal statute, which, in § 4, abolishes the defense of the assumption of risk only when the violation by the carrier of a Federal statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to the death or injury of an employee.

[For other cases, see Commerce, I. c, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 691.]

Argued February 27, 1914. Decided April 27, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of North Carolina to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Superior Court of Wake County, in that state, in favor of plaintiff in an action brought under the Federal employers' liability act. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

See same case below, 162 N. C. 424, 78 S. E. 494.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Benjamin Micou and Murray Allen argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Hilary A. Herbert and Richard P. Whiteley, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

This court has jurisdiction.

St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McWhirter, 229 U. S. 265, 57 L. ed. 1179, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 858; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. McGinnis, 228 U. S. 173, 57 L. ed. 785, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426, 3 N. C. C. A. 806; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 210 U. S. 292, 52 L. ed. 1066, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 616; Schlemmer v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co. 205 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 681, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 407; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Duvall, 225 U. S. 483, 56 L. ed. 1174, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 790.

In this case is clearly involved the right of the plaintiff in error to be shielded from responsibility under the Federal employers' liability act, because, when properly applied to the facts as presented by the plaintiff in error, no liability on its part from the statute would result.

St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McWhirter, 229 U. S. 265, 57 L. ed. 1179, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 858; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hesterly, 228 U. S. 702, 57 L. ed. 1031, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 703.

Digitized by Google

It was error to confuse assumption of risk and contributory negligence.

Schlemmer v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co. 220 U. S. 590, 55 L. ed. 596, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 561; Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 48 L. ed. 96, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 230.

If the plaintiff in error pleaded defenses in any way contradictory, such practice is specifically approved by the decisions of the supreme court of North Carolina.

Upton v. South Carolina & G. Extension R. Co. 128 N. C. 173, 38 S. E. 736.

Whenever the evidence suggests that the servant knew of the extraordinary risk which caused the accident, the jury should be instructed regarding the legal consequences of such knowledge, as justifying the inference both of an assumption of risk and of contributory negligence.

Labatt, Mast. & S. § 1221.

It is manifest that, where the facts disclosed warrant both the inference that the servant had assumed the risk, or was guilty of contributory negligence in continuing to work, and the inference that he was lacking in proper care with respect to the act which was the immediate cause of the injury, the proper course for the trial judge to follow is to differentiate the defenses clearly, and to explain by suitable language that they are cumulative in their operation.

Labatt, Mast. & S. § 1222.

For a certain time a master may remain liable for a failure to use reasonable care in furnishing a safe place in which to work, notwithstanding the servant's appreciation of the danger, if he induces the servant to keep on by a promise that the source of trouble shall be removed.

Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. ed. 612; Southwestern Brewery & Ice Co. v. Schmidt, 226 U. S. 162, 57 L. ed. 170, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 68. See also Labatt, Mast. & S. §§ 419, 1342; Coin v. John H. Talge Lounge Co. 222 Mo. 489, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1179, 121 S. W. 1, 17 Ann. Cas. 888; Chicago & O. Coal & Car Co. v. Norman, 49 Ohio St. 598, 32 N. E. 857; Illinois Steel Co. v. Mann, 40 L.R.A. 793, note; Dresser, Employers' Liability, § 115.

There is a recognized exception to the rule that, by complaint and promise to repair, the servant is relieved of assumption of risk for a reasonable time if he continues to use the defective instrumentality in reliance upon the promise of the master. If the danger is so imminent that a man of ordinary prudence would not continue the work, notwithstanding the promise to repair, the servant continues to assume the risk.

Foster v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 4 Ann. Cas. 153, note; Utah Consol. Min. Co. v. Paxton, 80 C. C. A. 68, 150 Fed. 114; Musser-Sauntry Land, Logging & Mfg. Co. v. Brown, 61 C. C. A. 207, 126 Fed. 141.

The Federal employers' liability act is in conflict with the state law.

Coley v. North Carolina R. Co. 128 N. C. 534, 57 L.R.A. 817, 39 S. E. 43.

Congress having occupied the field, the Federal act supersedes all state law.

Southern R. Co. v. Reid, 222 U. S. 442, 56 L. ed. 262, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140; Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 57 L. ed. 314, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf, 226 U. S. 575, 576, 57 L. ed. 363, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135; St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 157, 158, 57 L. ed. 1133, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651.

Upon the subject of assumption of risk the common-law right is preserved by the employers' liability act, unless there has been a violation by the employer of a statute enacted for the safety of the employee.

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Call Pub. Co. 181 U. S. 92, 45 L. ed. 765, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 561; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 145 U. S. 275, 36 L. ed. 703, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 92, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 844; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 55 L. ed. 619, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 834, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 502, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734; United States v. American Tobacco Co. 221 U. S. 106, 55 L. ed. 663, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 632; Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 49, 50, 56 L. ed. 345, 346, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169; Barker v. Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. 88 Kan. 767, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1121, 129 Pac. 1151; Freeman v. Powell, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 144 S. W. 1033; Neil v. Idaho & W. N. R. Co. 22 Idaho, 74, 125 Pac. 331; Bowers v. Southern R. Co. 10 Ga. App. 367, 73 S. E. 677; Hall v. Vandalia R. Co. 169 Ill. App. 12.

The legislative history of an act of Congress is a proper aid to its construction.

11 Enc. U. S. Sup. Ct. Rep. 143.

Statutes which abolish by express provision assumption of risk as a defense do not affect the defense of contributory negligence.

Schlemmer v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co. 220 U. S. 590, 55 L. ed. 596, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 561; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Arrighi, 63 C. C. A. 649, 129 Fed. 347.

The positive language used by Congress in the Federal safety appliance act, § 8, illustrates the proper method of abolishing assumption of risk by legislative enactment. See also the language of the recent employers' liability act of Ohio, set forth in Erie R. Co. v. White, 109 C. C. A. 322, 187 Fed. 556.

Expressio unius est exclusio alterius.

Digitized by Google

Johnson v. Southern P. Co. 54 C. C. A. 508, 117 Fed. 462, 12 Am. Neg. Rep. 398.

Assumption of risk as a defense to an action based upon this act is to be measured by the common law and its interpretation by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101, 37 L. ed. 97, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 261; Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. ed. 612.

At common law and under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States a servant assumes the risk of defects arising from the master's negligence if he continues in the service with knowledge of such defects.

Butler v. Frazee, 211 U. S. 459, 53 L. ed. 281, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 136; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Harvey, 228 U. S. 319, 57 L. ed. 852, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 518; Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 67, 48 L. ed. 96, 100, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 230; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Barrett, 166 U. S. 617, 41 L. ed. 1136, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 707, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 745; Worden v. Gore-Meenan Co. 83 Conn. 642, 78 Atl. 422; Smalls v. Southern R. Co. 115 Ga. 137, 41 S. E. 492; Katalla Co. v. Rones, 108 C. C. A. 132, 186 Fed. 30; Sharon Fire Brick Co. v. Miller, 104 C. C. A. 340, 181 Fed. 830; Detroit Crude-Oil Co. v. Grable, 36 C. C. A. 94, 94 Fed. 73; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Archibald, 170 U. S. 671, 672, 42 L. ed. 1191, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 746; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Shalstrom, 45 L.R.A. (N.S.) 387, 115 C. C. A. 515, 195 Fed. 729; St. Louis Cordage Co. v. Miller, 63 L.R.A. 551, 61 C. C. A. 477, 126 Fed. 508, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 476; Kyner v. Portland Gold Min. Co. 106 C. C. A. 245, 184 Fed. 43; Labatt, Mast. & S. § 1186.

The requested instructions on the issue of assumption of risk should have been given.

Southern R. Co. v. Reid, 222 U. S. 424, 56 L. ed. 257, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140; Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 57 L. ed. 314, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148.

The theory that the mere fact of the servant's having continued to work with knowledge of an abnormal risk charges him, as a matter of law, with an assumption of risk, manifestly involves the corollary that, viewed as an evidential element, the servant's failure to express dissatisfaction with his environment is merely corroborative and confirmatory in its effect.

Labatt, Mast. & S. § 1202.

The fact that the dangerous condition arose after the plaintiff entered the employment is considered to be immaterial, where it is shown that he continued to work after the change with a full appreciation of the increased risk.

Labatt, Mast. & S. § 1195.

It has never been questioned, and there are numerous cases expressly or impliedly deciding, that the doctrine of assumption of risk is a bar to the action whenever the abnormal danger was known actually or constructively to the servant at the time when he entered the employment.

Ibid.; Leary v. Boston & A. R. Co. 139 Mass. 580, 52 Am. Rep. 733, 2 N. E. 115; Ragon v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 97 Mich. 265, 37 Am. St. Rep. 336, 56 N. W. 612.

Assumption of risk is not modified nor controlled by the fact that contributory negligence is no defense.

Jackson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 102 C. C. A. 159, 178 Fed. 435; Labatt, Mast. & S. pp. 749, 768, 772.

Messrs. William C. Douglass and Clyde A. Douglass argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error:

The plaintiff in error did not specifically claim, nor was it denied, any right, privilege, or immunity under the employers' liability act.

Murdock v. Memphis, 20 Wall. 590, 22 L. ed. 429.

Assumption of risk is a common-law defense, and not a creation of the Federal power.

Burnett v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 163 N. C. 186, 79 S. E. 414; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hughes, 191 U. S. 478, 48 L. ed. 269, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132.

The servant cannot assume the risk of the negligence of the master.

Union P. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 161 U. S. 452, 40 L. ed. 767, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 618; Hicks v. Naomi Falls Mfg. Co. 138 N. C. 319, 50 S. E. 703; Marks v. Harriet Cotton Mills, 138 N. C. 402, 50 S. E. 769, 3 Ann. Cas. 812; Pressly v. Dover Yarn Mills, 138 N. C. 417, 51 S. E. 69; Gottlieb v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 100 N. Y. 467, 3 N. E. 344; Mason v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 111 N. C. 482, 18 L.R.A. 845, 32 Am. St. Rep. 814, 16 S. E. 698; Hudson v. Charleston, C. & C. R. Co. 104 N. C. 491, 10 S. E. 669; Schlacker v. Ashland Iron Min. Co. 89 Mich. 262, 50 N. W. 839; Greene v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 31 Minn. 248, 47 Am. Rep. 785, 17 N. W. 378; Sims v. Lindsay, 122 N. C. 678, 30 S. E. 19; Sibbert v. Scotland Cotton Mills, 145 N. C. 314, 59 S. E. 79; Leggett v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 162 N. C. 111, 67 S. E. 249; Bissell v. Greenleaf-Johnson Lumber Co. 152 N. C. 124, 67 S. E. 259; Tanner v. Frank Hitch Lumber Co. 140 N. C. 477, 53 S. E. 287; Worley v. Laurel River Logging Co. 157 N. C. 490, 73 S. E. 107; Southern P.

Digitized by Google

Co. v. Yeargin, 48 C. C. A. 497, 109 Fed. 441; Wright v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. 197 Fed. 96; Deninger v. American Locomotive Co. 107 C. C. A. 126, 185 Fed. 32.

This case was properly submitted to the jury upon the doctrine of the ideal prudent man.

Kane v. Northern C. R. Co. 128 U. S. 91, 32 L. ed. 339, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 16; Snow v. Housatonic R. Co. 8 Allen, 441, 85 Am. Dec. 720, 15 Am. Neg. Cas. 447; Gardner v. Michigan C. R. Co. 150 U. S. 349, 37 L. ed. 1107, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140; 1 White, Personal Injuries on Railroads, §§ 370, 377; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. McCormick, 74 Ind. 440; Cregg v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 91 Mich. 624, 52 N. W. 62; Consolidated Coal Co. v. Haenni, 146 Ill. 614, 35 N. E. 162; Bridges v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 6 Mo. App. 389; Parker v. South Carolina & G. R. Co. 48 S. C. 364, 26 S. E. 669, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 681; Vosburgh v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 94 N. Y. 374, 46 Am. Rep. 148; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 194; Gottlieb v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 100 N. Y. 467, 3 N. E. 344; Mason v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 111 N. C. 491, 18 L.R.A. 845, 32 Am. St. Rep. 814, 16 S. E. 698; Hermanek v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 108 C. C. A. 254, 186 Fed. 142; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Austin, 108 C. C. A. 365, 186 Fed. 443; Hudson v. Charleston, C. & C. R. Co. 104 N. C. 491, 10 S. E. 669.

The party who procures or acquiesces in the rulings under which a trial is conducted thereby waives the right to object to them.

New York Elev. R. Co. v. Fifth Nat. Bank, 135 U. S. 432, 34 L. ed. 231, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 743.

"Plaintiff cannot complain of an error in a ruling which was made at his request, and to the prejudice of the defendant."

Avendano Bros. v. Gay, 8 Wall. 376, 19 L. ed. 422.

The laws of North Carolina have abolished assumption of risk as a defense, and Congress, in the act under consideration, having left open this part of the field, the state law governs, and assumption of risk can in no case be pleaded in an action brought under the act in the state courts of North Carolina.

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Solan, 169 U. S. 133, 42 L. ed. 688, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 289; Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 23 L. ed. 819; Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 468, 31 L. ed. 508, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 804, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 238, 32 L. ed. 352, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28; Southern R. Co. v. King, 217 U. S. 524, 54 L. ed. 868, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594.

The refusal to grant special requests to charge is not error, when their substance is embraced in the instructions actually given.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Urlin, 158 U. S. 271, 39 L. ed. 977, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840; Rio Grande Western R. Co. v. Leak, 163 U. S. 280, 41 L. ed. 160, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1020; Laber v. Cooper, 7 Wall. 565, 19 L. ed. 151; Iron Silver Min. Co. v. Cheesman, 116 U. S. 529, 29 L. ed. 712, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 481; Hartford Life Annuity Ins. Co. v. Unsell, 144 U. S. 439, 36 L. ed. 496, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 671; Ayers v. Watson, 113 U. S. 594, 28 L. ed. 1093, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 641.

Mr. Justice Pitney delivered the opinion of the court:

Horton sued the Seaboard Air Line Railway in the superior court of Wake county, North Carolina, to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by him while in defendant's employ as a locomotive engineer. The action was brought under the Federal employers' liability act of April 22, 1908 (35 Stat. at L. 65, chap. 149, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1322), as amended April 5, 1910 (36 Stat. at L. 291, chap. 143, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1324). In the complaint it was sufficiently averred that defendant was a corporation operating a line of railway as a common carrier in interstate commerce, and that plaintiff, at the time he was injured, was employed by defendant in such commerce. These facts were not in issue at the trial.

As to the circumstances of the occurrence of the injury, plaintiff's evidence tended to show that on July 27, 1910, defendant's locomotive engine No. 752 was placed in his charge; that it was equipped with a Buckner water gauge, a device attached to the boiler head for the purpose of showing the level of the water in the boiler, and consisting of a brass frame or case inclosing a thin glass tube which communicated with the boiler above and below in such manner that the tube received water and steam direct from the boiler and under the full boiler pressure. In order to shield the engineer from injury in case of the bursting of the tube, a piece of ordinary glass, 2 or 3 inches wide, 8 or 9 inches long, and about half an inch thick, known as a guard glass, should have been provided, this being a part of the regular equipment of the Buckner water gauge. There were slots for receiving the guard glass and holding it in position in front of the water tube. At each end of the tube, valves were provided for the purpose of disconnecting [496] it from the boiler. As an alternative but probably less convenient method of determining the level of the water in the boiler, ordinary gauge cocks were provided.

Plaintiff was an experienced locomotive engineer, and, according to his own testimony, was fully aware of the function of the guard glass and of its importance to his safety. He testified that when he took the engine out on his first trip on July 27th, he observed that the guard glass was missing; that on his return upon the following day he reported this to defendant's roundhouse foreman, to whom reports of such defects were properly made, and asked him for a guard glass; that the foreman stated there were none in stock at that place, and it would be necessary to send to a distance to get one; that he would do this, and that plaintiff should meanwhile run the engine without one; and that, having ineffectually endeavored to get a guard glass from another source, plaintiff proceeded to drive the engine with the use of the unguarded water gauge until August 4th, when the glass exploded and flying fragments struck him in the face, causing the injuries upon which his claim for damages was based.

Digitized by Google

Defendant's evidence tended to show that when the engine was placed in plaintiff's charge on July 27th the water glass was in good condition, with a guard glass in place; that the gauge cocks were likewise in good working order; that it was the duty of a locomotive engineer to inspect his engine and know that it was in proper order before taking it out, and if not in proper order to make a written report to the roundhouse foreman, specifying the defects; that if anything should happen to the water glass it was the engineer's duty to close the valves so as to exclude the steam pressure from it, and run the engine with the gauge cocks, and that these were sufficient for the purpose; and that plaintiff made repeated reports in writing between July 27 and the time of his injury, mentioning other things needed about his engine, but making no mention of the [497] water gauge or the guard glass. The fireman testified specifically that when plaintiff took charge of the engine on the morning of the 27th the water glass had the shield or guard in front of it, but that it was smoky, so that one could not see through it; that he, the fireman, in the presence of plaintiff, removed the guard glass in order to clean it; and that in plaintiff's presence it became broken. The roundhouse foreman specifically denied plaintiff's testimony about the complaint and the promise of reparation.

Under instructions presently to be noticed, the case was submitted to the jury upon three issues, to which responses were made as follows:

(1) Was plaintiff injured by defendant's negligence? Answer, Yes.

(2) If so, did plaintiff assume the risk of injury? Answer, No.

(3) Did plaintiff by his own negligence contribute to his injury? Answer, Yes.

The jury also assessed substantial damages, for which judgment was rendered by the trial court, and upon appeal the supreme court affirmed the judgment (162 N. C. 424, — L.R.A.(N.S.) — 78 S. E. 494). The case comes here, under § 237, Judicial Code [36 Stat. at L. 1156, chap. 231, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 227], upon questions arising out of instructions given and refused to be given to the jury as to the nature of the duty of the employer and the rules respecting assumption of risk and contributory negligence under the Federal employers' liability act.

There is a motion to dismiss, upon the ground that no return day is specified in the writ of error or citation. Carroll v. Dorsey (1857) 20 How. 204, 207, 15 L. ed. 803, 804, and Sea v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. (1880) 154 U. S. 659, and 25 L. ed. 882, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1191, are relied upon. These decisions were based upon § 22 of the judiciary act of September 24, 1789, 1 Stat. at L. 84, chap. 20, which was held to require a certain return day to be specified in the writ of error. Accordingly, general rule 33, [498] promulgated December terms, 1867 (6 Wall. vi.), afterwards found as clause 5 of rule 8 of the revised rules promulgated January 7, 1884 (108 U. S. 577, 20 L. ed. 902, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. vii.), required that the writ of error and citation should be returnable on the first day of the term in cases where final judgment was rendered more than thirty days before that day, and on the third Monday of the term in cases where judgment was rendered less than thirty days before the first day. Blatchf. U. S. Ct. Rules 77. But under the authority conferred by § 917, Rev. Stat. (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 684), the court, on January 26, 1891, amended clause 5 of rule 8 so as to read: "All appeals, writs of error, and citations must be made returnable not exceeding thirty days from the day of signing the citation; whether the return day fall in vacation or in term time, and be served before the return day" (137 U. S. 710, 34 L. ed. 1122, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. iii.). And in the present rule as promulgated December 22, 1911 (222 U. S. p. 14, Appx. 56 L. ed. 1297, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. vii.), the same language is retained, with an exception extending the time to sixty days in writs of error and appeals from the western states, and Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, and to 120 days as to the Philippine Islands. An extension of the time in favor of the more distant states and territories was first introduced as clause 3 of original rule 63, promulgated at December term, 1853 (16 How. ix. 14 L. ed.

Digitized by Google

818), and has been continued, with amendments, until the present time (21 How. viii.; 2 Wall. viii.; 108 U. S. 578, 20 L. ed. 903, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. viii.). It has, however, no bearing upon the form of the writ or citation, aside from the limit of time that may be allowed between date and return.

The present writ of error and citation were dated the 4th day of August, 1913, and in terms were returnable "within thirty days from the date hereof." This form has been usually employed, with the approval of the court, since the amendment of the rule made in 1891, as mentioned. It is a substantial compliance with the present [499] rule, and tends to avoid errors that otherwise might be made in inserting a day certain as a return day.

This motion must therefore be denied.

A second motion to dismiss, based upon grounds still more technical, and which need not be particularly stated, will likewise be denied.

There is a further motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction, upon the ground that no right, privilege, or immunity under the employers' liability act was especially set up or claimed in the state court of last resort and by that court denied. But since that court sustained the trial court in overruling certain contentions made by plaintiff in error asserting a construction of the act, which, if acceded to, would presumably have produced a verdict in its favor, and consequent immunity from the action, this motion must be denied, upon the authority of St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McWhirter, 229 U. S. 265, 57 L. ed. 1179, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 858.

Coming now to the merits, we need consider only certain assignments of error that are based upon exceptions to the action of the trial judge in giving and refusing to give instructions relating to the issues of defendant's negligence, the assumption of risk, and contributory negligence.

At the outset we observe that the judge evidently misapprehended the effect of the Federal act upon state legislation. Thus, the jury was told that plaintiff had brought the action under the Federal statute; "And where Congress enacts a law within the limits of its power, that law should be enforced uniformly throughout the entire United States. If it is in conflict with the state law, the state law is superseded. But where there is no conflict expressed by statute of the United States, then the rule of the state prevails." This, of course, in the absence of a specific statement of the applicable rule of the state law, might be treated as academic. But the theory [500] was carried into the specific instructions, to the extent that upon the questions of the employer's duty and the assumption of risk by the employee, the charge was modeled rather upon the North Carolina statute than upon the act of Congress. By § 2646, N. C. Revisal of 1905, "Any servant or employee of any railroad company operating in this state who shall suffer injury to his person, or the personal representative of any such servant or employee who shall have suffered death in the course of his services or employment with such company by the negligence, carelessness, or incompetence of any other servant, employee, or agent of the company, or by any defect in the machinery, ways, or appliances of the company, shall be entitled to maintain an action against such company. Any contract or agreement, expressed or implied, made by any employee of such company to waive the benefit of this section, shall be null and void."

Upon the issue of defendant's negligence, the trial court charged the jury as follows: "It is the duty of the defendant to provide a reasonably safe place for the plaintiff to work, and to furnish him with reasonably safe appliances with which to do his work." And in various other forms the notion was expressed that the duty of defendant was absolute with respect to the safety of the place of work and of the appliances for the work. Thus: "If you find from the evidence that it [the locomotive engine] was turned over to him without the guard, and if you further find from the evidence that the guard was a proper safety provision for the use of that gauge, and that it was unsafe without it, then the defendant did not furnish him a safe place and a safe appliance to do his work, and if it remained in that condition it was continuing negligence on the part of the defendant, and if he was injured in consequence thereof, if you so find by the greater weight of the evidence, you should answer the first issue, 'Yes.'"

[501] In these instructions the trial judge evidently adopted the same measure of responsibility respecting the character and safe condition of the place of work, and the appliances for the doing of the work, that is prescribed by the local statute. But it is settled that since Congress, by the act of 1908, took possession of the field of the employer's liability to employees in interstate transportation by rail, all state laws upon the subject are superseded. Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 55, 56 L. ed. 327, 348, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875.

The act is quoted in full in that case at p. 6. By its 1st section a right of action is conferred (under conditions specified) for injury or death of the employee "resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment."

Digitized by Google

This clause has two branches; the one covering the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of the carrier, which has the effect of abolishing in this class of cases the common-law rule that exempted the employer from responsibility for the negligence of a fellow employee of the plaintiff; and the other relating to defects and insufficiencies in the cars, engines, appliances, etc. But, plainly, with respect to the latter as well as the former ground of liability, it was the intention of Congress to base the action upon negligence only, and to exclude responsibility of the carrier to its employees for defects and insufficiencies not attributable to negligence. The common-law rule is that an employer is not a guarantor of the safety of the place of work or of the machinery and appliances of the work; the extent of its duty to its employees is to see that ordinary care and prudence are exercised, to the end that the place in which the work is to be performed and the tools and appliances of the work [502] may be safe for the workmen. Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 213, 217, 25 L. ed. 612, 615; Washington & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 135 U. S. 554, 570, 34 L. ed. 235, 241, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1044; Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 67, 48 L. ed. 96, 100, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 230. To hold that under the statute the railroad company is liable for the injury or death of an employee resulting from any defect or insufficiency in its cars, engines, appliances, etc., however caused, is to take from the act the words "due to its negligence." The plain effect of these words is to condition the liability upon negligence; and had there been doubt before as to the common-law rule, certainly the act now limits the responsibility of the company as indicated. The instructions above quoted imposed upon the employer an absolute responsibility for the safe condition of the appliances of the work, instead of limiting the responsibility to the exercise of reasonable care. In effect, the jury was instructed that the absence of the guard glass was conclusive evidence of defendant's negligence. In this there was error.

The questions more particularly discussed, however, and upon which the decision seems to have turned in the supreme court of North Carolina, pertain to the issues of assumption of risk and contributory negligence. By § 3 of the act of 1908 it is declared that "the fact that the employee may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employee: Provided, that no such employee who may be injured or killed shall be held to have been guilty of contributory negligence in any case where the violation by such common carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to the injury or death of such employee." And by § 4, "Such employee shall not be held to have assumed the risks of his employment in any case where the violation by such common carrier of any statute enacted for [503] the safety of employees contributed to the injury or death of such employee."

By the phrase "any statute enacted for the safety of employees," Congress evidently intended Federal statutes, such as the safety appliance acts (27 Stat. at L. 531, chap. 196, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3174; 32 Stat. at L. 943, chap. 976, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1314; 36 Stat. at L. 298, chap. 160, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1327; id. 913, chap. 103, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1333), and the hours of service act (34 Stat. at L. 1415, chap. 2939, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1321). For it is not to be conceived that, in enacting a general law for establishing and enforcing the responsibility of common carriers by railroad to their employees in interstate commerce, Congress intended to permit the legislatures of the several states to determine the effect of contributory negligence and assumption of risk, by enacting statutes for the safety of employees, since this would in effect relegate to state control two of the essential factors that determine the responsibility of the employer.

It seems to us that § 4, in eliminating the defense of assumption of risk in the cases indicated, quite plainly evidences the legislative intent that in all other cases such assumption shall have its former effect as a complete bar to the action. And, taking §§ 3 and 4 together, there is no doubt that Congress recognized the distinction between contributory negligence and assumption of risk; for, while it is declared that neither of these shall avail the carrier in cases where the violation of a statute has contributed to the injury or death of the employee, there is, with respect to cases not in this category, a limitation upon the effect that is to be given to contributory negligence, while no corresponding limitation is imposed upon the defense of assumption of risk—perhaps none was deemed feasible.

Digitized by Google

The distinction, although simple, is sometimes overlooked. Contributory negligence involves the notion of some fault or breach of duty on the part of the employee; and since it is ordinarily his duty to take some precaution [504] for his own safety when engaged in a hazardous occupation, contributory negligence is sometimes defined as a failure to use such care for his safety as ordinarily prudent employees in similar circumstances would use. On the other hand, the assumption of risk, even though the risk be obvious, may be free from any suggestion of fault or negligence on the part of the employee. The risks may be present, notwithstanding the exercise of all reasonable care on his part. Some employments are necessarily fraught with danger to the workman, —danger that must be and is confronted in the line of his duty. Such dangers as are normally and necessarily incident to the occupation are presumably taken into the account in fixing the rate of wages. And a workman of mature years is taken to assume risks of this sort, whether he is actually aware of them or not. But risks of another sort, not naturally incident to the occupation, may arise out of the failure of the employer to exercise due care with respect to providing a safe place of work and suitable and safe appliances for the work. These the employee is not treated as assuming until he becomes aware of the defect or disrepair and of the risk arising from it, unless defect and risk alike are so obvious that an ordinarily prudent person under the circumstances would have observed and appreciated them. These distinctions have been recognized and applied in numerous decisions of this court. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 68, 48 L. ed. 96, 100, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 230; Schlemmer v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co. 220 U. S. 590, 596, 55 L. ed. 596, 600, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 561; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Harvey, 228 U. S. 319, 321, 57 L. ed. 852, 855, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 518; Gila Valley, G. & N. R. Co. v. Hall, 232 U. S. 94, 102, ante, 521, 524, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 229; and cases cited.

When the employee does know of the defect, and appreciates the risk that is attributable to it, then if he continues in the employment without objection, or without obtaining from the employer or his representative an assurance that the defect will be remedied, the employee [505] assumes the risk, even though it arise out of the master's breach of duty. If, however, there be a promise of reparation, then during such time as may be reasonably required for its performance, or until the particular time specified for its performance, the employee, relying upon the promise, does not assume the risk unless at least the danger be so imminent that no ordinarily prudent man under the circumstances would rely upon such promise. Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 213, 224, 25 L. ed. 612, 617; Southwestern Brewery & Ice Co. v. Schmidt, 226 U. S. 162, 168, 57 L. ed. 170, 173, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 68. This branch of the law of master and servant seems to be traceable to Holmes v. Clarke, 6 Hurlst. & N. 349, 30 L. J. Exch. N. S. 135, 7 Jur. N. S. 397, 3 L. T. N. S. 675, 9 Week. Rep. 419; Clarke v. Holmes, 7 Hurlst. & N. 937, 9 L. T. N. S. 178, 10 Week. Rep. 405.

In the light of these principles, the rulings of the trial court in the case at bar must be considered.

Defendant specifically requested an instruction that plaintiff's right to recover damages was to be determined by the provisions of the Federal act, and that "if you find by a preponderance of evidence that the water glass on the engine on which plaintiff was employed was not provided with a guard glass, and the condition of the glass was open and obvious and was fully known to plaintiff, and he continued to use such water glass with such knowledge and without objection, and that he knew the risk incident thereto, then the court charges you that the plaintiff voluntarily assumed the risk incident to such use, and you will answer the second issue 'Yes.'" The court gave this instruction as applicable to the issue of contributory negligence, and instead of the words, "then the court charges you that the plaintiff voluntarily assumed the risk incident to such use, and you will answer the second issue 'Yes,'" used the words, "then the court charges you that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and you will answer the third issue 'Yes.'" To the refusal to give the instruction as requested, and the modification of it, defendant excepted.

[506] The trial court evidently deemed, as did the state supreme court, that the topic of assumption of risk, with reference to the circumstances of the case, was sufficiently and properly covered by an instruction actually given as follows: after stating in general terms that "a man assumes the risk when he takes employment, incident to the class of work which he is to perform," but that "he does not assume the risk incident to the negligence of his employer in providing machinery and appliances with which he has to work," the court proceeded as follows:

"On the other hand, the employer has the right to assume that his employee will go about his work in a reasonably safe way, and give due regard to the machinery and appliances which are in his hands and under his control, and if you should find from the evidence by its greater weight (because the burden in this instance is on the defendant), that the plaintiff knew of the absence of the guard or shield to the water guage and failed to give notice to the defendant or to the agent whose duty it was to furnish the water gauge and appliance, and he continued to use it without giving that notice, it being furnished to him in a safe condition, then he assumed the risk incident to his work in the engine with the glass water gauge in that condition, although he might have handled his engine in every other respect with perfect care." [Italics ours.]

Digitized by Google

It will be observed that by this instruction the application of the rule of assumption of risk was conditioned upon the jury finding that the water gauge, when furnished to plaintiff, was in a safe condition. Here again the court appears to have followed the local statute, rather than the act of Congress; for § 2646, N. C. Revisal of 1905, already quoted, has been held by the state supreme court to abolish assumption of risk as a bar to an action by a railroad employee for an injury attributable to defective appliances furnished by the employer. Coley v. North Carolina R. [507] Co. 128 N. C. 534, 57 L.R.A. 817, 39 S. E. 43. The trial court, while recognizing that the act of Congress applied so far as its terms extended, and that by its terms the employee is not to be held to have assumed the risk in any case where the violation by the carrier of a statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to the injury, at the same time held that, since no statute had been enacted covering such an appliance as the glass water gauge, the rights of plaintiff were such as he would have under the state law. An instruction to the jury to this effect preceded the instructions we have just quoted.

It is true that such an appliance as the water gauge and guard glass in question is not covered by the provisions of the safety appliance act, or any other law passed by Congress for the safety of employees, in force at the time this action arose. But the necessary result of this is not to leave the employer responsible for the consequences of any defect in such an appliance, excluding the common-law rule as to assumption of risk, but to leave the matter in this respect open to the ordinary application of the common-law rule. The adoption of the opposite view would in effect leave the several state laws, and not the act of Congress, to control the subject-matter.

By the instruction as given, the application of the rule of assumed risk was confined to the single hypothesis that the jury should find the guard glass was in position when the engine was delivered to plaintiff on the morning of July 27th. This, as already pointed out, was one of the questions in dispute; plaintiff having testified that the guard glass was missing at that time, while his fireman testified (and in this was corroborated by circumstantial evidence) that it was in place at that time, and was subsequently broken. But by the common law, with respect to the assumption by the employee of the risk of injuries attributable to defects due to the employer's negligence, when known and appreciated by the employee, [508] and not made the subject of objection or complaint by him, it is quite immaterial whether the defect existed when the appliance was first placed in his charge, or subsequently arose. Hence, if the guard glass was missing when plaintiff first took the engine, as he testified, and he, knowing of its absence and the consequent risk to himself, continued to use the water gauge without giving notice of the defect to the defendant or its representative, he assumed the risk.

Defendant was entitled to have the requested instruction given respecting assumption of risk, and as the charge actually given did not cover the same ground, there was error.

Its harmful effect is conspicuously evident when we note that the jury, while finding that plaintiff did not assume the risk, at the same time found that he did by his own negligence contribute to his injury. Presumably, if instructed in the manner requested by defendant, the jury would have found that the risk was assumed, and this would have entitled defendant to a judgment in its favor, instead of a mere mitigation of the damages, which was the consequence of a finding of contributory negligence.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of North Carolina must be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Reversed.

---

[509] UNITED STATES, Appt.,
v.
NELSON P. VULTE.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 509-515.)

Army — pay — service beyond seas.

The words "shall be as now provided by law," in the provision of the act of May 11, 1908 (35 Stat. at L. 110, chap. 163, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 341), for increased pay for Army service beyond the limits of the states comprising the Union, and the territories of the United States contiguous thereto, refer to the proviso in the act of June 30, 1902 (32 Stat. at L. 512, chap. 1328, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 339), that thereafter the pay proper of all commissioned officers and enlisted men serving beyond such limits should be increased 10 per cent and 20 per cent respectively; and a commissioned officer serving in Porto Rico from June, 1908, until November, 1909, is therefore entitled to such 10 per cent increase, notwithstanding the specific exception of Porto Rico and Hawaii in the acts of June 12, 1906 (34 Stat. at L. 247, chap. 3078), and March 2, 1907 (34 Stat. at L. 1164, chap. 2511), when making appropriations for such increase of pay, since these exceptions may not prevail over the substantive provision of the earlier act which is explicit and of enduring effect, and is, besides, comprehensive of all foreign stations.

Digitized by Google

[For other cases, see Army and Navy, VI. b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 256.]

Argued March 10, 1914. Ordered for reargument April 6, 1914. Reargued April 21 and 22, 1914. Decided May 4, 1914.

APPEAL from the Court of Claims to review an award to a commissioned Army officer of additional pay for service beyond the seas. Affirmed.

See same case below, 47 Ct. Cl. 324.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Assistant Attorney General Thompson argued the cause and filed a brief for appellant:

Congress had the power to repeal general salary or compensation acts through special appropriation acts. When such a repeal is claimed, the question is determined by the intention of Congress.

United States v. Fisher, 109 U. S. 143, 27 L. ed. 885, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154; United States v. Mitchell, 109 U. S. 146, 27 L. ed. 887, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 151; Mathews v. United States, 123 U. S. 184, 31 L. ed. 127, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 80; Wallace v. United States, 133 U. S. 180, 33 L. ed. 571, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 251; McKinistry v. United States, 34 Fed. 211.

The army appropriation act of April 23, 1904, was intended to redefine the definition of "foreign stations" given in the act of June 30, 1902, so as to exclude Porto Rico and Hawaii; it repealed the act of June 30, 1902, to that extent.

The denial of additional compensation for service in Porto Rico and Hawaii was not only reasonable, but also logically inevitable, for the whole theory of the allowance of additional compensation for such service is that such service would be more onerous than service in the United States.

Carden v. United States, 45 Ct. Cl. 171; Irwin v. United States, 38 Ct. Cl. 87.

The act of June 12, 1906, having been construed by the Comptroller, and the act of May 11, 1908, having been prepared with reference to the act of 1906, so far as the definition of foreign stations was concerned, must necessarily refer back to the territorial definition of foreign stations as set forth in the act of 1906, and as construed by the Comptroller.

Sessions v. Romadka, 145 U. S. 41, 42, 36 L. ed. 614, 615, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 799; Claflin v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 110 U. S. 81, 28 L. ed. 76, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 507; The Abbotsford, 98 U. S. 440, 25 L. ed. 168; Plummer v. United States, 224 U. S. 137, 140, 56 L. ed. 697, 700, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 467.

Since the passage of the act of 1906, the accounting officers of the Treasury have uniformly disallowed increased pay for service in Porto Rico and Hawaii. Such contemporaneous, uniform, and continuous construction is, we submit, entitled to great weight, and should not be overruled without cogent reasons.

Brown v. United States, 113 U. S. 568, 28 L. ed. 1079, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648; Schell v. Fauché, 138 U. S. 562, 34 L. ed. 1040, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 376; Hewitt v. Shultz, 180 U. S. 139, 45 L. ed. 463, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 309; United States v. Healey, 160 U. S. 136, 40 L. ed. 369, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247; United States v. Sweet, 189 U. S. 471, 47 L. ed. 907, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638.

Mr. George A. King argued the cause, and, with Mr. William B. King, filed a brief for appellee:

The act of 1906 is a mere appropriation. The literal construction of its terms is that Congress was limiting the expenditure of the particular sum appropriated in the clause. If the terms of the act can be satisfied by this construction, this is conclusive in its favor. A literal construction must always be adopted where it involves no absurdity or contradiction.

Dewey v. United States, 178 U. S. 510, 521, 44 L. ed. 1170, 1174, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 981.

A repeal pro tanto of the act of 1902 cannot be inferred by indirection merely from language of appropriation. Repeals by implication are never favored; and one statute will not be construed so as to repeal another if, by any reasonable construction, the two may stand together.

Digitized by Google

United States v. Langston, 118 U. S. 389, 30 L. ed. 164, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1185.

A restriction upon the expenditure of a particular appropriation will not be extended into a change of substantive law.

Minis v. United States, 15 Pet. 423, 445, 10 L. ed. 791, 799; Collins v. United States, 15 Ct. Cl. 32; Converse v. United States, 26 Ct. Cl. 8; Geddes v. United States, 38 Ct. Cl. 428; Pennington v. United States, 231 U. S. 631, 58 L. ed. 410, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269; Scott's Case, 7 Ops. Atty. Gen. 431; 27 Ops. Atty. Gen. 108, 294, 295.

A provision should not be permitted to masquerade through Congress in one character, only to assume a totally different phase after being enacted into law.

Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. United States, 27 Ct. Cl. 467, affirmed in 164 U. S. 190, 41 L. ed. 399, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 45.

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee, Nelson P. Vulte, filed a petition in the court of claims claiming to be entitled to $299.78, being 10 per cent of his regular pay for service beyond the seas. Judgment was entered in his favor for that amount, and the United States prosecuted this appeal.

The court found the following facts: Vulte was appointed second lieutenant in the Marine Corps June 30, 1893, and was promoted to first lieutenant March 3, 1904. Under orders assigning him for duty in Porto Rico with station at San Juan, he sailed from New York for Porto Rico June 27, 1908, and served there until November 3, 1909, when he was detached and ordered back to the United States. He was four days on the return voyage.

If it is held that he is entitled to 10 per cent for services in Porto Rico from the date of sailing from New York until the date of his detachment from duty at San Juan, there would accrue to him the sum of $296.72, and [512] an additional sum of $3.06 if entitled to pay en route from Porto Rico to New York.

Vulte's pay was originally fixed by § 1612 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1096) as follows: "The officers of the Marine Corps shall be entitled to receive the same pay and allowances, and the enlisted men shall be entitled to receive the same pay and bounty for re-enlisting, as are or may be provided by or in pursuance of law for the officers and enlisted men of like grades in the Infantry of the Army."

On June 30, 1902 (32 Stat. at L. 512, chap. 1328, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 339), as part of the appropriation act for the Army, Congress modified existing law respecting the pay proper of officers of this grade by the following language: "For additional ten per centum increase on pay of commissioned officers serving at foreign stations, four hundred and fifty-one thousand, four hundred and fifty-six dollars: Provided, That hereafter the pay proper of all commissioned officers and enlisted men serving beyond the limits of the states comprising the Union and the territories of the United States contiguous thereto shall be increased ten per centum for officers and twenty per centum for enlisted men over and above the rates of pay proper as fixed by law for time of peace, and the time of such service shall be counted from the date of departure from said states to the date of return thereto."

As observed by Mr. Justice Booth, delivering the opinion of the court of claims: "Thus far the rights of plaintiff [Vulte] respecting pay are obvious; the complications arise by subsequent legislation."

On June 12, 1906, Congress provided—"for additional ten per centum increase on pay of commissioned officers serving beyond the limits of the states comprising the Union and the territories of the United States contiguous thereto (except Porto Rico and Hawaii), as provided by act of June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and two, the time of such service to be counted from the date of departure [513] from said states to the date of return thereto. . . ." (34 Stat. at L. 247, chap. 3078.)

This provision of the act of June 12, 1906, was repeated in the appropriation act of 1907. 34 Stat. at L. 1164, chap. 2511.

The act of May 11, 1908, provided as follows: "That increase of pay for service beyond the limits of the states comprising the Union and the territories of the United States contiguous thereto shall be as now provided by law.

. . . . . .

"For additional ten per centum increase on pay of officers on foreign service, two hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars.

. . . . . .

"That nothing herein contained shall be construed so as to reduce the pay or allowances now authorized by law for any officer or enlisted man of the Army; and all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed." 35 Stat. at L. 110, 114, chap. 163, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, pp. 341, 354.

The short point in the case is to what the words "shall be as now provided by law" in the act of May 11, 1908, refer,—whether to the acts of 1906 and 1907, or more limitedly, we may say, to the exceptions of Porto Rico and Hawaii in those acts, or to the proviso in the act of June 30, 1902, supra. In other words, whether the exceptions of those years of those special places shall prevail over the substantive provision of the act of June 30, 1902, supra, which is explicit, of enduring effect, and is besides comprehensive of all foreign stations, its language being: "That hereafter the pay proper of all commissioned officers . . . serving beyond the limits of the states . . . shall be increased ten per centum. . . ."

Digitized by Google

The government contends for the exceptions as constituting new law, not as a temporary condition under an [514] old one. The claimant contends for the proviso of the act of 1902, and counsel, in quite elaborate arguments, have supported their respective contentions. We shall not follow the details of their arguments. The question presented, we think, is in brief compass. Congress manifestly did not think that by the first instance of the exception, that in the act of 1906, it had done more than temporarily suspend as to Porto Rico and Hawaii the act of June 30, 1902. The exception was repeated in 1907. If the first exception was not intended to affect permanently the act of 1902, why should such intention be ascribed to the second exception—or to both, neither having words of prospective extension, and, without such words, naturally having only temporary operation? It would be extreme to say that by making them Congress considered that it had established a policy which could be confidently referred to as having the status and effect of permanent law.

The exceptions, it is to be remembered, were in appropriation acts, and no words were used to indicate any other purpose than the disbursement of a sum of money for the particular fiscal years. This court has had occasion to deal with such instances of legislation and their intended effect on existing law. In United States v. Langston, 118 U. S. 389, 394, 30 L. ed. 164, 165, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1185, it was decided that a statute which fixed the annual salary of a public officer at a designated sum without limitation as to time is not abrogated or suspended by subsequent enactments which merely appropriate a less amount for that officer for particular years, and which contained no words that expressly or by clear implication modified or repealed the previous law. See also Minis v. United States, 15 Pet. 423, 445, 10 L. ed. 791, 799, where it is said: "It would be somewhat unusual to find engrafted upon an act making special and temporary appropriation any provision which was to have a general and permanent application to all future appropriations. [515] Nor ought such an intention on the part of the legislature to be presumed, unless it is expressed in the most clear and positive terms, and where the language admits of no other reasonable interpretation." This follows naturally from the nature of appropriation bills, and the presumption hence arising is fortified by the rules of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The ruling in the Langston and Minis Cases is not opposed by the cases cited by the government. In all of them there was something more than the mere omission to appropriate a sufficient sum. There were expressions indicating a broader purpose. In two of them, United States v. Fisher, 109 U. S. 143, 27 L. ed. 885, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154, and United States v. Mitchell, 109 U. S. 146, 27 L. ed. 887, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 157, it was intimated that the law was only suspended for the particular years. In another, Wallace v. United States, 133 U. S. 180, 33 L. ed. 571, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 251, it was held that the appropriation constituted the law which prescribed the compensation of the office. And in all of them the Langston Case was referred to and not disturbed or modified.

Judgment affirmed.

UNITED STATES, Plff. in Err.,
v.
HAROLD A. FOSTER, Frank E. Winchell, William S. Edwards, and Harry H. Platt.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 515–527.)

Appeal — by government in criminal case — jurisdiction.

1. A decision of a Federal district court sustaining a demurrer to an indictment charging a conspiracy to defraud the United States by unlawfully increasing the gross postoffice receipts on which the postmaster's salary is to be based, and a conspiracy to make a false return for the purpose of fraudulently increasing such compensation, is based upon the construction of the statutes on which the indictment is founded, and is therefore within the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, where the district court distinctly ruled that such indictment was sufficient in its technical or formal details, and, although giving special prominence to certain regulations of the Postmaster General, considered the effect of the Federal statutes independently of such regulations upon the sufficiency and legality of the postmaster's return, a construction of the statutes being

---

Note.—On appeal by government in criminal case—see note to United States v. Stevenson, 54 L. ed. U. S. 153.

On interference by courts with rulings of Postoffice Department—see notes to United States ex rel. Reinach v. Cortelyou, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 166, and National L. Ins. Co. v. National L. Ins. Co. 52 L. ed. U. S. 808.

Digitized by Google

necessary to determine the validity of the regulations.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, I. e., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Conspiracy — to defraud United States — irregularly increasing postmaster's salary.

2. A conspiracy to increase the gross receipts of a postoffice upon which the postmaster's salary is to be fixed, by the unlawful sale and purchase at that office of large quantities of stamps to be used in mailing matter outside the delivery of such office, is one to defraud the United States,—especially where the postmaster at whose office the stamps are to be used receives a fixed salary.

[For other cases, see Conspiracy, II., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Postoffice — postmaster's salary — gross receipts — unlawful sales.

3. The gross receipts of a postoffice upon which, under the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat. at L. 600, chap. 142, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2619), the compensation of the postmaster is to be fixed, do not include receipts arising out of violations of the Federal Criminal Code, § 208 (35 Stat. at L. 1128, chap. 321, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1650), making it a crime for a postmaster to dispose of stamps outside the delivery of his office, or to induce, or attempt to induce, for the purpose of increasing his compensation, the purchase of stamps, stamped envelops, or postal cards other than as provided by law or the regulations of the Postoffice Department.

[For other cases, see Postoffice, II., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Executive departments — regulations of Postmaster General — return of postoffice receipts.

4. The authority of the Postmaster General under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 161, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 80, to make regulations not inconsistent with law for the government of his Department, and the conduct of its officers and clerks, includes the power to prescribe that, in determining the gross receipts of a postoffice, upon which, under the act of March, 3, 1883, the salary of the postmaster is to be fixed, stamps sold in large or unusual quantities, to be used in mailing matter at other postoffices, will not be included, and to require the postmaster to ascertain and report the intention of the purchaser of stamps or stamped paper in large or unusual quantities, such regulations being purely administrative of the law, which manifestly intends that the gross receipts from lawful sales only are to be the measure of the postmaster's salary, excluding receipts arising out of violations of the Federal Criminal Code, § 208, making criminal unlawfully induced sales outside of the delivery of the office, and sales otherwise than as provided by law or the regulations of the Postoffice Department.

[For other cases, see Executive Departments, II. e, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Postoffice — offenses — false return by postmaster.

5. A postmaster who includes in his return to the Department as a part of the gross receipts of the postoffice upon which his salary, under the act of March 3, 1883, is to be fixed, the receipts from the sale of stamps in large or unusual quantities, to be used in mailing matter at any other postoffice, is punishable under the Federal Criminal Code, § 206, making it a crime for a postmaster to make a false return for the purpose of fraudulently increasing his compensation, since, even if the regulations of the Postmaster General adopted under the supposed authority of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 161, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 80, that, in determining such gross receipts, unusual sales shall not be included, are invalid, § 208 of such Code regards as criminal unlawfully induced sales, sales made outside the delivery of the office, and sales otherwise than as provided by law or the regulations of the Postoffice Department.

[For other cases, see Postoffice, II., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 838.]

Argued April 13 and 14, 1914. Decided May 4, 1914.

IN ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts to review a judgment sustaining a demurrer to an indictment charging a conspiracy to defraud the United States, and to violate certain provisions of the postal laws. Reversed.

See same case below, 211 Fed. 206.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Assistant Attorney General Wallace argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

This court has jurisdiction.

United States v. Patten, 226 U. S. 525, 535, 57 L. ed. 333, 338, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 325, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141; United States v. Sutton, 215 U. S. 294, 54 L. ed. 201, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 116; United States v. Keitel, 211 U. S. 397, 53 L. ed. 244, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 123.

The term "gross receipts" means receipts accruing from sales made pursuant to law and the regulations of the Postoffice Department.

Lewis Pub. Co. v. Wyman, 104 C. C. A. 453, 182 Fed. 13; McKee v. United States, 164 U. S. 287, 293, 41 L. ed. 437, 439, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92; State v. Illinois C. R. Co. 246 Ill. 188, 92 N. E. 814; German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Van Cleave, 191 Ill. 410, 61 N. E. 94; People ex rel. Continental Ins. Co. v. Miller, 177 N. Y. 515, 70 N. E. 10; State ex rel. Breckenridge v. Fleming, 70 Neb. 523, 97 N. W. 1063; State v. Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. 107 Minn. 390, 120 N. W. 534.

Departmental construction should not be disregarded or overturned except for cogent reasons, and unless it is clear that such construction is erroneous.

Digitized by Google

United States v. Johnston, 124 U. S. 236, 253, 31 L. ed. 389, 396, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 446.

The regulations of the Postmaster General here drawn in question are valid and not in excess of law.

Lewis Pub. Co. v. Wyman, 104 C. C. A. 453, 182 Fed. 13; Campbell v. United States, 107 U. S. 407, 27 L. ed. 592, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 759; Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S. 462, 54 L. ed. 569, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249, 17 Ann. Cas. 1112; United States v. Antikamnia Chemical Co. 231 U. S. 654, ante, 419, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 222.

The indictment may be sustained without reference to the regulation of the Postmaster General.

United States v. Keitel, 211 U. S. 370, 53 L. ed. 230, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 123; United States v. Newton, 48 Fed. 218.

Mr. Philip Rubenstein argued the cause, and, with Mr. Timothy Howard, filed a brief for defendants in error:

The whole case resolved itself into the question of the power to enact the regulation. If this be a construction by the lower court of § 161 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 80), it does not constitute a construction of the statute upon which the indictment is founded.

United States v. Keitel, 211 U. S. 370, 378, 53 L. ed. 230, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 123; United States v. Patten, 226 U. S. 525, 535, 57 L. ed. 333, 538, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 325, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141.

The Postmaster General, by his regulation, proposes to base the salary of the postmaster upon gross receipts, less unusual sales: in other words, upon something less than gross receipts. He has no right thus to change the method which Congress has clearly provided for fixing salaries.

United States v. George, 228 U. S. 14, 57 L. ed. 712, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 412; United States v. Eaton, 144 U. S. 687, 36 L. ed. 594, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 764; Morrill v. Jones, 106 U. S. 466, 27 L. ed. 267, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 423; Williamson v. United States, 207 U. S. 425, 52 L. ed. 278, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 163.

This court has definitely laid down the law that neither executive officers nor the appointing power can, during the service of an officer, either increase or diminish a salary fixed by statute.

Glavey v. United States, 182 U. S. 595, 601, 45 L. ed. 1247, 1250, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 891; United States v. Wilson, 144 U. S. 24, 36 L. ed. 332, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539.

Many cases in that connection were decided in the court of claims.

Rush v. United States, 35 Ct. Cl. 223; Andrews v. United States, 47 Ct. Cl. 51; Adams v. United States, 20 Ct. Cl. 115; Geddes v. United States, 38 Ct. Cl. 428; Whiting v. United States, 35 Ct. Cl. 291; Sherlock v. United States, 43 Ct. Cl. 161; Jacobs v. United States, 41 Ct. Cl. 452.

Other cases in which the validity of departmental regulations were considered are:

Re Page, 128 Fed. 317; Borden v. United States, 132 Fed. 205; United States v. Symonds, 120 U. S. 46, 30 L. ed. 557, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 411; Patterson v. United States, 104 C. C. A. 434, 181 Fed. 970; Bruhl Bros. v. Wilson, 123 Fed. 957; Hoover v. Salling, 49 C. C. A. 26, 110 Fed. 43; Bruce v. United States, 120 C. C. A. 370, 202 Fed. 100.

If the regulation is invalid, the conspiracy to do acts prohibited therein is not a conspiracy to defraud.

United States v. Biggs, 211 U. S. 507, 519, 521, 53 L. ed. 305, 309, 310, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 181; Williamson v. United States, 207 U. S. 425, 52 L. ed. 278, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 163.

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

Indictment in two counts for conspiracy to defraud the United States, and to violate certain provisions of the postal laws. The object of the conspiracy and the manner of its execution are in substance, as charged in the indictment in the first count, as follows: Harold A. Foster was postmaster of the United States postoffice at North Brookfield, Massachusetts, a second-class office. The salary of the office was fixed by the Postmaster General, pursuant to law and the regulations established by him, at $2,000 a year, the salary being based and ascertained upon the gross receipts of the office for the twelve months next preceding the 31st of March, 1911. The law required the salary to be adjusted annually, and the next adjustment was required to be made by the Postmaster General in accordance with the gross receipts of the office as shown by the quarterly returns of the postmaster to the Auditor of the Postoffice Department for the four quarters next preceding the 31st of March, 1912, the readjustment to take effect on the ensuing 1st of July, 1912. The Postmaster General was required by law and the established regulations in readjusting such salary not to include in the gross receipts of the office the moneys received by the postmaster for the sale of stamps to any person or persons in large quantities, to be used in other [519] postoffices than the North

Digitized by Google

Brookfield office for mailing purposes, or in that office if such matter in the ordinary course would not be deposited for mailing in the latter office.

Frank E. Winchell, of North Brookfield, was the president and general manager of the Oxford Linen Mills, a corporation having its usual place of business at North Brookfield, and William S. Edwards and Harry H. Platt, both of New York, were officers of the Sterling Debenture Company, a corporation having its place of business in New York, and they and Foster, well knowing the premises, conspired to defraud the United States of its money and property by Winchell purchasing from the United States in behalf of the Oxford Linen Mills, with the knowledge, consent, and connivance of Foster, quantities of United States postage stamps to be sent to the Sterling Debenture corporation at New York, and Edwards and Platt as its officers were to cause it to use them in the prepayment of postage upon matter to be deposited in the postoffice in New York or in some other office, with the view and intent, by means of the purchase of stamps as stated, of irregularly and improperly increasing the gross receipts of the North Brookfield postoffice for the twelve months beginning on the 1st of April, 1911, and ending on the 31st of March, 1912, and thereby enabling Foster, as such postmaster to make returns to the Auditor of the Postoffice Department as a basis for the adjustment of Foster's salary for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1912, which returns should include the sale of stamps so made to Winchell in addition to the sale of stamps made by Foster to other persons in the regular business of the North Brookfield office, with the intent and view of violating the regulations of the Postoffice Department, and for the purpose of fraudulently increasing Foster's salary, and with the further intent that such sales should, in violation of the Postoffice regulations, be included and [520] deemed a part of the gross receipts of the North Brookfield office for the period above mentioned, and be made in part the basis of the readjustment of Foster's salary. All the acts done by Foster, Winchell, Edwards, and Platt were done knowingly, wilfully, and fraudulently for such purpose; that is, for the purpose of increasing the salary of Foster by a sum of money in excess of that which he would be lawfully entitled to receive, and to cause such excessive sum to be paid to him, and thereby cheat and defraud the United States thereof.

In pursuance of the unlawful conspiracy, and to effect its object, on the 1st of July, 1911, Foster, as such postmaster, made a false return to the Postoffice Department of the gross receipts of the North Brookfield office for the quarter ending June 30, 1911.

In further pursuance of the conspiracy, and to effect its object, Winchell, on June 2, 1911, at North Brookfield, sent by registered mail to the Sterling Debenture corporation at New York a certain package, and also in pursuance of the conspiracy, and to effect its object, Winchell bought from Foster postage stamps to the value of $200.

In a second count the indictment charges that the defendants unlawfully conspired to commit an offense against the United States, specified to be an offense denounced by § 206 of the act of March 4, 1909, entitled, "An Act to Codify, Revise, and Amend the Penal Laws of the United States" [35 Stat. at L. 1128, chap. 321, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1649], in that Foster, as such postmaster, should, in violation of the section, knowingly and fraudulently increase Foster's salary and compensation by knowingly and fraudulently failing to report, in the report of the gross receipts of his office required by law and the regulations of the Postoffice Department, large and irregular sales of stamps to be made by Foster to Winchell as president and general manager of the Oxford Linen Mills, not to be used by that corporation, or by Winchell, or by any other person for [521] the mailing of matter at the North Brookfield office, but to be used for mailing matter at New York or in some other office other than the North Brookfield office, with the intent and for the purpose of increasing the compensation of Foster as such postmaster. That in pursuance of such conspiracy Winchell, on June 2, 1911, purchased stamps of the value of $200.

In pursuance of the conspiracy and to effect its object, Foster, on the 1st of July, 1911, made a false return to the Auditor of the Postoffice Department of the gross receipts of his office. An overt act by Winchell is charged.

The defendants were duly arraigned and pleaded not guilty, but subsequently withdrew their pleas of not guilty and filed demurrers to the indictment.

The grounds of demurrer were the same as to both counts, and were: (1) The facts alleged did not constitute a crime; (2) nor an offense at common law; (3) nor a violation of the statutes or penal laws of the United States; (4) nor a violation of any valid regulation of the Postmaster General; (5) each and every one of his regulations is invalid.

The demurrers to the first count were sustained on the ground expressed by the court in its opinion, that the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat. at L. 600, chap. 142, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2619), provides that the salaries of postmasters of the second class shall be determined by the gross receipts of the office, and that the Postmaster General had no power to qualify the requirement of the law by providing that unusual sales of stamps should not be included in estimating the gross receipts.

Digitized by Google

In passing upon the demurrers to the second count the court said that the count charged the defendants with a conspiracy to commit "the offense denounced by § 206 of the Criminal Code," that section providing, inter alia, that whoever, being a postmaster, shall, for the purpose of fraudulently increasing his compensation, make a false return, statement, or account to any officer of the [522] United States, shall be punished. The crime denounced, the court said, included "two essential elements: (1) that a return shall be made, which was known to be false; and (2) that such false return shall have been made 'for the purpose of fraudulently increasing compensation.'" And the court observed that there could be no criminality unless a false return was made for the purpose stated, and that it appearing from the indictment that the alleged return made by Foster was to secure for him only what he was legally entitled to receive, he committed no crime under § 206, "and the alleged conspiracy to do so was not a conspiracy to commit the offense denounced thereby."

It will be observed, therefore, that the court held that the indictment charged neither a conspiracy to defraud the United States nor to make a false return, because the object of each conspiracy was to obtain only what Foster was legally entitled to; namely, an increase of salary based upon the gross receipts of his office, and that it was immaterial how they were increased or for what purpose increased.

The case was brought here under the criminal appeals act, its provision being that this court has jurisdiction on writ of error taken by the United States in criminal cases "from a decision sustaining a demurrer to any indictment where such decision is based upon the invalidity or construction of the statute upon which the indictment is founded." It is, however, contended by defendants in error that this court has no jurisdiction because, it is further contended, the district court gave the same meaning to the statutes upon which the indictment was based as the government asserted was the correct one, and only decided that the regulation of the Postmaster General was beyond his power to enact under Revised Statutes, § 161 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 80), upon which section alone he claimed the power. Nor, it is further contended, were the words "gross receipts" interpreted. [523] "The only question was," counsel says, "whether there was power in an administrative officer to make the regulation limiting its scope." It is further urged that if those words were interpreted, the indictment was not founded upon the act of 1883, where they occur.

A lack of jurisdiction is also urged to review the ruling upon the second count, it being based on § 206 of the Criminal Code, the construction or interpretation of which was never in dispute. "Whether it applied or not," it is said, "had to be determined by the validity of the regulation."

We think the contentions are untenable. The court distinctly ruled that the indictment was in technical or formal details sufficient, and the contention of the parties not only submitted for decision the validity of the regulations of the Postmaster General, but also the sufficiency and legality of the returns made by Foster under the provisions of the statutes. The court, it is true, gave especial prominence to the regulations, but the effect of the statutes independently of the regulations was necessarily considered. In other words, the court must have considered and decided that a conspiracy to establish a basis for a false return for the purpose of increasing Foster's salary was not prohibited by law; and, besides, a construction of the statutes was necessary to determine the validity of the regulation.

The case being one of statutory construction, a consideration of the statutes becomes necessary.

It is provided by the act of March 3, 1883, that the "compensation of postmasters of the first, second and third classes shall be annual salaries, assigned in even hundreds, of dollars, and payable in quarterly payments, to be ascertained and fixed by the Postmaster General from their respective quarterly returns to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Postoffice Department . . . to be forwarded to the First Assistant [524] Postmaster General, for four quarters immediately preceding the adjustment," according to the gross receipts, the amount of which not only determines the classes, but the compensation of the offices within classes.

By § 4 of the act, the Postmaster General is required to readjust the salaries of the first, second, and third class at the beginning of each fiscal year. The same section fixed the salary of the postmaster at the Washington Postoffice, and provided that "in no case shall the salary of any postmaster exceed the sum of six thousand dollars, except in the city of New York, where the salary of the postmaster shall remain as now fixed by law, at eight thousand dollars."

Digitized by Google

Section 37 of the Criminal Code makes it an offense to conspire to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose.

Section 206 of the same Code makes it a crime for a postmaster to make a false return, for the purpose of fraudulently increasing his compensation, or to induce or attempt to induce, for such purpose, any person to deposit mail matter in or forward in any manner for mailing at the office where such postmaster is employed, knowing such matter to be properly mailable at some other office.

Section 208 makes it a crime for a postmaster to dispose of stamps outside of the delivery of his office, or to induce or attempt to induce, for the purpose of increasing his compensation, the purchase of stamps, stamped envelops or postal cards otherwise than as provided by law or the regulations of the Postoffice Department.

By § 161 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 80), it is provided that "the head of each Department is authorized to prescribe regulations, not inconsistent with law, for the government of his Department, the conduct of its officers and clerks, [and] the distribution and performance of its business. . . ."

In pursuance of the authority so given, the Postmaster General made the following regulation:

[525] "2. In determining the 'gross receipts' upon which the salary of a postmaster shall be based, stamps, stamped envelops, and postal cards, sold in large or unusual quantities to any person to be used in mailing matter at other postoffices will not be included, whether the sale be made with or without solicitation by the postmaster. When postage stamps or stamped paper are sold in large or unusual quantities, it shall be the duty of the postmaster to inquire into and ascertain whether or not the purchaser intends to use such postage stamps or stamped paper for mailing matter in his office, or other offices; and the fact shall be clearly indicated in his monthly stock report on Form 3240 to the Third Assistant Postmaster General. Upon evidence of neglect of the postmaster to ascertain and report such facts, he will be required to refund the amount of the excess salary and allowances be may have received on account of such sales."

It is manifest from the quoted provisions that their purpose is to fix the salary of postmasters by the normal receipts of their respective offices, and thereby keep the officers in relation, and to secure such end quarterly returns are required to be made by each postmaster, and each is prohibited under criminal penalty from selling or disposing of stamps, stamped envelops or postal cards outside of the delivery of his office, or selling or disposing of stamps, etc., otherwise than as provided by law or the regulations of the Postoffice Department. In other words, the false returns and designated disposition of stamps are made crimes, and made crimes to secure the purpose of the law to keep the legal measure of the salaries unimpaired and the relation of the offices intact. It may, indeed, be that in one sense the United States would suffer no loss by the derangement of their relation; in another sense the United States would be defrauded. One of the postmasters would fraudulently obtain a greater salary than he was entitled to. But distinctly would the United [526] States be defrauded under the facts charged in the indictment, the postmaster at New York having a fixed salary of eight thousand dollars. See in this connection Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S. 462, 479, 54 L. ed. 569, 577, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249, 17 Ann. Cas. 1112.

The sole theory of the act of 1883 is that every postmaster shall receive a salary dependent upon and regulated by the amount of business done at his office (United States v. Wilson, 144 U. S. 24, 28, 36 L. ed. 332, 333, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539) under normal and natural sales of stamps, not unlawfully induced sales. This being the law, what does the indictment charge?

(1) The salary of the postmaster was to be adjusted in accordance with the returns of the gross receipts. (2) By the law and regulation of the Postmaster General the postmaster was not to include in the gross receipts moneys received from the sale of stamps in large or unusual quantities which were (a) to be used upon matter in some other postoffice, or (b) used upon matter deposited at North Brookfield if, in the ordinary and usual course of business, such matter would be deposited at some other office. (3) The defendants conspired with Winchell, who purchased from Foster with Foster's connivance large quantities of stamps to be used by the Sterling Debenture corporation for mailing matter at New York or some other office than North Brookfield, and by such purchase to irregularly and improperly increase the gross receipts of the North Brookfield office, and thereby enable Foster to make returns as a basis for the readjustment of his salary in violation of the regulations of the Postoffice Department, and for the purpose of increasing his salary, and thereby cheat and defraud the United States.

The second count charges a violation of § 206 of the Criminal Code, by conspiring in the manner we have already set out, and which need not be repeated.

Digitized by Google

It is clear from these provisions that it is the gross receipts from lawful sales which are to be the measure of the salary of the postmaster, and that unlawfully induced [527] sales (§ 208), sales made "outside of the delivery of the office" (id.), and sales "otherwise than as provided by law or the regulations of the Postoffice Department" (id.), are unlawful sales and regarded as criminal.

It would, indeed, be strange if unlawful and criminal sales were intended to constitute a part of the gross receipts upon which the postmaster's salary should be adjusted, and it would seem clear that to prevent such result the Postmaster General could legally exercise by the regulation under review the power given him by § 161, Rev. Stat. (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 80). The regulation is purely administrative of the law. (1.) It notifies the postmaster that, in the gross receipts of his office, stamps in large or unusual quantities sold to be used in mailing matter at other postoffices will not be included. This but executes the purpose of the law; adds nothing to it. United States v. Antikamnia Chemical Co. 231 U. S. 654, ante, 419, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 222; Lewis Pub. Co. v. Wyman, 104 C. C. A. 453, 182 Fed. 13. (2.) It requires the postmaster to ascertain and report the intention of the purchaser of stamps or stamped paper in large or unusual quantities. This is properly supplemental to the first requirement, and a reasonable supervision of the office, and a means of discovering unlawful and fraudulent sales. (3.) It provides that for a neglect to so ascertain and so report the postmaster will be required to refund the amount of the excess salary he may have received on account of such sales. This provision is of doubtful validity, but it is not of material consequence to the questions now involved.

But if the regulation be regarded as invalid, the indictment yet states an offense. It counts not only upon the regulation, but upon the law; and the facts it alleges show a violation of the law.

Judgment reversed.

---

[528] GEORGE E. BOWLING and Miami Investment Company, Appts.,
v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 528-536.)

Indians — congressional control — citizenship.

1. The guardianship of the Federal government over an Indian does not cease when an allotment is made and the allottee becomes a citizen of the United States.

[For other cases, see Indians, I., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

United States — right to sue — Indian allotments — restrictions on alienation.

2. The United States has the capacity to sue for the purpose of setting aside a conveyance of lands allotted to Indians under its care when restrictions upon alienation have been transgressed.

[For other cases, see United States, 137-147, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Indians — restrictions on alienation — judgment enforcing contract of sale.

3. A conveyance by heirs of Indian allottees, if forbidden by the restrictions on alienation imposed by the act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat. at L. 1013, chap. 422), could not be saved by a judgment sustaining the validity of the contract of sale in a suit by such heirs against the purchaser.

[For other cases, see Indians, VIII., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Indians — restrictions on alienation — sales by heirs of allottee.

4. The land, whether in the hands of the Indian allottee or his heirs, must be deemed to be bound by the restriction in the act of March 2, 1889, that "the land so allotted shall not be subject to alienation for twenty-five years from the date of the issuance of patent," in view of the further provisions of that act that "said lands so allotted and patented shall be exempt from levy, sale, taxation, or forfeiture for a like period of years," that the patent shall expressly set forth that "the land therein described and conveyed" shall not be alienated during this period, and that contracts "to sell or convey such land," entered into before the expiration of said term of years, shall be absolutely void.

[For other cases, see Indians, VIII., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 177.]

Submitted April 17, 1914. Decided May 4, 1914.

ON APPEAL from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit to review a decree which affirmed a decree of the Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Oklahoma, setting aside a conveyance by the heirs of an Indian allottee. Affirmed.

See same case below, 111 C. C. A. 561, 191 Fed. 19.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. James H. Harkless submitted the cause for appellants. Messrs. Halbert H. McCluer and Roland Hughes were on the brief:

Title having been once vested in the Note.—On Federal control of Indians, generally—see note to Worcester v. Georgia, 8 L. ed. U. S. 484.

Digitized by Google

Indians could be by no subsequent act or acts taken away without their consent.

Jones v. Meehan, 175 U. S. 13, 44 L. ed. 49, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1.

On the admission of Oklahoma as a state on November 16, 1907, all Indians in the new state were made citizens thereof and of the United States.

Cooley, Const. Law, p. 270; Boyd v. Nebraska, 143 U. S. 135, 36 L. ed. 103, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 375.

When the United States grants the privileges of citizenship to an Indian, gives to him the benefit of, and requires him to be subject to, the laws, both civil and criminal, of the state, which places him outside the reach of police regulations on the part of Congress, the emancipation from Federal control thus created cannot be set aside at the instance of the government without the consent of the individual Indian and the state.

Re Heff, 197 U. S. 488, 49 L. ed. 848, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506.

The patent actually issued in this case was in exact conformity with the requirements of the law; but whether it was or not, the question would have to be determined by the law itself, as the issuance of the patent was a ministerial act, and anything inserted therein, not authorized by law, would be void.

Clark v. Lord, 20 Kan. 390.

The title acquired by the patent was a fee simple, but there was a restriction on the power to convey the same.

Libby v. Clark, 118 U. S. 250, 30 L. ed. 133, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1045.

The restrictions against alienation mentioned in the patent were not such as run with the land, but were purely personal to the allottee, and died with him.

9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 127, title, Deeds, note 4; Clark v. Lord, 20 Kan. 390; Miami County v. Brackenridge, 12 Kan. 114; Farrington v. Wilson, 29 Wis. 383; 4 Ops. Atty. Gen. 529; Frederick v. Gray, 12 Kan. 518; McMahon v. Welsh, 11 Kan. 280; Oliver v. Forbes, 17 Kan. 130; Kansas Indians (Bluejacket v. Johnson County) 5 Wall. 737, 18 L. ed. 667; Armstrong v. Athens County, 10 Ohio, 235, affirmed in 16 Pet. 281, 10 L. ed. 965; Hancock v. Mutual Trust Co. 24 Okla. 391, 103 Pac. 566; Krause v. Means, 12 Kan. 335.

The restriction on sale should not be carried beyond the very letter of the law. The free disposition of property is always favored; so much so that a restriction on alienation cannot be created in deeds by individuals, but such restrictions are declared void.

13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 794; Mandlebaum v. McDonell, 29 Mich. 84, 18 Am. Rep. 61; Anderson v. Cary, 36 Ohio St. 506, 38 Am. Rep. 602; Oxley v. Lane, 35 N. Y. 340.

This suit cannot be maintained in the name of the United States unless it shall appear that it is brought by it as a guardian of the allottee, or his heirs, or by reason of some interest that the government may have in the land itself, either as owner, or as trustee for the allottee, or his heirs, or that it was obligated so to do; and if it is found that the guardianship of the government over the Indians had ceased before the bill was filed, and that it has no interest as owner in the land in controversy, and does not hold the same in any manner as a trustee for the allottee or his heirs, and was not obligated to bring the suit, the demurrer should be sustained and the bill dismissed.

United States v. San Jacinto Tin Co. 125 U. S. 273, 31 L. ed. 747, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 850.

When the allotment of the land had been made, and when the allottee became a citizen of the United States, the guardianship of the government over him ceased, and he became vested with all the rights, privileges, and immunities of other citizens, including the right to institute and maintain a suit or desist from doing so, as he might desire; to employ counsel to represent him in any litigation involving his rights, and to have the absolute control of the litigation; guardianship and citizenship are inconsistent, one with the other.

United States v. Boss, 160 Fed. 132; Re Heff, 197 U. S. 488, 49 L. ed. 848, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506; Ex parte Savage, 158 Fed. 205; Re Celestine, 114 Fed. 551; Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 25, 27 L. ed. 844, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18; United States v. Dooley, 151 Fed. 697; United States v. Auger, 153 Fed. 671.

The United States cannot maintain this suit as a trustee.

McKay v. Kalyton, 204 U. S. 458, 51 L. ed. 566, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 346.

The facts disclosed in the bill and answer constitute an equitable estoppel against the government; and show that it is inequitable and against good conscience to maintain this action.

Indiana v. Milk, 11 Biss. 197, 11 Fed. 389; Com. v. Andre, 3 Pick. 224; Com. v. Pejepscut, 10 Mass. 155; State v. Bailey, 19 Ind. 452; Cahn v. Barnes, 7 Sawy. 48, 5 Fed. 326; Gibbons v. United States, 5 Ct. Cl. 416; Vermont v. Society for Propagation of Gospel, 2 Paine, 545, Fed. Cas. No. 16,920; United States v. Stinson, 60 C. C. A. 615, 125 Fed. 907; United States v. Willamette Valley & C. M. Wagon-Road Co. 54 Fed. 811; Pengra v. Munz, 29 Fed. 830; State ex rel. Douglas v. School Dist.

Digitized by Google

85 Minn. 230, 88 N. W. 751; The Siren, 7 Wall. 155, 19 L. ed. 131.

Assistant Attorney General Knaebel and Mr. S. W. Williams submitted the cause for appellee:

If Congress had intended that the restriction should die with the original allottee, it would naturally have provided in terms that the land should remain inalienable during his lifetime, not exceeding twenty-five years from the date of the grant, as was done in the case of the Choctaw and Chickasaw homesteads. See Mullen v. United States, 224 U. S. 448, 453, 56 L. ed. 834, 839, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 494.

The decision of the court below accords with the authorities.

United States v. Aaron, 183 Fed. 347, 123 C. C. A. 265, 204 Fed. 943; Goodrum v. Buffalo, 89 C. C. A. 525, 162 Fed. 817; Re Lands of Five Civilized Tribes, 199 Fed. 813.

The maintenance of limitations prescribed by Congress as part of its plan for distribution of Indian lands is distinctly an interest of the United States, and one upon which it may sue in its own courts to enforce.

Heckman v. United States, 224 U. S. 413, 56 L. ed. 820, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 424.

The decree of the United States court for the Indian territory is null and void.

Goodrum v. Buffalo, supra.

[532] Mr. Justice Hughes delivered the opinion of the court:

Pursuant to the act of March 2, 1889, chap. 422 (25 Stat. at L. 1013), a tract of land in the Indian territory was allotted to Pe-te-lon-o-zah, or William Wea, a member of the confederated Wea, Peoria, Kaskaskia, and Piankeshaw tribes of Indians. The patent conveying the land to Wea and his heirs was issued on April 8, 1890, and imposed a restraint upon alienation for a period of twenty-five years from its date. Upon the death of Wea, his heirs entered into a contract to sell the land, and in a suit brought by them in the United States court for the northern district of the Indian Territory, for the purpose of enforcing the contract, judgment was entered sustaining its validity. The property was thereupon conveyed by the heirs and passed by various mesne conveyances to the appellants.

The United States, by virtue of its interest in the enforcement of the restriction against alienation, instituted this suit to cancel these conveyances and also to set aside the above-mentioned judgment. The case was heard upon bill and answer, and a decree was rendered in favor of the United States, which was affirmed by the circuit court of appeals. 111 C. C. A. 561, 191 Fed. 19.

The relations of the government to these Indians, and the legislation with respect to the lands occupied by them, may be briefly stated. In 1832, the Piankeshaw and Wea tribes of Indians ceded to the United States their interest in lands within the states of Missouri and Illinois, and lands were set apart for them in what is now the state of Kansas (7 Stat. at L. 410), adjoining the lands assigned to the Peorias and Kaskaskias (7 Stat. at L. 403). In 1854, the Piankeshaws and Weas were united into a single tribe with the Peorias and Kaskaskias, and the consolidated tribes ceded to the United States all their interest in the tracts theretofore assigned to them, reserving, in addition to [533] certain sections which were to be held as common property, a specified quantity of land for each individual, the patents for which were to be issued "subject to such restrictions respecting leases and alienation as the President or Congress" might prescribe (10 Stat. at L. 1082; see Kansas Indians [Blue Jacket v. Johnson County] 5 Wall. 737, 757, 758, 18 L. ed. 667, 673, 674). By the treaty of February 23, 1867 (15 Stat. at L. 513, 518, 519), provision was made for the sale of the common tract in Kansas, and for the purchase with the proceeds of lands in the northeast portion of what is at present the state of Oklahoma; and to enable the Indians to dispose of their allotments in Kansas, the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to remove the restrictions upon sale. In 1873 (17 Stat. at L. 631), members of the tribe of Miamis, so electing, were united with these confederated tribes under the name of the United Peorias and Miamis. The territory which they occupied was expressly excepted from the operation of the general allotment act of February 8, 1887, chap. 119, § 8 (24 Stat. at L. 388, 391); but the provisions of that statute, with certain exceptions, were extended to these Indians by the act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat. at L. 1013, chap. 422).

By the latter act, the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to make an allotment of land to each member, subject to the following restriction:

"The land so allotted shall not be subject to alienation for twenty-five years from the date of the issuance of patent therefor, and said lands so allotted and patented shall be exempt from levy, sale, taxation, or forfeiture for a like period of years. As soon as all the allotments or selections shall have been made as herein provided, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause a patent to issue to each and every person so entitled, for his or her allotment, and such patent shall recite in the body thereof that the land therein described and conveyed shall not be alienated for twenty-five years from the date of said patent, and [534] shall also recite that such land so allotted and patented is not subject to levy, sale, taxation, or forfeiture for a like period of years, and that any contract or agreement to sell or convey such land or allotments so patented, entered into before the expiration of said term of years, shall be absolutely null and void."

Digitized by Google

It was under this provision that the land here in question was patented to William Wea, the allottee.

The confederated Peoria Indians who received allotments were made citizens of the United States by the act of May 2, 1890, chap. 182, § 43 (26 Stat. at L. 81, 99); and in 1897, it was provided that adult allottees, who had received allotments of 200 acres or more, might sell 100 acres under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior might prescribe. Act of June 7, 1897, chap. 3 (30 Stat. at L. 62, 72). Subsequent provisions permitted sales by heirs of allottees, but only upon the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. Acts of May 31, 1900, chap. 598, § 7 (31 Stat. at L. 221, 248); May 27, 1902, chap. 888, § 7 (32 Stat. at L. 245, 275).

It is contended by the appellants that when the allotment was made, and the allottee became a citizen of the United States, the guardianship of the government ceased. But this contention is plainly untenable. Marchie Tiger v. Western Invest. Co. 221 U. S. 286, 55 L. ed. 738, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578. And it is no longer open to question that the United States has capacity to sue for the purpose of setting aside conveyances of lands allotted to Indians under its care, where restrictions upon alienation have been transgressed. Since the decision below, the precise question has been determined by this court in Heckman v. United States, 224 U. S. 413, 56 L. ed. 820, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 424, and it was there held that the authority to enforce restrictions of this character is the necessary complement of the power to impose them. It necessarily follows that, as a transfer of the allotted lands contrary to the inhibition of Congress would be a violation of the governmental rights of the [535] United States arising from its obligation to a dependent people, no stipulations, contracts, or judgments rendered in suits to which the government is a stranger can affect its interest. The authority of the United States to enforce the restraint lawfully created cannot be impaired by any action without its consent. Heckman v. United States, supra p. 445. If, therefore, the conveyance by the allottee's heirs in the present case, would otherwise have been subject to cancelation, it was not saved by reason of the judgment entered in their suit against the purchaser.

The question, then, is whether the restriction imposed by the act of 1889 was a merely personal one, operative only upon the allottee, or ran with the land, binding his heirs as well. This must be answered by ascertaining the intent of Congress as expressed in the statute. The restriction was not limited to "the lifetime of the allottee," as in Mullen v. United States, 224 U. S. 448, 453, 56 L. ed. 834, 839, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 494, nor was the prohibition directed against conveyances made by the allottee personally. Congress explicitly provided that "the land so allotted" should not be subject to alienation for twenty-five years from the date of patent. "Said lands so allotted and patented" were to be exempt "from levy, sale, taxation, or forfeiture for a like period of years." The patent was expressly to set forth that "the land therein described and conveyed" should not be alienated during this period, and all contracts "to sell or convey such land" which should be entered into "before the expiration of said term of years" were to be absolutely void. These reiterated statements of the restriction clearly define its scope and effect. It bound the land for the time stated, whether in the hands of the allottee or of his heirs. Moreover, the subsequent legislation, relating to the same subject-matter, which expressly provided for conveyances by heirs of allottees, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, leaves no room [536] for doubt as to the intention of Congress. United States v. Freeman, 3 How. 556, 564, 11 L. ed. 724, 727; Cope v. Cope, 137 U. S. 682, 688, 34 L. ed. 832, 834, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 222; Marchie Tiger v. Western Invest. Co. 221 U. S. 309, 55 L. ed. 747, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578.

The conveyance by Wea's heirs came directly within the statutory prohibition, and the later conveyances under which the appellants claim must fall with it.

Affirmed.

HOLDEN LAND & LIVE STOCK COMPANY, William D. McLeod, Administrator with the Will Annexed of Howard M. Holden, Deceased, et al., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

INTERSTATE TRADING COMPANY, National Bank of Commerce of Kansas City, Missouri, and George T. Cutts, Receiver of said Bank.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 536-545.)

Error to state court — Federal question — decision on non-Federal ground.

A decision of the highest state court granting the prayer of a bill that certain conveyances absolute on their face be declared to be mortgages, and that redemption therefrom be permitted, which is placed distinctly upon the ground that the relief sought should be granted only upon the equitable condition that the grantor should be charged with the principal of the debt and legal interest, is not reviewable in the Federal Supreme Court, although the bill also avers that usury had been exacted by the creditor (a national bank), and prays that in the accounting the entire interest, under U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 5197, 5198, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3493, shall be adjudged to be forfeited.

Digitized by Google

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1465-1528, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 354.]

Argued February 26 and 27, 1914. Decided May 4, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Kansas to review a decree which affirmed, with a slight modification, a decree of the District Court of Shawnee County, in that state, adjudging certain conveyances, absolute on their face, to be mortgages, and permitting a redemption therefrom. Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

See same case below, 87 Kan. 221, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 123 Pac. 733.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Edward P. Garnett argued the cause, and, with Mr. Charles Blood Smith, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

This court has jurisdiction when a state court undertakes to interpret the provisions of the national banking act.

Haseltine v. Central Nat. Bank, 183 U. S. 134, 46 L. ed. 119, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50; Schuyler Nat. Bank v. Gadsden, 191 U. S. 451, 48 L. ed. 258, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 129; Brown v. Marion Nat. Bank, 169 U. S. 416, 42 L. ed. 801, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; Daingerfield Nat. Bank v. Ragland, 181 U. S. 45, 45 L. ed. 738, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 536; Barnet v. Muncie Nat. Bank, 98 U. S. 555, 25 L. ed. 212; Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Dearing, 91 U. S. 29, 23 L. ed. 196; First Nat. Bank v. Watt, 184 U. S. 151, 155, 46 L. ed. 475, 477, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 457; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Donnell, 195 U. S. 369, 49 L. ed. 238, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 49.

Here, the Federal question presented for decision by the state court was absolutely necessary to a determination of the case. The case could not have been decided without passing upon this Federal question, upon the face of the decision itself. Still there is no question but what this court would have the right to examine the whole record in this case to determine whether or not the Federal question was passed upon.

Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. C. H. Albers Commission Co. 223 U. S. 594, 56 L. ed. 567, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 316.

The decision below is not only contrary to the plain provisions of the national banking act, but to every decision of this court construing the act.

Brown v. Marion Nat. Bank, 169 U. S. 416, 42 L. ed. 801, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; First Nat. Bank v. Watt, 184 U. S. 155, 46 L. ed. 477, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 457.

It goes without saying that a state court cannot ignore the plain provisions of a Federal statute, and proceed to decide a case upon what it might consider general principles of law repugnant to such provisions.

West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Illinois, 201 U. S. 506, 50 L. ed. 845, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 518; Gaar, S. & Co. v. Shannon, 223 U. S. 471, 56 L. ed. 512, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 236; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McWhirter, 229 U. S. 265, 57 L. ed. 1179, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 858.

Messrs. Edward P. Garnett, Oliver H. Dean, and Charles Blood Smith also filed a brief for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Leonard S. Ferry argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Thomas F. Doran, John S. Dean, and Elijah Robinson, filed a brief for defendants in error:

Where the finding of the lower court was broad enough to sustain the decree without reference to the Federal question, this court has no jurisdiction. It does not matter in such a case whether the Federal question was decided or not, nor whether it was decided correctly.

Jenkins v. Loewenthal, 110 U. S. 222, 28 L. ed. 129, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638; New Orleans v. New Orleans Waterworks Co. 142 U. S. 79, 35 L. ed. 943, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 142; Delaware City, S. & P. S. B. Nav. Co. v. Reybold, 142 U. S. 643, 35 L. ed. 1144, 12

NOTE.—On the general subject of writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4 L. ed. U. S. 97; Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884; and Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

On what adjudications of state courts can be brought up for review in the Supreme Court of the United States by writ of error to those courts—see note to Apex Transp. Co. v. Garbade, 62 L.R.A. 513.

On how and when questions must be raised and decided in a state court in order to make a case for a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States—see note to Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. McGrew, 63 L.R.A. 33.

Digitized by Google

Sup. Ct. Rep. 290; Rutland R. Co. v. Central Vermont R. Co. 159 U. S. 641, 40 L. ed. 289, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113; Beaupre v. Noyes, 138 U. S. 397, 34 L. ed. 991, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 296; Bacon v. Texas, 163 U. S. 207, 41 L. ed. 132, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1023; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 160 U. S. 556, 40 L. ed. 536, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389; Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Hamlin, 139 U. S. 297, 35 L. ed. 167, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 614; McManus v. O'Sullivan, 91 U. S. 578, 23 L. ed. 390; Bolling v. Lersner, 91 U. S. 594, 23 L. ed. 366; Murdock v. Memphis, 20 Wall. 590, 22 L. ed. 429; Eustis v. Bolles, 150 U. S. 361, 37 L. ed. 1111, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131.

Mr. Justice Hughes delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought by the Holden Land & Live Stock Company and Howard M. Holden in the district [538] court of Shawnee county, Kansas, to have certain conveyances which were absolute on their face, and the accompanying contracts, decreed to be mortgages, and for an accounting in order to ascertain the amount of the indebtedness thereby secured. It was also alleged that usury had been exacted by the creditor (the National Bank of Commerce of Kansas City, Missouri), and upon this ground it was prayed that in taking the account the debtor should be charged only with the principal, and that the entire interest should be adjudged to be forfeited under §§ 5197 and 5198 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3493).

The principal facts and the nature of the litigation are succinctly stated by the supreme court of Kansas, as follows (87 Kan. 221-223, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 123 Pac. 733):

"On June 6, 1901, the Holden Land & Live Stock Company executed to the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company a mortgage for $90,000, due in five years, upon a tract of land in Shawnee county, containing about 5,603 acres of which it was the record owner. On July 1, 1901, the Holden company executed a note to Howard M. Holden for $82,000 secured by a second mortgage on the same tract. This note and second mortgage, with other security, Holden at once transferred to the National Bank of Commerce of Kansas City, Missouri, to secure his note to that bank for $80,000, bearing the same date, due in one year, and drawing 8 per cent interest, which was subsequently renewed. Holden had personally purchased a tract of land in Missouri, borrowing a part of the amount necessary for the purpose from the bank. To secure the bank the deed was made to one W. H. Winants. Afterwards it was agreed that he should hold the title as further security for Holden's note to the bank. In May, 1904, Holden caused to be executed to the Inter-State Trading Company deeds covering the tracts in Kansas and Missouri, less parts of the former that had been sold, most of the proceeds having been applied to [539] cutting down the encumbrances. On February 13, 1908, Holden and the Holden company brought an action against the bank and the Interstate Trading Company, alleging in substance that the deeds had been given by way of security for the indebtedness owing to the bank, and asking, if this should be found to have been paid in full, a decree quieting title; otherwise, a decree declaring title to be held under the deeds as security for whatever balance should be found due. The defendants maintained that the deeds were intended as absolute conveyances, and operated as such. The court found, in accordance with the report of the referee before whom the case was tried, that the defendants were precluded, by their course of dealing with the plaintiffs, from claiming the absolute title to the land; that the plaintiffs should be allowed to redeem it by paying the defendants what they had in it, amounting at the time the action was begun to $81,091.93, this including the first mortgage, which the bank had purchased; judgment was rendered that if the plaintiffs should pay this amount (which had been reduced to $65,233.67 by sales of land made during the litigation) within six months, their title should be quieted; that if they failed to make the payment within that time they should be barred of all interest in the land. The defendants appeal on the ground that the court should have denied the plaintiffs any relief whatever. The plaintiffs appeal upon two principal grounds: (1) that in the accounting they should not have been charged with interest on the note given to the bank, because by the exaction of usury all interest thereon had been forfeited; and (2) that the first mortgage should not have been enforced against them otherwise than by a foreclosure and sheriff's sale."

The supreme court of the state decided in favor of the plaintiffs in error upon the second question. Approving the findings made in the trial court, it was concluded that [540] the relations between the parties were in effect those of mortgagor and mortgagee, and that the appropriate remedy was a foreclosure and sale. Accordingly, the judgment was modified so as to provide that the lien upon the Kansas land should be enforced in this manner.

The court affirmed the judgment in other respects; and because, in fixing the amount to be paid in order to redeem the lands in question, the court did not require the forfeiture of all interest, this writ of error is prosecuted.

Digitized by Google

The question at once arises whether, in view of the character of the suit and the basis of the ruling, the judgment is subject to review in this court. The action, it will be observed, was not one brought by the bank to enforce the payment of the indebtedness, thus involving the application of the statutory measure of the bank's legal right. Nor was the debtor availing himself of the exclusive remedy afforded by the statute in cases where usurious interest has actually been paid to a national bank (Barnet v. Muncie Nat. Bank, 98 U. S. 555, 25 L. ed. 212; Stephens v. Monongahela, Nat. Bank, 111 U. S. 197, 28 L. ed. 399, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336). While the plaintiffs insisted that interest should be forfeited, still they were suitors in equity, seeking to be permitted to redeem the lands which had been conveyed; and the decision was placed distinctly upon the ground that the relief sought should be granted only upon the equitable condition that the plaintiff should be charged with the principal of the debt and legal interest. Upon this point the supreme court of Kansas said (87 Kan. 221, 233, 234):

"Usury was charged and collected upon the Holden note. By the national banking act the exaction of usury destroys the interest-bearing quality of a debt. The referee decided that the plaintiffs were estopped from claiming the benefit of that provision. Nothing was said about usury until the present action was begun. Whether or not an actual estoppel has arisen, it was proper under the circumstances, in view of the equitable relief sought, [541] that the plaintiffs should be charged with the principal and legal interest.

"'When the borrower appears in any capacity in a court of equity, asking affirmative relief against a usurious contract to pay money, such relief will, in the absence of statute providing otherwise, be granted him only upon condition of his doing equity; that is, tendering the money actually due. . . . The rule . . . applies when the relief sought is the reformation or cancelation of a deed or mortgage, or other instrument evidencing or securing a usurious debt, or an injunction against threatened damaging action by the creditor, or in fact, whatever be the character of the relief sought. . . . In case the usurious interest has been reserved, or paid in advance, the amount equitably due is the principal debt less the usurious excess of interest paid. In the absence of statute providing otherwise, if the contract for the usurious interest is still executory, the sum equitably due is the principal debt with legal interest thereon.' 39 Cyc. 1010-1012."

The judgment thus rests upon an independent or non-Federal ground which was adequate to sustain it. The court applied a familiar equitable principle in defining the basis upon which extraordinary aid would be given. "A court of equity is not positively bound to interfere in such cases by an active exertion of its powers; but it has a discretion on the subject, and may prescribe the terms of its interference." Story, Eq. Jur. § 301; Fanning v. Dunham, 5 Johns. Ch. 122, 142, 143, 9 Am. Dec. 283; Tiffany v. Boatman's Sav. Inst. 18 Wall. 375, 385, 21 L. ed. 868, 879. It is manifest that the plaintiffs were not proceeding by virtue of any Federal right in seeking to have the conveyances which had been executed in the form of absolute transfers of title declared to be mortgages; and it was competent for the court whose intervention was desired for this purpose, to demand that its conscience be satisfied by the doing of equity on the part of those who asked it.

[542] The decision involves simply the exercise of the equitable jurisdiction in accordance with the jurisprudence of the state, and the ruling which prescribed the conditions of relief is not reviewable here.

The writ of error must be dismissed.

Dismissed.

Mr. Justice Day, dissenting:

I am unable to agree that this court does not have jurisdiction of this writ of error. In my judgment, if the principle here invoked is applied to a case like the one under consideration, it will result that the state court may determine, without power of review in this court, the ultimate effect and scope of rights secured by a Federal statute.

It appears from the opinion of the supreme court of Kansas, quoted in the opinion in this case, that a national bank, organized under and subject to the limitations of the Federal statutes in that respect, received usury upon a debt which was secured by a conveyance of title which was upon its face a deed. The plaintiff in error stated in its petition the facts which showed the usurious arrangement with the bank and the charging upon the debt of interest in violation of the statute, and thus distinctly relied upon a Federal statute controlling the right of national banks to take usurious interest. It asked to have the conveyance decreed a mortgage in fact and security for the debt, and that only the amount legally collectable thereon should be held to be due. These allegations brought the case within the provisions of §§ 5197 and 5198 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3493), fixing certain consequences for taking usurious interest by national banks. The state court found that the deed had at all times been intended by the parties to be and was security for the debt, but decreed that it should extend to the balance of the debt, with legal interest.

Digitized by Google

[543] By means of this petition a right of Federal origin was specially set up, which, if denied, gave the right to come to this court under a Federal statute which has been in substantially the same form, so far as this writ of error is concerned, since the passage of the judiciary act in 1789 [1 Stat. at L. 73, chap. 20]. This is not controverted in the opinion in this case, but the position is taken that the decision rests upon an independent ground not involving a denial of Federal right, and therefore is not reviewable here.

I am not unmindful of the rule frequently recognized in the decisions of this court, that if the judgment of the state court rests upon an independent, separate ground of local or general law, broad enough or sufficient in itself to base the decision upon and to control the rights of the parties, this court has no jurisdiction to review the action of the state court. So far as I understand the decisions where such independent ground has been sustained, resulting in a lack of jurisdiction in this court to review a decision of a state court, the judgment has proceeded upon the principle that, irrespective of the Federal right asserted, an independent ground of judgment, not involving the Federal question, has controlled the decision. For example, in a number of cases in this court it has been held that, conceding the Federal right asserted to have been one which might have been maintained, nevertheless, if, upon the general doctrine of laches that right no longer exists, the refusal to enforce it because of laches rests the decision upon a principle of general law, applicable to all rights, Federal or otherwise, and is not of itself a denial of a Federal right. So this court has more than once held that a decision placing the rights of the parties upon the doctrine of res judicata, where the decision did not necessarily involve the denial of a right of a Federal character, places the decision upon a non-Federal ground and is not reviewable here. These are examples of independent grounds of general law, which the state court has the right [544] to apply to all asserted rights, and their maintenance does not amount to a denial of special claims of Federal right.

"But," said this court in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Illinois, 200 U. S. 561, 580, 50 L. ed. 596, 604, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 341, 4 Ann. Cas. 1175, "it is equally well settled that the failure of the state court to pass on the Federal right or immunity specially set up, of record, is not conclusive, but this court will decide the Federal question if the necessary effect of the judgment is to deny a Federal right or immunity specially set up or claimed, and which, if recognized and enforced, would require a judgment different from one resting upon some ground of local or general law." Without citing all the cases, the rule substantially as just stated has been frequently recognized. Murdock v. Memphis, 20 Wall. 590, 636, 22 L. ed. 429, 444; Anderson v. Carkins, 135 U. S. 483, 34 L. ed. 272, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905; Wabash R. Co. v. Pearce, 192 U. S. 179, 48 L. ed. 397, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Indiana, 194 U. S. 579, 48 L. ed. 1124, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 767; Schlemmer v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co. 205 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 681, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 407.

Applying these principles here, it seems to me that where a party specially asserts, as it did in this case, the application of the Federal statute, which, in unequivocal terms, provides (§ 5198 [U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3493]) that the 'taking, receiving, reserving, or charging a rate of interest greater than is allowed by the preceding section, when knowingly done [which the record discloses was so taken in this case], shall be deemed a forfeiture of the entire interest which the note, bill, or other evidence of debt carries with it, or which has been agreed to be paid thereon," and the supreme court of the state, holding that, notwithstanding the Federal statute, it has the discretion to condition its relief, allowing redemption only upon the payment of principal and legal interest, it has in effect denied the right asserted under the Federal statute, and the correctness of the decision is reviewable here. This statute has no conditions attached to it, and is upon its face applicable [545] wherever a situation arises which comes within its terms. In effect, the state court said this is true; usury has been charged upon this contract, and, because of the statute, the security is not enforceable beyond the face of the debt; but as the giver of the security has been obliged to apply to the equity powers of a state court for the carrying out of the contract, a condition may be attached to the relief to which the party is otherwise entitled, and the state court charged the plaintiff in error with the debt, with legal interest, notwithstanding the Federal statute which declares the interest forfeited upon such facts as are here presented. When the court so decided, in my judgment, it necessarily denied a Federal right, and, whether right or wrong, the denial of that right laid the basis for ultimate decision by this court as to the nature and extent of the rights secured by the Federal statute.

Digitized by Google

In my opinion this court should review the judgment and determine for itself whether the rule invoked in the state court has this effect upon a Federal statute, which unconditionally forfeits the entire interest where usurious interest has been knowingly reserved or taken.

I therefore dissent from the opinion of the court holding that there is no jurisdiction of the case.

Mr. Justice McKenna and Mr. Justice Van Devanter concur in this dissent.

---

[546] A. WEBSTER RICHARDS, Plff. in Err.,
v.
WASHINGTON TERMINAL COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 546–558.)

Eminent domain — taking — public or private nuisance.

1. Congress is prohibited, by the inhibition of U. S. Const., 5th Amend., against the taking of private property for public use without just compensation, from conferring immunity from action for a private nuisance of such a character as to amount in effect to a taking of private property for public use, although it may legalize what otherwise would be a public nuisance.

[For other cases, see Eminent Domain, V., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Eminent domain — consequential injuries — damages incident to prudent operation of railroad.

2. The safeguard against the taking of private property for public use without compensation afforded by U. S. Const., 5th Amend., does not require that an owner of noncontiguous property, no part of which was actually appropriated, but which lies in the neighborhood of a railway tunnel and tracks constructed and maintained under the authority of the acts of February 12, 1901 (31 Stat. at L. 774, chap. 354), and February 28, 1903 (32 Stat. at L. 909, chap. 856), upon property acquired by purchase or condemnation proceedings, be compensated for the damage through smoke, cinders, gases, dust, dirt, and vibration incident to the prudent operation of the railroad.

[For other cases, see Eminent Domain, 110-119, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Eminent domain — taking — injury to property — gas and smoke.

3. An owner of property in the neighborhood of, but not abutting upon, the railway tracks and tunnel constructed and maintained under the authority of the acts of February 12, 1901, and February 28, 1903, is entitled, under U. S. Const., 5th Amend., forbidding the taking of private property for public use without compensation, to be compensated for the damage attributable to gases and smoke emitted from locomotives while in the tunnel, and by means of a fanning system forced out of such tunnel at its mouth near his property in such manner as naturally to render such property less habitable than otherwise it would be, and to depreciate it in value.

[For other cases, see Eminent Domain, 110-119, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 52.]

Argued November 7, 1913. Decided May 4, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District in favor of defendant in an action by a noncontiguous property owner to recover for the damage to his property resulting from the operation of a railroad. Reversed and remanded, with directions to reverse the judgment of the Supreme Court of the District, and remand the cause to that court for a new trial.

See same case below, 37 App. D. C. 289.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Hugh H. Obear argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Charles A. Douglas, Thomas Ruffin, Edward F. Colladay, Paul Sleman, and Harry F. Lerch, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

There can be no question that defendant's acts constitute a private nuisance.

Aldred's Case, 9 Coke, 57; Crump v. Lambert, L. R. 3 Eq. 409, 15 Week. Rep. 417; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719; Camfield v. United States, 167 U. S. 518, 42 L. ed. 260, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 864.

The inquiry is:

NOTE.—On right of property owner to compensation for interference with light or air by railroad structure on the company's own property—see note to Davis v. New England R. Co. 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1061.

On the right, under constitutional provision against damaging private property without compensation, to compensation for consequential damages to property no part of which is taken, for smoke, noise, dust, etc., incident to ordinary operation of railroad—see note to Tidewater R. Co. v. Shartzer, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1054.

On consequential injuries, generally—see notes to D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 156, and A. Backus, Jr. & Sons v. Fort Street Union Depot Co. 42 L. ed. U. S. 853.

Digitized by Google

(1) Can Congress authorize or legalize a private nuisance such as is presented here? and

(2) Has it done so in this case?

It seems to us that these questions are settled by Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719.

There is sufficient evidence to show that there was a taking of the property within the meaning of the Constitution. The soot, smoke, gas, and cinders, driven in great volumes from the mouth of the tunnel, nearly a mile, along, over, and upon the property of the plaintiff, was a physical invasion.

Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 166, 20 L. ed. 557.

Mr. John W. Yerkes argued the cause, and, with Messrs. John J. Hamilton and George E. Hamilton, filed a brief for defendant in error:

If Congress had desired to make provision for payment of compensation to landowners whose property was not actually taken or occupied, but who suffered injury and damage by reason of the construction and operation of the railroad, the act would have contained fit and appropriate language to make certain this right. This has been done by Congress in other cases.

United States v. Alexander, 148 U. S. 186, 37 L. ed. 415, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 529; Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. ed. 336; High Bridge Lumber Co. v. United States, 16 C. C. A. 460, 37 U. S. App. 234, 69 Fed. 320.

Many cases may be cited where, under distinct provisions of state Constitutions and legislation, these incidental and consequential damages may be recovered.

Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Miller, 132 U. S. 75, 33 L. ed. 267, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 34; Chicago v. Taylor, 125 U. S. 161, 31 L. ed. 638, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 820; Gainesville, H. & W. R. Co. v. Hall, 78 Tex. 169, 9 L.R.A. 298, 22 Am. St. Rep. 42, 14 S. W. 259.

There has been no such taking of the property of plaintiff in error for public use as requires compensation to be made to him by defendant in error.

Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. ed. 336; Marchant v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 153 U. S. 380, 38 L. ed. 751, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 894; Gibson v. United States, 166 U. S. 269, 41 L. ed. 996, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578; United States v. Lynah, 188 U. S. 445, 47 L. ed. 539, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 349; Bedford v. United States, 192 U. S. 217, 48 L. ed. 414, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 238; United States v. Grizzard, 219 U. S. 180, 183, 55 L. ed. 165, 166, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1135, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 162.

State decisions hold that unless there is specific legislation or a constitutional provision providing for recovery of damages for consequential or incidental injuries in a case like this, no such recovery can be allowed.

Beseman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 50 N. J. L. 235, 13 Atl. 164, affirmed on appeal by the Court of Error and Appeals without opinion in 52 N. J. L. 221, 20 Atl. 169; Church of Jesus Christ, L. D. S. v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 36 Utah, 238, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 860, 140 Am. St. Rep. 819, 103 Pac. 243; Hatch v. Vermont C. R. Co. 25 Vt. 49; Taylor v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 33 W. Va. 39, 10 S. E. 29; Spencer v. Point Pleasant & O. River R. Co. 23 W. Va. 427; Dunsmore v. Central Iowa R. Co. 72 Iowa, 182, 33 N. W. 456; Boothby v. Androscoggin & K. R. Co. 51 Me. 318; Kansas, N. & D. R. Co. v. Cuykendall, 42 Kan. 234, 16 Am. St. Rep. 479, 21 Pac. 1051; Briesen v Long Island R. Co. 31 Hun, 112; Friedman v. New York & H. R. Co. 89 App. Div. 38, 85 N. Y. Supp. 404; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Armstrong, 71 Kan. 366, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 113, 114 Am. St. Rep. 474, 80 Pac. 978.

Mr. Justice Pitney delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff in error, who was plaintiff below, commenced this action in the supreme court of the District of Columbia to recover for the damage to his property resulting from the maintenance of an alleged nuisance by defendant by means of the operation of a railroad and tunnel upon its own lands near to, but not adjoining, those of plaintiff. Defendant having pleaded not guilty, the issue came on for trial by jury, and at the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence a verdict was directed in favor of defendant. The court of appeals affirmed the judgment (37 App. D. C. 289), and a writ of error brings the controversy under the review of this court.

An agreed abridgment of the evidence upon which the ruling of the trial justice was based is embodied in the bill of exceptions. From this it appears that plaintiff is and has been since the year 1901 the owner of lot 34 in square 693 in the city of Washington, having a frontage of 20 ft. upon the westerly side of New Jersey avenue, southeast, and an average depth of 81 ft., with improvements thereon consisting of a three-story and basement brick dwelling house containing ten rooms, known as No. 415 New Jersey avenue. The rear windows upon all the floors of the house open in the direction of the railroad tracks that lead from defendant's tunnel. The south portal of this tunnel opens within square 693, and near its [549] northeasterly corner, and the tunnel extends thence in a northeasterly direction, passing under the Capitol and Library grounds and First street N. E., to the Union Station at Massachusetts avenue. There are two sets of railroad tracks in the tunnel and leading from it, and as these emerge from the south portal they extend in a general southwesterly direction up an incline or grade across the central portion or square 693 onto an elevated structure which carries the tracks over and beyond South Capitol street. The tunnel and these tracks are used for the passage of trains running both northwardly and southwardly, about thirty each day, all of them being passenger trains with the exception of an occasional shifting engine. The trains frequently pass in and out of the tunnel without stopping, but trains also very often stop at or near a switch tower that is situate near the center of square 693. From the nearest portion of plaintiff's house to the center of the south portal, the distance in a straight line is about 114 ft., there being three intervening dwelling houses, two of which have been purchased and are now owned by defendant. From the rear end of plaintiff's lot to the middle of the tracks southwestwardly from the portal the distance in a straight line is about 90 ft. Plaintiff's property has been damaged by the volumes of dense black or gray smoke, and also by dust and dirt, cinders and gases, emitted from the trains while passing over the tracks and in or out of the tunnel, or standing upon the tracks near the signal tower. There is a fanning system installed in the tunnel which causes the gases and smoke emitted from engines while in the tunnel to be forced out of the south portal, and these gases and smoke contaminate the air, and also add to the inconvenience suffered by plaintiff in the occupation of his property. His house was pleasant and comfortable for purposes of occupation before the construction of the tunnel and tracks, but since then it has not only depreciated in value, but the tenant [550] removed therefrom, and plaintiff was obliged to occupy the house himself by reason of his inability to rent it. The property has depreciated from a value of about $5,500 to about $4,000, and the rental value from $30 per month to $20 per month. The furniture and other belongings in the house have been depreciated from a value of $1,200 to $600, all of which depreciation is due to the presence of smoke, cinders, and gases emitted from passing trains and from the mouth of the tunnel, which smoke, cinders, and gases enter the dwelling house and settle upon the furniture and other personal property contained in it, contaminating the air and rendering the house objectionable as a habitation. The house has also been damaged by vibrations caused by the movement of trains on the track or in the tunnel, resulting in cracking the walls and wall paper, breaking glass in the windows, and disturbing the peace and slumber of the occupants.

Digitized by Google

The defendant, the Washington Terminal Company, is the owner of the tunnel and of the tracks therein, but its ownership of tracks ceases at the south portal. The tracks extending therefrom in a southwesterly direction are owned and used by other railroad companies, but the movement of the trains is controlled by defendant.

The tunnel and the tracks leading from it across square 693 were located and constructed and are now maintained under the authority of acts of Congress of February 12, 1901, and February 28, 1903 (31 Stat. at L. 774, chap. 354; 32 Stat. at L. 909, chap. 856), in accordance with plans and specifications approved by those acts. No claim is made by plaintiff that the tunnel, the tracks in square 693, and the trains operated therein and thereon, were constructed, operated, or maintained in a negligent manner; and it is conceded that the tunnel and tracks were built upon property acquired by purchase or condemnation proceedings, and were constructed under authority of the acts of Congress [551] and of permits issued by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Such being the essential facts to be deduced from the evidence, we have reached the conclusion, for reasons presently to be stated, that with respect to most of the elements of damage to which the plaintiff's property has been subjected, the courts below correctly held them to be damnum absque injuria; but that with respect to such damage as is attributable to the gases and smoke emitted from locomotive engines while in the tunnel, and forced out of it by means of the fanning system through a portal located so near to plaintiff's property that these gases and smoke materially contribute to injure the furniture and to render the house less habitable than otherwise it would be, there is a right of recovery.

The acts of Congress referred to, followed by the construction of the tunnel and railroad tracks substantially in the mode prescribed, had the effect of legalizing the construction and operation of the railroad, so that its operation, while properly conducted and regulated, cannot be deemed to be a public nuisance. Yet it is sufficiently obvious that the acts done by defendant, if done without legislative sanction, would form the subject of an action by plaintiff to recover damages as for a private nuisance.

Digitized by Google

At the same time, there is no exclusive and permanent appropriation of any portion of plaintiff's land, which, indeed, does not even abut upon defendant's property. The acts of Congress do not in terms provide for the payment of compensation to property owners damnified through the construction and operation of the tunnel and railroad lines in question, except to those whose lands, or a portion thereof, were necessarily appropriated. For damages, whether direct or consequential, to noncontiguous parcels such as that of plaintiff, there is no express provision. But § 9 of the act of 1903 (32 Stat. at L. 916, chap. 856) authorizes the Terminal Company to acquire, by purchase or condemnation, [552] "the lands and property necessary for all and every the purposes contemplated" by the several acts of Congress under which the tunnel and railroad were constructed and are operated. This grant of the power of condemnation is very broad, but it has not been acted upon by the company in the case of the present plaintiff. And since he is not wholly excluded from the use and enjoyment of his property, there has been no "taking" of the land in the ordinary sense.

The courts of England, in a series of decisions, have dealt with the general subject now under consideration. Rex v. Pease, 4 Barn. & Ad. 30, 40, 1 Nev. & M. 690, 2 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 26, 22 Eng. Rul. Cas. 71; Vaughan v. Taff Vale R. Co. 5 Hurlst. & N. 679, 29 L. J. Exch. N. S. 247, 6 Jur. N. S. 899, 2 L. T. N. S. 394, 8 Week. Rep. 549, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 296; Jones v. Festiniog R. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. 733, 9 Best & S. 835, 37 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 214, 18 L. T. N. S. 902, 17 Week. Rep. 28; Hammersmith & C. R. Co. v. Brand, L. R. 4 H. L. 171, 38 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 265, 21 L. T. N. S. 238, 18 Week. Rep. 12, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 623, 7 Eng. Rul. Cas. 380; Metropolitan Asylum Dist. v. Hill, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 193, 201, 203, 50 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 353, 44 L. T. N. S. 653, 29 Week. Rep. 617, 45 J. P. 664, 16 Eng. Rul. Cas. 556; London, B. & S. C. R. Co. v. Truman, L. R. 11 App. Cas. 45, 55 L. J. Ch. N. S. 354, 54 L. T. N. S. 250, 34 Week. Rep. 657, 50 J. P. 388, 22 Eng. Rul. Cas. 80. The rule to be deduced from these cases is that while no action will lie for an invasion of private rights necessarily resulting from the establishment and operation of railways and other public works under the express sanction of an act of Parliament, yet that such acts are to be strictly construed so as not to impair private rights unless the legislative purpose to do so appears by express words or necessary implication. In short, Parliament, being omnipotent, may authorize the taking of private property for public use without compensation to the owner; but the courts decline to place an unjust construction upon its acts, and will not interpret them as interfering with rights of private property unless the language be so clear as to admit of no other meaning.

But the legislation we are dealing with must be construed in the light of the provision of the 5th Amendment—"Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation"—and is not to be given [553] an effect inconsistent with its letter or spirit. The doctrine of the English cases has been generally accepted by the courts of this country, sometimes with scant regard for distinctions growing out of the constitutional restrictions upon legislative action under our system. Thus, it has been said that "a railroad authorized by law and lawfully operated cannot be deemed a private nuisance;" that "what the legislature has authorized to be done cannot be deemed unlawful," etc. These and similar expressions have at times been indiscriminately employed with respect to public and to private nuisances. We deem the true rule, under the 5th Amendment, as under state constitutions containing a similar prohibition, to be that while the legislature may legalize what otherwise would be a public nuisance, it may not confer immunity from action for a private nuisance of such a character as to amount in effect to a taking of private property for public use. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Angel, 41 N. J. Eq. 316, 329, 56 Am. Rep. 1, 7 Atl. 432; Costigan v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 54 N. J. L. 233, 23 Atl. 810; Cogswell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 103 N. Y. 10, 57 Am. Rep. 701, 8 N. E. 537; Garvey v. Long Island R. Co. 159 N. Y. 323, 70 Am. St. Rep. 550, 54 N. E. 57; Bohan v. Port Jervis Gaslight Co. 122 N. Y. 18, 29, 9 L.R.A. 711, 25 N. E. 246; Sadlier v. New York, 40 Misc. 78, 81 N. Y. Supp. 308.

But the question remains, in cases of the class now before us, What is to be deemed a private nuisance such as amounts to a taking of property? And by a great and preponderant weight of judicial authority in those states whose constitutions contain a prohibition of the taking of private property for public use without compensation, substantially in the form employed in the 5th Amendment, it has become established that railroads constructed and operated for the public use, although with private capital and for private gain, are not subject to actions in behalf of neighboring property owners for the ordinary damages attributable to the operation of the railroad, in the absence of negligence. Such roads are treated as [554] public highways, and the proprietors as public servants, with the exemption normally enjoyed by such servants from liability to private suit, so far as concerns the incidental damages accruing to owners of nonadjacent land through the proper and skilful management and operation of the railways. Any diminution of the value of property not directly invaded nor peculiarly affected, but sharing in the common burden of incidental damages arising from the legalized nuisance, is held not to be a "taking" within the constitutional provision. The immunity is limited to such damages as naturally and unavoidably result from the proper conduct of the road and are shared generally by property owners whose lands lie within range of the inconveniences necessarily incident to proximity to a railroad. It includes the noises and vibrations incident to the running of trains, the necessary emission of smoke and sparks from the locomotives, and similar annoyances inseparable from the normal and non-negligent operation of a railroad. Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 641, 25 L. ed. 336, 338; Beseman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 50 N. J. L. 235, 240, 13 Atl. 164, affirmed in 52 N. J. L. 221, 20 Atl. 169.

Digitized by Google

That the constitutional inhibition against the taking of private property for public use without compensation does not confer a right to compensation upon a landowner, no part of whose property has been actually appropriated, and who has sustained only those consequential damages that are necessarily incident to proximity to the railroad, has been so generally recognized that in some of the states (Arkansas, California, Colorado, Georgia, Illinois, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, Texas, West Virginia, and Wyoming are, we believe, among the number) constitutions have been established providing in substance that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without compensation.

The immunity from liability for incidental injuries is [555] attended with a considerable degree of hardship to the private landowner, and has not been adopted without some judicial protest. But, as pointed out by Chief Justice Beasley in the Beseman Case, 50 N. J. L. at p. 238, if railroad companies were liable to suit for such damages upon the theory that with respect to them the company is a tort feasor, the practical result would be to bring the operation of railroads to a standstill. And, on the whole, the doctrine has become so well established that it amounts to a rule of property, and should be modified, if at all, only by the lawmaking power.

But the doctrine, being founded upon necessity, is limited accordingly. This court, in a leading case that we deem controlling upon the questions now at issue, had occasion to recognize this, and at the same time to apply the distinction between public and private nuisances with respect to the private right of action. In Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719, the court, while recognizing (p. 331) that the legislative authority for operating a railway carried with it an immunity from private actions based upon those incidental inconveniences that are unavoidably attendant upon the operation of a railroad, nevertheless sustained the right of action in a case where a building for housing and repairing locomotive engines was unnecessarily established in close proximity to a place of public worship, and so used that the noises of the shop and the rumbling of the locomotive engines passing in and out, the blowing off of steam, the ringing of bells, the sound of whistles, and the smoke from the chimneys, created a constant disturbance of the religious exercises. The court (speaking by Mr. Justice Field) held that the authority of the company to construct such works as it might deem necessary and expedient for the completion and maintenance of its road did not authorize it to place them wherever it might think proper in the city, without reference to the property and rights [556] of others; and that whatever the extent of the authority conferred, it was accompanied with the implied qualification that the works should not be so placed as by their use to unreasonably interfere with and disturb the peaceful and comfortable enjoyment of others in their property. In the language of the opinion: "Grants of privileges or powers to corporate bodies like those in question confer no license to use them in disregard of the private rights of others, and with immunity for their invasion." The reasoning proceeded upon the ground (p. 332) that no authority conferred by Congress would justify an invasion of private property to an extent amounting to an entire deprivation of its use and enjoyment, without compensation to the owner; "nor could such authority be invoked to justify acts creating physical discomfort and annoyance to others in the use and enjoyment of their property, to a less extent than entire deprivation, if different places from those occupied could be used by the corporation for its purposes, without causing such discomfort and annoyance;" and hence that the legislative authorization conferred exemption only from suit or prosecution for the public nuisance, and did not affect "any claim of a private citizen for damages for any special inconvenience and discomfort not experienced by the public at large."

Digitized by Google

The present case, in the single particular already alluded to,—that is to say, with respect to so much of the damage as is attributable to the gases and smoke emitted from locomotive engines while in the tunnel, and forced out of it by the fanning system therein installed, and issuing from the portal located near to plaintiff's property in such manner as to materially contribute to render his property less habitable than otherwise it would be, and to depreciate it in value; and this without, so far as appears, any real necessity existing for such damage,—is, in our opinion, within the reason and authority of the decision just cited. This case differs from that of the Baptist Church, [557] in that there the railroad company was free to select some other location for the repair shop and engine house; while here the evidence shows that the location of the tunnel and its south portal was established pursuant to law, and not voluntarily chosen by defendant. This circumstance, however, does not, as we think, afford sufficient ground for a distinction affecting the result. The case shows that Congress has authorized, and in effect commanded, defendant to construct its tunnel with a portal located in the midst of an inhabited portion of the city. The authority, no doubt, includes the use of steam locomotive engines in the tunnel, with the inevitable concomitants of foul gases and smoke emitted from the engines. No question is made but that it includes the installation and operation of a fanning system for ridding the tunnel of this source of discomfort to those operating the trains and traveling upon them. All this being granted, the special and peculiar damage to the plaintiff as a property owner in close proximity to the portal is the necessary consequence, unless at least it be feasible to install ventilating shafts or other devices for preventing the outpouring of gases and smoke from the entire length of the tunnel at a single point upon the surface, as at present. Construing the acts of Congress in the light of the 5th Amendment, they do not authorize the imposition of so direct and peculiar and substantial a burden upon plaintiff's property without compensation to him. If the damage is not preventable by the employment at reasonable expense of devices such as have been suggested, then plaintiff's property is "necessary for the purposes contemplated," and may be acquired by purchase or condemnation (32 Stat. at L. 916, chap. 856, § 9), and pending its acquisition defendant is responsible. If the damage is readily preventable, the statute furnishes no excuse, and defendant's responsibility follows on general principles.

No doubt there will be some practical difficulty in distinguishing [558] between that part of the damage which is attributable to the gases and smoke emitted from the locomotive engines while operated upon the railroad tracks adjacent to plaintiff's land, and with respect to which we hold there is no right of action, and damage that arises from the gases and smoke that issue from the tunnel, and with respect to which there appears to be a right of action. How this difficulty is to be solved in order to determine the damages that should be assessed in this action, or the compensation that should be awarded in case condemnation proceedings are resorted to, is a question not presented by this record, and upon which, therefore, no opinion is expressed.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded to the Court of Appeals, with directions to reverse the judgment of the Supreme Court of the District and remand the cause to that court with directions for a new trial, and for further proceedings in accordance with the views above expressed.

Mr. Justice Lurton dissents.

F. F. GREEN, Appt.,
v.
MENOMINEE TRIBE OF INDIANS IN WISCONSIN and the United States.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 558-571.)

United States — suits against — claim against Indians.

1. No right to sue the United States was given by the act of May 29, 1908 (35 Stat. at L. 444, chap. 216), § 2, conferring jurisdiction on the court of claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment, notwithstanding lapse of time or statute of limitations, for any balances found due upon the claims of certain designated Indian traders against the Menominee tribe of Indians in Wisconsin, and against certain members of said tribe at the Green Bay Agency for supplies furnished certain members of the tribe for the purpose of carrying on logging operations, but such statute created no new right, simply affording a means of establishing by a proceeding in the court of claims the existence, if any, of a claim against the tribe and its individual members.

[For other cases, see United States, IV. b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

NOTE.—On immunity of United States from suit—see note to Beers v. Arkansas, 15 L. ed. U. S. 991.

Digitized by Google

Claims — jurisdiction — contracts with Indians.

2. Claims against individual Indians as citizens of the United States, resulting from their purely individual and personal contracts, not related to, or connected with, tribal membership, or the dependency resulting from status as an Indian, as distinguished from citizenship, were not made justiciable in the court of claims by the act of May 29, 1908, § 2, conferring upon that court jurisdiction to hear, determine, and render final judgment, notwithstanding lapse of time or statute of limitations, for any balances found due, without interest, with the right of appeal, as in other cases, upon the claims of certain specified Indian traders against the Ménominee tribe of Indians in Wisconsin, and against certain members of said tribe at the Green Bay Agency for supplies furnished to such members for the purpose of carrying on logging operations, but such act, except so far as concerned the statute of limitations, created no new right, simply affording a means of establishing by a proceeding in the court of claims the existence, if any, of a claim against the tribe, and the individual members of the tribe as such.

[For other cases, see Claims, 105-127, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Indians — contracts with — formal requisites.

3. The contractual agreement of an Indian tribe or its individual members to pay for supplies to be furnished to certain members of the tribe for logging operations out of the proceeds to be received by the Indian agent from the sale of the logs to be cut and sold is governed by the provisions of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2103, making null and void all agreements made by any person with any Indian tribe or individual Indians for the payment or delivery of any money or other thing of value, in present or in prospective, or for the granting or procuring any privilege to him or any other person in consideration of services for said Indians relative to their lands, or to any claims growing out of, or in reference to, annuities, instalments, or other moneys, claims, demands, or things, under laws or treaties with the United States, or official acts of any officer thereof, or in any way connected with or due from the United States, unless such agreements are in writing, and are formally executed and approved.

[Matters as to Indians, see Indians, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Indians — contracts with — formal requisites.

4. The requirement of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2103, that contracts with Indians shall be void unless in writing and formally executed and approved, is none the less applicable to an asserted agreement by a tribe or its individual members to pay for supplies to be furnished such members for logging operations out of the proceeds to be received by the Indian agent from the sale of the logs to be cut and sold because the other contracting party was a licensed Indian trader, authorized to deal with the tribe and its members, or because such contract was made in the presence of, and with the assent of, an agent of the Interior Department.

[Matters as to Indians, see Indians, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Indians — implied contracts — liability.

5. An Indian tribe and its members should not, on the theory of an implied contract, be held liable to pay for supplies furnished to certain members of the tribe for logging operations under an express agreement, void under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2103, because not in writing, that the supplies should be paid for out of the proceeds to be received by the Indian agent from the sale of the logs to be cut and sold, where such agent failed to apply the proceeds in his hands to the payment of the supplies so furnished.

[Matters as to Indians, see Indians, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 285.]

Argued March 13 and 16, 1914. Decided May 11, 1914.

APPEAL from the Court of Claims to review the dismissal of a petition seeking to enforce a claim against an Indian tribe and its members. Affirmed.

See same case below, 47 Ct. Cl. 281.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. L. T. Michener argued the cause, and, with Messrs. P. G. Michener and C. F. Dillett, filed a brief for appellant:

The United States is treated by the act of May 29, 1908, as well as by the broad field of our general legislation, as the trustee in possession, or the vested trustee, of the Indian funds. Therefore, it was clearly right and proper, and it was necessary, to sue both the United States and the tribe. The case may be likened to a suit in equity to direct the disposition of a trust fund, the holder of the fund being a necessary, or, at least, a proper, party defendant.

1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 246-249; La Abra Silver Min. Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 423, 441, 443, 463-466, 44 L. ed. 223, 230, 231, 237-239, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 168.

There was here an agreement entered into and most of the paymen's made. Those payments operated as a ratification.

Neal's Case, 14 Ct. Cl. 285.

If there be no agreement made within the forms of law, the action lies upon an implied contract for a quantum valebant for supplies, goods, wares, merchandise, tools, and live stock furnished certain members of the said tribe after the 1st day of January in the year 1880, for the purpose of carrying on logging operations upon the Menominee Indian Reservation. The Indians received and used the property of appellant, and he is entitled to be reimbursed the value thereof, whether there was a formal and precise agreement in writing or not.

Digitized by Google

Clark v. United States, 95 U. S. 539, 24 L. ed. 518; Roberts v. United States, 92 U. S. 41, 48, 23 L. ed. 646, 648; Braden's Case, 16 Ct. Cl. 410.

The provisions of the jurisdictional act operate as an assumption of liability if the value of the claims is established by the evidence and they are unpaid.

Navarre's Case, 33 Ct. Cl. 248, affirmed in 173 U. S. 77, 43 L. ed. 620, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 326.

If Congress, having knowledge of the facts, had intended that the validity of the agreement should be contested, or that it should be treated as a nullity, the claims would not have been referred to the court below to have such a defense set up and the claims defeated. Congress could have done all that itself by not making the reference.

Dahlgren's Case, 16 Ct. Cl. 49; Braden's Case, 16 Ct. Cl. 411.

Special and general statutory provisions may subsist together, the former qualifying and supplying exceptions to the latter.

Townsend v. Little, 109 U. S. 504, 512, 27 L. ed. 1012, 1015, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; United States v. Nix, 189 U. S. 199, 205, 47 L. ed. 775, 777, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495.

Assistant Attorney General Thompson argued the cause and filed a brief for appellees:

The jurisdictional act makes no admission of liability, or any ground of liability on the part of the government, but merely provides a forum for the adjudication of the claim according to applicable legal principles.

United States v. Mille Lac Band, 229 U. S. 498, 57 L. ed. 1299, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 811; Cooley, Const. Law, 1st ed. p. 319, 3d ed. p. 358.

Mr. Chief Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

By this appeal a review is sought of a judgment of the court below holding that an amended petition filed by the appellant stated no cause of action, and dismissing the same. 47 Ct. Cl. 281. Our attention, therefore, must be directed to the petition; but as a means of at once clarifying the issues, we refer to the act of Congress authorising the suit, and briefly state the averments of an original petition which was likewise dismissed because stating no cause of action.

By an act of Congress of May 29, 1908 (35 Stat. at L. 444, chap. 216, § 2), jurisdiction was conferred upon the court of claims "to hear, determine, and render final judgment, nothwithstanding lapse of time or statute of limitation, for any balances found due, without interest, with the right of appeal, as in other cases," upon the claims of eight named persons who were described in the act as "traders," against the "Menominee tribe of Indians in Wisconsin, and against certain members of said tribe at the Green Bay Agency, for supplies, goods, wares, merchandise, tools, and live stock furnished certain members of the said tribe after the first day of January, in the year eighteen hundred and eighty, for the purpose of carrying on logging operations upon the Menominee Indian Reservation, in Wisconsin." The statute further provided: "Said court shall, in rendering judgment, ascertain and determine the amount, if any, due upon each of said claims, and if the court find that there is a liability upon any of said claims, it shall then determine if such liability be that of the said Menominee tribe of Indians as a tribe, or that of individual members of said tribe, and it shall [563] render judgment for the amount, if any, found due from said tribe to any of said claimants, and it shall render judgment, for the amounts, if any, found due from any of the individual members of said tribe to any of said claimants." The statute then provided the means by which the judgments, if any were rendered, whether against the tribe or against individual Indians, should be paid.

Green, the appellant, one of the traders named in the act, sought to recover from the Menominee tribe and 158 named members thereof an amount alleged to be the price of certain equipment and supplies alleged to have been furnished by him. The liability of the individual Indians was based upon averments that they had received during the years 1886 to 1889 the amount of the equipment and supplies sued for, and that they had contracted to pay for the same, the supplies having been furnished them to enable them to carry on logging operations on the Menominee Reservation in Wisconsin. The liability of the tribe was based on averments that it had expressly guaranteed that the individual Indians, members of the tribe, would pay for the supplies furnished them for the purposes and under the circumstances alleged. The defendants jointly demurred on two grounds: first, that the act conferring authority to bring suit was repugnant to the Constitution, and second, because the petition stated no cause of action. Holding that Congress had the undoubted power to pass the jurisdictional act, the court overruled the first ground. It also overruled the second ground as to the individual members of the tribe who were made defendants, but it sustained the exception of no cause of action as to the tribe, the court holding that "under the averments of the petition the Menominee Tribe of Indians is but a naked guarantor for the debt of another, and such promise, not being in writing, is void under the statute of frauds." The suit, as to the tribe, was therefore dismissed.

Digitized by Google

[564] By leave, an amended petition was filed stating a new cause of action and joining the United States as defendant. This petition, after alleging that the petitioner was a citizen of the United States and a resident of Wisconsin, and after counting upon the jurisdictional act, made in substance the following averments: That in 1881 the Menominee Indians on the reservation were in a destitute condition, and, to save them and their families from starvation, the United States granted them permission to cut and sell the dead and down timber on the reservation, "10 per cent of the proceeds to go to the benefit of the said tribe and those performing labor in that respect." That when it developed that the Indians, because of their extreme poverty and want of credit, could not procure the equipment and supplies which were essential to enable them to make use of the permission, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs sent a special agent, John A. Wright, to the Reservation, to make some arrangement whereby such condition could be remedied. That a council of the tribe was thereupon held, attended by all the chiefs and head men and practically all the members of the tribe, and it was agreed by and between the then Indian trader, M. Wescott, "as one party to the agreement, and the Menominee Indian Tribe as the other party thereto, that the said M. Wescott, the duly licensed Indian trader, at Keshena, Wisconsin, should furnish necessary equipment and supplies to those members of the tribe who desired to engage in logging operations to enable them to carry on such work, and support their respective families while so engaged, such equipment and supplies not to exceed the sum of $2.50 for each thousand feet of logs so cut and sold; that all logs cut and hauled by the Menominee Tribe in the logging operations were to be sold through the Indian agent, to the highest and best bidder; and that the prices for such supplies as were to be furnished by the petitioner should be such prices as were being paid in cash for similar [565] supplies in that part of the state, with transportation added; that said Menominee Tribe promised and agreed that such equipment and supplies so furnished should be paid for out of the first proceeds from the sale of the logs so to be cut and sold. That said agreement was made with the consent and approval of the Indian agent residing at Keshena, Wisconsin, and in charge of said Menominee Indian Reservation, and also by the said special agent, John A. Wright. That said agreement had the unanimous approval of all members of the tribe present at said council. That said agreement was made orally by the said M. Wescott, personally, and by the chiefs and head men on behalf of said tribe. . . ." It was alleged that the agreement thus made was carried out by the tribe and by Wescott, who made advances for the purposes of the operations in cutting the dead and down timber, and continued to do so until the year 1886, when Wescott ceased to be the Indian trader and was succeeded by Green, the petitioner, and one Stacy, whose rights the petitioner Green had acquired. The petition then charged that, as the condition of destitution and inability to obtain equipment and supplies which had led to the making of the agreement with Wescott yet prevailed after petitioner and Stacy became the Indian traders, on the 1st of January, 1887, it was agreed between petitioner and Stacy and the tribe that the previous agreement should be continued in full force and effect with petitioner and Stacy, the petition expressly averring that "said last-mentioned agreement was made with your petitioner and W. H. Stacy, personally, and on behalf of the Menominee Tribe, by the chiefs and head men thereof, which said chiefs and head men still continued to have and were recognized as having authority to make contracts in behalf of, and binding on, said tribe. That said last-mentioned agreement was approved by the Indian agent at Keshena, Wisconsin, and was acquiesced in by all members of said tribe, and treated by all [566] parties interested as valid and binding on the contracting parties."

It was averred that up to 1889 supplies were furnished in accordance with the agreement with the approval of the Indian agent and the United States, and with a few exceptions were paid for by the methods pointed out by the contract; that during the year 1889, however, supplies amounting to $13,087.46 were furnished to 158 members of the tribe, the name of each member and the amount supplied him being stated, for which payment had not been made either by the Indians, the tribe, or the United States.

It was further averred that such unpaid-for supplies were furnished "in accordance with and relying on said agreement," and that petitioner and Stacy "did not and would not extend credit to the individual members of said tribe, but extended such credit solely to the tribe, relying upon said agreement." It was further alleged that the proceeds from the sales of the dead and down timber cut and hauled by the Indians were received by the Indian agent, and if the amounts which came into his hands in accordance with the contract and which were subject by its terms to be applied to the payment of the supplies advanced under the terms of the agreement had been so applied, all the supplies would have been paid for; but that they remain unpaid for because "such proceeds were not so applied." After averring that the logging operations and the credits extended by the petitioner and Stacy were for the benefit of the tribe, the petition charged that "there is a large fund in the possession of the United States to the credit and for the benefit of said Menominee Tribe of Indians, derived through their logging operations, and now amounting to more than a million and a half dollars, which fund has been accumulated through the credit extended and assistance rendered by licensed traders to the Menominee Indians in logging operations," [567] but there was no averment that such sum or any part thereof was derived from payments made to the United States by the Indian agent of any portion of the sum derived from the 10 per cent provided for in the contract, and which it was contemplated would be used by the Indian agent for the purpose of paying the trader for the supplies furnished by him. There was also no averment that the money to the extent of the amount of the supplies which was received by the Indian agent out of the funds of the Indians, and which was not by him applied to pay for the supplies, was ever turned over to the Indians, or that they became in any way the beneficiaries thereof.

Digitized by Google

The petition concluded with the following averment and prayer:

"Your petitioner avers that there is due him from the Menominee Tribe of Indians, or from the individual members thereof, as may be found and adjudicated by the court, the sum of Thirteen Thousand and Eighty seven Dollars, Forty-six Cents ($13,087.46).

"Wherefore the petitioner prays judgment for Thirteen Thousand and Eighty-seven Dollars, Forty-six Cents ($13,087.46)."

By a general demurrer the defendants, besides questioning the right to file the amended petition, on the ground that it constituted an entire departure, and insisting in any event that if there was a right to file it, its averments did not state a cause of action, denied the right to implead the United States as a defendant, and challenged the constitutionality of the jurisdictional act. The court, without specifically directing its attention to the other grounds, came to consider whether the amended petition stated a cause of action, and deciding that it did not, dismissed the cause, and, as we at the outset said, the rightfulness of its action in so doing is the matter we are called upon to decide.

The contentions pressed upon the one side to sustain the correctness of the conclusion of the court below, and [568] on the other, to demonstrate the existence of reversible error, all but involve an examination of the reasoning which led the court to its conclusion, and we think the most direct way to dispose of the case will be to state under separate headings the propositions to which the court gave its sanction, and the reasons relied upon to establish that error was committed.

1. The court held that the jurisdictional act, except so far as concerned the statute of limitations, created no new right in favor of the petitioner, but simply afforded a means of establishing by a proceeding in the court of claims the existence, if any, of a claim against the tribe and the individual members of the tribe as such. From this premise the conclusion was deduced that the act gave no right to sue the United States, and conferred no jurisdiction upon the court below over claims against an Indian as a mere individual, aside from his membership of the tribe, or dissociated from his dependent condition as an Indian, subject, because of such condition, to the exercise by the United States of governmental supervision and control. The court consequently decided that it was not concerned with any supposed liability of the individual defendants as citizens of the United States, resulting from their purely individual and personal contracts, and which, therefore, were not related to or connected with tribal membership or the dependency resulting from status as an Indian, as distinguished from citizenship. We think the conclusions thus reached by the court are so clearly the necessary result of the text of the act that we content ourselves with referring to that text as a demonstration of their soundness.

2. Concluding that the relevant provisions of § 2103 of the Revised Statutes (which are in the margin†) were applicable [569] and †Sec. 2103. No agreement shall be made by any person with any tribe of Indians, or individual Indians not citizens of the United States, for the payment or delivery of any money or other thing of value, in present or in prospective, or for the granting or procuring any privilege to him, or any other person, in consideration of services for said Indians relative to their lands, or to any claims growing out of, or in reference to, controlling, as the contract alleged was not in writing and did not in other respects conform to the statute, it was held that no right to recover was stated in the petition. Again, we think that the conclusion of the court on this subject is so clearly within the text of the statute that it suffices to direct attention to such text without going further. But if it be conceded for argument's sake that there is ambiguity involved in determining from the text whether the statute is applicable, we are of the opinion that the case as made is so within the spirit of the statute, and so exemplifies the wrong which it was intended to prevent and the evils which it was intended to remedy as to dispel any doubt otherwise engendered. Nothing, we think, could more cogently demonstrate this statement than does the development in the court below concerning the claim in controversy: the uncertainty as to the alleged debtor, manifested by the claim against the individual members of the tribe as principals and against the tribe as a mere surety, shifting, as the exigencies of the case required, to a claim against the tribe as principal, and secondarily against the members as mere [570] accessories, culminating in a prayer for relief which, in and of itself, points to the uncertainty with which the transactions referred to were environed. And this is additionally fortified by observing that on the face of the petition it appears that an adequate amount of the labor and property of the tribe or of its individual members passed into the hands of the person designated under the alleged contract, and who, by its terms, was charged with the duty of paying it over for the equipment and supplies furnished. A situation which makes it clear that the controversy is not whether there is a liability express or implied for supplies and equipment received and not paid for, but upon whom the loss must fall resulting from the failure of the person designated under the asserted contract, and who received the money, to discharge his duty by paying it over to the furnisher of the supplies, who was a party to the alleged contract, and in whose interest and for whose benefit presumably the provision as to the retention and paying over of the money was made.

Digitized by Google

But it is said that the statute ought not to be held applicable because the petitioner was a licensed Indian trader, authorized to deal with the tribe and its members. But manifestly the right to deal did not confer power to deal by making unlawful contracts. And this consideration also answers the proposition so much insisted upon that because the asserted contract was made in the presence of and with the assent of an agent of the Interior Department, therefore the provisions of § 2103 should not be held applicable. We say the prior reasoning is controlling, since it cannot be held that the presence of the agent of the Interior Department authorized the doing of that which was expressly prohibited by law. In other words, that an unlawful contract became lawful because of the presence, at its making, of a public officer whose obvious duty it was to see to it that the law was not violated. Indeed, when the prohibitions of § 2103 are considered and the [571] presence of the representative of the Interior Department at the time the alleged agreement was entered into is borne in mind, if inferences are to be indulged in it is not to be inferred that that which was prohibited by law was done, but rather the assumption should be that instead of leaving the trader who was to furnish the equipment and supplies for utilizing, by the Indians, the dead and down timber, to depend for his payment upon the mere force of the contract agreements of the tribe or its individual members, having regard to the interest of the trader and his protection, and with his consent, it was arranged that the proceeds to arise from marketing the dead and down timber should go into the hands of the Indian agent, so that, before paying the Indians for their labor, the sum due for the supplies should be paid by the agent to the trader, thus in a sense impounding in the hands of the person selected by him the proceeds for the trader's benefit. And this view answers the contention made that, even in the absence of an express contract, there should have been a judgment against the tribe and its members upon the theory of an implied obligation to pay, arising from the fact of the receipt by the tribe or its members of supplies or equipment for which they had not paid. True, in a narrow sense it may be said that the case involves the right of annuities, instalments, or other moneys, claims, demands, or thing, under laws or treaties with the United States, or official acts of any officers thereof, or in any way connected with or due from the United States, unless such contract or agreement be executed and approved as follows:

---

First. Such agreement shall be in writing, and a duplicate of it delivered to each party.

Second. It shall be executed before a judge of a court of record, and bear the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs indorsed upon it.

. . . . . .

All contract or agreements made in violation of this section shall be null and void, . . .

Digitized by Google

the petitioner to be paid for the supplies furnished, but, from the point of view of the Indians in a broad sense the case as made involves deciding whether the petitioner should bear the loss of the failure of the agent to pay over to him out of the moneys retained for that purpose, the sum of the advances of supplies; that is to say, whether the Indians, after having placed in the hands of the designated person the sum of the supplies, are under the obligation to pay again,—that is, to pay twice.

Affirmed.

---

[572] SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
W. O. GADD.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 572–581.)

Error to circuit court of appeals — scope of review — questions of general law — manifest error.

1. A judgment of a Federal circuit court of appeals in an action based upon the Federal employers' liability act of April 22, 1908 (35 Stat. at L. 65, chap. 149, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1322), as amended by the act of April 5, 1910 (36 Stat. at L. 291, chap. 143, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1324), will be affirmed by the Supreme Court where all the questions presented for decision are of general law, not involving the interpretation of a statute, and it does not clearly appear that error was committed in the decision of such questions.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VIII. e; VIII. m, 1, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Error to circuit court of appeals — scope of review — frivolous Federal question.

2. A question of interpretation of the Federal employers' liability act of April 22, 1908, as amended by the act of April 5, 1910, is not presented for review in the Federal Supreme Court on writ of error to a circuit court of appeals by the refusal of the request of the defendant, in a suit based on that statute, to take the case from the jury by a peremptory instruction, where, in view of the state of the proof, such request was absolutely without merit.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VIII. e, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Appeal — scope of review — questions not involved in record — instructions.

3. The question of the operation of the Federal employers' liability act of April 22, 1908, as amended by the act of April 5, 1910, on the doctrine of assumption of risk, cannot be said to arise on a record which shows that the trial court's statement in reply to an exception to the general charge based on the court's silence as to assumption of risk, that he understood the doctrine to have been abolished by that statute, was so qualified as to convey clearly that, as the matters to which the excepted charge related purely concerned the common-law principles of fellow servant and contributory negligence, they were controlled by the provisions of the statute, and there was nothing in the excepted portion of the general charge which in any possible way was relevant to the doctrine of assumption of risk,—especially as this question was not presented by any request to charge, nor raised on the motion for new trial, nor referred to in the assignments of error either in the circuit court of appeals or in the Supreme Court.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VIII. j, 7, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Error to circuit court of appeals — damages for delay.

4. Five per cent damages for delay will be awarded under United States Supreme Court rule 23 upon the affirmance of a judgment of a circuit court of appeals in a suit based on the Federal employers' liability act of April 22, 1908, as amended by the act of April 5, 1910, where the contentions that the interpretation of the statute was involved are wholly lacking in merit, the only questions presented for decision being those of general law, as to which it does not clearly appear that any error was committed.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, IX. h, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 645.]

Argued April 15, 1914. Decided May 11, 1914.

IN ERROR to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Circuit Court for the Western District of Tennessee in favor of plaintiff in an action brought under the Federal employers' liability act. Affirmed with interest and damages for delay.

See same case below, 207 Fed. 277.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Caruthers Ewing argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Caruthers Ewing and L. E. Jeffries filed a brief in reply for plaintiff in error.

Mr. John L. Stout argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error.

NOTE.—On the appellate jurisdiction of the Federal Supreme Court over circuit courts of appeals—see note to Bagley v. General Fire Extinguisher Co. 53 L. ed. U. S. 605.

On the constitutionality, application, and effect of the Federal employers' liability act—see note to Lamphere v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 38.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Chief Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in error on this record sued the railway company, the plaintiff in error, to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been suffered through its negligence. The cause of action was expressly based [576] upon the employers' liability act,† it being averred that at the time of the injury the plaintiff, as an employee of the defendant, was assisting in the actual movement of interstate commerce transportation in which the defendant company was then engaged. The case is here on error prosecuted by the railway company to a judgment of the court below affirming a judgment of the trial court upon a verdict. 207 Fed. 277.

In Chicago Junction R. Co. v. King, 222 U. S. 222, 56 L. ed. 173, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 79, it was held that as the pleadings in that case based the right to recover upon an act of Congress, the safety appliance law, there was power in this court to review the judgment of a circuit court of appeals,—an authority which carried with it the duty to consider and pass upon all questions for decision in the case, even although they might not concern the interpretation of the act of Congress upon which the suit was based. But while thus ruling, it was nevertheless declared that, as questions of common-law negligence not involving the interpretation of the statute fell within the classes of questions which, under the distribution of judicial power made by the act of 1891 [26 Stat. at L. 826, chap. 517, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 488] (re-expressed in the Judicial Code) were determinable by the circuit court of appeals in last resort, where such questions were brought here from a circuit court of appeals because they arose in a suit under the statute, and which for that reason alone could come here, whilst considering we would not reverse as to such questions unless it clearly appeared that error had been committed. Besides establishing this rule, it was further said that, in disposing of such questions, we would not feel it our duty to re-state the case and re-expound the principles applicable to its decision below, but would, as a general rule, leave those subjects where the circuit court of appeals had left them, and [577] would hence content ourselves with merely expressing our ultimate conviction of the case as formed after an adequate examination of the record. The principles announced in the King Case were subsequently expressly reiterated and applied in Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Moore, 228 U. S. 433, 57 L. ed. 907, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 580, and Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Brown, 229 U. S. 317, 57 L. ed. 1204, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840, 3 N. C. C. A. 826. And in both of these latter cases it was recognized that the ruling in the King Case was equally applicable to cases brought here from the circuit court of appeals on the ground that the relief sought was based on the employers' liability act where the cause of action arose since the adoption of the Judicial Code.

Coming to the case made by this record, although, as we have said, it is manifest that the cause of action was based upon the employers' liability act, we are of the opinion that it presents for decision no question concerning the interpretation of that act, since all the questions which require to be decided merely involve considerations of general law depending in no sense upon the particular significance of the employers' liability act. Under these conditions it is apparent that the case is absolutely controlled by the King Case, and we therefore content ourselves with saying that, as after an adequate examination of the record we find no ground whatever affording a clear conviction that error was committed, affirmance must follow.

This disposes of the entire case; but as it is insisted that two propositions which it is asserted involve the meaning of the employers' liability act arose upon the record and require to be decided, we come not to decide the propositions, but to point out the absolute want of merit in the contention that they arose on the record for decision. The first contention is based upon the refusal of a request made by the defendant to take the case from the jury by a peremptory instruction. Granting that, in its ultimate analysis, the request involved an appreciation of the [578] employers' liability act, nevertheless we are of opinion that the absolute want of merit in the proposition, in view of the state of the proof, caused the request, intrinsically considered, to be so unsubstantial and frivolous as not to furnish any support for the contention that its refusal raised a question concerning the interpretation of the statute.

The second contention rests upon the assumption that the court below affirmed a supposed action of the trial court in erroneously instructing the jury that the effect of the employers' liability act was to abolish the doctrine of assumption of risk. The proposition is thus stated in the opening sentences of the argument of the plaintiff in error: "The trial judge held that said employers' liability act abolished the defense of assumed risk, so that the construction of the act is here involved." A brief statement of the condition of the record on the subject is necessary to demonstrate the entire want of foundation for the proposition. The plaintiff was a locomotive fireman, and the controversy in the case was whether the personal injury which he suffered was occasioned by the reckless and negligent conduct of the engineer in moving the engine under the circumstances disclosed by the proof. In its general charge, the court had instructed the jury that the plaintiff was entitled to recover if they believed the testimony of the plaintiff, which disclosed an unusual and reckless movement of the engine by the engineer after he had directed the fireman to descend from the engine to ascertain whether there was a defect in its mechanism. Coming, then, to consider special charges asked by the respective parties, the court gave a charge requested by the plaintiff, as follows: "If you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was directed by the engineer Hunter to get off the engine and examine the engine for defects, then, while said plaintiff was obeying the direction of Hunter, it was Hunter's duty to look out for plaintiff, and not move [579] the engine until he knew that plaintiff was in a position of safety." Upon the giving of this charge the defendant excepted as follows: "I want to take exception to that last statement on the ground that the fact that he moved up that engine if he was in a place of safety is not stated to be any cause of action in this case, and not involved in the pleadings, and he was not injured by virtue of it." And the counsel added: "We further except to the statement that the court made to the jury (evidently referring to the general charge) that if they believed the facts as stated by the plaintiff, which left out of question the doctrine of assumed risk." In response to which the court said: "I understand that the doctrine of assumed risk is abolished by the employers' liability act, in so far as relates to cases wherein the servant is injured because of the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees, etc., of the carrier, and contributory negligence is modified so as that it no longer bars the right of action, but goes in reduction of the amount of recovery. But you reserve your exception." From this statement it is evident that no charge whatever was given by the court concerning the assumption of risk, and hence that no exception was or could have been taken to any such charge, and that the exception which was reserved concerned the special charge as to the conduct of the engineer and the portion of the general charge concerning liability if the testimony of the plaintiff as to the negligence of the engineer was believed, the exception as to the latter having been placed on the ground that the court had been silent as to assumption of risk. And it is equally clear that this view is not affected by taking into account the reply of the court to the comment of counsel. We say this because, while the reply echoed the counsel's mistaken use of the words "assumed risk," by the qualification which is affixed to these words, it clearly conveyed that as the matters to which the excepted charge related purely concerned the common-law [580] principles of fellow servant and contributory negligence, they were controlled by the provisions of the statute. And this becomes certain when it is borne in mind that there was nothing in that portion of the general charge which was excepted to which, in any possible view, was relevant to the doctrine of assumption of risk. If there were room for the slightest doubt on the subject it is dispelled by the following considerations: (a) because the record contains no intimation of any request for instruction concerning assumption of risk made by the defendant; (b) because although the elaborate application for a new trial stated many alleged grounds, not the slightest reference was made to any supposed error committed with reference to the mistaken construction of the statute concerning assumption of risk which is now relied upon; (c) because while, in the assignments of error made for the purpose of review by the circuit court of appeals, the special charge in connection with which the colloquy between court and counsel took place was referred to, and error assigned concerning it for specified reasons, no reference was made to the alleged mistake which is now relied upon concerning the wrongful interpretation of the statute as to assumption of risk. It may indeed be inferred that in the argument in some form alleged error on such subject was called to the attention of the circuit court of appeals, since that court, in its opinion, considered and disposed of the subject by directing attention to the qualifying words used in the remarks of the trial judge, and to the fact that, as assumption of risk was not at all involved in the testimony to which the charge related, no prejudicial error could have arisen. Certain is it, however, that in the assignments of error made for the purposes of review by this court, no complaint whatever was made of the alleged mistake concerning the operation of the statute upon the doctrine of assumed risk.

†The employers' liability act of April 22, 1908, 35 Stat. at L. 65, chap. 149, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1322, as amended April 5, 1910, 36 Stat. at L. 291, chap. 143, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1324.

Digitized by Google

Before coming to order the judgment of affirmance [581] which is the necessary result of what we have said, we briefly state the considerations which lead us to the conclusion that our duty is, in directing such judgment, to award interest by way of damages for delay under the terms of the second paragraph of rule 23. It is manifest on the face of the record that the case was carefully and fully considered in both of the courts below. In view of the ruling in the King Case and of what we have said concerning the contentions advanced to support the assertion that the interpretation of the statute was here involved, we think the conclusion that the writ of error was prosecuted only for delay is plainly justified, and that a penalty by way of damages should be imposed. The judgment below is therefore affirmed with 5 per cent upon the amount of the judgment in addition to the interest allowed by law.

Digitized by Google

Affirmed with interest and 5 per cent damages.

O. ITOW and E. Fushimi, Plffs. in Err.,
v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 581-586.)

Error to Alaska district court — capital cases.

1. The general right under the prior law to a direct review in the Federal Supreme Court of judgments of the district court of Alaska in capital cases was taken away by the provision of the Judicial Code, § 134 (36 Stat. at L. 1134, chap. 231, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 195), which makes the judgments of the circuit court of appeals of the ninth circuit final in all cases, including criminal cases "other than those in which a writ of error or appeal will lie direct to the Supreme Court of the United States, as provided in § 247," by which such right to direct review is confined to prize causes and those which involve certain designated Federal questions.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 962-966, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Error to Alaska district court — Federal question — when raised.

2. The jurisdiction of the Federal Supreme Court under the Judicial Code, § 247, to review judgments of the district courts of Alaska because of the presence of a constitutional question exists only when such question was actually raised in the trial court.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 974-979, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 714.]

Argued and submitted April 8, 1914. Decided May 11, 1914.

IN ERROR to the District Court of the United States, Division No. 1, Territory of Alaska, to review a conviction under an indictment for murder. Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. H. Cobb submitted the cause for plaintiffs in error.

Assistant Attorney General Adkins argued the cause, and, with Mr. Karl W. Kirchwey, filed a brief for defendant in error.

Solicitor General Davis also filed a brief for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

By an indictment found in the court below on the 13th of December, 1912, the plaintiffs in error, Itow and Fushimi, were charged with having murdered one Frank Dunn, on the 14th day of July, 1912, and to a verdict of murder and sentence of death against Itow, and of manslaughter and sentence of twenty years' imprisonment against Fushimi, this direct writ of error is prosecuted.

The government moves to dismiss for want of jurisdiction, and at the threshold that motion requires to be disposed of. The crime charged was committed after the enactment of the Judicial Code, and there is no question as to the applicability of its relevant provisions. By § 134 of [583] that Code [36 Stat. at L. 1134, chap. 231, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 195] governing the right to review cases in the district of Alaska or any division thereof, power is conferred on the circuit court of appeals of the ninth circuit to review, and its judgments in such cases are made final, all cases, including all criminal cases "other than those in which a writ of error or appeal will lie direct to the Supreme Court of the United States, as provided in section two hundred and forty-seven." It is obvious that this section changed the general rule of the prior law by taking capital cases out of the class which could come, because they were capital cases, directly to this court, and by bringing such cases within the final reviewing power of the circuit court of appeals of the ninth circuit.

Section 247, which, as pointed out in § 134, defines the cases which are excepted from the general rule provided by § 134, gives authority to this court to directly review the action of the district courts of Alaska "in prize cases; and in all cases which involve the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States, or in which the constitutionality of any law of the United States, or the validity or construction of any treaty made under its authority, is drawn in question, or in which the constitution or law of a state is claimed to be in contravention of the Constitution of the United States."

Digitized by Google

These provisions being but a re-expression of the language by which the subject of direct review by this court was governed, as provided in the 5th section of the judiciary act of 1891 [26 Stat. at L. 826, chap. 517, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 488], the settled meaning which was affixed by the decisions of this court to the provisions as found in the act of 1891 necessarily determines the significance of the provisions of the section under consideration.

In Ansbro v. United States, 159 U. S. 695, 40 L. ed. 310, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 187, where it became necessary in a criminal case to determine whether there was a right to come directly to this court from a circuit court of the United States in virtue of the [584] provisions of the 5th section of the act of 1891, the court, speaking through Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, said:

"The jurisdiction of this court must be maintained, then, if at all, on the ground that this is a case 'that involves the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States,' or 'in which the constitutionality of any law of the United States is drawn in question.' But we cannot find that any constitutional question was raised at the trial. Motions to quash, to instruct the jury to find for the defendant, for new trial, and in arrest of judgment, were made, but in neither of them, so far as appears, nor by any exception to rulings on the admission or exclusion of evidence, nor to instructions given, or the refusal of instructions asked, was any suggestion made that defendant was being denied any constitutional right, or that the law under which he was indicted was unconstitutional. The first time that anything appears upon that subject is in the assignment of errors, filed February 13, 1895.

"A case may be said to involve the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States when a title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under that instrument, but a definite issue in respect of the possession of the right must be distinctly deducible from the record before the judgment of the court below can be revised, on the ground of error in the disposal of such a claim by its decision. . . . An assignment of errors cannot be availed of to import questions into a cause which the record does not show were raised in the court below, and rulings asked thereon, so as to give jurisdiction to this court under the 5th section of the act of March 3, 1891 [26 Stat. at L. 827, chap. 517, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 549]."

And the doctrine thus announced has been followed and applied in many cases. Cornell v. Green, 163 U. S. 75, 79, 80, 41 L. ed. 76-78, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 969; Muse v. Arlington Hotel Co. 168 U. S. 430, 435, 42 L. ed. 531, 532, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109; [585] Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Thiebaud, 177 U. S. 615, 619, 44 L. ed. 911, 912, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822; Paraiso v. United States, 207 U. S. 368, 52 L. ed. 249, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 127.

The assignments of error relate to these subjects: 1. Error asserted to have been committed by the court in refusing to allow a continuance pending the arrival of certain witnesses, thereby, it is asserted, "denying the defendant the right to have their counsel make an opening statement to the jury." 2. Error committed by the court in permitting the jury, with the consent of the accused, to separate after they were selected and impaneled and sworn. 3. Error by the court in refusing to discharge the jury because of an alleged publication made in a local newspaper during the trial, although the refusal of the court was based upon its opinion, formed after a statement by the jurors, that they had not seen the publication referred to. 4. Error committed by the court in admitting in evidence against Fushimi a statement made by him concerning the crime.

But in the light of the settled rule which we have stated it is apparent on the face of the record that the assignments are wholly inadequate to give us the power to directly review, since there is nothing whatever directly or indirectly even intimating that the reliance on the Constitution was stated at the trial below in any form.

It may be fairly presumed under these circumstances that the direct writ of error from this court was sued out overlooking the fact that, by operation of the Judicial Code, the general right to direct review in capital cases was taken away, or that the writ was prosecuted upon the assumption that the right to a direct review existed in any case where it was possible in this court to argue as to the existence of a constitutional right, wholly irrespective of whether the constitutional question relied upon was raised and considered in the lower court. But the latter conception overlooks the conclusively settled rule to which we have referred that the power to directly review [586] because of a constitutional question obtains only where such question was involved in the trial court; that is, was there actually raised. The destructive effect on the distribution of judicial power made by the act of 1891 which would result from holding that jurisdiction to directly review obtained in any case because of a constitutional question, irrespective of the making of such question in the trial court, merely because of the possibility, after completion of the trial below, of suggesting for the first time such question as the foundation for resorting to direct review, is apparent and finds apt illustration in this case. Thus, although the accused made no objection, constitutional or otherwise, to the permission given by the court to the jury to separate, and indeed expressly assented to such separation, yet, as one of the grounds for direct review by this court it is insisted that, as the Constitution guaranteed a jury trial according to the course of the common law, and permission to separate could not be granted under that law, therefore the accused was deprived of a constitutional right.

Digitized by Google

It is to be observed that confining the right to direct review because of a constitutional question to cases where such question was raised in the trial court, that is, was there involved, does not deprive this court of the ultimate power to pass upon constitutional questions where it is necessary to do so, since if such a question not raised in the trial court, germinates or emerges in a circuit court of appeals, the right of that court to certify affords an opportunity of obtaining a review of the question by this court, and, in the absence of a certification of the question, the authority of this court to grant a writ of certiorari would enable the same result to be accomplished if, in the judgment of this court, the constitutional question was of sufficient importance to justify the calling into play of that power.

Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

---

[587] AMBROSIO APAPAS, Cornelio Lubo, Francisco Lubo, et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 587–592.)

Error to district court — jurisdiction below — certificate.

1. A question of the jurisdiction below is inadequate to sustain a direct writ of error from the Federal Supreme Court to a district court, where such writ of error brings up the whole case, and not the question of jurisdiction, as provided in the Judicial Code, § 238, governing such review, and there is no certificate as to the jurisdiction, as required by that section.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 879–887, 919–937, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Error to district court — frivolousness of Federal question.

2. The contention that the ancestors of certain Indians, charged with a murder committed on an Indian reservation within a state, became, by virtue of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo with Mexico of February 2, 1848 (9 Stat. at L. 922), citizens of the United States and of the state, and were therefore not amenable to prosecution for such murder in the Federal courts, is so absolutely lacking in merit as in no real sense to involve the construction of the treaty within the meaning of the Judicial Code, § 238, governing writs of error from the Federal Supreme Court to the district courts.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 938–989, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Federal courts — jurisdiction — crime on Indian reservation.

3. Murder committed by Indians on a United States Indian reservation within a state is a crime against the authority of the United States, expressly punishable by the Penal Code, § 328 (35 Stat. at L. 1151, chap. 321, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1685), and within the cognizance of the Federal courts, without reference to the citizenship of the accused.

[For other cases, see Courts, 1468–1471, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Error to district court — Federal question — raising below.

4. The admission over objection of testimony as to a statement or admission of the accused does not involve a question as to his constitutional right to protection against compulsory self-crimination which, under the Judicial Code, § 238, will sustain a writ of error from the Federal Supreme Court to a district court to review the conviction, where no reference was made to the Federal Constitution at the time the objection was taken, and there is nothing to indicate that the attention of the court was directed to the fact that there was any controversy or dispute involving such Constitution.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 974–984, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 746.]

Argued April 8, 1914. Decided May 11, 1914.

IN ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California to review a conviction of murder committed by Indians on a United States Indian Reservation. Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Miguel Estudillo argued the cause, and, with Mr. Theodore Martin, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error.

NOTE.—On direct review in Federal Supreme Court of judgments of district or circuit courts—see notes to Gwin v. United States, 46 L. ed. U. S. 741, and B. Altman & Co. v. United States, 56 L. ed. U. S. 894.

On jurisdiction to punish crimes committed by or against Indians—see note to State v. Campbell, 21 L.R.A. 169.

On Federal control of Indians—see note to Worcester v. Georgia, 8 L. ed. U. S. 484.

Digitized by Google

Assistant Attorney General Adkins argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error.

Solicitor General Davis also filed a brief for defendant in error.

[588] Mr. Chief Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

Ten persons described as Indians were, in July, 1912, indicted for the murder of William H. Stanley, a white person, "at, upon, and within the limits of a United States Indian Reservation known as the Cahuilla Indian Reservation in the county of Riverside, within the southern division of the southern district of California, and within the jurisdiction" of the court below, in violation of §§ 273, 275, and 328 of the Penal Code of 1909. [35 Stat. at L. 1143, 1151, chap. 321, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, pp. 1671, 1672, 1685.] As the result of a trial, four of the accused were acquitted, and the six who are plaintiffs in error here were convicted of murder in the second degree, and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment each, and prosecute this direct writ of error to reverse such conviction and sentence. There are one hundred assignments of error, but before we come to consider them we must dispose of a motion made by the government to dismiss on the ground that we are without jurisdiction because the case is susceptible only of review by the circuit court of appeals of the ninth circuit.

Undoubtedly, under the general provisions of § 128 of the Judicial Code [36 Stat. at L. 1133, chap. 231, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 193], power to review is lodged in the circuit court of appeals of the ninth circuit, and our authority, if any to consider the case, depends, therefore, upon whether it comes within the class of cases authorized to be brought directly here from a trial court under the provisions of § 238. By such section, in addition to the power conferred to bring directly to this court a question of jurisdiction of a trial court as a Federal court, under the conditions and subject to the limitations stated, the right to directly review in a case of this kind is conferred only "in any case that involves the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States; in any case in which the constitutionality of any law of the United States, or the validity or construction of any treaty made under its [589] authority, is drawn in question; and in any case in which the constitution or law of a state is claimed to be in contravention of the Constitution of the United States."

The settled significance of these provisions we have just pointed out in the case of Itow v. United States, just decided [233 U. S. 581, ante, 1102, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 699], and under the principle there applied it follows that we must determine the right to direct review by ascertaining whether any of the issues enumerated in the provisions of § 238 were below involved in the cause. Coming to apply this test, only three out of the matters assigned as error have any conceivable relation to the conditions defined by the statute as essential to give the right to a direct review. They are: (1) a challenge of the jurisdiction of the court below; (2) a contention as to the effect of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo [9 Stat. at L. 922]; (3) an assertion that a constitutional question was involved in the action of the trial court in admitting over objection, testimony as to a statement or admission of Ambrosio Apapas, one of the accused.

As to the first, while it was raised below, it is obviously inadequate to sustain the right to direct review, since, under the writ of error, the whole case is brought here, and not the question of jurisdiction alone, as provided in § 238, and because there is no certificate as to the jurisdiction, as required by the section. Maynard v. Hecht, 151 U. S. 324, 38 L. ed. 179, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 353; Chappell v. United States, 160 U. S. 499, 507, 40 L. ed. 510, 512, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397; Courtney v. Pradt, 196 U. S. 89, 91, 92, 49 L. ed. 398, 399, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208.

While the second contention based upon the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo was raised in the lower court, it in no sense involved the validity or construction of the treaty, and therefore affords no support for the right to directly review. In substance the proposition concerning the treaty is this: that as the ancestors of the accused prior to the termination of the war with Mexico were citizens of Mexico, and became by the treaty citizens of the United States and of the state of California, they were therefore [590] not amenable to prosecution in the courts of the United States for the crime of murder committed within the state of California, however much they may have been susceptible of being prosecuted for such crime in an appropriate state court. But assuming, for argument's sake, the premise based on the treaty to be sound, and disregarding, for brevity's sake, the fact that the accused were tribal Indians, leading a tribal life, and living on a tribal reservation under the control of the United States, the deduction based on the premise is so absolutely devoid of merit as not in any real sense to involve the construction of the treaty. We so say because the prosecution was for murder committed by Indians on a United States Indian reservation, and therefore was for a crime against the authority of the United States, expressly punishable by statute (§ 328, Penal Code), and within the cognizance of the courts of the United States, without reference to the citizenship of the accused, as settled by a long line of authority. United States v. Kagama, 118 U. S. 375, 30 L. ed. 228, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1109; United States v. Celestine, 215 U. S. 278, 54 L. ed. 195, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 93; Donnelly v. United States, 228 U. S. 270, 57 L. ed. 831, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 449, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 710; United States v. Sandoval, 231 U. S. 39, ante, 111, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1. Indeed, in answering the argument of the government on the motion to dismiss, if not in express terms, at least virtually, it is conceded that the two propositions we have disposed of thus are inadequate to sustain the resort to a direct writ of error. But it is urged that the third contention plainly is sufficient for that purpose, that contention, as we have said, being based upon an exception taken to the action of the trial court in receiving testimony concerning an alleged statement or admission made by one of the accused, Apapas. But we search the record in vain to find the slightest reference made to the Constitution of the United States at the time the objection referred to was taken, or anything whatever to indicate in any manner that the attention of the court below was directed to the fact that there [591] was any controversy or dispute involving the Constitution of the United States.

Digitized by Google

Under this condition, as pointed out in the case of Itow v. United States, supra, there is no ground whatever for saying that a constitutional right was involved within the exceptions created by § 238 so as to justify disregarding the regular course of judicial procedure by coming directly to this court. The theory upon which it is insisted in argument that the right to direct review results because of the action of the trial court as to the admission of the statement is based upon the premise that because the Constitution guaranteed against compulsory self-incrimination, therefore any objection made to the admission of the statement or confession by the accused necessarily and inherently involved a constitutional right, and amounted to a statement of the same, although no express mention was made of the Constitution, and nothing appears to indicate that any contention whatever existed as to the significance and operation of the Constitution. But this proposition, if carried to its legitimate conclusion, would embrace every conceivable controversy as to every possible right, since, under a constitutional system of government, all rights, in their last analysis, are referable to the safeguards of the Constitution. But we need not further demonstrate the unsoundness of the contention, since it is directly in conflict with the settled rule which we have just re-stated in the Itow Case. And although to go further is superfluous, to prevent misconception or unfounded inferences as to what we decide, we say that must not be understood as holding that, even although it be assumed, for the sake of argument, that the constitutional guaranty against compulsory self-incrimination would apply to an objection made to the offer in evidence of an admission by an accused person, it would follow that such guaranty would be involved in an objection to the admission in evidence of a confession in [592] the sense of § 238, even if, in making the objection, the guaranty of the Constitution was expressly referred to, unless there was some real controversy concerning the meaning of the constitutional guaranty. We make this reservation because it is quite apparent that such an objection, in the absence of some difference as to the significance of the Constitution, might well involve but the exercise of discretion as to the order or method of proof, and the calling into play of judgment to determine whether or not the proof as offered brought the question which was to be decided within the undisputed scope of the constitutional safeguard. In other words, we do not hold that any and every objection to the admission of a statement or confession of an accused can be made to involve the construction of the Constitution merely by referring to that instrument when in substance and effect there is no controversy concerning the Constitution, but only a contention as to the methods of procedure. Conceptions which are well illustrated by the record before us, where the entire argument concerning the Constitution is based on the following objection taken to the admission of the statement of the accused: Counsel for accused, "One minute. We object that there is no proper foundation laid for a confession, as there is no evidence to show that there was any (no) inducement or immunity offered, or what the circumstances were under which the statement was made."

Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

Digitized by Google

[593] CORNELL STEAMBOAT COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
PHŒNIX CONSTRUCTION COMPANY.
(No. 933.)

CORNELL STEAMBOAT COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
PHŒNIX CONSTRUCTION COMPANY.
(No. 934.)

CORNELL STEAMBOAT COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
PHŒNIX CONSTRUCTION COMPANY.
(No. 935.)

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 593–600.)

Error to state court — Federal question — decision on non-Federal ground.

1. A judgment of a state court that a steamboat company must answer for the damage to certain boring plants in the Hudson river, the result of collisions with its boats, which is based upon two grounds, viz., that there was sufficient Federal authority for the erection and maintenance of such boring plants, and that, even if such plants were unlawful obstructions, the collisions were caused by the exclusive negligence of the steamboat company, is not excluded from the appellate jurisdiction of the Federal Supreme Court on the theory that such judgment rests upon a non-Federal ground adequate to sustain it, since the determination of the issue of negligence necessarily involved a consideration of the nature of the obstructions, and the ascertainment whether, in and of themselves, they so interfered with or impeded the right to carry on interstate commerce by using the river as to make the mere presence of the obstructions the efficient and proximate cause of the collisions.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1465–1528, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Error to state court — affirmance on motion.

2. The judgment of a state court will be affirmed on motion by the Federal Supreme Court where the proposition upon which the contention as to jurisdiction to review such judgment must rest is entirely without foundation.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. g, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Collision — with unlawful obstruction — negligence.

3. The lack of sufficient Federal authority for the erection of certain boring plants in the Hudson river does not exempt a steamboat company from liability for the damages inflicted upon such structures in collisions with the boats of the steamboat company, caused solely by that company's negligence, and not contributed to in any way by the owner of the boring plants.

[Matters as to collision, see Collision, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[Nos. 933, 934, and 935.]

Submitted April 27, 1914. Decided May 11, 1914.

THREE WRITS OF ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of New York in and for the County of New York to review judgments entered pursuant to the mandate of the Court of Appeals, which affirmed judgments of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, which had in turn affirmed judgments of the Supreme Court in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover damages arising out of a collision. Affirmed on motion.

See same case below, in court of appeals, 210 N. Y. 113, 103 N. E. 891; in appellate division, 146 App. Div. 951, 131 N. Y. Supp. 1138.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. Parker Kirlin submitted the cause for plaintiff in error:

Where the issue raised by the question of Federal statute is controlling in the decision of the suit, as in this case, the Supreme Court will take jurisdiction of the case on a writ of error.

Murdock v. Memphis, 20 Wall. 590, 22 L. ed. 429.

Even if the court below attempted to base its decision upon the defendant's negligence, it could not properly make negli-

NOTE.—On the general subject of writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4 L. ed. U. S. 97; Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884; and Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

On what adjudications of state courts can be brought up for review in the Supreme Court of the United States by writ of error to those courts—see note to Apex Transp. Co. v. Garbade, 62 L.R.A. 513.

On how and when questions must be raised and decided in a state court in order to make a case for a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States—see note to Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. McGrew, 63 L.R.A. 33.

On the necessity of color of merit in Federal question to sustain writ of error to state court—see note to Offield v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 51 L. ed. U. S. 231.

As to rules for avoiding collisions, generally—see notes to St. John v. Paine, 13 L. ed. U. S. 537; Williamson v. Barrett, 14 L. ed. U. S. 68; The Abbotsford v. Johnson, 25 L. ed. U. S. 108; The E. A. Packer v. New Jersey Lighterage Co. 35 L. ed. U. S. 453; The Imperial & The S. G. Reed, 3 L.R.A. 234; and The Umbria, 41 L. ed. U. S. 1053.

Digitized by Google

gence the sole ground for a recovery under a correct construction of the statute.

Montgomery v. Portland, 190 U. S. 89, 47 L. ed. 965, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 735; Cummings v. Chicago, 188 U. S. 410, 47 L. ed. 525, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 472; Hart v. Albany, 9 Wend. 571, 24 Am. Dec. 165; Moore v. Pilot Comrs. 32 How. Pr. 184; Blanchard v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 60 N. Y. 517; Moore v. Jackson, 2 Abb. N. C. 211; Gold v. Carter, 9 Humph. 369, 49 Am. Dec. 712; Garey v. Ellis, 1 Cush. 306; Rathbun v. Payne, 19 Wend. 399; Foley v. McKeever, 56 App. Div. 517, 67 N. Y. Supp. 559; Haskell v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 208.

There is no question but that these obstructions to navigation in the Hudson river, erected by the Construction Company, were nuisances if they were not properly authorized.

North Shore Boom & Driving Co. v. Nicomen Boom Co. 212 U. S. 406, 53 L. ed. 574, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 355; People v. Vanderbilt, 26 N. Y. 287, 28 N. Y. 396, 84 Am. Dec. 351; People v. Horton, 64 N. Y. 610; Woodman v. Kilbourn Mfg. Co. 1 Abb. (U S.) 158, Fed. Cas. No. 17,978; Hart v. Albany, 9 Wend. 571, 24 Am. Dec. 165.

There can be no doubt that where a person claims a right under a Federal statute to carry on his business in a certain way, and this right is denied him by any court, the question whether or not he has been deprived of his right or immunity is one which this court is authorized to pass on.

Belden v. Chase, 150 U. S. 674, 37 L. ed. 1218, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 264; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Maryland, 21 Wall. 456, 22 L. ed. 678; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 613, 42 L. ed. 878, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 488.

Where it appears that some title, right, privilege, or immunity on which the recovery depends will be defeated by one construction of the Constitution or law of the United States, and sustained by the opposite construction, the case is one arising under the laws or Constitution of the United States.

Cooke v. Avery, 147 U. S. 375, 37 L. ed. 209, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340; Nevada Sierra Oil Co. v. Miller, 97 Fed. 690; Northern P. R. Co. v. Soderberg, 188 U. S. 526, 47 L. ed. 576, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 365.

The motion to affirm is premature, and should not be granted before the cases have been reviewed upon the writs of error.

Steele v. Culver, 211 U. S. 26, 53 L. ed. 74, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 9; Micas v. Williams, 104 U. S. 556, 26 L. ed. 842; Jenkins v. Banning, 23 How. 455, 16 L. ed. 580; Wehner v. Bauer, 160 Fed. 240.

Mr. E. Crosby Kindleberger submitted the cause for defendant in error:

Where a state court decides a case upon an independent ground not within the Federal objections taken, and the non-Federal ground is sufficient to maintain the judgment, the writ of error will be dismissed.

Eustis v. Bolles, 150 U. S. 361, 37 L. ed. 1111, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; California Powder Works v. Davis, 151 U. S. 389, 393, 38 L. ed. 206, 208, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Leathe v. Thomas, 207 U. S. 93, 98, 52 L. ed. 118, 120, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 212 U. S. 112, 116, 53 L. ed. 431, 433, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 227; Consolidated Turnp. Co. v. Norfolk & O. V. R. Co. 228 U. S. 596, 57 L. ed. 982, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; Adams v. Russell, 229 U. S. 353, 358, 359, 57 L. ed. 1224, 1226, 1227, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 846.

The Federal question must be the turning point of the case, and its decision necessary for the judgment sought to be reviewed.

De Saussure v. Gaillard, 127 U. S. 216, 234, 32 L. ed. 125, 132, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1053; California Powder Works v. Davis, 151 U. S. 389, 393, 38 L. ed. 206, 207, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Duvall, 225 U. S. 477, 487, 56 L. ed. 1171, 1176, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 790; First Nat. Bank v. Estherville, 215 U. S. 341, 346, 54 L. ed. 223, 227, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152.

The Federal question necessary to give this court jurisdiction must be substantial and real, and not devoid of merit or frivolous.

Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 147 U. S. 531, 37 L. ed. 267, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 353; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Brown, 187 U. S. 308, 311, 47 L. ed. 190, 192, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 123; Gring v. Ives, 222 U. S. 365, 56 L. ed. 235, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 167; Deming v. Carlisle Packing Co. 226 U. S. 102, 105, 57 L. ed. 140, 142, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 80; Consolidated Turnp. Co. v. Norfolk & O. V. R. Co. 228 U. S. 596, 57 L. ed. 982, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609.

Even conceding that the plaintiff's vessels and borings were improperly in the channel, the want of care in navigating defendant's tows required judgments for the plaintiff.

Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 429, 36 L. ed. 485, 493, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679, 12 Am. Neg. Cas. 659; Inland & Seaboard Coasting Co. v. Tolson, 139 U. S. 551, 35 L. ed. 270, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 653; Herr v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 98 C. C. A. 550, 174 Fed. 938; The Plymouth, 108 C. C. A. 217, 186 Fed. 108; Chunn v. City & Suburban R. Co. 207 U. S. 302, 309, 52 L. ed. 219, 222, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 63; Austin v. New Jersey S. B. Co. 43 N. Y. 75, 3 Am. Rep. 663; Silliman v. Lewis, 49 N.

Digitized by Google

Y. 379; Gring v. Ives, 222 U. S. 365, 56 L. ed. 235, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 167; The Edmund L. Levy, 108 Fed. 435, affirmed in 75 C. C. A. 468, 144 Fed. 666.

Mr. Chief Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

The cases are before us on a motion to dismiss or affirm, and the facts essential to its consideration are these:

The Phœnix Construction Company, defendant in error, brought three actions to recover damages alleged to have resulted from the negligence of the Cornell Steamboat Company, plaintiff in error, in permitting its tugs and canal boats on three separate occasions in the year 1908 to collide with certain scows and other property of the Construction Company on the Hudson river. The cases were tried by a referee, resulting in judgments against the [596] Steamboat Company, which were affirmed by the appellate division of the supreme court (146 App. Div. 951, 131 N. Y. Supp. 1138), and by the court of appeals (210 N. Y. 113, 103 N. E. 891). These writs of error were then prosecuted to the court below, to which the records were remitted by the court of appeals, upon the theory that Federal questions were involved and wrongly decided.

The Construction Company was a contractor for the Board of Water Supply of the City of New York, and in the year 1908 was engaged in making test borings in the bed of the Hudson river for the purpose of determining where it was best to tunnel under the river in the construction of the Catskill aqueduct. At the times of the collisions complained of boring operations were carried on simultaneously at four points on a line across the river near Storm King mountain, and it was with plants established at certain of these borings, consisting of pipes, drills, platforms, scows, and other property, that canal boats in tow of the Steamboat Company collided. The referee found in each case that the location of the borings was known to the masters of the tugs, who had many time passed between them with tows; that upon the nights of the accidents, lights which could be seen for more than a mile were displayed on the borings; that the collisions were the direct result of the negligence of the servants of the Steamboat Company in charge of its tugs, and that the Construction Company was in nowise negligent. In addition, considering the defense made by the Steamboat Company that it was not liable because the structures of the Construction Company were unlawful obstructions in the channel, erected and maintained without a lawful permit from the Secretary of War, and without authority of Congress, as required by §§ 9 and 10 of the act of March 3, 1899 (chap. 425, 30 Stat. at L. 1151; U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 3540, 3541), the findings of the referee were in substance these: In 1906, upon the application of the [597] Board of Water Supply of New York City, a permit was issued by the Secretary of War, authorizing borings to be made in the bed of the Hudson river at certain points near New Hamburg, and that subsequently such permit was modified by communications signed by members of the corps of engineers of the United States Army located in New York city, and having charge of the district in which the work was being executed, so as to permit the borings to be carried on at points near Storm King. Under these facts the referee stated that, in his opinion, it was extremely doubtful whether the Construction Company was lawfully authorized to establish its boring plants in the river, but held that even although the permits did not constitute lawful authority and the boring plants were unlawful obstructions in the river, the Steamboat Company was not, because of that circumstance, relieved of its duty to exercise ordinary care, and his decision in each case was based solely upon the fact that the collisions were caused by the exclusive negligence of the steamboat Company. In affirming the judgments the appellate division filed no opinion, although it appears that two of the justices concurred "solely on the ground that authority was given by the Secretary of War to make the borings and anchor the barges in the river," from which it is to be inferred that a majority of the court were of opinion that the judgments were amply sustained by the reasoning of the referee. The court of appeals, however, while stating that, as the actions were for common-law negligence, the ground of negligence stated by the referee was adequate to sustain the judgments, also considered the contention based upon the statute, and additionally placed the affirmance upon the conclusion that the facts found by the referee, which were concluded by the unanimous affirmance by the appellate division, were sufficient to establish authority given by the Secretary of War for the operations carried on by the Construction Company, and that the [598] contention of the Steamboat Company that action by Congress was essential to authorize the Construction Company to do the work was without foundation.

The assignments of error here insisted upon as involving a Federal question are directed to the conclusions of the court of appeals last stated.

Clearly, the judgment of the court of appeals which is under review rests upon two propositions: (1) The sufficiency of the authority from a Federal point of view under which the Phœnix Construction Company was carrying on its work in the bed of the river, and in the execution of which work it had anchored in the river its barges and other appliances incidental to the boring operations in which it was engaged. (2) The absence of all negligence on the part of the Construction Company, resulting from the place where its appliances were anchored in the stream, or from any other cause, and the happening of the accident solely because of negligence on the part of the Steamboat Company. It is elementary that where the judgment of a state court which is under review by this court rests upon two or more grounds, one or more of which are Federal and others of which are not Federal, because resting solely upon state grounds independent of Federal rights, and which state grounds are therefore completely adequate to sustain the judgment under consideration, no jurisdiction obtains to review. This doctrine, it is insisted, is here applicable for the following reason: Because, conceding that the first proposition, that is, the rightfulness of the acts of the company in placing its appliances in the stream, involves Federal questions which are reviewable, the second proposition upon which the court based its decision, that is, the happening of the accident solely as the result of the negligent conduct of the Steamboat Company, is an independent state ground, broad enough to sustain the judgment without the necessity of considering the Federal question involved in the first proposition.

Digitized by Google

[599] But the mistake lies in the contention that the finding that there was no negligence on the part of the Construction Company and that the negligence of the Steamboat Company was the sole cause of the damage suffered involved purely questions of state cognizance, involving no Federal considerations whatever. We say this is the error because the determination of the issue of negligence upon the hypothesis that there was no Federal authority given to place the obstructions in the river necessarily involves a consideration of the nature of the obstructions and the ascertainment of whether, in and of themselves, they so interfered with or impeded the right to navigate the river, that is, to carry on interstate commerce by using the river, as to cause the mere presence of the obstructions to constitute negligence per se; that is, to render the conclusion necessary that their mere presence was the efficient and proximate cause of the accident complained of. Because the elements involved in the decision of this Federal question are intermingled with the elements necessary to be considered to determine whether there was negligence irrespective of the Federal right affords no reason for not considering and disposing of the issue which the case presents from the Federal aspect, or to treat it as nonexisting. It is indeed true that the fact of negligence, in and of itself, abstractly considered, may be a state question, concerning which we would accept, and, indeed, it may be conceded, would be bound by, the conclusion of the state court. But when negligence involves and concerns a subject of Federal jurisdiction which it is our duty to decide, to the extent necessary to enable us to discharge that duty, we must consider and review the subject independent of the action of the state court. Southern P. Co. v. Schuyler, 227 U. S. 601, 612, 57 L. ed. 662, 669, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 901, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277.

The motion to dismiss being thus adversely disposed of, it remains to consider the motion to affirm, which we think should be granted because of the entire want of [600] foundation, that is, in substance, the frivolousness, of the proposition upon which the contention as to jurisdiction to review must rest, and we have reached this conclusion for the following reasons: (a) because, under the circumstances disclosed by the record, we are of the opinion that it is manifest that whether the ingredients of negligence be considered from the Federal point of view or from the point of view of the general law, it clearly results that the injury which the Construction Company suffered was purely and exclusively, as held by all the courts below, the result of the negligence of the Steamboat Company, unaffected in a legal sense by the act of the Construction Company in placing its works in the stream at the places and under the circumstances shown. (b) Because, reaching this conclusion, we are of the opinion that the question of the sufficiency or insufficiency of the Federal authority by which the appliances of the Construction Company were placed in the river becomes wholly negligible and need not be considered, because, even assuming the want of authority, such absence of authority conferred upon the Steamboat Company no right to negligently injure the property of the Construction Company. In other words, we are of the opinion that, conceding that the appliances and boats of the Construction Company were in the river at the points stated without authority, that fact did not endow the Steamboat Company with a license to become a wrongdoer free from responsibility, and did not exempt it, therefore, from liability for the consequences of a wrong inflicted solely by its own negligence, not contributed to in any way by the Construction Company.

Affirmed.

Digitized by Google

[601] DENVER & RIO GRANDE RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

ARIZONA & COLORADO RAILROAD COMPANY OF NEW MEXICO.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 601–604.)

Appeal — from territorial supreme court — following decision below — best and secondary evidence.

1. The admission of the oral testimony of the chief engineer of a railway company to prove the adoption by the board of directors of the line of the proposed railway will not require the reversal of a decree of the territorial supreme court, affirming the decree, where, notwithstanding N. M. Comp. Laws 1897, § 3832, which requires the directors to keep a complete record of all proceedings in a special book, no record of such adoption was made.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VIII. m; Courts, VII. d; Evidence, III. b; in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Appeal — from territorial supreme court — following decision below — statutory construction.

2. A decision of the territorial supreme court that a railway company is entitled to protection against interference with its right of way from the time when the final location of its line is complete, notwithstanding delay in filing a map of such location, if such map is filed within the reasonable time allowed by N. M. Comp. Laws 1897, § 3874, will not be reversed by the Federal Supreme Court, although, under § 3850, a petition for condemnation must set forth that the company has surveyed the line of its proposed road and made a map thereof, and that it has located its road according to such survey.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VIII. m; Courts, VII. d, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Laches — excuses for delay.

3. The delay of a railway company in building its line is not a defense to a suit by it against another railway company which, with full knowledge, has threatened and intended to take and occupy, and has crossed and recrossed the former company's location at many points and different grades, making it impracticable for it to proceed,—especially where, in the location and acquisition of its line, the former company acted with due diligence and in good faith, and had expended large sums in the location and securing the right of way before bringing suit.

[For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, I. b, 3, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Equity — jurisdiction — remedy at law — irreparable damage.

4. A railway company which has located the best line between its terminals is entitled to resort to a court of equity for relief against the acts of another railway company which, with full knowledge, has threatened and intended to take and occupy, and has crossed and recrossed such location at many points and different grades, making it impracticable for the former railway company to proceed with the construction of its line.

[For other cases, see Equity, I. c; I. d, 1, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 188.]

Argued April 22, 1914. Decided May 11, 1914.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the Territory of New Mexico to review a decree which affirmed on a second appeal a decree of the District Court for the County of Bernalillo, in that territory, enjoining the entrance upon and interference with a railway company's right of way. Affirmed.

See same case below, on first appeal, 13 N. M. 345, 84 Pac. 1018; on second appeal, 16 N. M. 281, 117 Pac. 730.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. N. Clark argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Joel F. Vaile and R. G. Lucas, filed a brief for appellant:

Oral evidence of the adoption of the line by the directors of the railway company should have been stricken out. It should have been discarded by the court, and appellee's claim with it.

Mandel v. Swan Land & Cattle Co. 154 Ill. 177, 27 L.R.A. 313, 45 Am. St. Rep. 124, 40 N. E. 462; Corcoran v. Sonora Min. & Mill. Co. 8 Idaho, 651, 71 Pac. 127; Methodist Chapel Corp. v. Herrick, 25 Me. 354; Haven v. New Hampshire Asylum, 13 N. H. 532, 38 Am. Dec. 512; Union Gold Min. Co. v. Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank, 2 Colo. 565; Dennis v. Joslin Mfg. Co. 19 R. I. 666, 36 Atl. 129; Mengis v. Fifth Ave. R. Co. 81 Hun, 480, 30 N. Y. Supp. 999; Central Electric Co. v. Sprague Electric Co. 57 C. C. A. 197, 120 Fed. 925; Ramsdell v. National Rivet & Novelty Co. 104 Fed. 16; Beeler v. Highland University Co. 8 Kan. App. 89, 54 Pac. 295; Guadalupe & S. A. R. Stock Asso. v. West, 76 Tex. 461, 13 S. W. 307; Nixon v. Goodwin, 3 Cal. App. 358, 85 Pac. 169; Tobin v. Roaring Creek & C. R. Co. 86 Fed. 1020; Swisher v. Fidelity & D. Co. 164 Ill. App. 243; Soldiers' Orphans' Home v. Shaffer, 63 Ill. 243; Miller v. Johnston, 71 Ark. 174, 72 S. W. 371; Stevens v. Eden Meeting-House Soc. 12 Vt. 688; Hurd v. Hotchkiss, 72 Conn. 472, NOTE.—As to review by the United States Supreme Court of territorial decisions—see note to Miners' Bank v. Iowa, 13 L. ed. U. S. 867.

As to laches as a defense—see notes to Middletown v. Newport Hospital, 1 L.R.A. 191; Calhoun v. Delhi & M. R. Co. 8 L.R.A. 248; Coffey v. Emigh, 10 L.R.A. 125; Pratt v. Carroll, 3 L. ed. U. S. 627; Hammond v. Hopkins, 36 L. ed. U. S. 135; and Felix v. Patrick, 36 L. ed. U. S. 720.

Digitized by Google

45 Atl. 11; Bowick v. Miller, 21 Or. 25, 26 Pac. 861; Coffin v. Collins, 17 Me. 440; Skowhegan Bank v. Cutler, 49 Me. 315; Supreme Lodge, K. P. v. Robbins, 70 Ark, 364, 67 S. W. 758; Pittsburgh & C. R. Co. v. Clarke, 29 Pa. 146; 4 Thomp. Corp. § 5175; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7735; Hill v. Cleveland, 4 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 562; 3 Enc. Ev. 650.

There was no appropriation of the land till appellee's location map was filed, which was not done until after this suit was started.

2 Lewis, Em. Dom. 3d. ed. § 503, p. 904; Sioux City & I. F. Town Lot & Land Co. v. Griffey, 143 U. S. 32, 39, 36 L. ed. 64, 65, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 362; Tarpey v. Madsen, 178 U. S. 215, 228, 229, 44 L. ed. 1042, 1048, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 849; White River R. Co. v. Batesville & W. Teleph. Co. 81 Ark. 195, 98 S. W. 721; Biles v. Tacoma, O. & G. H. R. Co. 5 Wash. 509, 32 Pac. 211; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Indianapolis & L. R. Co. 168 Ind. 360, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 197, 81 N. E. 65.

Whatever rights appellee may have had originally, it has lost by its laches and inability to construct its line.

Milwaukee Light, Heat & Traction Co. v. Milwaukee Northern R. Co. 132 Wis. 313, 112 N. W. 663; 2 Lewis, Em. Dom. 3d ed. § 503, p. 908; Columbia Valley R. Co. v. Portland & S. R. Co. 89 C. C. A. 361, 162 Fed. 603; Goldsboro Lumber Co. v. Hines Bros. Lumber Co. 126 N. C. 254, 35 S. E. 458; Fox v. Pierce, 50 Mich. 500, 15 N. W. 880; New York & A. R. Co. v. New York, W. S. & B. R. Co. 11 Abb. N. C. 386; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Peach Orchard & G. R. Co. 42 Ark. 249; Colorado Eastern R. Co. v. Union P. R. Co. 41 Fed. 293; West Virginia Short Line R. Co. v. Belington & N. R. Co. 56 W. Va. 360, 49 S. E. 460; New Haven Water Co. v. Wallingford, 72 Conn. 293, 44 Atl. 235.

The facts of this controversy do not present a case of irreparable injury cognizable in a court of equity. Appellee had an adequate remedy at law.

Schurmeier v. St. Paul & P. R. Co. 8 Minn. 113, Gil. 88, 83 Am. Dec. 770; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Young, 3 Md. 480; 1 High, Inj. 4th ed. §§ 28, 30, 699; Drake v. Hudson River R. Co. 7 Barb. 508; Johnston v. Corson Gold Min. Co. 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1078, 84 C. C. A. 593, 157 Fed. 145; Mobile & G. R. Co. v. Alabama Midland R. Co. 87 Ala. 520, 6 So. 407; East St. Louis Connecting R. Co. v. East St. Louis Union R. Co. 108 Ill. 265; Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. v. New York & H. R. Co. 54 Barb. 389; Highland Ave. & Belt R. Co. v. Birmingham Union R. Co. 93 Ala. 508, 9 So. 568; Raleigh & W. R. Co. v. Glendon & Gulf Min. & Mfg. Co. 112 N. C. 661, 17 S. E. 77; Rainey v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 15 Fed. 770.

If the court did not see fit to leave appellee to its action at law, good conscience at least required that it should promote the ends of justice by assessing appellee's damages, and awarding the same in lieu of the decree entered.

New York v. Pine, 185 U. S. 93, 46 L. ed. 820, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 592; St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 55 C. C. A. 263, 118 Fed. 497; Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. McDonald, 58 Or. 228, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 117, 112 Pac. 413; Knoth v. Manhattan R. Co. 187 N. Y. 243, 79 N. E. 1015; Paterson v. East Jersey Water Co. 74 N. J. Eq. 49, 70 Atl. 472; Mitchell v. White Plains, 91 Hun, 189, 36 N. Y. Supp. 204; 2 Lewis, Em. Dom. 3d ed. pp. 1614, 1615; Campbell v. Point Pleasant & O. River R. Co. 23 W. Va. 448; Wellington & P. R. Co. v. Cashie & C. R. & Lumber Co. 116 N. C. 924, 20 S. E. 964; Kansas & A. Valley R. Co. v. Le Flore, 1 C. C. A. 192, 4 U. S. App. 93, 49 Fed. 119; Kansas & A. Valley R. Co. v. Payne, 1 C. C. A. 183, 4 U. S. App. 77, 49 Fed. 114; Coe v. New Jersey Midland R. Co. 28 N. J. Eq. 27; Fouche v. Rome Street R. Co. 84 Ga. 233, 10 S. E. 726; Menge v. Morris & E. R. Co. 73 N. J. Eq. 177, 67 Atl. 1028; Lane v. Michigan Traction Co. 135 Mich. 70, 97 N. W. 354; Northern P. R. Co. v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 2 McCrary, 260, 4 Fed. 688; D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co. 147 U. S. 248, 37 L. ed. 155, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 299; Ivey v. Georgia Southern & F. R. Co. 84 Ga. 536, 11 S. E. 128.

Considerations of the relative convenience and inconvenience resulting from its decree, the contrast of the benefits and hardships entailed thereby, the balance of convenience, operate with persuasive and compelling force on the conscience of the court. Those considerations suggest the impropriety of the decree appealed from.

Western R. Co. v. Alabama Grand Trunk R. Co. 96 Ala. 272, 17 L.R.A. 474, 11 So. 483.

Appellant's business ought not to be arrested when it could be avoided consistently with all reasonable protection to appellee.

Lewis v. John L. Roper Lumber Co. 99 N. C. 11, 5 S. E. 19.

Appellee had an adequate remedy under the condemnation statutes of New Mexico, and that remedy was exclusive.

Morris & E. R. Co. v. Blair, 9 N. J. Eq. 635; 2 Elliott, Railroads, 2d ed. § 927; New York & A. R. Co. v. New York, W. S. & B. R. Co. 11 Abb. N. C. 386; 1 High, Inj. 4th ed. § 29.

Digitized by Google

There was no ground of equitable interference to avoid a mulitiplicity of suits.

Bispham, Eq. 6th ed. §§ 415–417; 1 High, Inj. 3d ed. §§ 62–698; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. 2d ed. §§ 254–272; Eureka & K. River R. Co. v. California & N. R. Co. 48 C. C. A. 517, 109 Fed. 509; Columbia Valley R. Co. v. Portland & S. R. Co. 89 C. C. A. 361, 162 Fed. 603; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 116 Iowa, 681, 88 N. W. 1082.

Appellee had an adequate remedy at law by ejectment.

Columbia Valley R. Co. v. Portland & S. R. Co. 162 Fed. 609, affirmed in 89 C. C. A. 361, 162 Fed. 603; Kanawha, G. J. & E. R. Co. v. Glen Jean, L. L. & D. W. R. Co. 45 W. Va. 125, 30 S. E. 86; Highland Ave. & Belt R. Co. v. Birmingham Union R. Co. 93 Ala. 505, 9 So. 568; Morris & E. R. Co. v. Blair, 9 N. J. Eq. 635; Thompson v. Central Ohio R. Co. 6 Wall. 134, 18 L. ed. 765; Smyth v. New Orleans Canal & Bkg. Co. 141 U. S. 656, 35 L. ed. 891, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113; Hipp v. Babin, 19 How. 271, 15 L. ed. 633; North Shore R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. 193 Pa. 641, 44 Atl. 1083; Washington & I. R. Co. v. Coeur D'Alene R. & Nav. Co. 2 Idaho, 580, 21 Pac. 562; Toledo, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. St. Louis & O. River R. Co. 208 Ill. 623, 70 N. E. 715; Detroit & B. Pl. Road Co. v. Oakland R. Co. 131 Mich. 663, 92 N. W. 346; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Young, 3 Md. 480; 1 High, Inj. 4th ed. § 699; Anniston & C. R. Co. v. Jacksonville, G. & A. R. Co. 82 Ala. 297, 2 So. 710; Tennessee & C. R. Co. v. East Alabama R. Co. 75 Ala. 516, 51 Am. Rep. 475; Mobile & G. R. Co. v. Alabama Midland R. Co. 87 Ala. 520, 6 So. 407; Johnston v. Corson Gold Min. Co. 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1078, 84 C. C. A. 593, 157 Fed. 145; Booher v. Browning, 169 Pa. 18, 32 Atl. 85; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. 2d ed. § 252, pp. 330, 331; High, Inj. 3d ed. §§ 8, 698, 701, 715, pp. 8, 9, 537, 541, 550; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Deepwater R. Co. 57 W. Va. 641, 50 S. E. 890; People v. Adirondack R. Co. 160 N. Y. 247, 54 N. E. 689; St. Louis, K. C. & C. R. Co. v. Dewees, 23 Fed. 691; Boise Artesian Hot & Cold Water Co. v. Boise City, 213 U. S. 276, 53 L. ed. 796, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426; Yellow Pine Export Co. v. Sutherland-Innis Co. 141 Ala. 664, 37 So. 922; Hayward v. Andrews, 106 U. S. 672, 675, 676, 27 L. ed. 271, 272, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 544.

Mr. T. B. Catron argued the cause, and, with Mr. B. W. Ritter, filed a brief for appellee:

Where a statute provides that transactions of a board of directors should be made a matter of record in their minutes, still, if omitted, they can be proven by evidence aliunde.

Bank of United States v. Dandridge, 12 Wheat. 69, 6 L. ed. 554; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 300; Bridgford v. Tuscumbia, 4 Woods, 611, 16 Fed. 912; Mahoney Min. Co. v. Anglo-Californian Bank, 104 U. S. 192, 26 L. ed. 707; Allis v. Jones, 45 Fed. 149; Eureka Clothes Wringing Mach. Co. v. Bailey Washing & Wringing Mach. Co. 11 Wall. 488, 20 L. ed. 209; Whart. Ev. § 663; Morawetz, Corp. §§ 28, 31, 633–635; Gordon v. San Diego, 108 Cal. 264, 41 Pac. 302; Zalesky v. Iowa State Ins. Co. 102 Iowa, 514, 70 N. W. 187, 71 N. W. 433; Beach, Priv. Corp. § 295; Troy v. Atchison & N. R. Co. 11 Kan. 519; Pickett v. Abney, 84 Tex. 647, 19 S. W. 859; Hutchinson v. Pratt, 11 Vt. 402; United States v. Fillebrown, 7 Pet. 28, 8 L. ed. 596; Kelly v. Board of Public Works, 75 Va. 270; Higgins v. Reed, 74 Am. Dec. 309, note; Athearn v. Independent Dist. 33 Iowa, 105; Burgess v. Pue, 2 Gill, 254; Bigelow v. Perth Amboy, 25 N. J. L. 301; Robson v. C. E. Fenniman Co. 83 N. J. L. 453, 85 Atl. 356; Hughes Mfg. & Lumber Co. v. Wilcox, 13 Cal. App. 22, 108 Pac. 871; Re Assignment of Bank of West Superior, 109 Wis. 672, 85 N. W. 501; Caudell v. Athens Sav. Bank, 140 Ga. 713, 79 S. E. 776; Flakne v. Minnesota Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co. 105 Minn. 479, 117 N. W. 785; Whitlock v. Alexander, 160 N. C. 465, 76 S. E. 538; Brown v. Webster, 115 Iowa, 511, 88 N. W. 1070.

The requirements of the statute of New Mexico that the proceedings of a corporation should be made of record is directory, and not mandatory.

Bladen v. Philadelphia, 60 Pa. 466; Re Norwegian Street, 81 Pa. 349; Woolridge v. McKenna, 8 Fed. 662; Hurford v. Omaha, 4 Neb. 350; Eustis v. Kidder, 26 Me. 100; Hayes v. Hanson, 12 N. H. 290; Beach v. Stouffer, 84 Mo. App. 398; Davis Mill Co. v. Bennett, 39 Mo. App. 460; United States v. Fillebrown, 7 Pet. 28, 8 L. ed. 596; Bank of United States v. Dandridge, 12 Wheat. 69, 81, 6 L. ed. 554, 558; Ratcliff v. Teters, 27 Ohio St. 80; Mandel v. Swan Land & Cattle Co. 154 Ill. 177, 27 L.R.A. 313, 45 Am. St. Rep. 124, 40 N. E. 462.

Appellee appropriated the line when the final location was made, and the same was ratified by the directors.

Wheeling Bridge & Terminal R. Co. v. Camden Consol. Oil Co. 35 W. Va. 209, 13 S. E. 369.

Appellee was not guilty of any laches, and did not lose any right it had by reason of laches or inability to construct its line.

Digitized by Google

Pittsburgh, S. & W. R. Co. v. Fiske, 60 C. C. A. 621, 123 Fed. 760.

Appellee had the right to the possession of its located and adopted line, and as much actual possession thereof as was possible after location, survey, and adoption thereof, when this action commenced.

31 Cyc. 924, 927; Wainman v. Hampton, 110 N. Y. 433, 18 N. E. 234; Heinze v. Butte & B. Consol. Min. Co. 61 C. C. A. 63, 126 Fed. 1; Sullivan v. Sullivan, 66 N. Y. 37; Fleming v. Maddox, 30 Iowa, 241; 1 Rorer, Railroads, 315; Troy & B. R. Co. v. Potter, 42 Vt. 272, 1 Am. Rep. 325.

In a case where there is a practical destruction of the rights of one person by another, and a threatened continuance of the acts which, if continued, would cause irreparable injury, injunction will lie.

1 High, Inj. § 697; Thorn v. Sweeney, 12 Nev. 251, 7 Mor. Min. Rep. 564; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Judkins, 75 Ala. 428; McGregor v. Silver King Min. Co. 14 Utah, 47, 60 Am. St. Rep. 883, 45 Pac. 1091; Myers v. Hawkins, 67 Ark. 413, 56 S. W. 640; Collins v. Sutton, 94 Va. 127, 26 S. E. 415; Moore v. Halliday, 43 Or. 243, 99 Am. St. Rep. 724, 72 Pac. 801; Clark v. Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. 44 Ind. 248; Poughkeepsie Gas Co. v. Citizens' Gas Co. 89 N. Y. 493; 22 Cyc. 428–b.

Where the threatened injury would be irreparable, an injunction would lie at the instance of complainant out of possession.

22 Cyc. 827, 828; Kaiser v. Dalto, 140 Cal. 167, 73 Pac. 828; Hicks v. Michael, 15 Cal. 107; Gaines v. Leslie, 1 Ind. Terr. 546, 37 S. W. 947; Hillman v. Hurley, 82 Ky. 626; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Young, 3 Md. 480; Heman v. Wade, 74 Mo. App. 339; New Jersey Zinc & Iron Co. v. Trotter, 38 N. J. Eq. 3; Shubrick v. Guerard, 2 Desauss, Eq. 616; Leroy v. Wright, 4 Sawy. 530, Fed. Cas. No. 8,273; 22 Cyc. 825; Florida, A. & G. C. R. Co. v. Pensacola & G. R. Co. 10 Fla. 145; Northern C. R. Co. v. Harrisburg & M. Electric R. Co. 177 Pa. 142, 34 L.R.A. 572, 35 Atl. 624.

The trespass committed by appellant cannot deprive appellee of its rights, or equity of jurisdiction.

Simmons Creek Coal Co. v. Doran, 142 U. S. 417, 449, 35 L. ed. 1063, 1075, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 239.

Equity cannot lose jurisdiction on the ground that the value of property which will be destroyed can be ascertained, or that another right-of-way may be found, the cost of which may be determined. Appellee had the right to the particular property selected, which has been decided by the court to be the best location which could be obtained for appellee's purposes. It had a special value and equity will protect it.

Walker v. Emerson, 89 Cal. 456, 26 Pac. 968; Lemmon v. Guthrie Center, 113 Iowa, 36, 86 Am. St. Rep. 361, 84 N. W. 986; Camp v. Dixon, 112 Ga. 872, 52 L.R.A. 755, 38 S. E. 71; Eidemiller v. Wyandotte, 2 Dill. 376, Fed. Cas. No. 4,313; Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 130 U. S. 514, 32 L. ed. 1008, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Cincinnati, W. & M. R. Co. 116 Ind. 578, 19 N. E. 440.

[602] Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill brought by the appellee, a corporation of New Mexico, to restrain the appellant from entering upon and interfering in various ways with its right of way. After a trial the plaintiff (appellee) got a decree, conditioned, as to the portions of the line then occupied by the defendant in the actual operation of its railway, upon the plaintiff's constructing at least 21 miles of railroad, etc., and limited as a whole to five years from the date of the decree. This was affirmed by the supreme court of the territory. 16 N. M. 281, 117 Pac. 730. See 13 N. M. 345, 84 Pac. 1018. There are fifty-eight assignments of error, but the propositions argued fall into narrower compass. They are, that the plaintiff never adopted the line it claims; that there was no appropriation of the land until the plaintiff's location map was filed, after the beginning of this suit; that the plaintiff has lost whatever rights it had by laches and inability to construct its line; that there is no irreparable injury or other ground for equitable relief; and that the plaintiff had adequate remedies under the condemnation statutes and by ejectment. So far as they need discussion we will take these up in turn.

It is found that the plaintiff adopted the line in question; but it is argued that this finding is shown to be wrong as matter of law by reason of specific facts set forth in findings of the supreme court made, after the delivery of its opinion, in addition to those adopted from the court below. These are that certain small portions of the line between the northern boundary of the state and the town of Farmington are not covered by any order of adoption on the part of the directors shown by the records, and that finding that those portions were adopted is based on the oral testimony of the plaintiff's chief engineer. (We do not stop to notice a slight contradiction [603] in form between different parts of the findings, as the meaning is perfectly clear.) The argument is that adoption by the directors is necessary, which is admitted, and that, as the

Digitized by Google

Compiled Laws of 1897, § 3832, require the directors to keep a complete record of all proceedings in a special book, such record is the only admissible evidence of the fact. But this is a matter of local practice and the construction of a local statute, as to which we should be slow to disturb the decision of the local court. Nadal v. May, April 20 [233 U. S. 447, ante, 1040, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 611]. The statute does not in terms purport to make the validity of the directors' action dependent upon being recorded. No doubt the record, when made, would be the best evidence, but it being found that no record was made, the admission of secondary evidence is no ground for reversing the decree. Bank of United States v. Dandridge, 12 Wheat. 64, 69, 6 L. ed. 552, 554. In the opinion of the court this question is avoided, but the finding subsequently added, coupled with the finding that the line was adopted, imports the ruling of law that we have supposed.

The next objection is that the maps of the disputed portion of the road were not filed, as required by § 3874, until the day after this suit was begun, and attention is called to § 3850, which requires a petition for condemnation to set forth that the company has surveyed the line of its proposed road and made a map thereof, and that it has located its road according to such survey. But by § 3874, the company is not required to record its map until "within a reasonable time its road shall be finally located;" which it is found to have done, and again, we see no sufficient reason for reversing the decision of the local court that a company is entitled to protection as soon as its final location is complete. Wheeling, Bridge & Terminal R. Co. v. Camden Consol. Oil Co. 35 W. Va. 205, 209, 13 S. E. 369.

Next it is said that the plaintiff has been guilty of laches. But it is found that the defendant, with full knowledge, [604] threatened and intended to take and occupy and has crossed and recrossed the plaintiff's location at many points and different grades, with circumstances not necessary to be detailed, and thus has made it impracticable for the plaintiff to proceed. It is found also that in the location and acquisition of its line the plaintiff proceeded with due diligence and in good faith, and that it had expended more than $100,000 in the location and securing rights of way before the beginning of this suit. The defendant has gone ahead since the suit was begun, but, of course, has acquired no new rights by doing so. The objections to equitable jurisdiction do not need separate discussion. The line is found to be the best line between the points, and the plaintiff is entitled to it. It neither is to be forced into a compulsory sale, nor to be remitted to legal or statutory remedies that rightly are thought to be inadequate by the local court.

Decree affirmed.

SAMUEL GOMPERS, John Mitchell, and Frank Morrison, Plffs. in Err., Appts., and Petitioners,

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 604–613.)

Appeal — mode of review — appeal or error.

1. A judgment of fine or imprisonment in proceedings for an alleged criminal contempt of an injunction is not reviewable by appeal.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, II. b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Error to District of Columbia court of appeals — criminal contempt.

2. A writ of error will not lie from the Federal Supreme Court to the District of Columbia court of appeals to review a judgment rendered on an appeal from the supreme court of the District in proceedings to punish the alleged criminal contempt of an injunction.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1075–1081, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Limitation of actions — when statute begins to run — criminal contempt.

3. The running of the three years' limitation prescribed by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1044, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 725, for criminal prosecutions against proceedings to punish criminal contempts of a decree enjoining the continuance of a boycott, was not postponed until such boycott was abandoned, but such statute began to run as respects each specific act charged as a substantive offense in disobedience of the injunction upon the date of the commission of such act.

[For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, II., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Limitation of actions — criminal contempt.

4. Criminal contempts are none the less crimes within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1044, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 725, prescribing a three years' limitation for

---

NOTE.—On distinction between appeal and writ of error—see note to Miners' Bank v. Iowa, 13 L. ed. U. S. 867.

On the appellate jurisdiction of the Federal Supreme Court over the District of Columbia courts—see note to United States ex rel. Taylor v. Taft, 51 L. ed. U. S. 269.

As to whether proceeding for contempt for violation of injunction is civil or criminal—see notes to Vilter Mfg. Co. v. Humphrey, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 591; Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co. 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 874; and Rothschild & Co. v. Steger & Sons Piano Mfg. Co. 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 793.

Digitized by Google

criminal prosecutions, because the constitutional right of trial by jury in criminal cases does not extend to such contempts.

[For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, III. 1, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Limitation of actions — criminal contempt.

5. Proceedings to punish acts not committed in the presence of the court as criminal contempts of an injunction previously granted are none the less governed by the three years' limitation of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1044, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 725, which provides that "no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense not capital . . . unless the indictment is found or the information is instituted within three years next after such offense shall have been committed," because such contempt proceedings may not be instituted by an indictment or information.

[For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, III. 1, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Limitation of actions — criminal contempt.

6. The Federal Supreme Court would prescribe by analogy a three years' limitation for proceedings to punish past acts not committed in the presence of the court as criminal contempts of an injunction previously granted if the case were not covered by the provisions of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1044, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 725, that "no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense not capital . . . unless the indictment is found or the information is instituted within three years next after such offense shall have been committed."

[For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, III. 1, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[Nos. 640 and 574.]

Argued January 7 and 8, 1914. Reargued April 20 and 21, 1914. Decided May 11, 1914.

IN ERROR to, APPEAL from, and ON PETITION for Certiorari to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia to review a judgment which, reversing a judgment of the Supreme Court of that District, directed the entry of a judgment of fine or imprisonment in proceedings for the punishment of criminal contempts. Appeal and writ of error dismissed. Judgment reversed on writ of certiorari.

See same case below, 40 App. D. C. 293.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Alton B. Parker and Jackson H. Ralston argued the cause, and, with Mr. William E. Richardson, filed a brief for Gompers et al.:

From its beginnings, contempt of court has been a criminal offense, for many years triable only by jury.

3 Transactions of the Royal Historical Society (N. S.) 1886; Rex v. Almon, 24 Law Quarterly Rev. 184, 266.

English and American courts unite at this day in regarding it as a crime, although usually tried by the court in a summary manner.

Re Pollard, 5 Moore, P. C. C. N. S. 111, L. R. 2 P. C. 106; Oswald, Contempt, 3d ed. p. 6; 7 Laws of England (Halsbury) titles "Contempt" 280, "Crim. Law & Proc." 998; Ex parte Kearney, 7 Wheat. 38, 43, 5 L. ed. 391, 392; Williamson's Case, 26 Pa. 18, 67 Am. Dec. 374; Re Shull, 221 Mo. 623, 133 Am. St. Rep. 496, 121 S. W. 10; New Orleans v. New York Mail S. S. Co. 20 Wall. 387, 22 L. ed. 354; Castner v. Pocahontas Collieries Co. 117 Fed. 184; Re Ellerbe, 4 McCrary, 449, 13 Fed. 530; S. Anargyros v. Anargyros & Co. 191 Fed. 208; United States v. Jacobi, 1 Flipp. 108, Fed. Cas. No. 15,460; Re Mullee, 7 Blatchf. 23, Fed. Cas. No. 9,911; Bullock Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. 63 C. C. A. 607, 129 Fed. 105; Lester v. People, 150 Ill. 424, 41 Am. St. Rep. 375, 23 N. E. 387, 37 N. E. 1004; Flathers v. State, 7 Okla. Crim. Rep. 668, 125 Pac. 902.

Courts have granted or refused, as the case may have been, writs of error, because the offense was criminal.

Pierce v. United States, 37 App. D. C. 582.

Contempt of court may be pardoned as a crime.

3 Ops. Atty. Gen. 622; 4 Ops. Atty. Gen. 458; 5 Ops. Atty. Gen. 579; 19 Ops. Atty. Gen. 476; Sharp v. State, 102 Tenn. 9, 43 L.R.A. 788, 73 Am. St. Rep. 851, 49 S. W. 752; State ex rel. Van Orden v. Sauvinet, 24 La. Ann. 119, 13 Am. Rep. 115; Ex parte Hickey, 4 Smedes & M. 751.

The want of a trial by jury does not, because of the constitutional requirement, affect the character of contempt of court as a crime.

United States v. Jacobi, 1 Flipp. 108, Fed. Cas. No. 15,460; Callan v. Wilson, 127 U. S. 540, 32 L. ed. 223, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1301; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 974; Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U. S. 276, 41 L. ed. 715, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 326.

No court at all of which we are aware, except it may have been the Court of Star Chamber in its worst days, has ever decided that, in indirect contempts, the accused was not entitled to be informed of the nature of the accusation against him (and this under oath), and to confront witnesses.

Even if not criminal, contempt is an offense, and has in this case been prosecuted by an information.

Ex parte Thomas, 10 Mo. App. 24; 2 Hawk. P. C.; Stewart v. State, 140 Ind. 7, 39 N. E. 508; Snyder v. State, 151 Ind. 563, 52 N. E. 152; Re Wood, 82 Mich. 75, 45 N. W. 1113; Herdman v. State, 54 Neb. 626, 74 N. W. 1097, 11 Am. Crim. Rep. 298; Hutton

Digitized by Google

v. Superior Ct. 147 Cal. 156, 81 Pac. 409; Re Blush, 5 Kan. App. 879, 48 Pac. 147; Otis v. Superior Ct. 148 Cal. 129, 82 Pac. 853; Post v. State, 7 Ohio C. D. 257; Hurley v. Com. 188 Mass. 443, 74 N. E. 677, 3 Ann. Cas. 757; Maloney v. Traverse, 87 Iowa, 306, 54 N. W. 155; People v. Wilson, 64 Ill. 195, 16 Am. Rep. 528, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 107; Worland v. State, 82 Ind. 49; State v. Henthorn, 46 Kan. 613, 26 Pac. 937; Cartwright's Case, 114 Mass. 230.

In the supreme court of the District of Columbia, as well as in other inferior courts of the United States, contempt is purely and absolutely statutory.

Ex parte Robinson, 19 Wall. 505, 22 L. ed. 205; Peck's Trial, p. 294; Ex parte Bollman, 4 Cranch, 93, 2 L. ed. 560.

Courts have repeatedly decided the direct proposition that the criminal statute of limitations could be invoked to bar prosecutions for the offense of contempt of court.

Beattie v. People, 33 Ill. App. 651; People ex rel. Blumle v. Neill, 74 Ill. 68; Gordon v. Com. 141 Ky. 461, 133 S. W. 206.

Messrs. Alton B. Parker, Jackson H. Ralston, Frederick L. Siddons, and William E. Richardson filed a brief in support of the petition for certiorari.

Messrs. J. J. Darlington and Daniel Davenport argued the cause, and, with Mr. James M. Beck, filed a brief for defendant in error and appellee:

The boycott which defendants conspired together to continue, in violation of the injunction, was, by the acts charged and of which they stand convicted, continued until the Buck Stove & Range Company, deprived of the protection the courts were vainly endeavoring to extend to it, was forced to submit, and thereby induce the respondents to terminate the boycott, on July 19, 1910. The statute of limitations did not begin to run until that date.

United States v. Kissel, 218 U. S. 601, 607, 54 L. ed. 1168, 1178, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124.

It will not do to say that there are large classes of criminal cases tried without a jury, because so tried at common law, and that the Constitutions, Federal and state, inaugurate no new system, but simply preserve jury trials as at common law, for the reason, if there were no others, that there are no common-law crimes within the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, nor any crimes triable in them except such as are expressly created by statute.

United States v. Britton, 108 U. S. 206, 27 L. ed. 700, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 531; United States v. Hudson, 7 Cranch, 32, 3 L. ed. 259; United States v. Coolidge, 1 Wheat. 415, 4 L. ed. 124; Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 262, 263, 35 L. ed. 166, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 559; United States v. Eaton, 144 U. S. 687, 36 L. ed. 594, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 764.

Contempt of court is not an offense so created.

Anderson v. Dunn, 6 Wheat. 227, 228, 5 L. ed. 247, 248; Ex parte Terry, 128 U. S. 303, 32 L. ed. 408, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 155 U. S. 5, 39 L. ed. 49, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 19; Re Cooper, 32 Vt. 253; Watson v. Williams, 36 Miss. 331; Cartwright's Case, 114 Mass. 230; Eilenbecker v. District Ct. 134 U. S. 37, 38, 33 L. ed. 803, 804, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 424; Re Chadwick, 109 Mich. 597, 67 N. W. 1071.

If crimes, then neither the probate court, the circuit court, the court of appeals, this court, nor any tribunal except a criminal court, can entertain a proceeding for contempt. See Middlebrook v. State, 43 Conn. 267, 21 Am. Rep. 650.

Further, not only must the question of guilt be tried by a jury, but the accused must be confronted by the witnesses, contrary to what has hitherto been recognized universally.

1 Newland, Ch. Pr. 329; Fletcher, Eq. Pl. & Pr. § 553; State v. Matthews, 37 N. H. 455; Albany City Bank v. Schermerhorn, 9 Paige, 379, 38 Am. Dec. 551; 4 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 797; Re Savin, 131 U. S. 278, 33 L. ed. 153, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 699; United States v. Anonymous, 21 Fed. 761; Una v. Dodd, 38 N. J. Eq. 460; Re Chiles (Texas v. White) 22 Wall. 157, 22 L. ed. 819; Merchants' Stock & Grain Co. v. Board of Trade, 120 C. C. A. 582, 201 Fed. 20.

The fact that certain of the Attorneys General of the United States have held the President possessed of power to pardon in cases of contempt is, we think, rather strangely offered as a reason why, notwithstanding the foregoing, they should be held to be crimes. A tendency upon the part of the executive, as of the legislative, and even, it has been claimed, of the judicial departments of the government, to be jealous of their respective jurisdictions and powers, is perhaps to be expected; but the weight of authority upon this question of the power to pardon, if material for present purposes, we conceive to be strongly in the negative, both numerically and with respect to the force of reasoning employed.

2 Ops. Atty. Gen. 330; Re Nevitt, 54 C. C. A. 622, 117 Fed. 455; Taylor v. Goodrich, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 124, 40 S. W. 515; Re Chadwick, 109 Mich. 597, 67 N. W. 1071; State v. Morrill, 16 Ark. 384.

An information is a definite, legal, common-law term, and means only the act of an officer representing the sovereign power.

Digitized by Google

Bacon, Abr. title "Information" "A"; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 843; 1 Bishop, New Crim. Proc. § 143; State v. Whitlock, 41 Ark. 403; People v. Sponsler, 1 Dak. 289, 46 N. W. 459; Goddard v. State, 12 Conn. 448; State v. Ashley, 1 Ark. 279; Ex parte Thomas, 10 Mo. App. 24; Lasley v. District of Columbia, 14 App. D. C. 407; State v. Hewlett, 124 Ala. 471, 27 So. 18; State v. Kelm, 79 Mo. 515; State v. Shortell, 93 Mo. 123, 5 S. W. 691; State v. Kyle, 166 Mo. 287, 56 L.R.A. 115, 65 S. W. 763; Haggerty v. People, 6 Lans. 332.

Neither limitations nor laches bars a charge of contempt.

Jones v. Mould, 151 Iowa, 599, 132 N. W. 45; State ex rel. Warfield v. Becht, 23 Minn. 411; Matheson v. Hanna-Schoellkopf Co. 122 Fed. 836; Dale v. Roosevelt, 1 Paige, 35; Re Hay Foundry & Iron Works, 22 App. Div. 87, 47 N. Y. Supp. 802; Brockway v. Wilbur, 5 Johns. 356; People ex rel. Platt v. State Canvassers, 74 Hun, 179, 26 N. Y. Supp. 345; State ex rel. Duensing v. Roby, 142 Ind. 168, 33 L.R.A. 213, 51 Am. St. Rep. 174, 41 N. E. 145; Middlebrook v. State, 43 Conn. 267, 21 Am. Rep. 650.

Messrs. J. J. Darlington, Daniel Davenport, Clarence R. Wilson, and James M. Beck also joined in the petition for certiorari.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

These are proceedings for alleged criminal contempts in the matter that was before this court in Gompers v. Buck's [606] Stove & Range Co. 221 U. S. 418, 55 L. ed. 797, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 874, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 492. In that case the proceedings instituted by the Buck's Stove & Range Company to punish the petitioners were ordered to be dismissed, but without prejudice to the power of the supreme court of the District to punish contempt, if any, committed against it. The decision was rendered on May 15, 1911, and the next day the supreme court of the District appointed a committee to inquire whether there was reasonable cause to believe the plaintiffs in error guilty, in wilfully violating an injunction issued by that court on December 18, 1907, and, if yea, to present and prosecute charges to that effect. The inquiry was directed solely with a view to punishment for past acts, not to secure obedience for the future; and to avoid repetition it will be understood that all that we have to say concerns proceedings of this sort only, and further, only proceedings for such contempt not committed in the presence of the court.

The committee, on June 26, 1911, reported and charged that the parties severally were guilty of specified acts in violation of the injunction, being the same acts of which they had been found guilty by the supreme court in the former case. Rules to show cause were issued on the same day. The defendants pleaded the statute of limitations, Rev. Stat. § 1044, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 725, as to most of the charges, and not guilty. There was a trial, the statute of limitations was held inapplicable, and the defendants were found guilty and sentenced to imprisonment for terms of different lengths, subject to exceptions which by agreement were embodied in a single bill. The court of appeals reduced the sentences to imprisonment for thirty days in the case of Gompers and fines of $500 for each of the other two. 40 App. D. C. 293. The defendants brought a writ of error and an appeal to this court, and also petitioned for a writ of certiorari. Of course, an appeal does not lie, nor does a writ of error, but the writ of certiorari is granted. [607] The judges of the supreme court also petitioned for a writ of certiorari, but as the case will be disposed of on the first-mentioned petition, the other will be denied.

The injunction, subsequently held too broad, not only forbade the defendants to combine to obstruct the business of the Buck's Stove & Range Company, or to declare or threaten any boycott against it (such a boycott already having been declared), but also to publish any statement calling attention of any body to any such boycott, or any statement of like effect, tending to any injury of the company's business. This decree, although made on December 18, did not become operative until December 23, 1907. Before going to the court of appeals the injunction in substantially the same form was made permanent on March 23, 1908. It may be assumed for the purposes of our decision that the evidence not only warranted but required a finding that the defendants were guilty of some, at least, of the violations of this decree that were charged against them, and so we come at once to consider the statute of limitations, which is their only real defense. A preliminary objection was urged, to be sure, that the question of the validity of that defense was not reserved, but there is nothing in it. The bar was pleaded, there was a motion to dismiss on that ground for want of a replication, there was a decision that the statute did not apply to contempts, and the counsel for the plaintiffs in error stated at the trial that there was one general exception presented on their behalf with regard to that. We cannot doubt that it was perfectly understood, or that the record shows that the plaintiffs in error preserved all their rights.

Digitized by Google

The statute provides that "no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense not capital, except . . . , unless the indictment is found or the information is instituted within three years next after such offense shall have been committed." Rev. Stat. § 1044, act of April 13, 1876, chap. 56, 19 Stat. at L. 32, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 725. The plaintiffs in [608] error treat these proceedings as having begun on May 16, 1911, when the supreme court directed an inquiry. They certainly did not begin before that date; so that, if the statute applies, contempts prior to May 16, 1908, would be barred. It is argued with force that the inquiry was directed only to breaches of the preliminary injunction, which expired by its own terms upon the making of the final decree on March 23, 1908, and that therefore everything legitimately before the court happened more than three years before. But as the report mentioned the final decree, and charged a few acts later than March 23, though mostly rather unimportant, and as the order to show cause referred to a violation of the injunctions, in the plural, it perhaps would savor of a technicality that we should be loath to apply on either side, if we did not deal with all that is charged.

The charges against Gompers are: (1) hurrying the publication of the January number of the American Federationist, and distributing many copies after the injunction was known and before it went into effect, in which number the Buck's Stove & Range Company was included in the "We don't patronize" list; (2) circulating other copies in January, 1908; (3) on and after December 23, 1907, circulating another document to the like effect with comments, some of which were lawful criticism, but others of which suggested that the injunction left the members of labor oganizations free to continue their boycott; (4) publishing in February, 1908, a copy of the decree with the suggestion that those who violated the injunction outside of the District could not be punished unless they came within it; (5) in January and February, 1908, publishing in conjunction with the other defendants a paper appealing for financial aid, commenting on the injunction as invading the liberty of the press and free speech, and reprinting the beforementioned comments and suggestions; (6) in March, 1908, again suggesting that no law compelled the purchase [609] of a Buck stove; (7) in April, 1908, after the final decree, reiterating the same suggestion in the American Federationist; (8) in April, 1908, repeating similar suggestions by transparent innuendo in a public address; (9) again repeating them in another address, on or about May 1; (10) and again in the July issue of the American Federationist; (11) publishing in the September Federationist an editorial characterizing the injunction as an invasion of constitutional freedom (which hardly seems to exceed lawful comment unless on the ground that the case was not finished, although mistaken in its law); (12) in a report published after September 9, 1908, saying that if the Executive Council of the Federation of Labor obeyed the injunction they could not report the state of the case to the Denver Convention, and that they did not see how they could refuse to give an account of their doings; (13) on September 29, 1908, saying in a public address that the injunction forbade him to discuss the case, but that he must (seemingly not going beyond that declaration); (14) on October 26, 1908, recurring in a single phrase in an address to his old suggestion that no law compelled his hearers to buy a Buck stove; (15) in November, 1908, in an address which he caused to be published in the Federationist in January, 1909, again referring to the injunction, mentioning his past advice and suggestions, and that he had been called on to show cause why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt (in the former proceeding), and asking how he could have done otherwise; and finally (16) in a report made in November, 1909, referring to the judge as so far having transcended his authority that even judges of the court of appeals have felt called upon to criticize his action, and saying that in such circumstances it is the duty of the citizens to refuse obedience and to take whatever consequences may ensue. The charges against Mitchell and Morrison are mainly for having taken part in some of the abovementioned publications, but need not [610] be stated particularly, as all the acts of any substance in Mitchell's case and all in that of Morrison were more than three years old when these proceedings began.

The boycott against the company was not called off until July 19 to 29, 1910, and it is argued that, even if the statute applies, the conspiracy was continuing until that date (United States v. Kissel, 218 U. S. 601, 607, 54 L. ed. 1168, 1178, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124), and therefore that the statute did not begin to run until then. But this is not an indictment for conspiracy, it is a charge of specific acts in disobedience of an injunction. The acts are not charged as evidence, but as substantive offenses; each of them, so far as it was a contempt, was punishable as such, and was charged as such, and therefore each must be judged by itself; and so we come to what, as we already have intimated, is the real question in the case.

Digitized by Google

It is urged in the first place that contempts cannot be crimes, because, although punishable by imprisonment, and therefore, if crimes, infamous, they are not within the protection of the Constitution and the Amendments giving a right to trial by jury, etc., to persons charged with such crimes. But the provisions of the Constitution are not mathematical formulas having their essence in their form; they are organic, living institutions transplanted from English soil. They significance is vital, not formal; it is to be gathered not simply by taking the words and a dictionary, but by considering their origin and the line of their growth. Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U. S. 275, 281, 282, 41 L. ed. 715, 717, 718, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 326. It does not follow that contempts of the class under consideration are not crimes, or rather, in the language of the statute, offenses, because trial by jury as it has been gradually worked out and fought out has been thought not to extend to them as a matter of constitutional right. These contempts are infractions of the law, visited with punishment as such. If such acts are not criminal, we are in error as to the most fundamental characteristic of crimes as that word has been understood in English speech. So truly are [611] they crimes that it seems to be proved that in the early law they were punished only by the usual criminal procedure, 3 Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, N. S. p. 147 (1885), and that, at least in England, it seems that they still may be and preferably are tried in that way. See 7 Laws of England (Halsbury), 280, subdiv. Contempt of Court (604); Re Clements, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 375, 383, 36 L. T. N. S. 332; Re Macleod, 6 Jur. 461; Schreiber v. Lateward, 2 Dick. 592; Wellesley's Case, 2 Russ. & M. 639, 667; Re Pollard, L. R. 2 P. C. 106, 120, 5 Moore, P. C. C. N. S. 111; Ex parte Kearney, 7 Wheat. 38, 43, 5 L. ed. 391, 392; Bessette v. W. B. Conkey Co. 194 U. S. 324, 328, 331, 332, 48 L. ed. 997, 1002-1004, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 665; Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co. 221 U. S. 418, 441, 55 L. ed. 797, 805, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 874, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 492.

We come, then, to the construction of the statute. It has been assumed that the concluding words, "unless the indictment is found or the information is instituted within three years" limit the offenses given the benefit of the act to those usually prosecuted in that way, and the counsel for the petitioners were at some pains to argue that the charges of the committee amounted to an information,—a matter that opens vistas of antiquarian speculation. But this question is not one to be answered by refinements and curious inquiries. In our opinion the proper interpretation of the statute begins with the substantive, not with the adjective, part. The substantive portion of the section is that no person shall be tried for any offense not capital except within a certain time. Those words are of universal scope. What follows is a natural way of expressing that the proceedings must be begun within three years; indictment and information being the usual modes by which they are begun, and very likely no other having occurred to those who drew the law. But it seems to us plain that the dominant words of the act are, "no person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense not capital," unless.

No reason has been suggested to us for not giving to the [612] statute its natural scope. The English courts seem to think it wise, even when there is much seeming reason for the exercise of a summary power, to leave the punishment of this class of contempts to the regular and formal criminal process. Re Macleod, 6 Jur. 461. Maintenance of their authority does not often make it really necessary for courts to exert their own power to punish, as is shown by the English practice in more violent days than these, and there is no more reason for prolonging the period of liability when they see fit to do so than in the case where the same offense is proceeded against in the common way. Indeed, the punishment of these offenses peculiarly needs to be speedy if it is to occur. The argument loses little of its force if it should be determined hereafter, a matter on which we express no opinion, that in the present state of the law an indictment would not lie for a contempt of a court of the United States.

Even if the statute does not cover the case by its express words, as we think it does, still, in dealing with the punishment of crime a rule should be laid down, if not by Congress, by this court. The power to punish for contempt must have some limit in time, and in defining that limit we should have regard to what has been the policy of the law from the foundation of the government. By analogy, if not by enactment, the limit is three years. The case cannot be concluded otherwise so well as in the language of Chief Justice Marshall in a case where the statute was held applicable to an action of debt for a penalty. Adams v. Woods, 2 Cranch, 336, 340-342, 2 L. ed. 297-299: "It is contended that the prosecutions limited by this law are those only which are carried on in the form of an indictment or information, and not those where the penalty is demanded by an action of debt. But if the words of the act be examined, they will be found to apply not to any particular mode of proceeding, but generally to any prosecution, trial, or punishment for the offense. It is not declared [613] that no indictment shall be found . . . But it is declared that 'No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished' . . . In expounding this law, it deserves some consideration, that if it does not limit actions of debt for penalties, those actions might, in many cases, be brought at any distance of time. This would be utterly repugnant to the genius of our laws. In a country where not even treason can be prosecuted after a lapse of three years, it could scarcely be supposed that an individual would remain forever liable to a pecuniary forfeiture." The result is that the judgments, based as they are mainly upon offenses that could not be taken into consideration, must be reversed.

Digitized by Google

Judgments reversed.

Mr. Justice Van Devanter and Mr. Justice Pitney dissent.

SCOTT LOGAN, Plff. in Err.,
v.
W. R. DAVIS.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 613–630.)

Error to state court — Federal question — railway land grants — adjustment act.

1. A judgment of the highest state court denying plaintiff in error's claim as a purchaser in good faith within the meaning of the railway land grant adjustment act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 556, chap. 376, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1595), § 4, under which a confirmatory patent had been issued to him, and holding that he was not entitled to the benefit of the provisions of that section, is reviewable, under the Judicial Code (36 Stat. at L. 1156, chap. 231, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 227), § 237, in the Federal Supreme Court.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1825–1871, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Courts — conclusiveness of decision of Land Department — question of fact.

2. The decision of the Secretary of the Interior, based upon the evidence submitted in a contest before the Land Department, that one of the parties was a purchaser in good faith, within the meaning of the railway land grant adjustment act of March 3, 1887, § 4, is conclusive upon the courts unless founded upon errors of law and misconstruction of the statute, where no other basis is laid in the pleadings or agreed statement of facts for rejecting or disturbing such decision.

[For other cases, see Courts, I. e, 6, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Public lands — railway land grant — adjustment.

3. The land grant made by the act of May 12, 1864 (13 Stat. at L. 72, chap. 84), to the state of Iowa in aid of railway construction, not having been adjusted by the Land Department, was within the operation of the adjustment act of March 3, 1887, § 1, empowering the Secretary of the Interior immediately to adjust, in accordance with the decisions of the Federal Supreme Court, the several land grants made by Congress in aid of railway construction, "and heretofore unadjusted," notwithstanding the declaration of Iowa Laws 1882, chap. 107, that the state thereby resumed all lands which had not been earned by the railway company, and of Iowa Laws 1884, chap. 71, that all lands resumed and intended to be resumed by the earlier act "are hereby relinquished and conveyed to the United States."

[For other cases, see Public Lands, I. c, 2, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Public lands — railway land grants — bona fide purchasers — construction of statute by Land Department.

4. Subsequent as well as prior purchasers, if acting in good faith, must be regarded as within the protection afforded by the adjustment act of March 3, 1887, § 4, to bona fide purchasers from any railway company to which or for whose use and benefit land had been erroneously certified or patented, since to construe the statute otherwise would be to disturb a long-settled practical interpretation by the Land Department.

[For other cases, see Public Lands, I. c, 2 1; Statutes, II. e, 2, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Public lands — railway land grants — bona fide purchasers.

5. Constructive notice of a defect in the railway company's title does not deprive one who has honestly purchased in actual ignorance of such defect, and in reliance upon the action of the government in the apparent transfer of title by certification or patent, of the protection afforded by the adjustment act of March 3, 1887, § 4, to bona fide purchasers from any railway company to which or for whose use and benefit

---

NOTE.—On the general subject of writs of error from United States Supreme Court to State courts—see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4 L. ed. U. S. 97; Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884; and Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

On what adjudications of state courts can be brought up for review in the Supreme Court of the United States by writ of error to those courts—see note to Apex Transp. Co. v. Garbade, 62 L.R.A. 513.

On how and when questions must be raised and decided in a state court in order to make a case for a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States—see note to Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. McGrew, 63 L.R.A. 33.

On error to state courts in cases involving land titles—see note to O'Conor v. Texas, 50 L. ed. U. S. 1120.

As to land grants to railroads, generally—see note to Kansas P. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 28 L. ed. U. S. 794.

Digitized by Google

lands had been erroneously certified or patented.

[For other cases, see Public Lands, 331-340, 972-977, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 247.]

Submitted March 9, 1914. Decided May 11, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa to review a decree which affirmed a decree of the District Court of O'Brien County, in that state, in favor of defendant in a suit over the title to real property. Reversed.

See same case below, 147 Iowa, 441, 124 N. W. 808.

Statement by Mr. Justice Van Devanter:

This case arises out of conflicting claims to 80 acres of land in O'Brien county, Iowa, under the act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 556, chap. 376, (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1595), as amended February 12, 1896 (29 Stat. at L. 6, chap. 18, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1596), providing for the adjustment of railroad land grants, etc. The land is within the place limits of the grant made May 12, 1864 (13 Stat. at L. 72, chap. 84), to the state of Iowa to aid in the construction of a railroad from Sioux City, in that state, to the southern boundary of Minnesota. The grant was in præsenti and embraced every alternate section, designated by odd numbers, for ten sections in width on each side of the road, with the usual exceptions and provision for indemnity. The company which was to construct the road and receive the benefit of the grant was to be designated by the state legislature. Upon the presentation of a certificate by the governor of the state that any section of 10 consecutive miles of the road was completed, the Secretary of the Interior was to issue to the state patents for 100 sections of land "for the benefit of" the company constructing the road, and this was to be repeated as each additional 10 miles was constructed until the entire road was completed and all the lands patented. If the road was not completed within ten years from the company's acceptance of the grant, [615] the lands "granted and not patented" were to revert to the state, to enable it to secure the completion of the work; and if the road was not completed within five years after the expiration of the ten years, then the "lands undisposed of" were to revert to the United States. The Sioux City & St. Paul Railroad Company was designated by the state legislature as the beneficiary of the grant in 1866, the company accepted it in the same year, and a map definitely locating the line of the road was filed with the Secretary of the Interior and approved in 1867. As so located, the road was about 80 miles in length. In 1872 the company constructed it from the southern boundary of Minnesota to LeMars, Iowa, a distance of 56.25 miles, but the remaining part was never constructed, a trackage right to Sioux City over another road being acquired by the company. In 1872 and 1873 the governor certified that five sections of 10 miles each, constituting 50 miles of continuous road from the southern boundary of Minnesota, had been completed and put into operation conformably to the granting act, and the Secretary of the Interior thereupon caused a large amount of lands within the primary and indemnity limits of the grant to be patented to the state "for the use and benefit of" the company, the tract in controversy being among those so patented. Most of the lands patented to the state were soon conveyed by it to the company, but some were not, this tract being among the latter. The company, however, was claiming it in virtue of the grant and the patent to the state. Litigation was had between this company and another, by reason of their overlapping land grants, to determine which was entitled to this tract and others within the overlap, and by the final decree in 1886 this tract was awarded to this company. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 117 U. S. 406, 29 L. ed. 928, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 790. In truth, more land was patented to the state for the benefit of the company, and more land was conveyed by the state to the company, than the latter was entitled to [616] receive for the five 10-mile sections of completed road, not counting the additional 6.25 miles, and in 1882 the state legislature passed an act declaring that the state thereby resumed all lands "which have not been earned" by the company, but the act did not more definitely point out the lands intended to be resumed. Iowa Laws 1882, chap. 107. And in 1884 the state legislature passed an act declaring (§ 1) that all lands resumed and intended to be resumed by the act of 1882 "are hereby relinquished and conveyed to the United States," and also (§ 2): "The governor of the state of Iowa is hereby authorized and directed to certify to the Secretary of the Interior all lands which have heretofore been patented to the state, to aid in the construction of said railroad, and which have not been patented by the state to the Sioux City & St. Paul Railroad Company, and the list of land so certified by the governor shall be presumed to be the lands relinquished and conveyed by § 1 of this act. Provided, that nothing in this section contained shall be construed to apply to lands situated in the counties of Dickinson and O'Brien." Iowa Laws 1884, chap. 71. The tract in controversy, being in O'Brien county, came within the excepting words of the proviso.

Digitized by Google

This tract was part of an odd-numbered section of land immediately adjoining the third 10-mile section of constructed road, the completion of which was duly certified by the governor, and was unreserved, unappropriated, and vacant at the date of the granting act and at the time the line of road was definitely located. Thus it was not only a part of the lands granted, but was earned by actual construction. And, strictly speaking, it was rightly patented to the state for the benefit of the company, the excess in the lands patented being caused by the inclusion in the patents of other lands differently situated and not earned by the completion of the five 10-mile sections of road.

September 11, 1888, while the tract was still free from [617] any homestead, preemption, or kindred claim, and while the patent therefor, issued to the state in 1873, for the benefit of the company, was still outstanding, Ellen M. Childs purchased the tract from the company, paying $88 in cash and agreeing to pay ten deferred instalments, with interest thereon, making the full price $1,270.64, which was the fair value of the land. At the time of her purchase the tract was in the actual and undisputed possession of the company through a tenant named Fitzgerald, who then became her tenant, and through him she continued in the undisturbed possession until October 8, 1889, when she sold to Logan, the plaintiff in error, who paid her $228 in cash and took the land subject to the payment of the ten deferred instalments. Fitzgerald then became the tenant of Logan and remained in possession in that capacity until the spring of 1890, when Davis, the defendant in error, with a gang of men and teams, went upon the land, took possession of it, and began cultivating the larger part of it. In what he did Davis acted without the consent of Logan, and with knowledge of Mrs. Childs's purchase from the company in 1888, of her sale to Logan in 1889, and of Fitzgerald's possession as tenant of Mrs. Childs and then of Logan. Although subsequently maintaining the possession obtained in the spring of 1890, Davis did not reside upon the tract or erect any buildings upon it.

In October, 1889, the United States brought a suit—the bill was filed October 4 and the subpœna was served October 8—against the company under the adjustment act of March 3, 1887, supra, to regain the title to nearly 22,000 acres of land in Dickinson and O'Brien counties, including this tract, theretofore patented to the state for the benefit of the company, the theory upon which such relief was sought being that the company had received a larger quantity of other lands than it was entitled to receive under the granting act, and therefore [618] could not properly claim the 22,000 acres. In the circuit court the United States prevailed, and this court affirmed the decree. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. v. United States, 159 U. S. 349, 40 L. ed. 177, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 17. The ground upon which the decision rested is indicated by the following extract from the opinion (p. 370): "Our conclusion, then, is that the Sioux City Company, having failed to complete the entire road for the construction of which Congress made the grant in question, was not entitled to the whole of the lands granted, but, at most, only to one hundred odd-numbered sections—as those sections were surveyed, whatever their quantity—for each section of 10 consecutive miles constructed and certified by the governor of the state; and that, according to the measurement of 1887, which is accepted as the basis of calculation, the railroad company had, prior to the institution of this suit, received more lands, on account of the 50 miles of constructed road, certified by the governor, than it was entitled to receive. Under this view, it is unnecessary to inquire whether the particular lands here in dispute should not have been assigned to the company, rather than other lands, containing a like number of acres, that were, in fact, transferred to it, and which cannot now be recovered by the United States, by reason of their having been disposed of by the company. If the company has received as much in quantity as should have been awarded to it, a court of equity will not recognize its claim to more, in whatever shape the claim is presented."

There was no attempt to make Mrs. Childs, Logan, or the tenant Fitzgerald a party to that suit. During its pendency, and on March 13, 1894, Logan entered into an agreemen in writing with the company whereby the latter extended the time for paying the ten deferred instalments until ninety days after a decision should be rendered in the suit by this court, and whereby he agreed that if the decision should be adverse to the company, he would accept [619] from it the amount already paid, with interest, in full satisfaction of all demands against the company on account of the failure of the title.

Shortly following the decision of this court in that suit the lands recovered by the United States, including this tract, were regularly restored to public entry in conformity with the provisions of the adjustment act, and a contest at once ensued in the Land Department over this tract. Logan, claiming to be a purchaser in good faith, applied for a confirmatory patent under § 4, and Davis, claiming to be a bona fide occupant, sought to obtain title under the homestead law. A hearing before the local land office, at which the parties presented such evidence as they had in support of their respective claims, resulted in a decision by the local officers in favor of Davis. This was affirmed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office on the theory that the agreement of March 13, 1894, was fatal to Logan's claim as a purchaser; and upon an appeal to the Secretary of the Interior the decisions below were reversed, it being found and held by the Secretary that Logan was a purchaser in good faith within the meaning of § 4 of the adjustment act; that the agreement of March 13, 1894, did not alter his status as a purchaser; and that Davis's possession, acquired after the purchase by Logan, and with knowledge of it, did not eliminate the element of good faith from the latter's purchase, or otherwise defeat his claim. As a result of this decision, Logan made the requisite payment to the government (see amendatory act of February 12, 1896, supra), and was given a confirmatory patent.

Digitized by Google

It is conceded that Mrs. Childs and Logan were both citizens of the United States, and in that respect within the remedial provisions of § 4 of the adjustment act, and also that in the contest before the Land Department Logan testified that at the time of his purchase from Mrs. Childs, in 1889, he had no knowledge of any adverse claim to the [620] tract. The present record, however, does not purport to contain all the evidence produced in that contest.

When the proceeding in the Land Department was concluded, Logan sued Davis in the local state court to recover the possession, and by the pleadings subsequent to the petition the character of the action was so far changed that Davis sought to have Logan declared a trustee of the title for him, Davis, and directed to convey the same to him, and Logan sought to have his title quieted as against Davis, as well as to recover the possession. In Davis's pleading Logan's right under the confirmatory patent was assailed upon the grounds (1) that the grant of 1864 was completely and finally adjusted by the legislation and action of the state in 1882 and 1884, and so was not within the operation of the adjustment act of 1887; (2) that the remedial provisions of § 4 of that act were confined to purchases made prior to the date of the act, and so were not applicable to Mrs. Childs' purchase in 1888 or Logan's purchase in 1889; (3) that Mrs. Childs and Logan were bound to take notice of the various acts and matters bearing upon the company's right to this tract, and so it was legally impossible for either to be a purchaser in good faith within the meaning of § 4; and (4) that the decision of the Secretary of the Interior, reversing the action of the local officers and of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, was given "unlawfully and without any authority of law." The last ground evidently was intended as a mere conclusion from the others, for nothing else was alleged to make it even colorable. The case was heard upon an agreed statement of facts, the substance of which has been recited, and a decree was rendered in favor of Davis, which was affirmed by the supreme court of the state. 147 Iowa, 441, 124 N. W. 808. That court held that Logan was not a purchaser in good faith within the meaning of § 4 of the adjustment act of 1887, and this upon the theory (a) that he was presumed to have [621] known the character of the company's title, and (b) that § 4 was not applicable to a purchase made after the date of the act. To reverse that decision Logan prosecutes this writ of error.

Messrs. William Milchrist and George C. Scott submitted the cause for plaintiff in error. Mr. W. D. Boies was on the brief:

The plaintiff in error being in actual possession of the land in controversy under claim of right in good faith made, the defendant in error, with full knowledge of such possession and claim, having wrongfully invaded such prior actual possession, initiated no right under the homestead law, and he cannot maintain his counterclaim.

Lyle v. Patterson, 228 U. S. 211, 57 L. ed. 804, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 480; Atherton v. Fowler, 96 U. S. 513, 24 L. ed. 732; Hosmer v. Wallace, 97 U. S. 575, 24 L. ed. 1130; Swanson v. Sears, 224 U. S. 180, 56 L. ed. 721, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 455; Quimby v. Conlan, 104 U. S. 420, 26 L. ed. 800; United States v. Southern P. R. Co. 184 U. S. 49, 46 L. ed. 425, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 285; United States v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 165 U. S. 463, 41 L. ed. 789, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 368.

The plaintiff in error, having purchased the land in good faith while it was in the undisputed possession of the railroad company, and before any attempt was made to initiate any homestead right by settlement, improvement, or taking possession, was entitled to protection under the act of March 3, 1887, even though the purchase was made after the passage of the act.

United States v. Southern P. R. Co. 184

Digitized by Google

U. S. 49, 46 L. ed. 425, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 285; United States v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 165 U. S. 463, 41 L. ed. 789, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 368; Knepper v. Sands, 194 U. S. 476, 48 L. ed. 1083, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 744.

All of the circumstances and conditions being such that the plaintiff in error would be entitled to protection under the act of March 3, 1887, had his purchase dated prior to the approval of that act, and the United States government having treated such act as applying to the plaintiff in error's purchase, and having invited the plaintiff to an adjustment of his claim under that act, and having adjusted such claim and received the full purchase price from the plaintiff in error, and issued to him its patent, the United States government is now estopped from denying the validity of such patent, and the defendant in error, claiming in privity with the United States government, and with notice and knowledge of the acts of the United States when he proffered his homestead filing on February 27, 1896, is also estopped.

Branson v. Wirth, 17 Wall. 32, 21 L. ed. 566; James v. Germania Iron Co. 46 C. C. A. 476, 107 Fed. 597; United States v. Stinson, 60 C. C. A. 615, 125 Fed. 907, 197 U. S. 200, 49 L. ed. 724, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426; United States v. McLaughlin, 30 Fed. 147, 127 U. S. 428, 32 L. ed. 213, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1177; Clark v. United States, 95 U. S. 539, 24 L. ed. 518; Michigan v. Jackson, L. & S. R. Co. 16 C. C. A. 345, 37 U. S. App. 220, 69 Fed. 116; Indiana v. Milk, 11 Biss. 197, 11 Fed. 389; State v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 89 Mich. 481, 51 N. W. 103; Cahn v. Barnes, 7 Sawy. 48, 5 Fed. 326; Gibbons v. United States, 5 Ct. Cl. 416, 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. § 813; Peters v. Jones, 35 Iowa, 512; Knevals v. Florida C. & P. R. Co. 13 C. C. A. 410, 23 U. S. App. 549, 66 Fed. 224; Bausman v. Eads, 46 Minn. 148, 24 Am. St. Rep. 201, 48 N. W. 769; William Deering & Co. v. Peterson, 75 Minn. 118, 77 N. W. 568; Re McKeag, 141 Cal. 403, 99 Am. St. Rep. 80, 74 Pac. 1039; Portis v. Hill, 30 Tex. 529, 98 Am. Dec. 481; McCravey v. Remson, 19 Ala. 430, 54 Am. Dec. 194.

Mr. Madison B. Davis submitted the cause for defendant in error. Mr. Edwin J. Stason was on the brief:

The trials and decisions of the district and the supreme courts of Iowa did not involve the determination of a Federal question. Both courts based their judgments upon the determination of questions of fact and the application of the rules of the common law. Whether a party is estopped is not a Federal question. The writ of error should therefore be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

Pittsburgh & L. A. Iron Co. v. Cleveland Iron Min. Co. 178 U. S. 270, 44 L. ed. 1065, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 931; Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 147 U. S. 531, 37 L. ed. 267, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 353; De Saussure v. Gaillard, 127 U. S. 216, 32 L. ed. 125, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1053; Johnson v. Risk, 137 U. S. 300, 34 L. ed. 683, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 111; Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co. v. Skinner, 139 U. S. 293, 35 L. ed. 193, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 528; Bacon v. Texas, 163 U. S. 207, 41 L. ed. 132, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1023; Murdock v. Memphis, 20 Wall. 590, 22 L. ed. 429; Rutland R. Co. v. Central Vermont R. Co. 159 U. S. 630, 40 L. ed. 284, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113; Seneca Nation of Indians v. Christy, 162 U. S. 283, 40 L. ed. 970, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 828; Hammond v. Johnston, 142 U. S. 73, 35 L. ed. 941, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141; Delaware City, S. & P. S. B. Nav. Co. v. Reybold, 142 U. S. 636, 35 L. ed. 1141, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 290; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 212 U. S. 112, 53 L. ed. 431, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 227; Giles v. Teasley, 193 U. S. 146, 48 L. ed. 655, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 359; Leathe v. Thomas, 207 U. S. 93, 52 L. ed. 118, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30; Elder v. Wood, 208 U. S. 226, 52 L. ed. 464, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 263; Fowler v. Lamson, 164 U. S. 252, 41 L. ed. 424, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 112; Arkansas Southern R. Co. v. German Nat. Bank, 207 U. S. 270, 52 L. ed. 201, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 78; Harrison v. Morton, 171 U. S. 38, 43 L. ed. 63, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 742; California Powder Works v. Davis, 151 U. S. 389, 38 L. ed. 206, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 160 U. S. 556, 40 L. ed. 536, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389; Egan v. Hart, 165 U. S. 188, 41 L. ed. 680, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 300; Pierce v. Somerset R. Co. 171 U. S. 641, 43 L. ed. 316, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 64; Weyerhaueser v. Minnesota, 176 U. S. 550, 44 L. ed. 583, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 485; Leonard v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 198 U. S. 416, 49 L. ed. 1108, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 750; Gillis v. Stinchfield, 159 U. S. 658, 40 L. ed. 295, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; Moran v. Horsky, 178 U. S. 205, 44 L. ed. 1038, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 856; Rakes v. United States, 212 U. S. 58, 53 L. ed. 402, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 244; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Duvall, 225 U. S. 477, 56 L. ed. 1171, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 790.

The findings of fact by the court below are conclusive in a proceeding in error.

Egan v. Hart, 165 U. S. 188, 41 L. ed. 680, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 300; E. Bement & Sons v. National Harrow Co. 186 U. S. 70, 46 L. ed. 1058, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747; Dower v. Richards, 151 U. S. 658, 38 L. ed. 305, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 452, 17 Mor. Min. Rep. 704; Hedrick v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 167 U. S. 673, 42 L. ed. 320, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 922.

When it is unnecessary to decide a Federal question, and the state court has based its decision on a local or state question, the logical course is to dismiss the writ of error.

Digitized by Google

Eustis v. Bolles, 150 U. S. 370, 37 L. ed. 1113, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; Hale v. Lewis, 181 U. S. 473, 45 L. ed. 959, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 677; St. Louis, G. & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Missouri, 156 U. S. 478, 39 L. ed. 502, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 443; Castillo v. McConnico, 168 U. S. 674, 42 L. ed. 622, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 229; Remington Paper Co. v. Watson, 173 U. S. 443, 43 L. ed. 762, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 456.

The act of 1864 was not a present grant. Therefore the Sioux City Company, having failed to earn the land, acquired no right or title, legal or equitable, thereto.

Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. v. United States, 159 U. S. 349, 40 L. ed. 177, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 17; Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. v. Osceola County, 43 Iowa, 318; Manley v. Tow, 110 Fed. 241.

The grant not being a present one, there was nothing to "adjust" so as to make it possible for one to be a good-faith purchaser who purchased after the act of March 3, 1887, took effect.

St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McGee, 115 U. S. 469, 29 L. ed. 446, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 123; Knepper v. Sands, 194 U. S. 476, 48 L. ed. 1083, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 744; Manley v. Tow, 110 Fed. 241; Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. v. United States, 159 U. S. 349, 40 L. ed. 177, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 17; Logan v. Davis, 147 Iowa, 441, 124 N. W. 808; Ostrom v. Wood, 140 Fed. 294; Olson v. Traver, 26 Land Dec. 350.

The defendant in error, having complied with the requirements of the homestead law, as far as he was permitted to comply, is entitled to the land as a homestead claimant.

26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 397, 398; Duluth & I. Range Co. v. Roy, 173 U. S. 587, 43 L. ed. 820, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 549; Knepper v. Sands, 194 U. S. 476, 48 L. ed. 1083, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 744; Moss v. Dowman, 176 U. S. 413, 44 L. ed. 526, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 429; Clements v. Warner, 24 How. 394, 16 L. ed. 695; Nelson v. Northern P. R. Co. 188 U. S. 108, 47 L. ed. 406, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 302; Ard v. Brandon, 156 U. S. 537, 39 L. ed. 524, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 406; Lake Superior Ship Canal R. & Iron Co. v. Cunningham, 155 U. S. 354, 39 L. ed. 183, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 103; Manley v. Tow, 110 Fed. 241; Benner v. Lane, 116 Fed. 407; Atherton v. Fowler, 96 U. S. 513, 24 L. ed. 732; Lyle v. Patterson, 228 U. S. 211, 57 L. ed. 804, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 480; Logan v. Davis, 147 Iowa, 441, 124 N. W. 808.

The defendant in error is not estopped to make claim as a homestead entryman by reason of the acts of the Federal courts or officers in recognizing, in the manner in which they did, certain rights of the Sioux City Company.

11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 434; Clark v. Lyster, 84 C. C. A. 27, 155 Fed. 513; Hollenbeck v. Smith, 231 Ill. 484, 83 N. E. 206; Gjerstadengen v. Van Duzen, 7 N. D. 612, 66 Am. St. Rep. 679, 76 N. W. 233; Walker v. Ehresman, 79 Neb. 775, 113 N. W. 218; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 588; Benner v. Lane, 116 Fed. 407; Logan v. Davis, 147 Iowa, 451, 124 N. W. 808.

Mr. Justice Van Devanter, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

As Logan claimed as a purchaser in good faith within the meaning of § 4 of the adjustment act of 1887, under which a confirmatory patent had been issued to him, and the supreme court of the state denied that claim, and held that he was not entitled to the benefit of the provisions of that section, the judgment is so plainly subject to review by this court under § 237 of the Judicial Code [36 Stat. at L. 1156, chap. 231, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 227] that a contention to the contrary, found in one of the briefs, is dismissed as not justifying further comment. Gauthier v. Morrison, 232 U. S. 452, ante 680, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 384.

And as the Secretary of the Interior found, from the evidence submitted in the contest before the Land Department, that Logan was a purchaser in good faith in the sense of the adjustment act, and no basis was laid in the pleadings or agreed statement of facts for rejecting or disturbing that decision save as it was said to be grounded upon error of law and misconstruction of the statute, it is manifest that unless some of the objections urged against it on that score are well taken, Logan's title should be sustained. Vance v. Burbank, 101 U. S. 514, 519, 25 L. ed. 929, 931; Lee v. Johnson, 116 U. S. 48, 29 L. ed. 570, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249; Gertgens v. O'Connor, 191 U. S. 237, 240, 48 L. ed. 163, 164, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 94; Ross v. Day, 232 U. S. 110, 116, ante, 528, 529, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 233.

The act of 1887, in its 1st section, authorized and required the Secretary of the Interior immediately to adjust, in accordance with the decisions of this court, the several land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads, "and heretofore unadjusted." This included [624] the grant made by the act of 1864, unless already adjusted. That it had not been adjusted by the Land Department is conceded, but it is insisted that it had been adjusted by the legislation and action of the state in 1882 and 1884, and so was not within the operation of the adjustment act of 1887. To this we cannot assent. The United States had not committed the adjustment to the state, and neither had the state assumed to make an adjustment for the United States. Prior to the act of 1887 the administration of the several railroad land grants rested with the Land Department, of which the Secretary of the Interior is the head (Catholic Bishop v. Gibbon, 158 U. S. 155, 166, 167, 39 L. ed. 931, 936, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 779, and some of the lessor grants had progressed to a final adjustment in regular course of administration. It was because of this that the restrictive words "and heretofore unadjusted" were inserted in the act. They meant only that adjustments theretofore effected by the Land Department in regular course were not to be disturbed. The facts before recited amply illustrate that this grant had not proceeded to such an adjustment. The Secretary of the Interior treated it as unadjusted (Re Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. 6 Land Dec. 54, 71), and this court impliedly, if not expressly, approved his action (Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. v. United States, 159 U. S. 349, 40 L. ed. 177, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 17).

Digitized by Google

The 2d section of the act of 1887 related to the recovery by the United States of lands which, upon the completion of any adjustment, or sooner, appeared to have been erroneously certified or patented by the Land Department "to or for the use or benefit of any company" claiming under a grant to aid in the construction of a railroad. The 3d section related to the reinstatement of pre-emption and homestead entries found, in the course of any adjustment, to have been erroneously canceled by reason of such a grant or a withdrawal, and directed that where the entryman failed to apply for a reinstatement within a [625] reasonable time, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, the land should be disposed of under the public land laws to bona fide purchasers, if any, and, if there were none, then to bona fide settlers. The fourth section read as follows:

"That as to all lands, except those mentioned in the foregoing section, which have been so erroneously certified or patented as aforesaid, and which have been sold by the grantee company to citizens of the United States, or to persons who have declared their intention to become such citizens, the person or persons so purchasing in good faith, his heirs or assigns, shall be entitled to the land so purchased, upon making proof of the fact of such purchase at the proper land office, within such time and under such rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, after the grants respectively shall have been adjusted; and patents of the United States shall issue therefor, and shall relate back to the date of the original certification or patenting, and the Secretary of the Interior, on behalf of the United States, shall demand payment from the company which has so disposed of such lands of an amount equal to the government price of similar lands; and in case of neglect or refusal of such company to make payment as hereafter specified, within ninety days after the demand shall have been made, the Attorney General shall cause suit or suits to be brought against such company for the said amount: Provided, That nothing in this act shall prevent any purchaser of lands erroneously withdrawn, certified, or patented as aforesaid from recovering the purchase money therefor from the grantee company, less the amount paid to the United States by such company, as by this act required: And provided, That a mortgage or pledge of said lands by the company shall not be considered as a sale for the purpose of this act, nor shall this act be construed as a declaration of forfeiture of any portion of any land grant for conditions broken, or as authorizing [626] an entry for the same, or as a waiver of any rights that the United States may have on account of any breach of said conditions."

This section was amended February 12, 1896 (29 Stat. at L. 6, chap. 18), by adding to it the following:

"Provided further, That where such purchasers, their heirs or assigns, have paid only a portion, of the purchase price to the company, which is less than the government price of similar lands, they shall be required, before the delivery of patent for their lands, to pay to the government a sum equal to the difference between the portion of the purchase price so paid and the government price, and in such case the amount demanded from the company shall be the amount paid to it by such purchaser."

Section 5 related to lands apparently within such a grant and lying opposite the constructed parts of the road, but excepted from the operation of the grant, and not certified or patented to or for the benefit of the railroad company, and provided that where any such land was sold by the company to a bona fide purchaser, who was a citizen of the United States, or had declared his intention to become such, the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, could obtain a patent by paying the ordinary government price, but that this privilege should not exist if, at the time of the sale by the company, the land was occupied by an adverse claimant under the pre-emption or homestead laws.

Digitized by Google

Whether § 4 was confined to purchases made prior to the date of the act, or equally included subsequent purchases, where made in good faith, is one of the controverted questions in the case. Both views have support in the terms of the act, and if the question were altogether new there would be room for a reasonable difference of opinion as to what was intended. Certainly, resort to interpretation would be necessary. But the question is not altogether new. It has often arisen in the administration of the act, and successive Secretaries of the Interior uniformly have [627] held that the remedial sections embraced purchases after the date of the act, no less than prior purchases, if made in good faith. Sethman v. Clise, 17 Land Dec. 307; Holton v. Rutledge, 20 Land Dec. 227; Andrus v. Balch, 22 Land Dec. 238; Briley v. Beach, 22 Land Dec. 549; Re Seaver, 23 Land Dec. 108; Neilsen v. Central P. R. Co. 26 Land Dec. 252. Many thousands of acres have been patented to individuals under that interpretation, and to disturb it now would be productive of serious and harmful results. The situation, therefore, calls for the application of the settled rule that the practical interpretation of an ambiguous or uncertain statute by the executive department charged with its administration is entitled to the highest respect, and, if acted upon for a number of years, will not be disturbed except for very cogent reasons. United States v. Moore, 95 U. S. 760, 763, 24 L. ed. 588, 589; Hastings & D. R. Co. v. Whitney, 132 U. S. 357, 366, 33 L. ed. 363, 367, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 112; United States v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. 142 U. S. 615, 621, 35 L. ed. 1134, 1136, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306; Kindred v. Union P. R. Co. 225 U. S. 582, 596, 56 L. ed. 1216, 1220, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 780.

The remedial sections of the act were also considered by this court in United States v. Southern P. R. Co. 184 U. S. 49, 56, 46 L. ed. 425, 429, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 285, which involved several purchases made after the date of the act, and it was there said: "But the act itself bears upon its face evidence that it was not intended to be limited to cases of purchases from the railroad company prior to its date." And, after referring to the language of §§ 2 and 3, it was added: "This seems to imply an intent that all mistakes of the nature referred to which shall have occurred up to the very completion of the adjustment may be rectified. Section 4 makes provision for the issue of patents to certain purchasers from railroad companies, providing proof shall be made 'within such time and under such rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, after the grants respectively shall have been adjusted.' While other sections may not be so specific, yet, placing them [628] alongside of those from which quotations have been made, it is reasonable to hold that the act applies not merely to transactions had before its date, but to any had before the time of final adjustment. In this case the several grants to the Southern Pacific have not yet been finally adjusted. Further, it must be borne in mind that this is a remedial statute, and is to be construed liberally, and so as to effectuate the purpose of Congress and secure the relief which was designed, and the mere date of the transaction between the purchaser and the railroad company is not of itself vital in determining whether there is or is not an equity in behalf of the purchaser."

Counsel for Davis rely upon Knepper v. Sands, 194 U. S. 476, 48 L. ed. 1083, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 744, as placing a different interpretation upon the adjustment act. But, although some broad language is found in the opinion, the real decision did not go as far as suggested. The case came here upon a certificate from a circuit court of appeals, and the question presented for decision, considering the facts stated in the certificate, was whether a purchase from the railroad company of land erroneously patented for its benefit under the grant of 1864, could be esteemed a purchase in good faith, within the meaning of § 4 of the act of 1887, where, at the time of the purchase, the land was occupied by a bona fide settler who was residing upon, improving and cultivating the same with a view to acquiring it under the homestead law. The question was answered in the negative, particular emphasis being laid upon the settler's occupancy at the time of the purchase and upon the well known policy of favoring actual settlers. The answer must have been the same whether the purchase was before or after the date of the act, and manifestly there was no purpose to overrule or qualify the decision in United States v. Southern P. R. Co. supra, for it was not even mentioned. So, reading the opinion in Knepper v. Sands with appropriate regard for the facts of the case, we think it is not in point [629] or controlling here, for no one was occupying or claiming this tract under the settlement laws at the time it was purchased from the company.

The contention that Logan was charged with constructive notice of the defect in the company's title, and so was not a purchaser in good faith, in the sense of the adjustment act, must be overruled, as was a like contention in United States v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 165 U. S. 463, 41 L. ed. 789, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 368. It was there said, referring to the remedial provisions of § 4

Digitized by Google

(p. 480): "It will be observed that this protection is not granted to simply bona fide purchasers (using that term in the technical sense), but to those who have one of the elements declared to be essential to a bona fide purchaser; to wit, good faith. It matters not what constructive notice may be chargeable to such a purchaser if, in actual ignorance of any defect in the railroad company's title, and in reliance upon the action of the government in the apparent transfer of title by certification or patent, he has made an honest purchase of the lands. The plain intent of this section is to secure him the lands, and to reinforce his defective title by a direct patent from the United States, and to leave to the government a simple claim for money against the railroad company." And, referring to the provisions of § 5, it was further said (p. 481): "It is true the term used here is 'bona fide purchaser,' but it is a bona fide purchaser from the company, and the description given of the lands, as not conveyed and 'for any reason excepted from the operation of the grant,' indicates that the fact of notice of defect of title was not to be considered fatal to the right. Congress attempted to protect an honest transaction between a purchaser and a railroad company, even in the absence of a certification or patent." This view of the purpose and meaning of the act was repeated and applied in Gertgens v. O'Connor, 191 U. S. 237, 48 L. ed. 163, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 94, and United States v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 195 U. S. 524, 49 L. ed. 306, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113.

[630] As it thus appears that the decision of the Secretary of the Interior was right in point of law, and as it was conclusive upon all questions of fact (Gertgens v. O'Connor, supra), it follows that the state court erred in not sustaining Logan's title obtained under that decision.

Decree reversed.

W. W. SMITH, Plff. in Err.,
v.
STATE OF TEXAS.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 630–642.)

Constitutional law — due process of law — restricting right to contract — railway conductors — prior occupation.

An infringement of the liberty of contract without due process of law, contrary to U. S. Const., 14th Amend., results from the provisions of Texas Laws 1909, chap. 46, which make it a misdemeanor for any person to act as a conductor on a railway train in that state without having previously served for two years as a freight conductor or brakeman.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, IV. c, 3; IV. b, 7, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 268.]

Argued and submitted March 12, 1914. Decided May 11, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Court of Criminal Appeals of the State of Texas to review a judgment which affirmed a conviction in the County Court of Gregg County, in that state, of having acted as conductor of a freight train without previous experience as freight conductor or brakeman. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

See same case below, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 146 S. W. 900.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Gardiner Lathrop argued the cause, and, with Mr. Robert Dunlap, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The statute, by unreasonably and arbitrarily restricting the right to engage in a lawful occupation to a favored class, thereby depriving others who are as well fitted to engage therein, and depriving them of all opportunity to show their fitness, is arbitrary and capricious upon its face, and is obviously not passed for the sole purpose of protecting the community against the results of inexperience, but tends to give a monopoly in a particular employment to a favored class. It deprives those who do not fall within the favored class of their liberty or freedom without due process of law, and denies to them the equal protection of the laws of the state.

Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 369, 30 L. ed. 220, 226, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 31, 28 L. ed. 924, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 559, 46 L. ed. 689, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 53, 49 L. ed. 940, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133; Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 173, 174, 52 L. ed. 443, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764; Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 124, 125, 32 L. ed. 623, 626, 627, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231; Reetz v. Michigan, 188

NOTE.—As to what constitutes due process of law, generally—see notes to People v. O'Brien, 2 L.R.A. 255; Kuntz v. Sumption, 2 L.R.A. 655; Re Gannon, 5 L.R.A. 359; Ulman v. Baltimore, 11 L.R.A. 224; Gilman v. Tucker, 13 L.R.A. 304; Pearson v. Yewdall, 24 L. ed. U. S. 436; and Wilson v. North Carolina, 42 L. ed. U. S. 865.

On the constitutionality of statutes restricting contracts and business, generally—see note to State v. Loomis, 21 L.R.A. 789.

Digitized by Google

U. S. 508, 509, 47 L. ed. 566, 567, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. pp. 889, 890; State ex rel. Powell v. State Medical Examining Board, 32 Minn. 324, 50 Am. Rep. 575, 20 N. W. 238; Gage v. New Hampshire Electric Medical Soc. 63 N. H. 92, 56 Am. Rep. 492; Bank of Columbia v. Okely, 4 Wheat. 244, 4 L. ed. 561; The Federalist, No. 51; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 176, 2 L. ed. 73; Wyeth v. Board of Health (Wyeth v. Thomas) 200 Mass. 474, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 147, 128 Am. St. Rep. 439, 86 N. E. 925; Josma v. Western Steel Car & Foundry Co. 249 Ill. 508, 94 N. E. 945; Bonnett v. Vallier, 136 Wis. 193, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 486, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1061, 116 N. W. 885; Chenoweth v. State Bd. of Medical Examiners, — Colo. —, 141 Pac. 132; Ruhstrat v. People, 185 Ill. 133, 49 L.R.A. 181, 76 Am. St. Rep. 30, 57 N. E. 41, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 453; People v. Schenck, 257 Ill. 384, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 46, 100 N. E. 994, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 1129; Opinion of Justices, 211 Mass. 618, 98 N. E. 337; Morgan v. State, 179 Ind. 300, 101 N. E. 7; State v. Wagener, 69 Minn. 206, 38 L.R.A. 677, 65 Am. St. Rep. 565, 72 N. W. 67; Com. v. Snyder, 182 Pa. 630, 38 Atl. 356; State ex rel. Zillmer v. Kreutzberg, 114 Wis. 530, 58 L.R.A. 748, 91 Am. St. Rep. 934, 90 N. W. 1098; People v. Hawkins, 157 N. Y. 7, 42 L.R.A. 490, 68 Am. St. Rep. 736, 51 N. E. 257; Vicksburg v. Mullane, — Miss. —, 63 So. 412; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 549, 46 L. ed. 685, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. (Cotting v. Godard) 183 U. S. 79, 46 L. ed. 92, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30; Smith v. Board of Examiners of Feeble Minded, — N. J. L. —, 88 Atl. 963; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 137, 38 L. ed. 388, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 589, 41 L. ed. 832, 835, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 761, 28 L. ed. 588, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652.

An enactment cannot invade the rights of persons and property under the guise of a police regulation when it is not such in fact.

Eden v. People, 161 Ill. 296, 32 L.R.A. 659, 52 Am. St. Rep. 365, 43 N. E. 1108; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L.R.A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315, 40 N. E. 454.

Statutes prescribing certain tests or qualifications to be possessed by those engaging in certain occupations have been sustained only where it was obvious that they were passed in the interest of public safety or health, and the tests prescribed were general in character and reasonably tended directly to accomplish the object sought. An opportunity was usually accorded for a hearing, and parties were not excluded who were able to show their fitness.

Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 31 L. ed. 508, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 804, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564; Nashville C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 32 L. ed. 352, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 238, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28; Williams v. Arkansas, 217 U. S. 79, 54 L. ed. 673, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493, 18 Ann. Cas. 865; Watson v. Maryland, 218 U. S. 173, 54 L. ed. 987, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644; Eubank v. Richmond, 226 U. S. 137, 57 L. ed. 156, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1123, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 76.

Although a statute may seem fair upon its face, yet if, by its necessary operation, it is destructive of rights guaranteed under the Constitution, it will be held invalid. Its necessary practical effect is of prime consideration.

Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 319, 34 L. ed. 457, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862; Brimmer v. Rebman, 138 U. S. 78, 34 L. ed. 862, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 485, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Henderson v. New York (Henderson v. Wickham) 92 U. S. 259, 268, 23 L. ed. 543, 547.

Mr. B. F. Looney, Attorney General of Texas, submitted the cause for defendant in error. Mr. Luther Nickels was on the brief:

The general purpose of the act was within the police power of the state.

Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 53, 49 L. ed. 940, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436, 34 L. ed. 519, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 930; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 34 L. ed. 620, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 13; Re Converse, 137 U. S. 624, 34 L. ed. 796, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 191.

The general plan, or principle, for the accomplishment of such purpose, as designed by the act, is also legitimate.

Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 31 L. ed. 508, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 804, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 32 L. ed. 352, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 238, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28.

The state may rightfully prevent unqualified men from occupying the position of conductor of a passenger train; and in doing so the state does not:

I. Unconstitutionally interfere with the right of contract, because:

Digitized by Google

The state has the power to prevent individuals from making certain kinds of contracts in regard to which the Federal Constitution offers no protection.

Ibid.; Olsen v. Smith, 195 U. S. 332, 49 L. ed. 224, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 52; Otis v. Parker, 187 U. S. 606, 47 L. ed. 323, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 168; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197, 48 L. ed. 679, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 436; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Paul, 173 U. S. 404, 43 L. ed. 746, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 419; Knoxville Iron Co. v. Harbison, 183 U. S. 13, 46 L. ed. 55, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427.

II. Or unconstitutionally interfere with the right to pursue a lawful occupation, for:

A man has no right to engage in or pursue any calling, the proper prosecution of which requires a certain amount of technical knowledge or professional skill, the lack of which may result in material injury to the public or individuals, which can be controlled in all cases, or, in proper cases, to be taken away by state legislation.

Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 53, 49 L. ed. 940, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133; Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 31 L. ed. 508, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 804, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 32 L. ed. 352, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 238, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28; Olsen v. Smith, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 68 S. W. 320, 195 U. S. 332, 49 L. ed. 224, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 52; 1 Tiedeman, State & Federal Control of Persons & Property, p. 242.

The legislature, having the power to prevent unqualified men from pursuing the occupation of conductors, had also the power to classify and the power to prescribe the one qualification of prior service.

Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465; 31 L. ed. 508, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 804, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 32 L. ed. 352, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 238, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28; Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 122, 123, 32 L. ed. 626, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231; Watson v. Maryland, 218 U. S. 173, 54 L. ed. 987, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644; Jones v. Brim, 165 U. S. 180, 183, 41 L. ed. 677, 678, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 282, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 547; Hawker v. New York, 170 U. S. 191, 193, 197, 198, 42 L. ed. 1004, 1006, 1007, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 573; Re County-Seat of Linn County, 15 Kan. 528; Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. 333, 379, 18 L. ed. 366, 370; Re Admission to the Bar, 61 Neb. 58, 84 N. W. 611; Wilson's Application, 9 Pa. Dist. R. 102; Re Dunn, 43 N. J. L. 359, 39 Am. Rep. 600; A. B.'s Application, 4 Johns. 191; Anonymous, 3 Wend. 450; Ex parte Sayre, 7 Cow. 368; Com. ex rel. Brackenridge v. Cumberland County, 1 Serg. & R. 187; Re Admission to Practice, 14 S. D. 429, 85 N. W. 992; Re Lockwood, 154 U. S. 116, 38 L. ed. 929, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1082; Williams v. People, 121 Ill. 84, 11 N. E. 881; State v. Creditor, 44 Kan. 565, 21 Am. St. Rep. 306, 24 Pac. 346; State v. Vandersluis, 42 Minn. 129, 6 L.R.A. 119, 43 N. W. 789; Bradwell v. Illinois, 16 Wall. 130, 21 L. ed. 442.

When the validity of a statute is questioned, the burden of proof, so to speak, is upon those who assert it to be unconstitutional. If the end which the legislature seeks to accomplish be one to which its power extends, although not the wisest or best, and yet not plainly and palpably unauthorized by law, the court cannot interfere.

M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 421, 4 L. ed. 579, 605.

The presumption is in favor of the validity of the statute; the legislature must be permitted a wide discretion as to the selection of the means to the end.

License Cases, 5 How. 504, 12 L. ed. 256; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 28 L. ed. 1145, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730.

When a state legislature has declared that, in its opinion, public policy requires a certain measure, its action should not be disturbed under the 14th Amendment unless the court can clearly see that there is no fair reason for the law that would not require with equal force its extension to others whom it leaves untouched.

Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. May, 194 U. S. 267, 48 L. ed. 971, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638.

Regulations respecting the pursuit of a lawful trade or business are of very frequent occurrence in the various cities of the country, and what such regulations shall be and to what particular trade, business, or occupation they shall apply, are questions for the state to determine, and their determination comes within the proper exercise of the police power by the state; and unless the regulations are so utterly unreasonable and extravagant in their nature and purpose that the property and personal rights of the citizen are unnecessarily, and in a manner wholly arbitrary, interfered with or destroyed without due process of law, they do not extend beyond the power of the state to pass, and they form no subject for Federal interference.

Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 183, 188, 44 L. ed. 725, 728, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 633.

And the courts, in passing upon the validity of a statute, should hold strongly to the presumption that the legislature had, in the enactment of the police regulation under inquiry, the sole desire and intention of thereby promoting the public health, comfort, and safety by the prohibition of some act injurious thereto. If the statute admits of two constructions, one of which is a reasonable exercise of the police power and the other is unreasonable, in that it promotes or does not promote the public interests, the former construction should be adopted, and the statute sustained as a constitutional exercise of the police power.

Digitized by Google

People ex rel. Nechamcus v. Warden, 144 N. Y. 529, 27 L.R.A. 718, 39 N. E. 686; 1 Tiedeman, State & Federal Control of Persons & Property, p. 235.

Mr. Justice Lamar delivered the opinion of the court:

W. W. Smith, the plaintiff in error, a man forty-seven years of age, had spent twenty-one years in the railroad business. He had never been a brakeman or a conductor, but for six years he served as fireman, for three years ran as extra engineer on a freight train, for eight years was engineer on a mixed train, hauling freight and passengers, and for four years had been engineer on a passenger train of the Texas & Gulf Railway. On July 22, 1910, he acted as conductor of a freight train running between two Texas towns on that road. There is no claim in the brief for the state that he was not competent to perform the duties of that position. On the contrary, it affirmatively and without contradiction appeared that the plaintiff in error, like other locomotive engineers, was familiar with the duties of that position, and was competent to discharge them with skill and efficiency. He was, however, found guilty of the offense of violating the Texas statute which makes it unlawful for any person to act† as conductor of a freight train without having [636] previously served for two years as conductor or brakeman on such trains. On that verdict he was sentenced to pay a fine, and the judgment having been affirmed, the case is here on a record in which he contends that the statute under which he was convicted violated the provisions of the 14th Amendment.

1. Life, liberty, property, and the equal protection of the law, grouped together in the Constitution, are so related that the deprivation of any one of those separate and independent rights may lessen or extinguish the value of the other three. In so far as a man is deprived of the right to labor, his liberty is restricted, his capacity to earn wages and acquire property is lessened, and he is denied the protection which the law affords those who are permitted to work. Liberty means more than freedom from servitude, and the constitutional guaranty is an assurance that the citizen shall be protected in the right to use his powers of mind and body in any lawful calling.

If the service is public, the state may prescribe qualifications and require an examination to test the fitness of any person to engage in or remain in the public calling. Re Lockwood, 154 U. S. 116, 38 L. ed. 929, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1082; Hawker v. New York, 170 U. S. 189, 42 L. ed. 1002, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 573; Watson v. Maryland, 218 U. S. 173, 54 L. ed. 987, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644. The private employer may likewise fix standards and tests, but, if his business is one in which the public health or safety is concerned, the state may legislate so as to exclude from work in such private calling those whose incompetence might cause injury to the public. But, as the public interest is the basis of such legislation, the tests and prohibition should be enacted with reference to that object, and so as not unduly to "interfere with private business, or impose unusual and unnecessary restrictions upon lawful occupations." Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 137, 38 L. ed. 388, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499.

A discussion of legislation of this nature is found in Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 98, 32 L. ed. 353, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 238, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28, where this court sustained the validity of a statute which required [637] all locomotive engineers to submit to an examination for color blindness, and then provided that those unable to distinguish signals should not act as engineers on railroad trains. That statute did not prevent any competent per-†Sec. 2. If any person shall act or engage to act as a conductor on a railroad train in this state without having for two (2) years prior thereto served or worked in the capacity of a brakeman or conductor on a freight train on a line of railroad, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $500, and each day he so engages shall constitute a separate offense.

Sec. 3. If any person shall knowingly engage, promote, require, persuade, prevail upon, or cause any person to do any act in violation of the provisions of the two preceding sections of this act, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $500, and each day he so engages shall constitute a separate offense. [Tex. Laws 1909, chap. 46.]

Digitized by Google

son from being employed, but operated merely to exclude those who, on examination, were found to be physically unfit for the discharge of a duty where defective eyesight was almost certain to cause loss of life or limb. Another case cited by the plaintiff in error is that of Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. ed. 623, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231. The act there under review provided that no one except licensed physicans should be allowed to practise medicine, and declared that licenses should be issued by the state board of health only to those (1) who were graduates of a reputable medical college; (2) to those who had practised medicine continuously for ten years; or (3) to those who, after examination, were found qualified to practice. Ten years' experience was accepted as proof of fitness, but such experience was not made the sole test, since the privilege of practising was attainable by all others who, by producing a diploma or by standing an examination, could show that they were qualified for the performance of the duties of the profession. In answer to the contention that the act was void because it deprived the citizen of the liberty to contract and the right to labor, the court said no objection could be raised to the statutory requirements "because of their stringency or difficulty. It is only when they have no relation to such calling or profession, or are unattainable by such reasonable study and application, that they can operate to deprive one of his right to pursue a lawful vocation."

The necessity of avoiding the fixing of arbitrary tests by which competent persons would be excluded from lawful employment is also recognized in Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 480, 31 L. ed. 508, 513, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 804, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564. There the act provided that all engineers should secure a license, and in sustaining the [638] validity of the statute the court pointed out that the law "requires that every locomotive engineer shall have a license, but it does not limit the number of persons who may be licensed, or prescribe any arbitrary conditions of the grant." This and the other cases establish, beyond controversy, that, in the exercise of the police power, the state may prescribe tests and require a license from those who wish to engage in or remain in a private calling affecting the public safety. The liberty of contract is, of course, not unlimited; but there is no reason or authority for the proposition that conditions may be imposed by statute which will admit some who are competent and arbitrarily exclude others who are equally competent to labor on terms mutually satisfactory to employer and employee. None of the cases sustains the proposition that, under the power to secure the public safety, a privileged class can be created and be then given a monopoly of the right to work in a special or favored position. Such a statute would shut the door, without a hearing, upon many persons and classes of persons who were competent to serve, and would deprive them of the liberty to work in a calling they were qualified to fill with safety to the public and benefit to themselves.

2. The statute here under consideration permits those who had been freight conductors for two years before the law was passed, and those who for two years have been freight conductors in other states, to act in the same capacity in the state of Texas. But barring these exceptional cases, the act permits brakemen on freight trains to be promoted to the position of conductor on a freight train, but excludes all other citizens of the United States from the right to engage in such service. The statute does not require the brakeman to prove his fitness, though it does prevent all others from showing that they are competent. The act prescribes no other qualification for appointment as conductor than that for two years the [639] applicant should have been a brakeman on a freight train, but affords no opportunity to any others to prove their fitness. It thus absolutely excludes the whole body of the public, including many railroad men, from the right to secure employment as conductor on a freight train.

For it is to be noted that under this statute, not only the general public, but also four classes of railroad men, familiar with the movement and operation of trains, and having the same kind of experience as a brakeman, are given no chance to show their competency, but are arbitrarily denied the right to act as conductors. The statute excludes firemen and engineers of all trains, and all brakemen and conductors of passenger trains. But no reason is suggested why a brakeman on a passenger train should be denied the right to serve in a position that the brakeman on a freight train is permitted to fill. Both have the same class of work to do, both acquire the same familiarity with rules, signals, and methods of moving and distributing cars, and if the training of one qualifies him to serve as conductor, the like training of the other should not exclude him from the right to earn his living in the same occupation.

It is argued in the brief for the state that, in practice, brakemen on freight trains are generally promoted to the position of freight conductors, and then to the position of conductors on passenger trains. And yet, under this act, even passenger conductors of the greatest experience and highest capacity would be punished if they acted as freight conductors without having previously been brakemen.

Digitized by Google

The statute not only prevents experienced and competent men in the passenger service from acting as freight conductors, but it excludes the engineer on a freight train,—even though, under the rules of all railroads, the freight engineer now acts as conductor in the event the regular conductor is disabled en route. This general custom [640] is a practical recognition of their qualification, and is founded on the fact that the engineer, by virtue of his position, is familiar with the rules and signals relating to the train's movement, and peculiarly qualified for the performance of the duties of conductor. If we cannot take judicial knowledge of these facts, the record contains affirmative proof on the subject. For, according to the testimony† of the state's witness, "acting as engineer on [641] a freight train would better acquaint one with the knowledge of how to operate a freight train than acting as brakeman." And yet, though at least equally competent, the engineer is denied the right to serve as conductor, and the exclusive right of appointment and promotion to that position is conferred upon brakemen.

3. So that the case distinctly raises the question as to whether a statute, in permitting certain competent men to serve, can lay down a test which absolutely prohibits other competent men from entering the same private employment. It would seem that to ask the question is to answer,—and the answer in no way denies the right of the state to require examinations to test the fitness and capacity of brakemen, firemen, engineers, and conductors to enter upon a service fraught with so much of risk to themselves and to the public. But all men are entitled to the equal protection of the law in their right to work for the support of themselves and families. A statute which permits the brakeman to act,—because he is presumptively competent,—and prohibits the employment of engineers and all others who can affirmatively prove that they are likewise competent, is not confined to securing the public safety, but denies to many the liberty of contract granted to brakemen, and operates to establish rules of promotion in a private employment.

If brakemen only are allowed the right of appointment to the position of conductors, then a privilege is given to them which is denied all other citizens of the United States. If the statute can fix the class from which conductors on freight trains shall be taken, another statute could limit the class from which brakeman and conductors on passenger trains could be selected, and so, progressively, the whole matter as to who could enter the railroad service, and who could go from one position to another, would be regulated by statute. In the nature of the case, promotion is a matter of private business management, and [642] should be left to the carrier company, which, bound to serve the public, is held to the exercise of diligence in selecting competent men, and responsible in law for the acts of those who fill any of these positions.

4. There was evidence that Smith safely and properly operated the train which had in it cars containing freight destined for points in Texas, Missouri, Oklahoma, and Kansas. But in view of what has been said it is not necessary to consider whether the

†I understand the railroad business, and know that a locomotive engineer learns as much about how a freight train should be operated by a conductor as a brakeman or conductor. Acting as engineer on a freight train will better acquaint one with a knowledge of how to operate a freight train than acting as brakeman. Under the rules of all railroads, and of the Texas & Gulf Railway Company, the engineer is held equally responsible with the conductor for the safe operation of the train. All orders are given to the engineer as well as to the conductor. Every order sent to a conductor in a train is made in duplicate, and one copy of it is given to the conductor and the other to the engineer. It is a rule with railway companies that if anything should happen to disable the conductor, or in any way prevent his proceeding with his train, the engineer is to immediately take charge of the train and handle it into the terminal. The engineer is constantly with the train and knows all of the signals, knows how the couplings are made, knows how the cars are switched and distributed, and knows how they are taken into the train and transported from one place to another. An engineer is so constantly associated with all the work of a conductor on a freight train that he should know as much about how a freight train should be operated by a conductor as the conductor himself. All actions of the conductor that pertain to the safe operation of the train are being carried on in his presence and within his observation all the time. The matter of handling the way bills and ascertaining the destinations of the cars in his train is easy and plain, and it does not take a person that has had experience as a conductor to understand that part of his service. The way bills are plainly written and the destinations plainly given, and booking the way-bills and delivering them with the cars is clerical, and can be done by anyone that can read and write and who has ordinary sense. Every act that is to be done by the engineer, and all of the conductor's acts with reference to this are in the view and observation of the engineer.

Digitized by Google

plaintiff, as engineer, was in a position to raise the point that, under the decision in the Adams Express Case (Barrett v. New York, 232 U. S. 14, ante, 483, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 203) the statute interfered with interstate commerce. The judgment is reversed and the case remanded to the Court of Criminal Appeals of the State of Texas for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Reversed.

Mr. Justice Holmes dissents.

MISSOURI, KANSAS, & TEXAS RAILWAY COMPANY OF TEXAS, Plff. in Err.,
v.
L. C. CADE.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 642–652.)

Statutes — who may assail validity.

1. One against whom judgment was rendered upon a claim which did not arise out of interstate commerce may not urge the invalidity under the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution and the interstate commerce act of February 4, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 379, chap. 104, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3154), and its amendments, of Texas Laws 1909, p. 93, allowing a reasonable attorney's fee to the successful plaintiff in a suit upon a claim against "any person or corporation doing business in this state, for personal services rendered, or for labor done, or for material furnished, or for overcharges on freight or express, or for any claim for lost or damaged freight, or for stock killed or injured by such person or corporation, its agents or employees," where the claim was not paid within thirty days after demand, and the recovery is for the full amount claimed.

[For other cases, see Statutes, I. d, 3, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Costs and fees — allowing attorney's fee to successful plaintiff.

2. The Federal Supreme Court will not, in the absence of a controlling decision by the state courts, limit to natural persons the benefit of the provisions of Texas Laws 1909, p. 93, allowing a reasonable attorney's fee to the successful plaintiff in a suit upon a claim against "any person or corporation doing business in this state, for personal services rendered, or for labor done, or for material furnished, or for overcharges on freight or express, or for any claim for lost or damaged freight, or for stock killed or injured by such person or corporation, its agents or employees," where the claim was not paid within thirty days after demand, and the recovery is for the full amount claimed.

[For other cases, see Costs and Fees, IV., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Statutes — who may assail validity.

3. The validity of the provisions of Texas Laws 1909, p. 93, allowing an attorney's fee to the successful plaintiff in suits upon certain designated claims not paid within thirty days after demand, where the recovery is for the full amount claimed, may not be assailed by a defendant upon the ground that natural persons only may avail themselves of its benefits.

[For other cases, see Statutes, I. d, 3, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Constitutional law — equal protection of the laws — allowing attorney's fee to successful plaintiff.

4. There is no denial of the equal protection of the laws, contrary to U. S. Const., 14th Amend., in the provisions of Texas Laws 1909, p. 93, for the allowance of a reasonable attorney's fee of not over $20 to the successful plaintiff in a suit in which an attorney is actually employed upon a claim not exceeding $200, against "any person or corporation doing business in this state, for personal services rendered, or for labor done, or for material furnished, or for overcharges on freight or express, or for any claim for lost or damaged freight, or for stock killed or injured by such person or corporation, its agents or employees," where such claim is not paid within thirty days after demand, and the recovery is for the full amount claimed, since this statute makes no classification of debtors, and the kinds of claims included cover a wide range, and do not appear to have been grouped for the purpose of bearing against any class or classes of citizens or corporations.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, IV. a, 6, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Constitutional law — equal protection of the laws — allowing attorney's fee to successful plaintiff.

5. The mere fact that attorneys' fees are allowed by Texas Laws 1909, p. 93, to successful plaintiffs only, and not to successful defendants, does not involve a denial of the equal protection of the laws, contrary to U. S. Const. 14th Amend., if the classification is otherwise reasonable.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, IV. a, 6, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Constitutional law — due process of law — allowing attorney's fee to successful plaintiff.

6. Due process of law is not denied, contrary to U. S. Const., 14th Amend., by the provisions of Texas Laws 1909, p. 93, for the allowance of a reasonable attorney's

---

NOTE.—On validity of statutory provision for attorneys' fee—see notes to Builders' Supply Depot v. O'Connor, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 910; and Louisville Safety Vault & T. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 14 L.R.A. 586.

On unconstitutional inequality or discrimination in statutes allowing attorneys' fees—see note to Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Dobney, 47 L. ed. U. S. 821.

As to who may raise objection that statute contains an unconstitutional discrimination—see note to Pugh v. Pugh, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 954.

Digitized by Google

fee of not over $20 to the successful plaintiff in a suit in which an attorney is actually employed upon a claim not exceeding $200 against "any person or corporation doing business in this state, for personal services rendered, or for labor done, or for material furnished, or for overcharges on freight or express, or for any claim for lost or damaged freight, or for stock killed or injured by such person or corporation, its agents or employees," where such claim is not paid within thirty days after demand, and the recovery is for the full amount claimed.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, IV. b, 4, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 522.]

Submitted February 24, 1914. Decided May 11, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Justice Court, Precinct No. 7, of Dallas County, in the State of Texas, to review a judgment allowing an attorney's fee to the successful plaintiff in a suit upon a claim not paid after demand. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Joseph M. Bryson and Aldis B. Browne submitted the cause for plaintiff in error. Messrs. Alexander S. Coke and A. H. McKnight were on the brief:

The statute in question is void because in conflict with that provision of § 1 of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States which guarantees the equal protection of the laws.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 43 L. ed. 909, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. (Cotting v. Godard) 183 U. S. 79, 46 L. ed. 92, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Southern R. Co. v. Greene, 216 U. S. 400, 54 L. ed. 536, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 287, 17 Ann. Cas. 1247; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Central R. Co. v. Murphey, 196 U. S. 194, 49 L. ed. 444, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 218, 2 Ann. Cas. 514.

The act violates that provision of § 1 of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States which prohibits the taking of property without due process of law.

Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. (Cotting v. Godard) 183 U. S. 109, 46 L. ed. 108, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Wynne, 224 U. S. 354, 56 L. ed. 790, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 102, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 227 U. S. 88, 57 L. ed. 431, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; Bradley v. Richmond, 227 U. S. 481, 57 L. ed. 605, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 318; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Polt, 232 U. S. 165, ante, 554, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301.

No appearance for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Pitney delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought in the justice court to recover the sum of $10.75 alleged to be due as wages from the defendant (now plaintiff in error) to the plaintiff below, with an attorney's fee of $9. The fee was claimed only by virtue of an act of the legislature, approved March 19, 1909, Laws, p. 93, now forming arts. 2178 and 2179, Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. 1911. Defendant specially excepted to this part of plaintiff's claim, on the ground that the act was invalid as constituting a burden upon interstate commerce, contrary to the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution and the act to regulate commerce and amendments thereof, and as violating the "equal protection" and "due process" clauses of the 14th Amendment. Notwithstanding these contentions, judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff for the amount claimed, including the attorney's fee. Under the local practice, no appeal lies from a decision of the justice court to a higher state court in a case involving less than $20, and so the judgment is brought directly here by writ of error for a review of the Federal questions.

The statute in question (including its caption) is set [646] forth in the margin.† This is the same act that was held invalid under the state Constitution by the court of civil appeals in Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Loyd, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 132 S. W. 899, because of which decision this court, in Gulf, C. & [647] S. F. R. Co. v. Dennis, 224 U. S. 503, 56 L. ed. 860, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 542, reversed a judgment that included an attorney's fee, without passing upon the question whether †"An Act to Regulate the Presentation and Collection of Claims for Personal Services or for Labor Rendered or for Material Furnished, or for Overcharges in Freight or Express, or for Any Claim for Lost or Damaged Freight, or for Stock Killed or Injured by Any Person or Corporation, against Any Person or Corporation Doing Business in This State, and Providing a Reasonable Amount of Attorney's Fees to be Recovered, in Cases Where the Amount of Such Claims Shall Not Exceed Two Hundred ($200) Dollars, and Declaring an Emergency.

"Section 1. That hereafter any person in the act contravened the 14th Amendment. And see Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Thorn, 227 U. S. 675, 57 L. ed. 699, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 327. Since that time the supreme court of Texas, overruling the decision in the Loyd Case, has upheld the act under the Texas Constitution, in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Mahaffey, 105 Tex. 394, 150 S. W. 881. We must therefore now consider the Federal questions.

Digitized by Google

But first, we should note the construction placed upon the act by the state court of last resort. Section 35 of article 3 of the Constitution of 1876 declares that no bill except appropriation bills shall contain more than one subject, which shall be expressed in its title; "but if any subject shall be embraced in an act, which shall not be expressed in the title, such act shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be so expressed." In the case last mentioned (105 Tex. 394, 398), the court construed the act as limited in its operation to the purpose expressed in the title; that is, as relating only to the collection of claims not exceeding $200 in amount, and as conferring no right upon persons having claims exceeding that amount which did not exist independently of the act. In reaching this conclusion, the court said: "Surely, the legislature did not intend to limit attorney's fees to $20 in a case involving $1,000, and there is no apparent reason for allowing additional attorney's fees of $20 in a case involving so large an amount, but there is a sound reason for allowing and limiting the amount of fee on small claims. If the claim be $200 or less, and suit must be instituted, which makes an attorney necessary, it is a heavy tax on the claimant; therefore, if he present a just demand which is refused, the recovery of the full amount claimed shows that the demand of payment should have [648] been granted, and this law compels one refusing payment of such demand to pay the cost and attorney's fees, not to exceed $20. The limitation of the amount of the fee to $20 and to cases in which an attorney has been actually employed practically implies that such action might be prosecuted without an attorney, which in effect limits the amount of the claim to $200 because the only court in which suits of that character could be instituted by nonprofessional claimants, without the services of an attorney, is that of justice of the peace, whose jurisdiction cannot exceed $200; therefore, the limitation in the caption is in effect the same as that of the body of the law, because the proviso in the law can be harmonized with the title by no other construction."

So far as the present attack is founded upon the commerce clause and the act to regulate commerce, it is sufficient to say that the judgment under review was not based upon a claim arising out of interstate commerce, and hence plaintiff in error does not bring itself within the class with regard to whom it claims the act to be in this respect repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Seegers, 207 U. S. 73, 76, 52 L. ed. 108, 109, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28; Tyler v. Registration Ct. Judges, 179 U. S. 405, 409, 45 L. ed. 252, 254, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206; Hooker v. Burr, 194 U. S. 415, 419, 48 L. ed. 1046, 1050, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 706; New York ex rel. Hatch v. Reardon, 204 U. S. 152, 160, 51 L. ed. 415, 422, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 188, 9 Ann. Cas. 736; Southern R. Co. v. King, 217 U. S. 524, 534, 54 L. ed. 868, 871, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Standard Stock Food Co. v. Wright, 225 U. S. 540, 550, 56 L. ed. 1197, 1201, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 784; Rosenthal v. New York, 226 U. S. 260, 271, 57 L. ed. 212, 217, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27; this state, having a valid, bona fide claim against any person or corporation doing business in this state, for personal services rendered, or for labor done, or for material furnished, or for overcharges on freight or express, or for any claim for lost or damaged freight, or for stock killed or injured by such person or corporation, its agents or employees, may present the same to such person or corporation, or to any duly authorized agent thereof, in any county where suit may be instituted for the same; and if, at the expiration of thirty days after the presentation of such claim, the same has not been paid or satisfied, he may immediately institute suit thereon in the proper court and if he shall finally establish his claim, and obtain judgment for the full amount thereof, as presented for payment to such person or corporation in such court, he shall be entitled to recover the amount of such claim and all costs of suit, and in addition thereto a reasonable amount as attorney's fees, provided he has an attorney employed in the case, not to exceed twenty ($20) dollars, to be determined by the court or jury trying the case; provided, however, that nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal or in any manner affect any provision of the law now in force giving a remedy to persons having claims of the character mentioned in this act, but the same shall be considered as cumulative of all other remedies given to such a person or persons.

---

"Sec. 2. The fact that there is no law now in force in this state providing an effectual remedy for persons having such claims as are mentioned in this act creates an emergency and an imperative public necessity requiring the suspension of the constitutional rule requiring bills to be read on three several days, and this act shall take effect from and after its passage, and it is so enacted.

"Approved March 13, 1909."

Digitized by Google

Farmers' & M. Sav. Bank v. Minnesota, 232 U. S. 516, 530, ante, 706, 713, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 354; Plymouth Coal Co. v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 531, 544, ante, 713, 719, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 359.

Upon the other questions, plaintiff in error relies chiefly upon Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255. In that case a previous act of the legislature of Texas (act of April 5, 1889, Laws p. 131; Supp. to Sayles's Tex. Civ. Stat. art. 4266a; p. 768) was held repugnant to the 14th Amendment. That act [649] allowed the recovery of plaintiff's attorneys' fees in certain classes of cases, but only where the defendant was a railroad company, and it was adjudged to be invalid because it singled out a particular class of debtors, and imposed this burden upon them, without any reasonable ground existing for the discrimination. The classification was held to be arbitrary, because having no relation to the special privileges granted to this class of corporations, or to the peculiar features of their business, distinguishing Missouri P. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 29 L. ed. 463, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1110.

The present statute, however, differs in essential features. It applies to claims "against any person or corporation doing business in this state for personal services rendered or for labor done, or for material furnished, or for overcharges on freight or express, or for any claim for lost or damaged freight, or for stock killed or injured by such person or corporation, its agents or employees." There is here no classification of debtors; the act bears equally against individuals and against corporations of any class doing business in the state. It applies only to certain kinds of claims; but these cover a wide range, and do not appear to have been grouped together for the purpose of bearing against any class or classes of citizens or corporations. Unless something of this sort did appear, we should not be justified in holding the act to be repugnant to the 14th Amendment. It is a police regulation designed to promote the prompt payment of small claims and to discourage unnecessary litigation in respect to them. The claims included appear to be such as are susceptible of being readily adjusted by the party responsible, within the thirty days that must intervene between the presentation of the claim and the institution of suit. We may imagine that some other kinds of claims might as well have been included; but it is to be presumed that the legislature was dealing with an actual mischief, and made the act as broad in its scope as seemed [650] necessary from the practical standpoint. As has been said before, the 14th Amendment does not require that state laws shall be perfect; and we cannot judicially denounce this act as based upon arbitrary distinctions, in view of the wide discretion that must necessarily reside in a state legislature about resorting to classification when establishing regulations for the welfare of those for whom they legislate. Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 293, 42 L. ed. 1037, 1042, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 562, 43 L. ed. 552, 554, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton, 218 U. S. 36, 52, 54 L. ed. 921, 927, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 84, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 676; Lindsley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co. 220 U. S. 61, 78, 55 L. ed. 369, 377, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 337, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 160.

It is insisted that the benefits of the act are conferred upon natural persons only; but this we cannot concede, in the absence of a decision by the courts of the state, giving to it a construction thus limited. Plymouth Coal Co. v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 531, 546, ante, 359, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 359. And besides, plaintiff in error is not in a position to assail the legislation on the ground that corporation plaintiffs are not included within its benefits. Rosenthal v. New York, 226 U. S. 260, 271, 57 L. ed. 212. 217, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27.

If the classification is otherwise reasonable, the mere fact that attorney's fees are allowed to successful plaintiffs only, and not to successful defendants, does not render the statute repugnant to the "equal protection" clause. This is not a discrimination between different citizens or classes of citizens, since members of any and every class may either sue or be sued. Actor and reus differ in their respective attitudes towards a litigation; the former has the burden of seeking the proper jurisdiction and bringing the proper parties before it, as well as the burden of proof upon the main issues; and these differences may be made the basis of distinctive treatment respecting the allowance of an attorneys' fee as a part of the costs. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 43 L. ed. 909, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Dobney, 189 U. S. 301, 304, 47 L. ed. 821, 825, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565; McMullin v. Doughty, 68 N. J. Eq. 776, 781, 55 Atl. 115, 284, 64 Atl. 1134.

[651] Even were the statute to be considered as imposing a penalty upon unsuccessful defendants in cases within its sweep, such penalty is obviously imposed as an incentive to prompt settlement of small but well-founded claims, and as a deterrent of groundless defenses, which are the more oppressive where the amount involved is small. In Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Seegers, 207 U. S. 73, 77, 52 L. ed. 108, 110, 28 Sup. Ct.

Digitized by Google

Rep. 28, the court sustained a state enactment that imposed a fixed penalty of $50 upon common carriers, to be recovered by the party aggrieved, for failure to promptly adjust and pay claims for loss or damage to property while in the carrier's possession. In Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Jackson Vinegar Co. 226 U. S. 217, 219, 57 L. ed. 193, 194, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40, we upheld a state enactment that imposed a penalty of $25 in addition to actual damages for failure to settle claims for lost or damaged freight within a limited time after written notice of the loss. And in Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Anderson, decided April 13, 1914, 233 U. S. 325, ante, 983, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 599, we upheld the imposition of double damages in cases admitting of special treatment.

But we think it is not correct to consider this statute as imposing a penalty. The allowance is confined to a reasonable attorney's fee, not exceeding $20, where an attorney is actually employed; the amount to be determined by the court or jury trying the case. Manifestly, the purpose is merely to require the defendant to reimburse the plaintiff for a part of his expenses not otherwise recoverable as "costs of suit." So far as it goes, it imposes only compensatory damages upon a defendant who, in the judgment of the legislature, unreasonably delays and resists payment of a just demand. The outlay for an attorney's fee is a necessary consequence of the litigation, and since it must fall upon one party or the other, it is reasonable to impose it upon the party whose refusal to pay a just claim renders the litigation necessary. The allowance of ordinary costs of suit to the [652] prevailing party rests upon the same principle. 2 Bacon, Abr. title Costs. Numerous cases in the state courts have sustained similar legislation. Vogel v. Pekoc, 157 Ill. 339, 344, 346, 30 L.R.A. 491, 42 N. E. 386; Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey, 82 Iowa, 312, 340, 12 L.R.A. 436, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 584, 31 Am. St. Rep. 477, 48 N. W. 98; Cameron v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 63 Minn. 384, 388, 31 L.R.A. 553, 65 N. W. 652; Wortman v. Kleinschmidt, 12 Mont. 316, 330, 30 Pac. 280. If a reasonable penalty may be imposed for failure to satisfy a demand found to be just, it follows a fortiori that costs and an attorney's fee may be. See Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 105, 43 L. ed. 909, 913, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Dobney, 189 U. S. 301, 304, 47 L. ed. 821, 825, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565.

For these reasons, it seems to us that the statute in question is not repugnant to either the "equal protection" or the "due process" clauses of the 14th Amendment.

Judgment affirmed.

ENNIS WATERWORKS, Plff. in Err.,
v.
CITY OF ENNIS.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 652–658.)

Error to state court — frivolousness of Federal question.

The contention that contract rights under a municipal ordinance were impaired by subsequent ordinances is so unsubstantial and frivolous as to afford no basis for a writ of error from the Federal Supreme Court to a state court, to review a judgment adverse to such contention, where the state court, in deciding that the original ordinance was void, merely applied the settled rule of state law existing when such ordinance was adopted.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1110–1137, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 305.]

Argued May 1 and 4, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Texas to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals of that state, affirming a judgment of the District Court of Ellis County in favor of a municipality in a suit to avoid a contract arising out of a municipal ordinance. Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

See same case below, 105 Tex. 63, 144 S. W. 930.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. G. C. Groce argued the cause, and, with Mr. Jack Beall, filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Rhodes S. Baker argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error.

NOTE.—On the general subject of writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4 L. ed. U. S. 97; Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884; and Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

On what adjudications of state courts can be brought up for review in the Supreme Court of the United States by writ of error to those courts—see note to Apex Transp. Co. v. Garbade, 62 L.R.A. 513.

On how and when questions must be raised and decided in a state court in order to make a case for writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States—see note to Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. McGrew, 63 L.R.A. 33.

On necessity of color of merit in Federal question to sustain writ of error to state court—see note to Offield v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 51 L. ed. U. S. 231.

Mr. Chief Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

In March, 1909, the city of Ennis passed an ordinance which purported to be a contract with A. M. Morrison, the owner of a waterworks system in the city, granting to him for the term of thirty years the privilege of supplying water to the city and its inhabitants from certain lakes or reservoirs owned by the city. Morrison accepted the ordinance and assigned his rights to the Ennis Water Works, the plaintiff in error. In April, 1909, the city passed an ordinance declaring that Morrison and the Ennis Water Works had derived no rights from the supposed contract made with them because the ordinance purporting [655] to confer such rights was originally void, and directing suit to be brought "to adjudicate the nullity of said claim of franchise and to regain for the city its rights in the premises." Suit was then brought to have it decreed that the alleged contract with Morrison was void. Pending the suit, and before its decision, in March, 1910, for reasons which the record does not disclose, another ordinance in terms like the previous one was adopted by the city, which was brought into the case by an amendment to the bill. A judgment in favor of the city was affirmed by the court of civil appeals and by the supreme court (105 Tex. 63, 144 S. W. 930). This writ of error is prosecuted upon the assumption that the original ordinance was a contract, and that the decree below gave effect to the subsequent ordinances, thus impairing the obligation of the contract, in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

At the outset our jurisdiction is challenged upon three grounds: 1. Because, even under the assumption that the city ordinances were the sole authority for bringing the suit, those ordinances did not purport in any way to impair the contract if one existed, but simply directed a legal test to be made, and therefore there was no subsequent act of impairment. 2. That even if the ordinances could be treated as impairing the supposed contract, the court below did not decide the case upon any theory that there was power to impair the contract if one existed, but exclusively rested its action upon the independent ground that the original ordinance, at the time of its adoption, was repugnant to the state Constitution, and was therefore void. 3. That even if it be the duty of this court to determine for itself whether the state court rightly concluded that there was originally no contract, nevertheless there is no jurisdiction in this case because the court below, in deciding that there was originally no contract, based its action upon a rule of state law which had been so conclusively [656] determined at the time the alleged ordinance relied on as a contract was adopted, that the assertion that there is a contract right is of so frivolous and unsubstantial a character as to afford no basis for jurisdiction.

The face of the record so clearly manifests the correctness of the third proposition that we pass at once to its consideration. It is apparent on the face of the opinion of the court below that it did not at all rest its conclusion upon original reasoning concerning the asserted contract, but only applied to the decision of that question a doctrine which, long prior to the adoption of the ordinance relied on as a contract, had been announced by the court of last resort of Texas in Brenham v. Brenham Water Co. 67 Tex. 542, 4 S. W. 143, decided in 1887, in which case there was involved a city ordinance which was substantially identical with the one which is here under consideration. Nothing could more conclusively demonstrate this view than does the following excerpt from the opinion of the court below:

"If this court is to adhere to the holding in the Brenham Case, then we are forced to the conclusion that the judgment of the court of civil appeals should be affirmed, for there is no possible theory upon which this case can be distinguished from the Brenham Case. This statement will receive verification by a comparison of the two contracts as set out in the opinions in the two cases."

After pointing out that the doctrine of the Brenham Case was consecrated by other decisions which had followed it, and that the principle of interpretation which it applied could not be said to be clearly erroneous, the court said:

"However, we do not feel called upon to enter into any further discussion of the subject of the nature of the contract in this case, as it has been construed by the Brenham Case, which authority has stood the acknowledged law [657] of this state for twenty-five years. At the time the contract in the case at bar was entered into the Brenham Case had been promulgated for over thirteen years, and had been approved by all the cases theretofore cited. It had placed upon a similar contract a rule of construction and announced the general policy of the law of this state, that was well known to its general people. No rights could have innocently accrued to the plaintiff in error demanding a change of the law to meet a great and imperative necessity. If a harsh rule of construction had been announced, it was not placed under a bushel, but set upon a hill. Such contract had been declared repugnant to the Constitution, and the provisions of that instrument declaring monopolies and perpetuities contrary to the the genius of a free government had received a definite construction."

Digitized by Google

It is insisted, however, that since it is our duty when the assertion is made that contract rights are impaired to determine for ourselves whether or not there was a valid contract, we must hence now determine this controversy by resort to original reasoning without regard to the action of the court below in applying the state rule. But while the premise upon which this contention rests is well founded, the error lies in the deduction which seeks to make it applicable to this case. This is clearly the case, since the doctrine which the premise embodies is subject to this qualification, that where a contract which is relied upon arises from a state law or municipal ordinance having the effect of such law, in interpreting for itself such law or ordinance this court will not give to it a meaning in conflict with the settled rule of the state at the time the law was enacted or the ordinance adopted. In other words, that where we come to consider a contract arising from a state law or ordinance, we will treat it as if there was embodied in their text the settled rule of law which existed in the state at the time the state action relied upon as a [658] contract was taken. Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 20, 27 L. ed. 359, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10; Warburton v. White, 176 U. S. 484, 44 L. ed. 555, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 404; Gulf & S. I. R. Co. v. Hewes, 183 U. S. 68, 46 L. ed. 87, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 26; Freeport Water Co. v. Freeport, 180 U. S. 587, 45 L. ed. 679, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493; Great Southern Fire Proof Hotel Co. v. Jones, 193 U. S. 532, 548, 48 L. ed. 778, 787, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 576.

As by the application of this settled rule the absolute want of foundation for the asserted claim of Federal right appears on the face of the ordinance relied upon, it follows that there was no foundation whatever for the theory upon which the jurisdiction of this court was invoked, and hence it is our duty to dismiss the cause for want of jurisdiction because of the absolutely unsubstantial and frivolous character of the Federal right relied upon.

Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

NATHANIEL W. BOWE,[1] Ann Clay Crenshaw, Ellie W. Putney, and Channing M. Bolton, Plffs. in Err.,

v.

ELIZABETH S. SCOTT, Fred H. Scott, E. T. D. Myers, Jr., and City of Richmond.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 658–665.)

Error to state court — Federal question — decision on non-Federal ground.

1. A judgment of a state court refusing the injunctive relief sought by certain owners of property abutting on a public alley against the enforcement of a municipal ordinance permitting other owners, whose property abutted on both sides of the alley, to close the same along the lines of their property, does not rest upon an independent non-Federal ground, so as to defeat the appellate jurisdiction of the Federal Supreme Court, although the state court based its decision upon the want of right of the plaintiffs to prevent the closing of the alley because such closing was, in any event, a public wrong, which, under the circumstances, the plaintiffs had no right to redress, where the plaintiffs contended that they had such an interest in the property, or were so peculiarly and specially damaged, that they had a right to prevent the closing of the alley which could not be taken

[1] Death of Nathaniel W. Bowe suggested, and appearance of Emma Lewis Bowe, executrix of the last will and testament of Nathaniel, filed and entered on May 6, 1914.

NOTE.—On the general subject of writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4 L. ed. U. S. 97; Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884; and Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

On what adjudications of state courts can be brought up for review in the Supreme Court of the United States by writ of error to those courts—see note to Apex Transp. Co. v. Garbade, 62 L.R.A. 513.

On how and when questions must be raised and decided in a state court in order to make a case for a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States—see note to Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. McGrew, 63 L.R.A. 33.

As to when Federal question is raised in time to sustain the appellate jurisdiction of the Federal Supreme Court over state courts—see note to Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. McGuire, 49 L. ed. U. S. 414.

On error to state court in cases presenting questions of impairment of contract obligations—see note to Osborne v. Clark, 51 L. ed. U. S. 619.

On error to state court in cases involving questions of due process of law—see note to Burt v. Smith, 51 L. ed. U. S. 121.

Digitized by Google

from them without depriving them of their Federal rights.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1465-1528, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Error to state court — Federal question — raising on rehearing.

2. The mere assertion in a state court, in a petition for rehearing, of a right under the Federal Constitution, affords no ground for invoking the appellate jurisdiction of the Federal Supreme Court unless the state court, in dealing with such petition, considers and passes upon the Federal ground therein relied upon.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1292-1310, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Error to state court — Federal question — impairing contract obligations.

3. The averment by owners of property abutting on a public alley that a municipal ordinance permitting the closing of such alley unconstitutionally impairs the obligation of the contract between the municipality and the person who dedicated the land for such alley does not present a substantial Federal question which will serve as the basis of a writ of error from the Federal Supreme Court to a state court, there being no allegation of any contract with the aggrieved parties, or any privity between them and the person making the dedication, who was not before the court.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1673-1716, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Error to state court — Federal question — due process of law.

4. An allegation that a municipal ordinance is void as an attempt to take property without "due process of law" is not sufficient to raise a Federal question which will support a writ of error from the Federal Supreme Court to a state court, where no reference to the Constitution of the United States is made, and no express rights thereunder are asserted, since the contention will be regarded as referable solely to the state Constitution if that Constitution contains a due process of law clause.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1215-1220, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 360.]

Argued May 6, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of Appeals of the State of Virginia to review a decree which affirmed a decree of the Chancery Court of the City of Richmond, in that state, dismissing the bill in a suit to enjoin the enforcement of a municipal ordinance permitting the closing of a public alley. Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

See same case below, 113 Va. 499, 75 S. E. 123.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Richard Evelyn Byrd and David Meade White argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. Legh R. Page and John S. Eggleston argued the cause, and, with Mr. John P. Leary, filed a brief for defendants in error:

The state court gave no effect whatever to the ordinance in question. The state court's decision was exactly what it would have been if such ordinance had never been passed.

Missouri & K. I. R. Co. v. Olathe, 222 U. S. 187, 56 L. ed. 156, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 47; McManus v. O'Sullivan, 91 U. S. 578, 23 L. ed. 390; San Francisco v. Itsell, 133 U. S. 65, 33 L. ed. 570, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 241; Bolling v. Lersner, 91 U. S. 594, 23 L. ed. 366; Eustis v. Bolles, 150 U. S. 361, 37 L. ed. 1111, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; California Powder Works v. Davis, 151 U. S. 389, 393, 38 L. ed. 206, 207, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Dower v. Richards, 151 U. S. 658, 666, 38 L. ed. 305, 308, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 452, 17 Mor. Min. Rep. 704; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 160 U. S. 556, 576, 40 L. ed. 536, 540, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389; Chappell Chemical & Fertilizer Co. v. Sulphur Mines Co. 172 U. S. 465, 471, 43 L. ed. 517, 519, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 265; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 212 U. S. 112, 116, 117, 53 L. ed. 431, 433, 434, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 227; De Saussure v. Gaillard, 127 U. S. 216, 233, 234, 32 L. ed. 125, 128, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1053; Detroit City R. Co. v. Guthard, 114 U. S. 133, 136, 29 L. ed. 118, 119, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 811; M'Kinney v. Carroll, 12 Pet. 66, 70, 9 L. ed. 1002, 1003; Commonwealth Bank v. Griffith, 14 Pet. 56, 58, 10 L. ed. 352, 353; Walker v. Taylor, 5 How. 64, 68, 12 L. ed. 52, 53; Murdock v. Memphis, 20 Wall. 590, 625, 626, 635, 636, 22 L. ed. 429, 440, 441, 444; Bacon v. Texas, 163 U. S. 207, 216, 41 L. ed. 132, 136, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1023; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Louisiana, 185 U. S. 336, 350-352, 46 L. ed. 936, 943, 944, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 691; Lehigh Water Co. v. Easton, 121 U. S. 388, 30 L. ed. 1059, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 916; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Louisiana Sugar Ref. Co. 125 U. S. 18, 29, 30, 31 L. ed. 607, 611, 612, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 741; Smith v. Adsit, 16 Wall. 185, 189, 190, 21 L. ed. 310, 311, 23 Wall. 368, 373, 374, 23 L. ed. 114, 116; Winter v. Montgomery, 156 U. S. 385, 39 L. ed. 460, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 649; Commercial Bank v. Rochester, 15 Wall. 639, 642, 21 L. ed. 117.

The original bill of complaint contains no reference to the 14th Amendment. It is true that the bill charges that the ordinance is void, for the reason, among others, that it is "an attempt to take from your complainants, whose property adjoins and abuts upon the said alley, their rights in and to the said alley, without due process of law." This allegation may refer either to the 5th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, or to § 11 of the Virginia Constitution of 1902, which provides that no person shall be deprived of his property without due process of law. It is submitted that it will not be construed as referring to the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Digitized by Google

Harding v. Illinois, 196 U. S. 78, 49 L. ed. 394, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 176; Miller v. Cornwall R. Co. 168 U. S. 131, 42 L. ed. 409, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 34.

A review of the judgment of a state court is confined to the assignments of error made and passed upon in the judgment of the state court brought here for review. The assignment of errors in this court cannot bring into the record any new matter for consideration.

Harding v. Illinois, supra; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 212 U. S. 112, 115, 116, 53 L. ed. 431, 433, 434, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 227.

It was too late to raise a Federal question upon a petition for rehearing, unless such question was passed upon in ruling upon the petition.

Forbes v. State Council, 216 U. S. 396, 398, 399, 54 L. ed. 534–536, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 295.

Plaintiffs in error have no right to be heard upon the contention that the ordinance in question constitutes a breach of a public trust, and impairs the obligation of a contract. These objections cannot be raised by plaintiffs in error.

Walsh v. Columbus, H. V. & A. R. Co. 176 U. S. 469, 479, 480, 44 L. ed. 548, 553, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 393; Wright v. Columbus, H. V. & A. R. Co. 58 Ohio St. 123, 50 N. E. 442, affirmed in 176 U. S. 481, 44 L. ed. 554, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 398; Lampasas v. Bell, 180 U. S. 276, 283, 284, 45 L. ed. 527, 530, 531, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 368; Tyler v. Registration Ct. Judges, 179 U. S. 405, 406, 45 L. ed. 252, 253, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206; New York ex rel. Hatch v. Reardon, 204 U. S. 152, 160, 51 L. ed. 415, 422, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 188; The Winnebago, 205 U. S. 354, 360, 51 L. ed. 836, 839, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. 111 U. S. 701, 712, 28 L. ed. 569, 573, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663; Williams v. Eggleston, 170 U. S. 304, 42 L. ed. 1047, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617; Phinney v. Sheppard & E. P. Hospital, 88 Md. 633, 42 Atl. 58, 177 U. S. 170, 44 L. ed. 720, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 573; United States v. Illinois C. R. Co. 154 U. S. 225, 238, 239, 38 L. ed. 971, 973, 974, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1015; Chicago v. Union Bldg. Asso. 102 Ill. 395, 40 Am. Rep. 598; Manson v. South Bound R. Co. 64 S. C. 120, 41 S. E. 832; Bancroft v. Bancroft, — Del. Ch. —, 61 Atl. 689; Landes v. Walls, 160 Ind. 216, 66 N. E. 679; Lee v. McCook, 82 Neb. 26, 116 N. W. 955; Davidson v. Baltimore, 96 Md. 509, 53 Atl. 1122; Bryant v. Logan, 56 W. Va. 141, 49 S. E. 21, 3 Ann. Cas. 1011; Mowry v. Providence, 16 R. I. 422, 16 Atl. 511; Brown v. Baldwin, 112 Va. 536, 72 S. E. 143; Culpeper County v. Gorrell, 20 Gratt. 484; Thorne v. Taw Vale R. Co. 13 Beav. 10.

Mr. Chief Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

To an understanding of this case we outline the situation of the property in controversy:

Shafer owned a tract of land which came to be within the limits of the city of Richmond, bounded on the north by Franklin street, on the south by Park avenue, on the east by Shafer and on the west by Harrison streets. He dedicated to public use by deed in due form, which was accepted by the city, a public alley 20 feet wide, crossing from Shafer to Harrison street at a distance of about 150 feet south of Franklin street, the alley being therefore between Franklin and Park avenue. All the plaintiffs but [660] one owned lots fronting on the south side of Franklin street, running back and abutting on this alley. The exception was Bolton, whose property faced on Harrison street and was at the corner of that street and the alley. East of the lots fronting on Franklin street, owned by the plaintiffs in error, that is, nearer Shafer street than were such lots, the defendants in error, Scott and Myers, also owned lots in the south side of Franklin street, running back to the alley. They also owned property back of the alley, and which extended a considerable distance between parallel lines towards Park avenue. The city of Richmond passed an ordinance allowing Scott and Myers to close the alley along the line of their property for a period of thirty years upon the condition that they should not build upon it, that the right to keep it closed should be revocable by the city whenever it deemed best, and that the city should be held harmless for any damage which might be incurred from closing the alley. As the result of this ordinance the direct movement between Harrison and Shafer streets by means of the alley was cut off, but as the right to close only extended along the abutting lines of the Scott and Myers property, the alley remained open along the space where the property of the plaintiffs in error abutted, and hence did not disturb their direct access to Harrison street, and also did not deprive of access to Shafer street, as there were other alleys opening into the 20-foot alley between Harrison street and the point where the alley was closed by which this result could be accomplished.

The plaintiffs in error then began this suit against the defendants in error to enjoin the enforcement of the ordinance on the ground that, as the alley in question had been dedicated to the public by Shafer, and had been accepted by the city, and treated as a public alley for many years, the city was without power to grant the right to close it, and that doing so would wrongfully inflict damage upon [661] the plaintiffs as the owners of the property abutting on the alley for reasons which were fully stated in the bill, and which it is unnecessary here to detail.

Digitized by Google

The prayer was that the ordinance be declared null and void, and for an injunction enjoining the defendants from closing any portion of the said public alley "so as to obstruct the free passage of your complainants and the public through the said alley." Demurrers were sustained by the court of original jurisdiction, among others upon the ground that, "conceding for the moment that the ordinance of the city of Richmond challenged in the bill is wholly void, yet this is an attempt made by private individuals to enjoin a public nuisance where the complainants do not show that they had suffered any special or peculiar damage." The bill was dismissed.

The court of appeals, in affirming the case, said:

"Speaking generally, the obstruction of a public highway is a public nuisance, and the trend of authority is, that an individual cannot maintain a bill to enjoin such nuisance unless he can show that he has suffered, or will suffer therefrom, special and peculiar injury or damage to himself, as distinguished from injury or damage to the general public. Moreover, such special and peculiar injury or damage must be direct, and not purely consequential, and must be different in kind, and not merely in degree, from that sustained by the community at large." [113 Va. 500, 75 S. E. 123.]

And, referring to the opinion of the lower court, it was said:

"The learned chancellor, in a clear and conclusive opinion, shows that though the injury to the plaintiffs, as stated in the bill, may be greater than that sustained by other persons living more remote from the scene of the obstruction, such injury is nevertheless greater in degree only, and not in kind. Therefore, under the authorities, the [662] bill does not state a case of such special injury as would entitle the plaintiffs to an injunction. . . .

"Concurring, as we do, in the ruling of the court sustaining the demurrer to the bill, it becomes unnecessary, and would, in deed, be improper, to express any opinion with respect to the validity of the ordinance, or the right of the public to redress the alleged invasion of their prerogative by prosecution, or other appropriate remedy, for a common nuisance."

The case is here upon the assumption that we have jurisdiction because Federal rights are involved; which hypothesis is challenged by a motion to dismiss which we at once come to consider.

The grounds of the motion are, first, that as the court below rested its decision upon the want of right of the plaintiff to prevent the closing of the alley because such closing was, in any event, a public wrong which, under the circumstances, the complainants had no right to redress, the case below was decided upon a state ground which was independent of any assumed assertion of Federal right, and there is hence no jurisdiction. We do not stop to notice the many authorities which are cited to sustain from many different angles of vision the premise upon which the proposition rests because we think its inapplicability to the case in hand is so obvious that it is unnecessary to do so. This conclusion is evident because, upon the assumption that Federal rights were asserted, the contention of the complainants was that they had such an interest in the property, or were so peculiarly and especially damaged, that they had a right to prevent the closing of the alley which could not be taken from them without depriving them of their Federal rights. This being true, as it undoubtedly is, it follows that the decision of the court below, under the hypothesis stated, amounted to a denial of the existence of the Federal rights which were adequately asserted. And from this it follows that the proposition [663] now relied upon, when rightly considered, comes to this: that jurisdiction to enforce and protect a Federal right obtains in no case where such Federal right has been denied.

Second. It is further urged that, be this as it may, there is no jurisdiction because no assertion of rights under the Constitution was made below until the petition for rehearing, which was too late, and the tardiness of which was not saved by the action of the court, since it simply declined to grant the rehearing without deciding the questions presented as the basis of the request for rehearing. As it is elementary that a mere assertion in a state court of a right under the Constitution of the United States in a petition for rehearing affords no ground for invoking the jurisdiction of this court unless the court below, in dealing with the petition for rehearing, considers and passes upon the Federal ground therein relied upon, we dismiss that subject from view and come to consider whether the record otherwise discloses that a Federal question was so raised below as to support our jurisdiction. The contention that it was can alone rest upon two paragraphs in the bill as originally filed in the trial court; the one, No. 13, to the following effect:

Digitized by Google

"Complainants charge and aver that the said ordinance is null and void because it is in conflict with § 10, article 1, of the Constitution of the United States; that it impairs the obligation of a contract between the said John C. Shafer, who dedicated the land as for a public alley to the city of Richmond, which alley was accepted by the city of Richmond as an alley for public use."

As at best there was no averment in the bill of any contract made with the complainants, or any privity between them and Shafer, it cannot possibly be said that this averment amounted to the assertion of the existence in favor of the complainants of a contract protected by the Constitution from impairment. As the one party to the contract, [664] Shafer, was not before the court, and was not suing either through himself or by anyone qualified to represent him, or having a legal right in his behalf to assert his contract rights, and as the other party to the contract was the city of Richmond, one of the defendants, the entire want of foundation for the assumption that the bill presented a case of impairment of the obligation of a contract within the guaranty of the Constitution of the United States becomes obvious. Besides, we think the conclusion cannot be escaped that when the paragraph in question is considered in the light of the context of the bill, it is conclusively inferable that the averment in the paragraph of an alleged contract between Shafer and the city was not asserted because of the assumed presence of rights under the Constitution in that regard, but solely as a means of stating in another form the want of power in the city to close the alley because, as the result of the contract with Shafer, it was bound to treat it as a public alley and not close it. And this is reinforced by the fact that no reference to any right under the contract clause is found in the opinion of the trial court, that no suggestion by way of amendment making clear the assertion of a Federal right found expression in an application which was made to amend the bill after the case had been decided, that no assertion of such right was contained in the assignments of error for the purpose of the review by the court of appeals, although the paragraph in question was referred to in the argument filed to support the assignments as made, and for the further reason that no intimation whatever is contained in the opinion of the court of appeals that it deemed that a question under the contract clause of the Constitution arose for decision.

The other passage in the bill is found in subdivision "c" of the tenth paragraph, and is as follows: "That the ordinance is an attempt to take from your complainants, whose property adjoins and abuts upon the said alley, [665] their rights in and to said alley without due process of law." But it is settled that such an averment, making no reference to the Constitution of the United States, and asserting no express rights thereunder, is solely referable to the state Constitution, which, in this instance, has a due process clause, and affords no basis whatever for invoking the jurisdiction of this court. Miller v. Cornwall R. Co. 168 U. S. 131, 42 L. ed. 409, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 34; Harding v. Illinois, 196 U. S. 78, 49 L. ed. 394, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 176.

As from what we have said it results that there is no foundation whatever for the claims of Federal right relied upon as the basis for invoking the jurisdiction of this court, since such claims are so wholly unsubstantial and frivolous as to be devoid of any merit, it follows that we have not jurisdiction, and the writ of error must be dismissed.

Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

HECTOR McDONALD and Margaret McDonald, Plffs. in Err.,
v.
OREGON RAILROAD & NAVIGATION COMPANY, Incorporated.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 665-670.)

Error to state court — frivolousness of Federal question.

The contention that the due process of law guaranteed by U. S. Const., 14th Amend., was denied by the action of a court of equity, whose jurisdiction had been invoked by a railway company to enjoin its grantors from interfering with its enjoyment of its right of way after a forfeiture incurred by breach of a condition subsequent, in assessing the damages and transferring the title to the railway company as in an eminent domain proceeding, is so absolutely lacking in merit as not to serve as the basis of a writ of error from the Federal Supreme Court to a state court,—especially where plaintiffs in error, who were defendants in the trial court, did not simply stand upon their rights as defendants, but went further and sought affirmative relief.

NOTE.—On the general subject of writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4 L. ed. U. S. 97; Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Re

Digitized by Google

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1110-1137, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 463.]

Submitted May 4, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Oregon to review a decree which modified a decree of the Circuit Court of Wallowa County, in that state, in favor of defendants in a suit by a railway company to enjoin interference with its right of way by assessing the damages and transferring the title to the railway company as in an eminent domain proceeding. Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

See same case below, 58 Or. 228, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 117, 112 Pac. 413.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. George E. Chamberlain and Will R. King submitted the cause for plaintiffs in error. Mr. Turner Oliver was on the brief:

The state supreme court did act ultra vires and arbitrarily, and in violation of the constitutional rights of the plaintiffs in error, and deprived them of their property without due process of law, when it, on March 14, 1911, deprived them of the right of a jury trial, and, without any evidence as to the damage to them, on that date arbitrarily fixed $700 as damages, and declared that their property belonged from that time to the defendant in error.

Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 45, 38 L. ed. 896, 901, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1108; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 228, 235, 242, 41 L. ed. 982, 984, 986, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; St. Louis. I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 210 U. S. 281, 293, 52 L. ed. 1061, 1067, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 616, 21 Am. Neg. Rep. 464.

If the 7th Amendment applies only to Federal courts, nevertheless when the Oregon Constitution makes the same provision, which is ignored by the state supreme court, and the property of a citizen is taken in defiance of such constitutional inhibition, the citizen is surely deprived of his property without due process of law, and is protected by the 14th Amendment.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 233, 41 L. ed. 983, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 45, 38 L. ed. 901, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1108; Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 11, 27 L. ed. 839, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18.

Due process of law is its regular administration, through courts of justice, by a timely and regular course of proceeding to judgment and execution. As a rule, it includes parties, regular proceedings and a trial, according to the settled course of proceedings.

Den ex dem. Murray v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 18 How. 272, 15 L. ed. 372; Rees v. Watertown, 19 Wall. 107, 22 L. ed. 72; Baker v. Kelley, 11 Minn. 480, Gil. 358; Pearson v. Yewdall, 95 U. S. 294, 24 L. ed. 436; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 46, 38 L. ed. 901, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1108.

There was no Federal question in the case until it was injected into the case by the decision of the Oregon supreme court. It was therefore impossible for such question to have been brought before the supreme court of Oregon for consideration prior to December 20, 1910, because there was no such question in the case. Is this Federal Supreme Court then without jurisdiction to consider a violation of the Constitution by the state supreme court because the Federal question was not raised until after the state supreme court brought it into the case? Or. can a state supreme court deprive this Supreme Court of jurisdiction by not mentioning in its decree the Federal question brought into the case by its own opinion, and pressed upon the consideration of the court by a motion to modify its decree in harmony with the constitutional rights of the plaintiffs in error, and considered by the justices of the supreme court for a whole month before rendering its final unconstitutional decree?

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 228, 41 L. ed. 982, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; Meyer v Richmond, 172 U. S. 82, 92, 43 L. ed. 374, 377, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 106; Williams v. Bruffy, 102 U. S. 248, 26 L. ed. 135; Acme Harvester Co. v. Beekman Lumber Co. 222 U. S. 300, 56 L. ed. 208, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96; San José Land & Water Co. v. San José

Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884; and Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

On what adjudications of state courts can be brought up for review in the Supreme Court of the United States by writ of error to those courts—see note to Apex Transp. Co. v. Garbade, 62 L.R.A. 513.

On how and when questions must be raised and decided in a state court in order to make a case for a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States—see note to Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. McGrew, 63 L.R.A. 33.

On error to state court in cases involving questions of due process of law—see note to Burt v. Smith, 51 L. ed. U. S. 121.

On necessity of color of merit in Federal question to sustain writ of error to state court—see note to Offield v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 51 L. ed. U. S. 231.

Digitized by Google

Ranch Co. 189 U. S. 177, 47 L. ed. 765, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 487.

In the present case, the Federal question was raised on a motion to modify the decree of the supreme court, after its opinion had been filed, but before it had been certified down. The court entertained the motion and considered it only for a month before denying it.

Mallett v. North Carolina, 181 U. S. 589, 45 L. ed. 1015, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 241.

Messrs. W. W. Cotton and Henry W. Clark submitted the cause for defendant in error. Mr. Arthur C. Spencer was on the brief:

Even if a Federal question had been specifically raised in the petition for a rehearing, it would have been too late (Consolidated Turnp. Co. v. Norfolk & O. V. R. Co. 228 U. S. 326, 334, 57 L. ed. 857, 862, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 510), and especially so where the petition for a rehearing was dismissed, and no rehearing was in fact held. Under these circumstances the court has not passed directly upon any constitutional question. It is likewise of no avail for the plaintiffs in error to attempt to raise a Federal question and confer jurisdiction by statements in the assignment of error or writ of error (Hulbert v. Chicago, 202 U. S. 275, 280, 50 L. ed. 1026, 1028, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617; Los Angeles Farming & Mill. Co. v. Los Angeles, 217 U. S. 217, 226, 54 L. ed. 736, 744, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 452).

The specific assignments of error raise only questions which have been many times passed upon by this court adversely to the position necessarily taken thereon by plaintiffs in error. The 5th and 7th Amendments of the Constitution of the United States regulate only action under Federal authority, and are not applicable to and do not constitute a proper basis for an assignment of error upon the review of a decision of a state court in a suit which concerns only action under state authority.

Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 93, 53 L. ed. 97, 103, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 14.

The 14th Amendment contains the only guaranty of the Federal Constitution that due process of law shall be observed by the states and their agencies. But any claim under the 14th Amendment comes too late to confer jurisdiction upon this court where, until the assignments or writ of error, the arguments have been based on state statutes and the state Constitution.

Osborne v. Clark, 204 U. S. 565, 569, 51 L. ed. 619, 626, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 319; Consolidated Turnp. Co. v. Norfolk & O. V. R. Co. 228 U. S. 326, 334, 57 L. ed. 857, 862, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 510.

And in any event a claim of violation of the 14th Amendment cannot be sustained because of irregularities or matters of procedure in the state courts where the parties have been fully heard in the regular course of judicial proceedings (Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 40 L. ed. 91, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 80; Iowa C. R. Co. v. Iowa, 160 U. S. 389, 394, 40 L. ed. 467, 469, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 344), nor for refusal of trial by jury (Iowa C. R. Co. v. Iowa, supra).

Mr. Chief Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in error, hereafter referred to as the railroad company, was plaintiff below, and sued the plaintiffs in error, who were defendants, to enjoin them from interfering with its right of possession of a strip of land constituting a railroad right of way. It was alleged that this strip, which traversed property belonging to the defendants, had been bought from them by the railroad company for a cash price of $600, which was paid, but nevertheless the defendants, asserting some title to the land, were threatening to disturb the railroad in its possession, to tear up a track where laid, and otherwise to prevent the use of the land for the purpose for which it had been bought. The defendants answered, and although [667] admitting that they had sold the land to the railway for a right of way, and had received the stipulated price, nevertheless asserted that they were yet the owners of the property for the following reasons: (a) Because in the deed by which the property was conveyed there was an express condition "that the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company will construct the line of road over the above-described premises within two years from the date hereof." (b) Because while after the deed the railroad had commenced to construct its road, and had graded along the right of way, after doing so it suspended all work so that the two years provided in the deed elapsed without the railroad being built, and therefore all right to the land had been lost, and the defendants had reentered and notified the railroad of the fact.

Averring that the land was "reasonably worth the sum of $1,000 and the plaintiff has not paid the same nor any part thereof, and has not offered to pay defendant anything for said land since its failure to comply with the condition of the deed," the answer prayed not merely the rejection of the plaintiffs' demand and the dissolution of the injunction which had been allowed, but asked substantive relief; that is, that the defendants be decreed to be the owners, and that the complainant be enjoined from in any way interfering with them, and for the awarding of "such other and further relief as shall seem to the court equitable in the premises." After trial at which considerable testimony was taken, among other things, as to the value of the property, the court, holding in favor of the defendants, decided that the railroad, by virtue of its failure to build within the period specified, and the re-entry of the defendants, had lost all right to the land, and therefore that the subsequent action of the railroad in entering upon the land to complete its railroad was a trespass. The injunction which was issued at the inception of the cause was dissolved. On appeal the court below expressly [668] adopted the legal principles which the trial court had applied; that is, the court likewise declared the cause in the deed to be a condition, and decided that the failure of the railroad to comply with its terms had forfeited all its right and title in and to the land. But nevertheless the decree was not affirmed. After expounding its reasons for fully agreeing with the legal conclusions of the trial court, it was said: "So far, then, we have found that defendants were entitled to a forfeiture and that the land has reverted, but we now recur to the remedy. The situation is anomalous. Plaintiff has constructed its road and has it in operation, thereby preforming an important public function for a large and increasing population. . . . It is to the interest of the public that it should continue to do so, and that the defendants should not be allowed to acquire a portion of its roadbed to the detriment of public travel. The condemnation of land for railway purposes is usually the function of a court of law, but there are in this case such special circumstances as to authorize this court to end the whole litigation at once and forever. The pleadings show that this land is needed for the purpose of a railway, and the evidence shows that the railway is actually there on the ground. Defendants come into court, submit themselves to the jurisdiction of equity, and ask affirmative relief. Much of the testimony was devoted to showing the value of the land taken, the effect of the taking on the remainder of the tract, and all those things which are usually shown in an action to condemn for a railroad right of way. Having jurisdiction of this case, we have concluded to assume it for all purposes, and to so modify the decree that plaintiff shall take title to the land described in this strip upon the paying to defendants the damage occasioned by such taking, which we assess at $700, and the costs and disbursements of this suit." [58 Or. 236, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 117, 112 Pac. 413.] Upon the entry of a decree conformably to these views, the defendants asked that the decree be [669] modified so as to confine it to a recognition of their title, and to exclude all its provisions conferring upon the railroad company the right to take the property on paying the adjudged sum. This application was supported by an elaborate argument challenging the right of the court under the state law to exert the power which it had exerted. In none, however, of the elaborate arguments pressed to sustain the motion to modify, was there any reference whatever to any supposed denial by the state court of rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, and for that reason, and because it is insisted that, on the face of the record, it is manifest no Federal question is presented, a motion to dismiss has been made which we come to consider.

Digitized by Google

All the contentions as to Federal rights rest upon the assumption that the court below denied due process of law when it entered the decree complained of, and this is based upon the conception that the court exceeded its jurisdiction and misconceived or wrongfully interpreted the evidence, and thereby in effect, while recognizing the title of the plaintiffs in error, virtually deprived them of the right conferred by the state law of having a common-law trial for the purpose of determining the questions which would require to be decided in case of the exercise by the railroad company of the right of eminent domain, including, of course, the fixing of compensation to be paid for the taking and the damages incident thereto. Leaving aside for the moment the question of the jurisdiction of the court in the fundamental sense, that is, ratione materiæ, it is manifest that the want of foundation for all the propositions insisted upon is quite clear, since, after all, taking the aspect most favorable for the plaintiffs in error, the propositions but assert that the court below, in deciding the case, committed error as to matters involving no Federal question because purely of state cognizance. It is elementary and needs no citation of authority to show that [670] the due process clause of the 14th Amendment does not control methods of state procedure or give jurisdiction to this court to review mere errors of law alleged to have been committed by a state court in the performance of its duties within the scope of its authority concerning matters non-Federal in character. So far as the contentions addressed themselves to the subject-matter of jurisdiction, it is clear that they do not deny jurisdiction in the sense of the fundamental absence of any and all right to take cognizance of the cause, but are confined to jurisdiction in the sense of the duty to rightfully decide subjects to which judicial power extends. In this aspect the error of all the contentions is within the principle announced in Castillo v. McConnico, 168 U. S. 674, 42 L. ed. 622, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 229.

Digitized by Google

But, aside from the reasons just stated, the absolute want of merit in the Federal right asserted becomes doubly apparent when it is observed that the plaintiffs in error, who were defendants in the trial court, did not simply stand upon their rights as defendants, but went further and sought affirmative relief at its hands, and could only be now heard to deny all power by being permitted to deny the right to exert the very jurisdiction which they invoked.

Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

---

[671] ERIE RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 671–685.)

Commerce — state regulation of hours of railway employees — congressional action.

1. The subject of the hours of labor of the employees of interstate railway carriers using the telegraph or telephone in connection with the movement of trains is so far removed from the field of state regulation by the hours of service act of March 4, 1907 (34 Stat. at L. 1415, chap. 2939, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1321), as to invalidate the provisions of N. Y. Laws 1897, chap. 415, as amended by Laws 1907, chap. 627, prescribing a still shorter day's work for block system, telegraph, and telephone operators and signal men on railroads, as applied to a telegraph operator of a railway carrier engaged in both interstate and intrastate commerce, who is employed to space trains by the use of the telegraph under the block system, and to report trains to other offices and to train despatchers.

[For other cases, see Commerce, I. c; III., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Commerce — state regulation of hours of railway employees — congressional action.

2. Congress has so acted upon the subject of the hours of labor of interstate railway employees by enacting the hours of service act of March 4, 1907, as to preclude a state, during the period between the date of that act and the time when, by its express terms, it should go into effect, from making or enforcing as to such employees a local regulation limiting hours of labor.

[For other cases, see Commerce, I. c; III., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 266.]

Argued April 24 and 27, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of New York in and for the County of Rockland in that state to review a judgment entered pursuant to the mandate of the Court of Appeals, which reversed a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Second Department, which had reversed a judgment of the Trial Term of the Supreme Court, penalizing a railway company for violating the state law relative to hours of labor of employees. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

See same case below, in appellate division, 135 App. Div. 767, 119 N. Y. Supp. 873; in court of appeals, 198 N. Y. 369, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 240, 139 Am. St. Rep. 828, 91 N. E. 849, 19 Ann. Cas. 811.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Frederic D. McKenney argued the cause, and, with Mr. George F. Brownell, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

As Congress by the hours of service act of March 4, 1907, had completely regulated the hours of labor of railway employees concerned with the movements of trains, including those making use of the telegraph or telephone for that purpose, the law of the state of New York from the date of its passage was void and of no effect as to all such employees engaged in or performing duties in connection with interstate commerce. And this is so notwithstanding that the prohibitions of the Federal law, by the terms of the act itself, only became effective one year after the date of its passage; that is to say, on March 4, 1908.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Washington, 222 U. S. 370, 56 L. ed. 237, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 160; Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 505, 506, 57 L. ed. 314, 319, 320, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148; McDermott v. Wisconsin, 228 U. S. 115, 131, 132, 57 L. ed. 754, 765, 766, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 984, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Hackett, 228 U. S. 559, 567, 57 L. ed. 966, 969, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; Minnesota Rate Cases (Simpson v. Shepard) 230 U. S. 352, 399, 400, 57 L. ed. 1511, 1541, 1542, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1151, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729; State v. Missouri P. R. Co. 212 Mo. 658, 111 S. W. 500; State v.

NOTE.—On state regulation of relations between railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce and their employees—see notes to State v. Missouri P. R. Co. 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 134; People v. Erie R. Co. 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 240.

On the validity of legislation regulating hours of labor—see notes to People v. Orange County Road Constr. Co. 65 L.R.A. 33; Atkin v. Kansas, 48 L. ed. U. S. 148.

Digitized by Google

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 136 Wis. 407, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 326, 117 N. W. 686.

Mr. Wilber W. Chambers argued the cause, and, with Mr. Thomas Carmody, Attorney General of New York, and Mr. Claude T. Dawes, filed a brief for defendant in error:

The statute in question was a valid enactment upon the ground that it was within the reserved power of the state to amend corporate charters.

Adirondack R. Co. v. New York, 176 U. S. 335, 44 L. ed. 492, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 460; New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 556, 567, 38 L. ed. 269, 272, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437; People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 1, 2 L.R.A. 255, 7 Am. St. Rep. 684, 18 N. E. 692; Greenwood v. Union Freight R. Co. 105 U. S. 13, 26 L. ed. 961; Lord v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 194 N. Y. 212, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 420, 87 N. E. 443; New York, C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Williams, 199 N. Y. 108, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 549, 139 Am. St. Rep. 850, 92 N. E. 404; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Paul, 173 U. S. 404, 409, 43 L. ed. 746, 748, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 419; State v. Brown & S. Mfg. Co. 18 R. I. 16, 17 L.R.A. 856, 25 Atl. 246; Berea College v. Kentucky, 211 U. S. 45, 53 L. ed. 81, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 33.

This court will follow the New York court of appeals in its finding that the state legislation in question was enacted under its reserved control over a corporation created by it.

Adirondack R. Co. v. New York, 176 U. S. 335, 44 L. ed. 492, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 460; Elmendorf v. Taylor, 10 Wheat. 152, 159, 6 L. ed. 289, 292; Forsyth v. Hammond, 166 U. S. 506, 518, 41 L. ed. 1095, 1100, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 665; Covington v. Kentucky, 173 U. S. 231, 237, 43 L. ed. 679, 681, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Schaefer v. Werling, 188 U. S. 516, 47 L. ed. 570, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 449.

Although the state act affects to some extent the operation of interstate commerce, it is none the less local in its character.

Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 31 L. ed. 508, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 804, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 32 L. ed. 352, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 238, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28; Southern R. Co. v. King, 217 U. S. 524, 54 L. ed. 868, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. New York, 165 U. S. 628, 41 L. ed. 853, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. James, 162 U. S. 650, 40 L. ed. 1105, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934; Hennington v. Georgia, 163 U. S. 299, 41 L. ed. 166, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1086; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Fuller, 17 Wall. 560, 21 L. ed. 710; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 677, 40 L. ed. 849, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 714; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Solan, 169 U. S. 133, 42 L. ed. 688, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 289; Richmond & A. R. Co. v. R. A. Patterson Tobacco Co. 169 U. S. 311, 42 L. ed. 759, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 335; Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 45 L. ed. 194, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 115; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 179 U. S. 388, 45 L. ed. 244, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 101; Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Mississippi, 133 U. S. 587, 33 L. ed. 784, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 801, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 348; Erb v. Morasch, 177 U. S. 584, 44 L. ed. 897, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 819; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Illinois, 177 U. S. 514, 516, 44 L. ed. 868, 869, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 722.

Congress, under its commerce power, may, by occupying the entire field of regulation of hours of service on interstate railroads, render nugatory, with respect to that subject, a state's police power or its local power over interstate commerce.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 677, 702, 40 L. ed. 849, 859, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 714; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 613, 623, 42 L. ed. 878, 881, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 488; Sinnot v. Davenport, 22 How. 227, 243, 16 L. ed. 243, 248; Tua v. Carriere, 117 U. S. 201, 29 L. ed. 855, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hefley, 158 U. S. 98, 39 L. ed. 910, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 802; Northern P. R. Co. v. Washington, 222 U. S. 370, 378, 56 L. ed. 237, 239, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 160.

But not the state's power over its own corporations, which continues and gives force to a state statute regulating hours of service except at those points of conflict with the Federal commerce law.

Gladson v. Minnesota, 166 U. S. 427, 430, 41 L. ed. 1064, 1065, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 627; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 285, 43 L. ed. 702, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 465.

The statute under discussion is a direct aid to the purpose of the Federal statute, and should be sustained upon the analogy of those cases in which the exercise of a state police power has been construed to be an additional benefit to the state, with no injury to the Federal legislation.

Reid v. Colorado, 187 U. S. 137, 47 L. ed. 108, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 506; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 613, 42 L. ed. 878, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 488; Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 45 L. ed. 194, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 115; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Arkansas, 219 U. S. 453, 55 L. ed. 290, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 275; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Michigan R. Commission, 231 U. S. 457, ante, 310, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152.

Digitized by Google

The state act having been enacted under the reserved power of the state of New York over one of its corporations, and there being no conflict or repugnance between it and the Federal act, the state act should be held to be valid.

Reid v. Colorado, 187 U. S. 137, 47 L. ed. 108, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 506.

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

Action for penalty, brought by the people of the state of New York against defendant in error, herein called the railroad company, for an alleged violation of the labor law of the state, entitled, "An Act in Relation to Labor, Constituting Chapter Thirty-two of the General Laws," as amended by chapter 627 of the Laws of 1907.†

[676] It is alleged that at the times hereinafter mentioned the railroad company was a corporation under the laws of the state of New York, and was and is operating a line of railroad in the state of New York, in Rockland county and [677] other counties, extending from Piermont to Dunkirk, both in that state.

The following facts are also alleged: The railroad company, in violation of § 7a of the labor law, required and permitted one David Henion, a telegraph operator, to be on duty more than eight hours, that is, from 7 o'clock, A. M. to 7 o'clock, P. M., on the 1st day of November, 1907, in the railroad company's tower at Sterlington, in the county of Rockland, New York, there being no extraordinary emergency caused by accident, fire, flood, or danger to life or property.

His duty was to space trains by the use of the telegraph under what is known and termed the "block system," and to report trains to another office or offices and to train despatchers, whose duties pertain to the movement of cars, engines, and trains on the company's railroad, by the use of the telegraph.

There passed over the tracks of the railroad company on the day named more than eight regular passenger trains each way.

Judgment is prayed in the sum of $100.

The answer of the railroad company admits its incorporation and that it is operating a railroad as alleged, but alleges that its road extends from Jersey City, New Jersey, to Suffern, New York, and from Salamanca, New York, to Marion, state of Ohio, and elsewhere, passing through New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio, †"Section 1. Chapter 415 of the laws of 1897, entitled, 'An Act in Relation to Labor, Constituting Chapter Thirty-two of the General Laws,' is hereby amended by adding a new section after § 7 thereof, to be § 7a, to read as follows:

"Section 7a. Regulation of hours of labor of block-system telegraph and telephone operators and signalmen on surface, subway, and elevated railroads.—The provisions of § 7 of this chapter shall not be applicable to employees mentioned therein. It shall be unlawful for any corporation or receiver, operating a line of railroad, either surface, subway, or elevated, in whole or in part, in the state of New York, or any officer, agent, or representative of such corporation or receiver to require or permit any telegraph or telephone operator who spaces trains by the use of the telegraph or telephone under what is known and termed the 'block system' (defined as follows): Reporting trains to another office or offices or to a train despatcher operating one or more trains under signals, and telegraph or telephone levermen who manipulate interlocking machines in railroad yards or on main tracks out on the lines, or train despatchers in its service whose duties substantially, as hereinbefore set forth, pertain to the movement of cars, engines, or trains on its railroad by the use of the telegraph or telephone in despatching or reporting trains or receiving or transmitting train orders as interpreted in this section, to be on duty for more than eight hours in a day of twenty-four hours, and it is hereby declared that eight hours shall constitute a day of employment for all laborers or employees engaged in the kind of labor aforesaid; except in cases of extraordinary emergency caused by accident, fire, flood, or danger to life or property, and for each hour of labor so performed in any one day in excess of such eight hours, by any such employee, he shall be paid in addition at least one eighth of his daily compensation. Any person or persons, company or corporation, who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, shall, on conviction, be fined in the sum not less than $100, and such fine shall be recovered by an action in the name of the state of New York, for the use of the state, which shall sue for it against such person, corporation, or association violating this act, said suit to be instituted in any court in this state having appropriate jurisdiction. Such fine, when recovered as aforesaid, shall be paid without any deduction whatever, one half thereof to the informer, and the balance thereof to be paid into the free school fund of the state of New York. The provisions of this act shall not apply to any part of a railroad where not more than eight regular passenger trains in twenty-four hours pass each way; provided, moreover, that where twenty freight trains pass each way generally in each twenty-four hours, then the provisions of this act shall apply, notwithstanding that there may pass a less number of passenger trains than hereinbefore set forth, namely, eight.

"Section 2. This act shall take effect October 1st. 1907."

Digitized by Google

and that at all times mentioned in the complaint it was and is now engaged in interstate commerce and the transportation of persons, goods, and merchandise by railroad from one state of the United States to other states of the United States, and to foreign countries.

[678] It admits that the company required and permitted Henion to work as charged, but alleges that the cars, engines, and trains that he was engaged in spacing and reporting were engaged in interstate commerce.

That the labor law of the state violates the 5th and 14th Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, as applied to Henion and other employees in the same class of work, in that it deprives both the railroad company and Henion of the liberty of contract and of property without due process of law, and of the equal protection of the laws.

The answer also set up in defense the Federal "hours of service" act approved March 4, 1907, in force one year after its passage (34 Stat. at L. 1415, chap. 2939, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1321), entitled, "An Act to Promote the Safety of Employees and Travelers upon Railroads by Limiting the Hours of Service of Employees Thereon."

The law, among other things, authorizes the employment of employees such as Henion was, for nine hours in twenty-four-hour periods when employed night and day, and for thirteen hours when employed only during the daytime, and, in case of extraordinary emergency, to be on duty for four additional hours in such period on not exceeding three days in any week.†

[679] The answer also alleges that the jurisdiction of Congress is exclusive, and that the labor law of 1907 is in excess of the power of the legislature of the state of New York and unconstitutional and void, in that it is an attempt to regulate commerce between the states.

A jury was waived and the case tried by the court, which found the facts as alleged in the complaint, and that upon the trains which passed the tower at Sterlington there "were passengers whose journey commenced and ended in the state of New York, and did not extend into any other state, and some of said trains carrying passengers and property from one point to another in the state of New York."

As a conclusion of law the court found that the railroad company violated the law, had incurred a penalty of $100 by so doing, and that § 7a of the law "is valid and its provisions do not violate and are not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States or the Constitution of the state of New York."

Upon the request of the railroad company the court also found the facts of the interstate character of the railroad as alleged in the answer, and that Henion was employed as alleged, and found a number of other facts concerning the manner of operating the "block system" and the duties of Henion. There were also findings relative to the labor law, the penal law, so called, and the act of Congress of March 4, 1907. The findings only serve to emphasize the defenses of the company, and need not be set out at length.

The court also made the following findings:

"That at all times mentioned in the complaint, or hereinafter mentioned, the defendant was, and now is, engaged in interstate commerce, and the transportation of persons, [680] goods, and merchandise by railroad from one state of the United States to other states of the United States.

"On that day [the day Henion was employed] there were fourteen eastbound and twelve westbound passenger trains, and twelve eastbound and fifteen westbound freight trains, which passed the Sterlington tower during said twelve hours.

"On November 1st, 1907, a majority of the trains which the said David Henion was engaged in spacing and reporting were engaged in interstate commerce or in the transportation of passengers, persons, or property from one state to another."

The court refused to find—"That on November 1, 1907, said David Henion, in the performance of his duties, was an employee of the defendant, engaged in interstate commerce."

The court further found that the effect of the labor law "was materially to in-†"Sec. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, its officers or agents, subject to this act, to require or permit any employee subject to this act to be or remain on duty for a longer period than sixteen consecutive hours. . . .

"Provided, That no operator, train despatcher, or other employee who, by the use of the telegraph or telephone, despatches, reports, transmits, receives, or delivers orders pertaining to or affecting train movements, shall be required or permitted to be or remain on duty for a longer period than nine hours in any twenty-four-hour period in all towers, offices, places, and stations continuously operated night and day, nor for a longer period than thirteen hours in all towers, offices, places, and stations operated only during the daytime, except in case of emergency, when the employees named in this proviso may be permitted to be and remain on duty for four additional hours in a twenty-four-hour period on not exceeding three days in any week; . . ."

Digitized by Google

crease the cost to the Erie Railroad Company of operating the 'Block System.'"

Judgment was entered for the penalty sued for. It was reversed by the appellate division, and a new trial granted, the court deciding that the jurisdiction of the subject-matter was exclusively in Congress and was exercised by the hours of service law of March 4, 1907.

The court of appeals reversed the action of the appellate division and affirmed the judgment of the trial court. The court of appeals rested its decision on three propositions: (1) The labor law of the state was a legal exercise of the police power of the state. (2) There was no conflict between it and the act of Congress of March 4, 1907. "The state," the court said, "has simply supplemented the action of the Federal authorities. It is the same as if Congress had enacted that the classes of employees named might be employed for nine hours or less, and the state had then fixed the lesser number, which was left open by the Federal statute. The form of the latter [681] fixed the outside limit, but not expressly legalizing employment up to that limit, fairly seems to have invited and to have left the subject open for supplemental state legislation if necessary." (3) A statute does not become controlling until it actually becomes operative; and that therefore, even if it should be decided that there was a conflict between the Federal and the state legislation after the former became effective, as the act of Congress did not take effect until March 4, 1908, in the meantime the state law was in operation.

The propositions decided by the court of appeals express the contentions made here by defendant in error, and they are attempted to be supported by a citation of a number of cases in which this court has sustained legislation by the states more or less affecting interstate commerce. A review of them is unnecessary. Whatever difficulty may otherwise have been in the questions presented by the record has been met and overcome by decisions more apposite than the cited cases. The relative supremacy of the state and national power over interstate commerce need not be commented upon. Where there is conflict, the state legislation must give way. Indeed, when Congress acts in such a way as to manifest its purpose to exercise its constitutional authority, the regulating power of the state ceases to exist. Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 57 L. ed. 314, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148, and cases cited. Also Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Hardwick Farmers' Elevator Co. 226 U. S. 426, 57 L. ed. 284, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 203, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 174; Chicago I. & L. R. Co. v. Hackett, 228 U. S. 559, 57 L. ed. 966, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; McDermott v. Wisconsin, 228 U. S. 115, 57 L. ed. 754, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 984, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Minnesota Rate Cases (Simpson v. Shepard) 230 U. S. 352, 57 L. ed. 1511, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1151, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729; Taylor v. Taylor, 232 U. S. 363, ante, 638, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350.

This is the general principle. It was given application to an instance like that in the case at bar in Northern P. R. Co. v. Washington, 222 U. S. 370, 56 L. ed. 237, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 160. The case arose upon an asserted conflict between the hours of service law of March 4, 1907, the one involved here, and a law of the state of Washington which also regulated the hours [682] of railway employees. The latter became effective June 12, 1907; that is, before the time the Federal hours of service law was in force, but after its enactment. The state act resembled the Federal act, and prohibited the consecutive hours of service which had taken place on the Northern Pacific Railroad, and on account of which the action was brought by the attorney general of the state against the company for the penalties prescribed for violation of the act. The railroad company admitted the facts, but denied liability under the act, asserting that its train was an interstate train and was not subject to the control of the state, because within the exclusive control of Congress on that subject. The trial court granted a motion for judgment on the pleadings, which was affirmed by the supreme court of the state. That court held that the train was an interstate train, and conceded that Congress might prescribe the number of consecutive hours an employee of a carrier so engaged should be required to remain on duty; and when it is so legislated upon the subject, its act superseded any and all state legislation on that particular subject. But the court held that the act of Congress did not apply because of its provision that it should not take effect until one year after its passage, and until such time it should be treated as not existing.

We reversed the judgment on the ground that the view expressed was not "compatible with the paramount power of Congress over interstate commerce," and we considered it elementary that the police power of the state could only exist from the silence of Congress upon the subject, and ceased when Congress acted or manifested its purpose to call into play its exclusive power. It was further said that the mere fact of the enactment of the act of March 4, 1907, was a manifestation of the will of Congress to bring the subject within its control, and to reason that because Congress chose to make its prohibitions take effect only after a year, it was intended to leave the subject to state [683] power, was to cause the act of Congress to destroy itself. There was no conceivable reason, it was said, for postponing the prohibitions if it was contemplated that the state law should apply in the meantime. The reason for the postponement, it was pointed out, was to enable the railroads to meet the new conditions.

Digitized by Google

The reasoning of the opinion and the decision oppose the contention of defendant in error and of the court of appeals, that the state law and the Federal law can stand together, because, as expressed by the court of appeals, "the state has simply supplemented the action of the Federal authorities," and, on account of special conditions prevailing within its limits, has raised the limit of safety; and the form of the Federal statute, although "not expressly legalizing employment up to that limit, fairly seems to have invited and to have left the subject open for supplemental state legislation if necessary."

We realize the strength of these observations, but they put out of view, we think, the ground of decision of the cases, and, indeed, the necessary condition of the supremacy of the congressional power. It is not that there may be division of the field of regulation, but an exclusive occupation of it when Congress manifests a purpose to enter it.

Regulation is not intended to be a mere wanton exercise of power. It is a restriction upon the management of the railroads. It is induced by the public interest or safety, and the "hours of service" law of March 4, 1907, is the judgment of Congress of the extent of the restriction necessary. It admits of no supplement; it is the prescribed measure of what is necessary and sufficient for the public safety, and of the cost and burden which the railroad must endure to secure it.

Defendant in error attempts to distinguish Northern P. R. Co. v. Washington, on the ground that the state was dealing with a corporation organized [684] under the laws of another state, and, the state of Washington had no power to alter or repeal its charter. This power, it is contended, the state of New York has over the Erie Railroad, and exercised the power in the law under review, and that the court of appeals has so decided. It is asserted besides, that Henion was not engaged in interstate commerce. These assertions are not justified. The court of appeals did not decide that the labor law constituted an alteration or repeal of the charter of the company. The learned judge who delivered the opinion of the court expressed such to be his view, saying that "if the statute violated is a valid exercise of the power, personally" he was "not doubtful that under its reserved control over corporations the legislature might pass such an act in regulation of the performance of the business for which a railroad was organized."

It is clear that the learned judge did not express the views of the court. We have no doubt that if the court entertained such view it would have been declared. It would have been a direct, and, from the standpoint of the state, an adequate, solution of the questions involved, and would have made unnecessary the elaborate consideration of the extent of the police power of the state and its coincident exercise and adjustment with congressional power of regulation. The contention of defendant in error, therefore, has not the foundation asserted for it, and we may pass it without further comment, not considering whether it is competent for a state, through its power to alter or repeal the charter of railroads incorporated under its laws, to displace or share the jurisdiction of Congress over interstate commerce.

The assertion that Henion was not engaged in interstate commerce is also without foundation, and is, besides, precluded by the opinion of the court of appeals. The interstate character of the business was recognized by the court, and the law considered in view of such recognition. The [685] court said "that the labor law purports and attempts, indiscriminately and inseparably, to regulate the hours of the classes of employees designated, whether engaged in interstate or local traffic, and that, therefore, its validity must be tested by the power of the legislature over the former." [198 N. Y. 376, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 240, 139 Am. St. Rep. 828, 91 N. E. 849, 19 Ann. Cas. 811.]

The trial court, it is true, undertook to make a distinction between the interstate business of the railroad and Henion's duties, but, in view of the cases which we have cited, and of the decision of the appellate division and of the court of appeals, the distinction is untenable. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 221 U. S. 612, 55 L. ed. 878, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 621; Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. ed. 327, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Digitized by Google

ERIE RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
JOHN WILLIAMS, as Commissioner of Labor of the State of New York.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 685–705.)

Statutes — who may assail validity.

1. A railway company cannot complain for its employees of the repugnancy to the due process of law and equal protection of the laws clauses of the Federal Constitution of the provisions of N. Y. Laws 1897, chap. 415, § 10, as amended by Laws 1908, chap. 442, requiring the semimonthly payment of the wages of railway employees.

[For other cases, see Statutes, I. d, 3, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Constitutional law — due process of law — liberty to contract — requiring semimonthly wage payments — reserved power over corporate charters.

2. The liberty and property of an interstate railway company are not taken without due process of law by the requirement of N. Y. Laws 1897, chap. 415, § 10, as amended by Laws 1908, chap. 442, passed in the exercise of the reserved power of the state over the charters of its corporations, that railway employees shall be paid their wages semimonthly, the effect of which is to prohibit both carrier and employees from contracting otherwise.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, 605–607, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Commerce — state regulation — time of payment of railway employees — congressional inaction.

3. Requiring an interstate railway carrier to pay its employees semimonthly, as is done by N. Y. Laws 1897, chap. 415, § 10, as amended by Laws 1908, chap. 442, does not, until Congress acts upon the subject, amount to an unlawful burden upon interstate commerce, where, as construed by the state courts, such requirement relates to those railway servants who are employed wholly within the state, and those whose duties take them from that state into other states, but not to those employed in other states.

[For other cases, see Commerce, 68–80, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 274.]

NOTE.—On validity and effect of statutes regulating time of payment of wages—see notes to Re House Bill No. 1230, 28 L.R.A. 344; Lawrence v. Rutland R. Co. 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 350; Arkansas Stave Co. v. State, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 255; and New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Williams, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 549.

On state regulation of relations between railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce and their employees—see notes to State v. Northern P. R. Co. 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 134, and People v. Erie R. Co. 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 240.

As to who may raise objection that a statute contains an unconstitutional discrimination—see note to Pugh v. Pugh, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 954.

Argued April 27, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of New York in and for the County of Albany, in that state, entered pursuant to the mandate of the Court of Appeals, which affirmed a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Third Department, which had in turn affirmed a judgment of the Special Term of the Supreme Court, dismissing the complaint in a suit to enjoin the enforcement of a state law requiring semimonthly payment of wages of railway employees. Affirmed.[1]

See same case below, in appellate division, 136 App. Div. 902, 120 N. Y. Supp. 1123; in court of appeals, 199 N. Y. 525, 92 N. E. 1084.

Statement by Mr. Justice McKenna:

Suit brought by plaintiff in error, the Erie Railroad Company (as it was plaintiff below, we shall so designate it), to restrain the defendant in error (herein called defendant) from instituting actions to recover penalties for noncompliance with the provisions of the labor law of the state of New York, which required plaintiff to pay its employees semimonthly and in cash.

The object of the suit is to test the constitutionality of the law.

The bill is very elaborate and alleges with much detail the following facts: Plaintiff is a New York corporation, and defendant is commissioner of labor of the state. Plaintiff maintains a railroad in New York which extends into other states, and operates car floats and other floating equipment, navigating the navigable waters of the United States. These and other equipment are used in the business of plaintiff as a common carrier of persons and property under and in compliance with tariffs duly promulgated and filed under the laws of the state and of the United States; and plaintiff is also a carrier of the United States mails. As a rule, the trains of plaintiff run over an operating division without change of employees. Some of the divisions are interstate and some wholly within the state of New York.

[688] Plaintiff, in carrying out its functions, has in its service upon that portion of its road lying east of Meadville, Pennsylvania, upwards of 15,000 men, who are employed either wholly within or partially within the state of New York, and nearly all of them are employed in the movement of interstate commerce. The great majority of these employees render service in more than one state, and many of them who reside in Pennsylvania or New Jersey render a part of their service in New York, and many who reside in the latter state render service in the other two states. The contracts of employment of many of them were made, and in the future must be made, in states other than New York, in which states they must reside.

[1] Leave granted on June 22, 1914, to present petition for rehearing within thirty days.

Digitized by Google

By the laws of New York plaintiff was vested with its powers as a railroad and to contract and be contracted with for the employment of persons to conduct its operations and enterprises at and for such wages and upon such terms of payment as should or might be mutually agreed on; and thereunder it has been its custom to pay its employees monthly, and thus pay them prior to or on the 20th day of each month the wages earned during the preceding month.

The great majority of plaintiff's employees were in its service prior to January 1, 1908, and all accepted such service with full knowledge of its general and uniform custom so to pay its employees monthly.

Prior to January 1, 1908, there existed and has since existed a contract between plaintiff and its employees that the latter should be paid monthly as stated, and so to pay them, as distinguished from payment twice a month, is not inconsistent with the public interest, or hurtful to the public order, or detrimental to the common good.

Section 4 of the labor law of the state makes it malfeasance in office for any officer, agent, or employee of the state to violate or evade his duty under [689] the law, or knowingly permit the violation or evasion of the act, and he is subject to removal from office.

Section 9† provides that every railroad company and [690] certain other companies shall pay their employees in cash, and no such company shall pay its employees in script, commonly known as store money orders.

Section 10 requires the payment of employees' wages semimonthly.

Section 11 imposes a penalty of $50 for each failure to so pay, to be recovered by the factory inspector in his name of office in a civil action, and limits the defenses to the action to a valid assignment of such wages, a valid set-off against the same, or the absence of such employee from his regular place of labor at the time of the payment, or an actual tender at the time of the payment, or a breach of contract by such employee, or a denial of the employment.

The commissioner of labor is required to enforce the provisions of the law, and notified plaintiff of his intention to do so, and to sue for the penalties imposed by the act. He expressed his opinion of the act to be that each failure to pay the wages of each employee constituted a separate offense, and that the aggregate of the penalties would be $250,000. Plaintiff believes, unless that officer is restrained, that he will exercise his authority under the act.

The employees of plaintiff are distributed over more than 1,819 miles, and the making of the payment of their wages in money semimonthly instead of monthly will impose upon and subject plaintiff to an increased cost and expense of several thousand dollars each month.

The difficulty of semimonthly payments is described, and it is alleged that the drastic and enormous penalties are, by reason of their necessarily aggregate character and effect, so excessive as to evidence legislative intention to unduly limit or prevent judicial inquiry, and practically constrain plaintiff to submit to the statute rather than, by contesting its validity, to take the chances of the penalties it imposes.

That the statute by its terms prevents plaintiff from [691] setting up in defense the contracts existing between it and its employees for the payment of their wages once a month, and that the statute violates, when applied to plaintiff, various provisions of the Constitution of the state and of the United States, and thereby is repugnant to †"Section 9. Cash payment of wages.—Every manufacturing, mining, quarrying, mercantile, railroad, street railway, canal, steamboat, telegraph and telephone company, every express company, every corporation engaged in harvesting and storing ice, and every water company, not municipal, and every person, firm, or corporation engaged in or upon any public work for the state or any municipal corporation thereof, either as a contractor or a subcontractor therewith, shall pay to each employee engaged in his, their, or its business, the wages earned by such employee in cash. No such company, person, firm, or corporation shall hereafter pay such employees in script, commonly known as store money orders. [Laws 1897, chap. 415, as amended by Laws 1908, chap. 443.]

"Section 10. When wages are to be paid.—Every corporation or joint stock association, or person carrying on the business thereof by lease or otherwise, shall pay weekly to each employee the wages earned by him to a day not more than six days prior to the date of such payment. But every person or corporation operating a steam surface railroad shall, on or before the 1st day of each month, pay the employees thereof the wages earned by them during the first half of the preceding month, ending with the 15th day thereof, and on article 3 of the Constitution of the United States and article 6 of the Constitution of the state of New York, in that it is an invasion by the legislative of the judicial power; and it is also repugnant to § 1 of article 14 of the Constitution of the United States, and § 6, article 1, of the Constitution of the state of New York, in that it deprives plaintiff of property without due process of law; and violates § 10, article 1, of the Constitution of the United States, in that it impairs the obligation of contracts. The act in its other provisions deprives plaintiff of property without due process of law, and of the equal protection of the laws. It also interferes with and impairs plaintiff's performance and discharge of its duties as a common carrier in interstate commerce, is not a valid exercise of the police power, and is illegal and unenforceable and void under articles of the Constitution of the state and of the United States, which are enumerated.

Digitized by Google

By the enforcement of the act plaintiff will be subjected to enormous penalties, a multiplicity of suits, and to great and irreparable damage, and plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law.

The answer of the defendant admitted the allegations of the complaint as to the statute, and alleged that he intended to give such notice to plaintiff as to enforcing such penalties as he was required by the law to give and enforce. He denied that he had any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief regarding the truth of the other allegations of the complaint.

A stipulation of facts was entered into by the parties upon which the court entered judgment dismisssing the complaint. The judgment was successively affirmed by [692] the appellate division of the supreme court and by the court of appeals.

The facts stipulated practically sustain the allegations of the answer, and detail the manner of the payment by plaintiff of its employees. The plaintiff also introduced in evidence an exhibit which classified its employees and showed the number of days' work, total compensation and average compensation per day as per pay rolls for the year ending June 30, 1908. Its materiality was contested.

Mr. Frederic D. McKenney argued the cause, and, with Mr. George F. Brownell, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The labor law of New York is repugnant to U. S. Const. 14th Amend. in that it deprives the company of property, and specifically deprives the company and those of its employees to whom it applies of liberty without due process of law.

Wright v. Hart, 182 N. Y. 344, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 338, 75 N. E. 404, 3 Ann. Cas. 263; Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 52 L. ed. 436, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764; Republican Iron & Steel Co. v. State, 160 Ind. 379, 62 L.R.A. 136, 66 N. E. 1005; Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 22 L.R.A. 340, 37 Am. St. Rep. 206, 35 N. E. 62; Johnson v. Goodyear Min. Co. 127 Cal. 4, 47 L.R.A. 338, 78 Am. St. Rep. 17, 59 Pac. 304; Godcharles v. Wigeman, 113 Pa. 431, 6 Atl. 354; San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Wilson, 4 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 565, 19 S. W. 910; Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Long, 169 Ind. 316, 124 Am. St. Rep. 226, 82 N. E. 757.

The conditions under which the legislature, in the exercise of its reserved right to alter and amend corporate charters, may deprive a person (i. e., a corporation) of liberty or property, are substantially the same as those which will justify such a deprivation in the exercise of the police power.

Lord v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 194 N. Y. 212, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 420, 87 N. E. 443; Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S. 319, 24 L. ed. 357; Johnson v. Goodyear Min. Co. 127 Cal. 4, 47 L.R.A. 338, 78 Am. St. Rep. 17, 59 Pac. 304.

The question whether a statute is or is not a valid exercise either of the police power or the power to alter or amend char-or before the 15th day of each month pay the employees thereof the wages earned by them during the last half of the preceding calendar month. [Laws 1897, chap. 415, as amended by Laws 1908, chap. 442.]

---

"Section 11. Penalty for violation of preceding sections.—If a corporation or joint-stock association, its lessee or other person carrying on the business thereof, shall fail to pay the wages of an employee, as provided in this article, it shall forfeit to the people of the state the sum of $50 for each such failure, to be recovered by the factory inspector in his name of office in a civil action; but an action shall not be maintained therefor unless the factory inspector shall have given to the employer at least ten days' written notice that such an action will be brought if the wages due are not sooner paid as provided in this article.

"On the trial of such action, such corporation or association shall not be allowed to set up any defense, other than a valid assignment of such wages, a valid set-off against the same, or the absence of such employee from his regular place of labor at the time of payment, or an actual tender to such employee at the time of the payment of the wages so earned by him, or a breach of contract by such employee, or a denial of the employment." [Laws 1897, chap. 415.]

Digitized by Google

ters is a judicial one, not foreclosed by legislative action.

Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465, 17 N. E. 343; Forster v. Scott, 136 N. Y. 577, 18 L.R.A. 543, 32 N. E. 976; Colon v. Lisk, 153 N. Y. 188, 60 Am. St. Rep. 609, 47 N. E. 302; People v. Hawkins, 157 N. Y. 1, 42 L.R.A. 490, 68 Am. St. Rep. 736, 51 N. E. 257; Beardsley v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 162 N. Y. 230, 56 N. E. 488; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. ed. 858, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565; People ex rel. Rodgers v. Coler, 166 N. Y. 1, 52 L.R.A. 814, 82 Am. St. Rep. 605, 59 N. E. 716; People v. Orange County Road Constr. Co. 175 N. Y. 84, 65 L.R.A. 33, 67 N. E. 129; People v. Williams, 189 N. Y. 131, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1130, 121 Am. St. Rep. 854, 81 N. E. 778; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 49 L. ed. 937, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133.

There are some cases holding to the contrary.

Opinion of Justices (Re House Bill No. 1230) 163 Mass. 589, 28 L.R.A. 344, 40 N. E. 713; State v. Brown & S. Mfg. Co. 18 R. I. 16, 17 L.R.A. 856, 25 Atl. 246; Leep v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 58 Ark. 407, 23 L.R.A. 264, 41 Am. St. Rep. 109, 25 S. W. 75; Lawrence v. Rutland R. Co. 80 Vt. 370, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 350, 67 Atl. 1091, 13 Ann. Cas. 475.

In the interest of uniformity of operation, so necessary to the success of every great transportation enterprise whose field of operation is national in scope and character, the power to regulate the relations between such an employer and its employees, if any regulation be necessary, should be reserved to Congress exclusively.

Robbins v. Taxing Dist. 120 U. S. 489, 30 L. ed. 694, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 592; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 29 L. ed. 158, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 382, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826; Minnesota Rate Cases (Simpson v. Shepard) 230 U. S. 352, 57 L. ed. 1511, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1151, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729.

It cannot well be said that the requirement to pay many thousand employees, located in several states and on board vessels plying the navigable waters of the United States, is a matter of merely local concern.

Minnesota Rate Cases (Simpson v. Shepard) 230 U. S. 352, 398, 57 L. ed. 1511, 1540, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1151, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729.

The excess cost of paying employees twice a month, as distinguished from once a month, and the burden of care, labor, and responsibility imposed by the statute, constitute a direct burden upon interstate commerce and violate the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution.

Foster v. Master & Wardens, 94 U. S. 246, 24 L. ed. 122; Moran v. New Orleans, 112 U. S. 69, 28 L. ed. 653, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 38; Philadelphia & S. Mail S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326, 30 L. ed. 1200, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 308, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1118; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 163 U. S. 142, 41 L. ed. 107, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1096; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Illinois, 177 U. S. 514, 44 L. ed. 868, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 722; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Wharton, 207 U. S. 328, 52 L. ed. 231, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 121; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Texas, 210 U. S. 217, 52 L. ed. 1031, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638.

The statute violates the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and is unconstitutional in that it denies to the employees of the Erie Railroad Company the equal protection of the laws.

Kane v. Erie R. Co. 68 L.R.A. 788, 67 C. C. A. 653, 133 Fed. 686; Bedford Quarries Co. v. Bough, 168 Ind. 671, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 418, 80 N. E. 529; Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Long, 169 Ind. 316, 124 Am. St. Rep. 226, 82 N. E. 757; Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. (Cotting v. Godard) 183 U. S. 79, 46 L. ed. 92, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 158, 41 L. ed. 666, 669, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255.

Mr. Joseph A. Kellogg argued the cause, and, with Mr. Thomas Carmody, Attorney General of New York, and Mr. Wilber W. Chambers, filed a brief for defendant in error:

Legislative acts will be presumed to be constitutional, and if there is any doubt at all, such doubt will be resolved in favor of the validity of such acts.

Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 25 L. ed. 496; Sweet v. Rechel, 159 U. S. 380, 40 L. ed. 188, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 43; Home Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Los Angeles, 211 U. S. 265, 281, 53 L. ed. 176, 186, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50.

These statutes are a proper exercise of the reserved power to amend corporate charters, contained in the Constitution of the state of New York.

Berea College v. Kentucky, 211 U. S. 45, 53 L. ed. 81, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 33; Leep v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 58 Ark. 407, 23 L.R.A. 264, 41 Am. St. Rep. 109, 25 S. W. 75; Adirondack R. Co. v. New York, 176 U. S.

Digitized by Google

176 U. S. 335, 44 L. ed. 492, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 460; New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 556, 567, 38 L. ed. 269, 272, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437; People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 1, 2 L.R.A. 255, 7 Am. St. Rep. 684, 18 N. E. 692; Greenwood v. Union Freight R. Co. 105 U. S. 13, 26 L. ed. 961; Lord v. Equitable Life Assur. Co. 194 N. Y. 212, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 420, 87 N. E. 443.

There is but a single limitation to this general rule of the power to amend charters by the state, enacted under its sovereign power, and that is, the power may not be exercised to destroy property or rights guaranteed by the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution, and by similar provisions of state Constitutions.

St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Paul, 173 U. S. 404, 408, 43 L. ed. 746, 747, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 419.

The reserved power to amend corporate charters is much greater than the police power.

New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 556, 38 L. ed. 269, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437; New York v. Twenty-third Street R. Co. 113 N. Y. 317, 21 N. E. 60; Lord v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 194 N. Y. 212, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 420, 87 N. E. 443.

Regulation of methods of administration or internal management is included within the scope of this reserved power over corporate charters.

Lord v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. supra; Berea College v. Kentucky, 211 U. S. 45, 53 L. ed. 81, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 33; Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 25 L. ed. 496; Spring Valley Waterworks v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347, 28 L. ed. 173, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48.

Only those persons belonging to the class for whose benefit the particular constitutional provision in question was enacted may legally raise the question that the statute violates such provision.

Red River Valley Bank v. Craig, 181 U. S. 548, 558, 45 L. ed. 994, 1000, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 703; New York ex rel. Hatch v. Reardon, 204 U. S. 152, 160, 51 L. ed. 415, 422, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 188, 9 Ann. Cas. 736; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Jackson Vinegar Co. 226 U. S. 217, 57 L. ed. 193, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40.

These statutes are not unconstitutional as an exercise of the reserved power to amend corporate charters even if we should assume, for argument's sake, that they necessarily limited somewhat the freedom of contract of the employees of such corporations.

State v. Brown & S. Mfg. Co. 18 R. I. 16, 17 L.R.A. 856, 25 Atl. 246.

The validity of similar laws has been frequently upheld by the courts of other states and by this court, upon this very ground.

State v. Peel Splint Coal Co. 36 W. Va. 802, 17 L.R.A. 385, 15 S. E. 1000; Leep v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 58 Ark. 407, 23 L.R.A. 264, 41 Am. St. Rep. 109, 25 S. W. 75; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Paul, 64 Ark. 83, 37 L.R.A. 504, 62 Am. St. Rep. 154, 40 S. W. 705; Shaffer v. Union Min. Co. 55 Md. 74, 15 Mor. Min. Rep. 59; Skinner v. Garnett Gold Min. Co. 96 Fed. 744; Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 48 L. ed. 148, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124.

The purposes of these acts are within the limits of the police power as repeatedly defined by the courts.

Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 49 L. ed. 643, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 358, 3 Ann. Cas. 765; People v. Ewer, 141 N. Y. 132, 25 L.R.A. 794, 38 Am. St. Rep. 788, 36 N. E. 4; People ex rel. Nechamcus v. Warden, 144 N. Y. 535, 27 L.R.A. 718, 39 N. E. 686.

In determining whether the legislature properly exercised this power the court will take into consideration all facts of which it has judicial knowledge, including public records or reports, encyclopedias, laws of other states, and the general or commonly accepted belief of the community.

Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 49 L. ed. 643, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 358, 3 Ann. Cas. 765; Knoxville Iron Co. v. Harbison, 183 U. S. 13, 46 L. ed. 55, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; McLean v. Arkansas, 211 U. S. 539, 53 L. ed. 315, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206.

The purpose of these acts is to benefit the community and the public in various ways, arising out of the protection which they afford to the large class of men employed by corporations.

The primary purpose of these laws, of course, is to secure to the laboring men the full value or purchasing power of their wages.

State v. Brown & S. Mfg. Co. 18 R. I. 16, 17 L.R.A. 856, 25 Atl. 246; State v. Peel Splint Coal Co. 36 W. Va. 802, 17 L.R.A. 385, 15 S. E. 1000; Arkansas Stave Co. v. State, 94 Ark. 27, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 255, 140 Am. St. Rep. 103, 125 S. W. 1001.

Nor can there be any valid objection to that part of the statute involved because it applies to corporations, and not to natural persons.

Aluminum Co. v. Ramsey, 222 U. S. 251, 56 L. ed. 185, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 76, 1 N. C. C. A. 184; Mutual Loan Co. v. Martell, 222 U. S. 225, 56 L. ed. 175, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 74, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 529; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton, 218 U. S. 36, 54 L. ed. 921, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 84, 30 Sup. Ct.

Digitized by Google

Rep. 676; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Arkansas, 219 U. S. 453, 55 L. ed. 290, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 275.

Mr. Justice McKenna, after stating the case as above, delivered the opinion of the court:

The contention of plaintiff is that the labor law is repugnant to the 14th Amendment, "in that it deprives the company of property, and specifically deprives the company, and those of its employees to whom it applies, of liberty, without due process of law." The contention may be limited at the outset to the rights of the company. It cannot complain for its employees; and before considering the contention thus limited, it is well to see what meaning or extent the court of appeals gave to the law.

The court decided that the law operates not only to require the railroads to pay their employees semimonthly, but prohibits them from making contracts with their employees which shall vary the time of payment. If this were not the meaning of the law, the court said, neither railroads nor their employees would have any ground of complaint, "as both master and servant would be left at liberty to make any contract they pleased in regard to the time when the servant's wages should be payable and the medium in which they should be paid." This liberty not existing, the court stated the contention of the plaintiff to be that the law deprives it "of the right to make contracts with its employees on advantageous terms, and that this was beyond the power of the legislature." The plaintiff also contended that it was denied the equal protection of the laws.

[698] The opposing contentions were stated to be: (1) The legislation is a proper exercise of the power reserved by the Constitution of the state to amend corporate charters; (2) it constitutes a legitimate exercise of the police power of the state.

The court rejected both contentions of plaintiff, and sustained the law as an exercise of the power over plaintiff's charter; and, adverting to the objection that the requirement of semimonthly payments was an unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce, the court said: "It is to be observed that it [the law] is not in conflict with any legislation by Congress, nor does it affect interstate commerce directly." And, exhibiting the extent of the operation of the law, it was further said: "It relates to the wages of railway servants employed wholly within the state of New York, as well as to the wages of those whose duties take them from this state into others. The subject is one upon which Congress has not undertaken to act." [New York, C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Williams, 199 N. Y. 123, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 549, 139 Am. St. Rep. 850, 92 N. E. 404.]

How far the reserved power of the state over the charters of its corporations was helped out by its police power, the court gave no indication. Indeed, it may be said that, in its reference to the reserved power in reviewing the decisions of other states, the sole ground of its decision was the possession and exercise of such power by the state. The court said:

"There is an irreconcilable conflict in the decisions in different jurisdictions as to the constitutional validity of labor legislation fixing the medium and time of payment of the wages of those who work for corporations. After the foregoing review of the leading cases, I find no difficulty in sustaining our New York statute on the ground which has been stated. It does not confiscate corporate property directly or indirectly. It does impose a greater future burden upon the corporations to which it relates; but that, I think, is within the power of the legislature to the extent to which it has been exercised in this case."

[699] The legislation having been passed in the exercise of the reserved power of the state, is it valid, notwithstanding it prohibits both the plaintiff and its employees from contracting against its provisions? Plaintiff asserts the negative, and attempts to sustain the assertion by a very comprehensive argument in which a number of decisions of this court and of other courts are cited and reviewed. They illustrate by various instances the fundamental and indisputable principle that personal liberty includes the power to make contracts. But liberty of making contracts is subject to conditions in the interest of the public welfare, and which shall prevail—principle or condition—cannot be defined by any precise and universal formula. Each instance of asserted conflict must be determined by itself, and it has been said many times that each act of legislation has the support of the presumption that it is an exercise in the interest of the public. The burden is on him who attacks the legislation, and it is not sustained by declaring a liberty of contract. It can only be sustained by demonstrating that it conflicts with some constitutional restraint, or that the public welfare is not subserved by the legislation. The legislature is, in the first instance, the judge of what is necessary for the public welfare, and a judicial review of its judgment is limited. The earnest conflict of serious opinion does not suffice to bring it within the range of judicial cognizance. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 549, 562, 55 L. ed. 328, 336, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep.

Digitized by Google

259; German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 233 U. S. 389, ante, 1011, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612.

In considering the competency of the legislative judgment and the power the courts have to review it, we may inquire, what is here complained of? What does the labor law of New York do that seriously affects the liberty of plaintiff? It requires cash payments. That requirement is not now resisted. It requires semimonthly payments. Plaintiff now pays monthly. The extent of its grievance, therefore, is two payments a month instead of one, with [700] the consequence of expense and inconvenience. It is hardly necessary to say that cost and inconvenience (different words, probably, for the same thing) would have to be very great before they could become an element in the consideration of the right of a state to exert its reserved power or its police power. New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 556, 38 L. ed. 269, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437; United States v. Union P. R. Co. 160 U. S. 1, 40 L. ed. 319, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 190; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Paul, 173 U. S. 404, 43 L. ed. 746, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 419; Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 45 L. ed. 194, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 115. See also Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 221 U. S. 612, 55 L. ed. 878, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 621.

Putting cost and inconvenience to one side, there would would remain only an abstract right. Taking them into consideration, they constitute the detriment to which plaintiff is subjected by not being able to make the forbidden contracts. It may be admitted an advantage is taken away from plaintiff, or, to put it another way, a burden is imposed upon it. Is it within the power of the state to impose the burden by virtue of its reserved control over plaintiff? The question must be answered as if the requirement of the law was part of the charter of plaintiff, and in such case it would seem certainly that a liberty of contract could not be asserted against it, for it would be a part of the contract accepted and binding on plaintiff,—a liberty exercised precluding a liberty to be exercised, —and it would seem necessarily to be the very essence of the right of amendment reserved that what could have been put in the charter originally, whatever its consequence, can be added to the charter, whatever the consequence of the addition. Of course, we mean what was and is competent for the state to impose; and we are brought to the narrow question whether a regulation of the time and manner of payment by a railroad of its employees is within the competency of the state to require. A negative answer is contended for, the argument urged to support the contention being that a contract right of dealing with its employees [701] is conferred by plaintiff's charter, which right the labor law takes away, and plaintiff is deprived of property because of the expense to which it is subjected, which, it is contended, is not justified by a corresponding public benefit. It would seem, therefore, to be the contention of plaintiff that it acquired by its charter a vested right to deal with its employees according to its own judgment, and, as alleged in its answer, that it was vested with its powers as a railroad and to contract and be contracted with, for the employment of persons to conduct its operations and enterprises at and for such wages and upon such terms of payment as might or should be agreed on. In other words, it is the contention that the rights asserted are of the very essence of its grant, giving it the rights of a natural person, and investing it with the same immunity from control, whether exercised under the police power or the reserved power of amendment. We may, in answering the contention, put aside the rights of natural persons and the rights which might exist under a Constitution which did not reserve control in the state. The effect of the control reserved was to make plaintiff, from the moment of creation, subject to the legislative power of alteration, and, if deemed expedient, of absolute extinguishment as a corporate body. Spring Valley Waterworks v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347, 352, 28 L. ed. 173, 175, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48. And whether expedient or not is a question for the legislature, not for the courts. Id. 357. In other cases the effect of the reserved power of amendment is said to be to make any alteration or amendment of a charter subject to it which will not defeat or substantially impair the object of the grant or any right vested under the grant. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 697, 698, 43 L. ed. 858, 864, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565; Looker v. Maynard, 179 U. S. 46, 52, 45 L. ed. 79, 81, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 21. Surely the manner or time of paying employees does not come within such limitation. It is a matter of pure administration, not comparable in its burden to those sustained in the cases which we have already cited.

[702] In St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Paul, 173 U. S. 404, 43 L. ed. 746, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 419, a law of Arkansas was sustained as an exercise of the reserved power of the state which required a railroad company discharging with or without cause, or refusing to employ, any servant or employee, to pay him his unpaid wages, then earned, at the contract rate, without abatement or deduction, to the date of his discharge, and providing that, if the same be not paid on such day, then, as a penalty for nonpayment, his wages shall continue at the same rate until paid.

Digitized by Google

In New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 556, 38 L. ed. 269, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437, the railroad company was required to remove various grade crossings at its own expense.

In the Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 25 L. ed. 496, legislation requiring the creation of a sinking fund was sustained under the reserved power of amendment, and, after reviewing the cases, the court said "that whatever rules Congress might have prescribed in the original charter for the government of the corporation in the administration of its affairs, it retained the power to establish by amendment." Many other cases might be cited, but to cite them would be to accumulate authorities on a proposition which might well be taken at this late date to be incontestable. Indeed, the contention of defendant that the legislation under review might be supported under the police power of the state has justification in cases.

In Knoxville Iron Co. v. Harbison, 183 U. S. 13, 46 L. ed. 55, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1, a law of the state of Tennessee which required all persons and corporations to redeem in money evidences of indebtedness given to their laborers or employees, in the hands of their laborers, employees, or a bona fide holder, came up for consideration. The Knoxville Coal Company paid its employees in cash and in coal orders. It made money by the practice. There was no proof of an express agreement between the company and its employees that the orders should be paid only in coal, except as implied from [703] accepting the orders, and no proof of an implied agreement except as drawn from the face of the orders and the custom of the company. There was no proof of compulsion except that if the employees did not accept pay in coal orders they had to submit to be in arrears about twenty days, but the company paid in coal orders the whole wages due at the end of each month. Harbison purchased a number of the coal orders and demanded their payment in cash, which was refused. He then brought suit against the company, relying on the statute. The Supreme Court gave him judgment, which was affirmed by this court on the ground that the law was a proper exercise of the police power of the state. This court, by Mr. Justice Shiras, commenting on St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Paul, supra, said that in that case stress was laid upon the reserved power of amendment which the state had, "but it is also true that, inasmuch as the right of contract is not absolute in respect to every matter, but may be subjected to the restraints demanded by the safety and welfare of the state and its inhabitants, the police power of the state may, within definite limitations, extend over corporations outside of and regardless of the power to amend charters." Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 43 L. ed. 909, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609. The ruling was followed in Dayton Coal & I. Co. v. Barton, 183 U. S. 23, 46 L. ed. 61, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 5, although the Dayton Company was not incorporated under the laws of Tennessee.

In McLean v. Arkansas, 211 U. S. 539, 53 L. ed. 315, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206, a law of Arkansas required, where miners were employed at quantity rates, and more than ten were employed, that they should be paid by the weight of coal mined by them as it comes from the mine and before it was passed over a screen of any kind. One of the grounds of attack on the law was that it was an unwarranted invasion of the right of contract secured by the 14th Amendment, the argument being that the law prevented the miners from contracting [704] for wages upon the basis of screened coal instead of the weight of the coal as originally produced at the mine. The law was sustained as a proper exercise of the police power of the state.

It is, however, contended by plaintiff, that the law under review cannot be sustained either as an exertion of the police power or as an alteration of the charter of plaintiff, unless the court can say from a comparison of the systems of payment—monthly and semimonthly—that the former affects adversely the general welfare or public good, and the latter "remedies that evil or condition, and of itself does not constitute an unjust burden upon the employer." But whether the law imposes an unjust burden depends upon its validity, and whether the public welfare is subserved by one system or the other is, as we have said, in the first instance, for the legislature to determine, and its judgment will not be reviewed unless "unmistakably and palpably in excess of legislative power." McLean v. Arkansas, supra. The labor law of New York cannot be so characterized.

There are certainly advantages of cash payment over deferred payments, and an advantage to those who work for a living of a ready purchasing power for their needs over the use of credit. This is found as a fact by the trial court, and even if there is no affirmative evidence of it, it is the expression of experience.

The next contention of plaintiff is that the cost of paying twice a month is a direct burden on interstate commerce. It is not necessary to review and compare the cases in which this court has pointed out the difference between a direct and indirect burden of state legislation upon interstate commerce, or the power of the states in the absence of regulation by Congress. It is enough to say in the present case that Congress has not acted, and there is not, therefore, that impediment to the law of the state; nor is there prohibition in the character of the burden. The [705] effect of the provision is merely administrative, and so far as it affects interstate commerce, it does so indirectly. The court of appeals, as we have seen, considered that the law relates to the wages of railway servants employed wholly within the state, and to those whose duties take them from the state into other states. In other words, did not make it applicable to those employed in other states, and it therefore does not embrace all of the employees of plaintiff, and the contention based upon its application to all is without foundation.

Digitized by Google

The last contention of plaintiff is that the statute violates the 14th Amendment, "in that it denies to the employees of the Erie Railroad Company the equal protection of the laws." Considerable argument is made to support the contention, in which a comparison is made between the employees—mechanics, workmen, and laborers—to whom the law applies, and the other employees of the company, and it is declared that all, if any, suffer from monthly payments, and all are entitled, therefore, to receive the benefit of semimonthly payments. But, as we have said, employees are not complaining, and whatever rights those excluded may have, plaintiff cannot invoke.

Judgment affirmed.

RAMON VALDES,† Appt.,
v.
TULIO LARRINAGA.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 705–711.)

Equitable lien — profits.

1. A contract whereby one of the contracting parties was to receive a 10 per cent interest in a concession for helping to secure it and for aiding in the plans, projects, and technical matters, gives him an equitable interest in the concession to the extent of securing his share of the profits, if any, and one which attaches to these profits specifically if and when they come into being.

[For other cases, see Liens, I., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Accounting — fiduciary relation — secret profits.

2. Equity has jurisdiction of a suit for an accounting under a contract whereby the complainant was to receive a 10 per cent interest in the concession for helping to secure it and for aiding in the plans, projects, and technical matters, where the bill alleges an abuse of the fiduciary relation thus created by a secret transaction, from which it is alleged that profits accrued.

[Matters as to accounting, see Accounting, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Contracts — validity — public policy — affecting official action.

3. There was nothing against public policy in a contract whereby a person was to receive a 10 per cent interest in a concession to a riparian owner of the right to utilize water power in developing electric energy, for helping in the steps necessary to be taken and the plans, projects, and technical matters, under which he joined in an application to the military governor of Porto Rico for a franchise on the footing of a joint interest, and helped to present the matter to the Secretary of War, and prepared plans and specifications to be presented to the executive council of Porto Rico when the first franchise granted by the Secretary of War had been lost by not complying with its terms.

[For other cases, see Contracts, IV. d, 3, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Contracts — construction — interest in concession — sale.

4. A preliminary contract for the sale by a riparian owner of a water power concession, after an attempted forfeiture by the public authorities, and the lands, easements, and options, for use in connection with the concession, such contract reciting that he had petitioned for a new concession, or confirmation, entitles a person to whom the former had contracted to give a 10 per cent interest for his services in aid of the original concession, to receive such 10 per cent, although the new concession when granted expressly provided that it should not be deemed a recognition of any right to any previous grant, and although the sale probably would not have taken place

---

†Death of Ramon Valdes, appellant herein, suggested, and appearance of Ramon Valdes Cobian filed and entered February 24, 1914, as party appellant herein.

NOTE.—On equitable liens—see note to Walker v. Brown, 41 L. ed. U. S. 865.

On validity of contract as affected by the fact that its performance may involve the necessity of procuring some action by public officials—see note to Cole v. Brown-Hurley Hardware Co. 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1161.

On the validity of agreement by which compensation is dependent on success in procuring contract with public officer or board—see note to Kansas City Paper House v. Foley R. Printing Co. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 747.

Digitized by Google

without a confirmation or regrant of the concession.

[Construction of contracts, generally, see Contracts, II., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 343.]

Argued May 4, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

APPEAL from the District Court of the United States for Porto Rico to review a decree for an accounting. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Hugo Kohlmann argued the cause, and, with Messrs. F. Kingsbury Curtis and Martin Travieso, Jr., filed a brief for appellant:

No fraud, either legal or actual, was alleged or proved. Even if it did exist, it would not be ground for equitable jurisdiction.

Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Brown, 213 U. S. 25, 50, 53 L. ed. 682, 692, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 404; United States v. Bitter Root Development Co. 200 U. S. 451, 472, 50 L. ed. 550, 557, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 318; Ambler v. Choteau, 107 U. S. 586, 591, 27 L. ed. 322, 324, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 556; Buzard v. Houston, 119 U. S. 347, 352, 30 L. ed. 451, 453, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249.

The fact that, in a contract of employment, the employee's compensation is measured by a certain proportion of the profits, does not make it a partnership.

Meehan v. Valentine, 145 U. S. 611, 619, 620, 623, 624, 36 L. ed. 835, 840–842, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 972; Berthold v. Goldsmith, 24 How. 536, 16 L. ed. 762.

Complainant's prayer for specific performance did not confer equitable jurisdiction.

Scott v. Neely, 140 U. S. 106, 110, 35 L. ed. 358, 360, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 712.

The fact that complainant's compensation under the contract was fixed at a proportion of the profits realized by the defendant from the franchise did not entitle the complainant to an accounting in equity.

Root v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 105 U. S. 189, 26 L. ed. 975; Washburn & M. Mfg. Co. v. Freeman Wire Co. 41 Fed. 412; Safford v. Ensign Mfg. Co. 56 C. C. A. 630, 120 Fed. 480; Babbott v. Tewksbury, 46 Fed. 86.

A court of equity is without jurisdiction in a suit in which discovery and relief are sought, where the only ground for equitable relief appears to be a discovery of evidence to be used in the enforcement of a purely legal demand.

Root v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co.; Washburn & M. Mfg. Co. v. Freeman Wire Co.; and Safford v. Ensign Mfg. Co.—supra; Grieb v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 189 Fed. 502; Brown v. Equitable Life Assur. Co. 142 Fed. 835; Paton v. Majors, 46 Fed. 210.

Equity cannot take jurisdiction merely because of any difficulty in proving the complainant's case.

United States v. Bitter Root Development Co. 200 U. S. 451, 472, 475, 50 L. ed. 550, 560, 562, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 318; Martin v. Wilson, 84 C. C. A. 13, 155 Fed. 99.

The relief granted by the decree was a simple money judgment for which there was an adequate remedy at law, and the decree cannot therefore be sustained.

Parkersburg v. Brown, 106 U. S. 487, 500, 27 L. ed. 238, 243, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 442.

The contract in suit, being a contract for contingent compensation for services in procuring legislation, or other action by public bodies or officials, is against public policy and void, and therefore not enforceable either in law or in equity.

Hazelton v. Sheckells, 202 U. S. 71, 50 L. ed. 939, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 567, 6 Ann. Cas. 217; Clippinger v. Hepbaugh, 5 Watts & S. 321, 40 Am. Dec. 519; Providence Tool Co. v. Norris, 2 Wall. 45, 54–56, 17 L. ed. 868, 870, 871; Wood v. McCann, 6 Dana, 366; Weed v. Black, 2 MacArth. 274, 29 Am. Rep. 618; Trist v. Child (Burke v. Child) 21 Wall. 441, 452, 22 L. ed. 623, 625; Sussman v. Porter, 137 Fed. 164.

Mr. Frederic D. McKenney argued the cause, and, with Mr. Edward S. Paine, filed a brief for appellee:

The arrangement between the parties created a partnership, and accordingly complainant was entitled to an accounting in equity against defendant.

2 Lindley, Partn. 492; Mathewson v. Clarke, 6 How. 122, 12 L. ed. 370.

The contract created an equitable lien in favor of complainant below, which he was entitled to enforce in equity.

Wylie v. Coxe, 15 How. 415, 14 L. ed. 753; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. ed. 983; Nutt v. Knut, 200 U. S. 12, 50 L. ed. 348, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 216; Peugh v. Porter, 112 U. S. 737, 28 L. ed. 859, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 361; Spofford v. Kirk, 97 U. S. 484, 24 L. ed. 1032; Milliken v. Barrow, 65 Fed. 888.

Complainant was entitled to specific performance of the contract in equity.

Westinghouse Air Brake Co. v. Chicago Brake & Mfg. Co. 85 Fed. 786.

The complainant was to be a joint owner with defendant in the franchise, and accordingly had a right to urge that it be granted.

Digitized by Google

Marshall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 16 How. 314, 14 L. ed. 953.

The contract provided for necessary and proper professional services to be rendered by complainant, as a civil engineer, and accordingly was not a "lobbying" contract.

Trist v. Child (Burke v. Child) 21 Wall. 441, 450, 22 L. ed. 623, 624; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 557, 23 L. ed. 983, 984; Taylor v. Bemiss, 110 U. S. 42, 28 L. ed. 64, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 441; Nutt v. Knut, 200 U. S. 12, 50 L. ed. 348, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 216; Salinas v. Stillman, 14 C. C. A. 50, 30 U. S. App. 40, 66 Fed. 677; Lyon v. Mitchell, 36 N. Y. 235, 93 Am. Dec. 502; McBratney v. Chandler, 22 Kan. 692, 31 Am. Rep. 213.

In the absence of language necessarily comprehending impropriety, the ordinary principle of contractual interpretation must apply; that is, words used will be given an innocent meaning unless an improper meaning is clearly intended.

Hobbs v. McLean, 117 U. S. 567, 576, 29 L. ed. 940, 943, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 870; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Kutter, 77 C. C. A. 315, 147 Fed. 51; Houlten v. Nichol, 93 Wis. 393, 33 L.R.A. 166, 57 Am. St. Rep. 928, 67 N. W. 715; Providence Tool Co. v. Norris, 2 Wall. 45, 17 L. ed. 868; Trist v. Child (Burke v. Child) 21 Wall. 441, 22 L. ed. 623; Marshall v. Baltimore O. R. Co. 16 How. 314, 14 L. ed. 953.

The general and indefinite language of the letters must be governed by the particular words used in both letters limiting the services to "plans, projects, and all that pertains to the technical part."

Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hill, 193 U. S. 551, 48 L. ed. 788, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 538.

In a contract otherwise proper, the fact that compensation is to be contingent does not vitiate the contract.

Ball v. Halsell, 161 U. S. 72, 80, 40 L. ed. 622, 624, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 554; Taylor v. Bemiss, 110 U. S. 42, 28 L. ed. 64, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 441; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. ed. 983; Wright v. Tebbitts, 91 U. S. 252, 23 L. ed. 320.

The contract must have been either valid or invalid at the time it was made; and subsequent acts will not invalidate it once it is an executed, binding, valid, and unambiguous contractual obligation.

Barry v. Capen, 151 Mass. 99, 6 L.R.A. 808, 23 N. E. 735; Dunham v. Hastings Pav. Co. 57 App. Div. 426, 68 N. Y. Supp. 221; Houlton v. Nichol, 93 Wis. 402, 33 L.R.A. 166, 57 Am. St. Rep. 928, 67 N. W. 715.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill in equity for an account under a contract between the parties, upon which the plaintiff (appellee) obtained a decree for $13,000 and interest. The contract was embodied in letters, as follows, according to the official translation: On October 30, 1898, Valdes wrote to Larrinaga, reciting that he had applied for "a water franchise from the river Plata, place called Salto, for the purpose of developing electric power," while Larrinaga was assistant secretary of "Fomento" (now department of the interior), and going on, "So that you may help me in getting it through, and in all the rest in connection with said franchise, such as plans, projects, and in everything concerning the technical part thereof, I need a person of my absolute confidence, and as you deserve it fully to me, and not believing that this is inconsistent with your present position of chief engineer of harbor works, I propose to interest you in the profits of said concession in the amount of a 10 per cent, provided that you accept the obligations hereinabove mentioned." The next day Larrinaga answered, acknowledging the letter "wherein you propose me a share of 10 per cent in the property of the concession for the [709] utilization of waters from the La Plata river at the point called el Salto, near Comerio, I, in exchange, to help you in the steps to be gone through and in everything in connection with said concession, such as plans, projects, and all what concerns to the technical part. I hereby accept the participation of 10 per cent of said concession in exchange of my personal or professional services without any obligation on my part" to contribute money to the exploitation.

It is objected in the first place that the case is not one for equitable relief. But whether the contract created a partnership under the definition of the Civil Code of Porto Rico, § 1567, as argued by the appellee, or not, it gave the appellee an equitable interest in the concession to the extent of securing his share of the profits, if any, and attached to these profits specifically if and when they came into being. Barnes v. Alexander, 232 U. S. 117, 121, ante, 530, 533, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276. It established a fiduciary relation between Valdes, who had legal control, and the plaintiff. The bill alleges an abuse of the relation by a secret transaction from which it is alleged that the profits accrued. It is a proper case for equitable relief.

It is contended more energetically that the contract was against public policy. We shall not speculate nicely as to exactly what the law was in Porto Rico at the time when the contract was made, but shall give the plaintiff the benefit of the decisions upon which he relies, such as Hazelton v. Sheckells, 202 U. S. 71, 50 L. ed. 939, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 567, 6 Ann. Cas. 217. But we discover nothing in the language of the letters that necessarily imports, or even persuasively suggests, any improper intent or dangerous tendency. Larrinaga had ceased to be assistant secretary, and while in that position had refused to take part in the plan. His answer, which must control if there is any difference, as the parties went ahead on it (Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Columbus Rolling Mill, 119 U. S. 149, 30 L. ed. 376, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 168), binds him to help in the steps to be [710] gone through, and in the technical part. If his help in the steps to be gone through was not to be, like the rest of his work, in the technical part alone, still there is nothing to indicate that it was of a kind that could not be stipulated for. In view of the subject-matter, a grant, it would seem, to a riparian owner, of the right to use water power for public service, the things done, such as joining in an application to the military governor for a franchise on the footing of a joint interest, or helping to present it to the Secretary of War when it came up to him, or preparing plans and specifications to be presented to the executive council of Porto Rico when the first franchise granted by the Secretary of War had been lost by not complying with its terms, have no sinister smack. We see nothing to control the decision of the district judge that the contract was not against the policy of the law.

Digitized by Google

As we have intimated, the executive council of Porto Rico was applied to after the loss of the first franchise, and it granted a new one on December 17, 1900; but after some extensions of time it declared the grant forfeited in July, 1902. Valdes and the plaintiff, however, did not admit the forfeiture, and Valdes procured the formation of a Maine corporation to take over his rights. On January 14, 1905, he made a preliminary contract for the sale of the franchise alleged to be forfeited, and lands, easements, and options for use in connection with the same, reciting that he had petitioned for a new concession, or confirmation of the franchise. For this he was to receive $27,000, par value, of the mortgage bonds of the new company, and $102,778, par value, of its stock, to be put in escrow until the company got a good title to the water rights and the franchise applied for. On June 1, 1905, in pursuance of the contract, a conveyance was made of the easements and lands that Valdes owned on the La Plata and his right to construct works there on the terms above [711] mentioned, with a slight change of the figures, to $28,000 and $103,000 respectively. The franchise was granted on January 4, 1906, the grant expressly providing that it should not be deemed a recognition of any right of Valdes to any previous grant.

On these facts it is argued that the concession in which Larrinaga was interested was not sold by Valdes, and was not the source of any profit. That Valdes purported to sell it by his conveyance, as he agreed to sell it by the contract which the conveyance referred to and executed, or else that his rights under it passed sub silentio with the land, we think admits of no doubt. And while it may be true that the sale would not be likely to have taken place without a confirmation or re-grant of the franchise, still, as between these parties, it seems fairly probable that there was a continuous pursuit of the end; that, while the franchise gave the value to the land, the land gave a locus standi to the franchise; that, notwithstanding the disclaimer of the executive council, the position of Valdes as riparian owner and previous grantee had their effect on the final grant; and that, at all events, when the contract was made on January 14, 1905, Larrinaga became entitled to receive his 10 per cent when that contract should be carried out.

The last objection to the decree is, that the court did not deduct from the sum paid the value of the other property which entered into the consideration. We do not think it clear that Larrinaga did not stipulate for 10 per cent of the land as well as of the franchise. The Spanish is not before us, and the words "10 per cent in the property of the concession" well might mean that. At all events no error of magnitude is made out, and without mentioning every detail it is enough to add that no sufficient reason is shown why the decree should not be affirmed.

Decree affirmed.

---

[712] DETROIT STEEL COOPERAGE COMPANY, Petitioner,

v.

SISTERSVILLE BREWING COMPANY, Gale Justus, R. H. Skaggs, F. Hogenmiller, et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 712-718.)

Mortgage — lien — priority — after-acquired property — conditional sale.

The lien of a mortgage executed by a brewing company upon its land, brewery,

NOTE.—On the right of seller of chattel retaining title or lien as against purchaser of realty to which it is affixed by owner—see note to Lawton Pressed Brick & Tile and all the buildings, machinery, and appliances thereon, erected or to be erected, does not extend to tanks, fixtures, and fittings installed under a conditional contract of sale, which, because unrecorded, was, under W. Va. Code 1906, § 3101, void as to creditors and purchasers without notice, where such tanks, although bricked in, and essential to the working of the brewery, can be removed with but trifling damage, which the conditional vendor offers to make good.

Digitized by Google

[For other cases, see Mortgage, I. d, 2; III., in Digest Sup. Ct. Rep. 1908.]

[No. 368.]

Argued May 8, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

ON WRIT of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit to review a decree which affirmed a decree of the Circuit Court for the Northern District of West Virginia, dismissing a bill to enjoin the sale of certain property in proceedings to foreclose a mortgage. Reversed.

See same case below, 115 C. C. A. 349, 195 Fed. 447; on rehearing, 115 C. C. A. 669, 195 Fed. 1023.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles N. Kimball and George M. Hoffheimer argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Orla B. Taylor and Walter S. Sugden, filed a brief for petitioner:

What annexation of chattels makes them part of the realty is a question of local law.

New York L. Ins. Co. v. Allison, 46 C. C. A. 229, 107 Fed. 179; Re Sunflower State Ref. Co. 115 C. C. A. 132, 195 Fed. 180.

The rights of the vendor of property under a reservation of title are to be determined by the local law.

Bryant v. Swofford Bros. Dry Goods Co. 214 U. S. 279, 53 L. ed. 997, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 614; Hewit v. Berlin Mach. Works, 194 U. S. 296, 48 L. ed. 986, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 690; Harkness v. Russell, 118 U. S. 663, 30 L. ed. 285, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 51; Hervey v. Rhode Island Locomotive Works, 93 U. S. 664, 23 L. ed. 1003.

Rights under and the validity of a mortgage on either real or personal property are questions of local law.

Abraham v. Casey, 179 U. S. 210, 45 L. ed. 156, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 88; Dodge v. Tulleys, 144 U. S. 451, 36 L. ed. 501, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 728; Etheridge v. Sperry, 139 U. S. 266, 35 L. ed. 171, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 563; Holt v. Crucible Steel Co. 224 U. S. 264, 56 L. ed. 757, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 414.

The effect of a mortgage on after-acquired property is a question of local law.

Thompson v. Fairbanks, 196 U. S. 516, 49 L. ed. 577, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306; Dooley v. Pease, 180 U. S. 126, 45 L. ed. 457, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 329.

If it be true that Patton v. Moore, 16 W. Va. 428, 37 Am. Rep. 789, is at variance with Hurxthal v. Hurxthal, 45 W. Va. 584, 32 S. E. 237, and other later decisions, clearly Patton v. Moore, must be taken to have been superseded. And if Lazear v. Ohio Valley Steel Foundry Co. 65 W. Va. 105, 63 S. E. 772, conflicts with the previous decisions of the same court, it is also true that the Lazear Case was decided after this contract was made and the petitioner's right of action had accrued, and cannot affect the rights of the petitioner, who was entitled to rely on the law as expressed in the Hurxthal Case and other precedent decisions.

Kuhn v. Fairmont Coal Co. 215 U. S. 349, 357, 360, 54 L. ed. 228, 233, 234, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140; Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 20, 33, 27 L. ed. 359, 365, 2 Sup. Ct Rep. 10; Great Southern Fire Proof Hotel Co. v. Jones, 193 U. S. 532, 544, 48 L. ed. 778, 785, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 576; Stanley County v. Coler, 190 U. S. 437, 444, 445, 47 L. ed. 1126, 1131, 1132, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 811; Loeb v. Columbia Twp. 179 U. S. 472, 45 L. ed. 280, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 174.

The tanks were placed in the brewery under a valid reservation of title, which was superior to the mortgage, though the latter was prior in point of time. The mortgage could attach to the tanks only subject to such conditions as accompanied them into the possession of the brewing company.

Reynolds v. Ashby, 1 B. R. C. 678, note; Hurxthal v. Hurxthal, 45 W. Va. 584, 32 S. E. 237; Binkley v. Forkner, 117 Ind. 176, 3 L.R.A. 33, 19 N. E. 753; Campbell v. Roddy, 44 N. J. Eq. 244, 6 Am. St. Rep. 889, 14 Atl. 279; Tifft v. Horton, 53 N. Y. 377, 13 Am. Rep. 537; Eaves v. Estes, 10 Kan. 314, 15 Am. Rep. 345; First Nat. Bank v. Hyer, 46 W. Va. 13, 32 S. E. 1000; Webster Lumber Co. v. Keystone Lumber & Min. Co. 51 W. Va. 545, 66 L.R.A. 33, 42 S. E. 632; Gartland v. Hickman, 56 W. Va. 75, 67 L.R.A. 694, 49 S. E. 14; Edwards & B. Lumber Co. v. Rank, 57 Neb. 323, 73 Am. St. Rep. 514, 77 N. W. 765; United States v. New Orleans & O. R. Co. (New Orleans & O. R. Co. v. Mellen) 12 Wall, 362, 20 L. ed. 434; Fosdick v. Schall, 99 U. S. 235.

Co. v. Ross-Kellar Triple Pressure Brick Mach. Co. 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 396.

On the rights of seller of chattel retaining title thereto or a lien thereon as against existing mortgagees of the realty to which it is affixed by the owner—see note to Trippett v. Barham, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 119.

On the right of seller of fixtures retaining title or lien as against purchasers or encumbrancers of realty—see note to Reynolds v. Ashby, 1 B. R. C. 664.

Digitized by Google

25 L. ed. 339; Fosdick v. Southwestern Car Co. 99 U. S. 256, 25 L. ed. 344; Myer v. Western Car Co. 102 U. S. 1, 26 L. ed. 59; Bear Lake & River Waterworks & Irrig. Co. v. Garland, 164 U. S. 1, 41 L. ed. 327, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 7; York Mfg. Co. v. Cassell, 201 U. S. 344, 351, 352, 50 L. ed. 782, 784, 785, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 481; New Chester Water Co. v. Holly Mfg. Co. 3 C. C. A. 399, 3 U. S. App. 264, 53 Fed. 19, 48 Fed. 879; Wickes Bros. v. Island Park Asso. 229 Pa. 400, 78 Atl. 934; Re Sunflower State Ref. Co. 115 C. C. A. 132, 195 Fed. 180.

The foregoing authorities, it is true, relate to the equities between real estate mortgagees and chattel mortgagees; but the same principles apply to real estate mortgagees and vendors of personal property annexed to the realty, where the vendor reserves title until the purchase money is paid.

First Nat. Bank v. Hyer, 46 W. Va. 13, 32 S. E. 1000; Wickes Bros. v. Island Park Asso. 229 Pa. 400, 78 Atl. 934; Cox v. New Bern Lighting & Fuel Co. 151 N. C. 62, 134 Am. St. Rep. 966, 65 S. E. 648, 18 Ann. Cas. 936; Davis v. Bliss, 187 N. Y. 77, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 458, 79 N. E. 851; Bernheimer v. Adams, 70 App. Div. 114, 75 N. Y. Supp. 93, affirmed in 175 N. Y. 472, 67 N. E. 1080; Duffus v. Howard Furnace Co. 8 App. Div. 567, 40 N. Y. Supp. 925; Leibowitz v. Joseph B. Thomson Real Estate Co. 158 App. Div. 592, 143 N. Y. Supp. 802; General Electric Co. v. Transit Equipment Co. 57 N. J. Eq. 460, 42 Atl. 101; Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. George, 77 Minn. 319, 79 N. W. 1028, 1064; Fred W. Wolf Co. v. Hermann Sav. Bank, 168 Mo. App. 549, 153 S. W. 1094; Blanchard v. Eureka Planing Mill Co. 58 Or. 37, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 133, 113 Pac. 55; Baldwin v. Young, 47 La. Ann. 1466, 17 So. 883; Harris v. Hackley, 127 Mich. 46, 86 N. W. 389; Page v. Edwards, 64 Vt. 124, 23 Atl. 917.

Opposite to this doctrine is the so-called Massachusetts rule. It is held that the real estate mortgagee is entitled to the benefit of all accessions to the realty, and that he cannot be deprived of this right by any act of, or agreement between, a conditional vendor and vendee, or chattel mortgagor and mortgagee, to which he was not a party and has not given his assent. This rule, prevalent in Massachusetts, has been adopted in some other states.

Hunt v. Bay State Iron Co. 97 Mass. 279; Southbridge Sav. Bank v. Exeter Mach. Works, 127 Mass. 542; Hopewell Mills v. Taunton Sav. Bank, 150 Mass. 519, 6 L.R.A. 249, 15 Am. St. Rep. 235, 23 N. E. 327; Fuller-Warren Co. v. Harter, 110 Wis. 80, 53 L.R.A. 603, 84 Am. St. Rep. 867, 85 N. W. 698; Meagher v. Hayes, 152 Mass. 228, 23 Am. St. Rep. 819, 25 N. E. 105.

There is another and distinct class of cases in this court, which have been decided in favor of the prior mortgagee, and which appear to have been misunderstood by some of the inferior Federal courts. In all of these cases there was involved the property of a quasi-public corporation, the preservation of the integrity of which, upon special grounds of public interest and necessity, has always been aided.

Muller v. Dows, 94 U. S. 444, 24 L. ed. 207; Wood v. Guarantee Trust & S. D. Co. 128 U. S. 416, 32 L. ed. 472, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; Gregg v. Metropolitan Trust Co. 197 U. S. 183, 49 L. ed. 717, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 415; Porter v. Pittsburg-Bessemer Steel Co. 122 U. S. 267, 30 L. ed. 1210, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1206.

In every case in this court, where the reservation of title or lien of the claimant accompanied into the possession of the mortgagor the identical, separate thing against which the reservation of title or lien was sought to be enforced, whether that thing was personalty (United States v. New Orleans & O. R. Co. [New Orleans & O. R. Co. v. Mellen] 12 Wall. 362, 20 L. ed. 434; Fosdick v. Schall, 99 U. S. 235, 25 L. ed. 339; Fosdick v. Southwestern Car Co. 99 U. S. 256, 25 L. ed. 344; Myer v. Western Car Co. 102 U. S. 1, 26 L. ed. 59), or whether it was real estate (Bear Lake & River Waterworks & Irrig. Co. v. Garland, 164 U. S. 1, 41 L. ed. 327, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 7), the reservation of title or lien has been sustained, as against the prior mortgagee.

But where the thing to which the title or lien is sought to be retained becomes, by the very fact and method of annexation, physically merged in the realty, as an integral part thereof, so that, when the day for the enforcement of the reservation arrives, the chattel brought upon the premises no longer exists, and the reservation must be upheld if at all, by fixing it to a new thing created by the annexation in contemplation when the mortgagor acquired the chattel, and the enforcement of the reservation must be destructive, not only of the integrity of the realty, but of the changed form which the chattel has assumed by its merger with the realty, a very different case arises.

Binkley v. Forkner, 117 Ind. 176, 3 L.R.A. 33, 19 N. E. 753; Campbell v. Roddy, 44 N. J. Eq. 244, 6 Am. St. Rep. 889, 14 Atl. 279; Fred W. Wolf Co. v. Hermann Sav. Bank, 168 Mo. App. 552, 153 S. W. 1094; Porter v. Pittsburg Bessemer Steel Co. 122 U. S. 267, 30 L. ed. 1210, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1206; Toledo, D. & B. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 134 U. S. 296, 33 L. ed. 905, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 546; Dunham v. Cincinnati, P. & C. R. Co. 1 Wall. 254, 17 L. ed. 584; General

Digitized by Google

Electric Co. v. Transit Equipment Co. 57 N. J. Eq. 475, 42 Atl. 101; Galveston, H. & H. R. Co. v. Cowdrey, 11 Wall. 459, 20 L. ed. 199; Dillon v. Barnard, 21 Wall. 430, 22 L. ed. 673; Thompson v. White Water Valley R. Co. 132 U. S. 68, 33 L. ed. 256, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 29.

The tanks in question were "loose property," within the meaning of the decisions of this court.

United States v. New Orleans & O. R. Co. (New Orleans & O. R. Co. v. Mellen) 12 Wall. 362, 20 L. ed. 434; Porter v. Pittsburg Bessemer Steel Co. 122 U. S. 267, 30 L. ed. 1210, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1206; Bear Lake & River Waterworks & Irrig. Co. v. Garland, 164 U. S. 1, 41 L. ed. 327, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 7; Binkley v. Forkner, 117 Ind. 176, 3 L.R.A. 33, 19 N. E. 753; Campbell v. Roddy, 44 N. J. Eq. 244, 6 Am. St. Rep. 889, 14 Atl. 279; New Chester Water Co. v. Holly Mfg. Co. 3 C. C. A. 399, 3 U. S. App. 264, 53 Fed. 19, affirming 48 Fed. 879; Re Sunflower State Ref. Co. 115 C. C. A. 132, 195 Fed. 180; J. L. Mott Iron Works v. Middle States Loan Bldg. & Constr. Co. 17 App. D. C. 584; Wickes Bros. v. Island Park Asso. 229 Pa. 400, 78 Atl. 934; General Electric Co. v. Transit Equipment Co. 57 N. J. Eq. 460, 42 Atl. 101; Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. George, 77 Minn. 319, 79 N. W. 1028, 1064; Fred W. Wolf Co. v. Hermann Sav. Bank, 168 Mo. App. 549, 153 S. W. 1094; Cox v. New Bern Lighting & Fuel Co. 151 N. C. 62, 134 Am. St. Rep. 966, 65 S. E. 648, 18 Ann. Cas. 936.

The view that the petitioner is precluded from asserting its title to the tanks, because the tanks are necessary to the operation of the brewery, is without merit, either in law or fact.

United States v. New Orleans & O. R. Co. (New Orleans & O. R. Co. v. Mellen) 12 Wall. 362, 20 L. ed. 434; Fosdick v. Schall, 99 U. S. 235, 25 L. ed. 339; Fosdick v. Southwestern Car Co. 99 U. S. 256, 25 L. ed. 344; Myer v. Western Car Co. 102 U. S. 1, 26 L. ed. 59; Bear Lake & River Waterworks & Irrig. Co. v. Garland, 164 U. S. 1, 41 L. ed. 327, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 7; Harris v. Hackley, 127 Mich. 46, 86 N. W. 389; Wolford v. Baxter, 33 Minn. 12, 53 Am. Rep. 1, 21 N. W. 744; Hurxthal v. Hurzthal, 45 W. Va. 584, 32 S. E. 237; Campbell v. Roddy, 44 N. J. Eq. 244, 6 Am. St. Rep. 889, 14 Atl. 279; Fred W. Wolf Co. v. Hermann Sav. Bank, 168 Mo. App. 553, 153 S. W. 1094; Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. George, 77 Minn. 319, 79 N. W. 1028, 1064; Cox v. New Bern Light & Fuel Co. 151 N. C. 62, 134 Am. St. Rep. 966, 65 S. E. 648, 18 Ann. Cas. 936.

Nor does the Massachusetts rule establish the integrity theory, countenanced by the circuit court of appeals.

Hunt v. Bay State Iron Co. 97 Mass. 283; Hopewell Mills v. Taunton Sav. Bank, 150 Mass. 519, 6 L.R.A. 249, 15 Am. St. Rep. 235, 23 N. E. 327; Lorain Steel Co. v. Norfolk & B. Street R. Co. 187 Mass. 500, 73 N. E. 646; Southbridge Sav. Bank v. Exeter Mach. Works, 127 Mass. 542.

The after-acquired property clause in the mortgage gave it no additional efficacy, as against the petitioner's reservation of title.

United States v. New Orleans & O. R. Co. (New Orleans & O. R. Co. v. Mellen) 12 Wall. 362, 20 L. ed. 434; Haris v. Youngstown Bridge Co. 33 C. C. A. 69, 62 U. S. App. 112, 90 Fed. 328; Bear Lake & River Waterworks & Irrig. Co. v. Garland, 164 U. S. 1, 41 L. ed. 327, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 7; Fosdick v. Schall, 99 U. S. 239, 25 L. ed. 341; Fosdick v. Southwestern Car Co. 99 U. S. 256, 25 L. ed. 344; Myer v. Western Car Co. 102 U. S. 1, 26 L. ed. 59; Cox v. New Bern Lighting & Fuel Co. 151 N. C. 62, 134 Am. St. Rep. 966, 65 S. E. 648, 18 Ann. Cas. 936; Williamson v. New Jersey Southern R. Co. 28 N. J. Eq. 277, 29 N. J. Eq. 311; Wickes Bros. v. Island Park Asso. 229 Pa. 400, 78 Atl. 934; J. L. Mott Iron Works v. Middle States Loan, Bldg. & Constr. Co. 17 App. D. C. 584; Wood v. Holly Mfg. Co. 100 Ala. 326, 46 Am. St. Rep. 56, 13 So. 948; Defiance Mach. Works v. Trisler, 21 Mo. App. 69; Davis v. Bliss, 187 N. Y. 77, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 458, 79 N. E. 851; Botsford v. New Haven, M. & W. R. Co. 41 Conn. 454; Central Trust Co. v. Marietta & N. G. R. Co. 1 C. C. A. 130, 2 U. S. App. 120, 48 Fed. 865; Holly Mfg. Co. v. New Chester Water Co. 48 Fed. 879, 3 C. C. A. 399, 3 U. S. App. 264, 53 Fed. 19; Harris v. Youngstown Bridge Co. 33 C. C. A. 69, 62 U. S. App. 112, 90 Fed. 328; Evans v. Kister, 35 C. C. A. 28, 92 Fed. 836; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Denver, L. & G. R. Co. 60 C. C. A. 588, 126 Fed. 49; Tilford v. Atlantic Match Co. 134 Fed. 927.

Mr. Thomas P. Jacobs argued the cause, and, with Mr. Arlen G. Swiger, filed a brief for respondents:

The cooperage or tanks cannot be removed from the brewery under any circumstances, regardless of the question whether the removal would injure the structure or not; and whether they can be removed or not without injury to the building is not determinative of the issues in this case.

Lazear v. Ohio Valley Steel Foundry Co. 65 W. Va. 105, 63 S. E. 772; Patton v. Moore, 16 W. Va. 428, 37 Am. Rep. 789; McFadden v. Crawford, 36 W. Va. 671, 32 Am. St. Rep. 894, 15 S. E. 408; Green v. Phillips, 26 Gratt. 752, 21 Am. Rep. 323:

Digitized by Google

Shelton v. Ficklin, 32 Gratt. 727; Bronson, Fixtures, p. 91, § 19; Union Trust Co. v. Southern Sawmills & Lumber Co. 92 C. C. A. 101, 166 Fed. 193; Tippett v. Barham, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 119, 103 C. C. A. 430, 180 Fed. 76; New York Secur. & T. Co. v. Capital R. Co. 77 Fed. 529; Hunt v. Bay State Iron Co. 97 Mass. 279; Porter v. Pittsburg Bessemer Steel Co. 122 U. S. 267, 283, 30 L. ed. 1210, 1211, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1206; Toledo, D. & B. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 134 U. S. 296–302, 33 L. ed. 905–908, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 546; United States v. New Orleans & O. R. Co. (New Orleans & O. R. Co. v. Mellen) 12 Wall. 362, 20 L. ed. 434; Smith v. Altick, 24 Ohio St. 369; Wolford v. Baxter, 33 Minn. 12, 53 Am. Rep. 1, 21 N. W. 744; Equitable Trust Co. v. Christ, 47 Fed. 756; Ege v. Kille, 84 Pa. 333, 10 Mor. Min. Rep. 212; Triplett v. Mays, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 874; Farrar v. Stackpole, 6 Me. 154, 19 Am. Dec. 201; Fratt v. Whittier, 58 Cal. 126, 41 Am. Rep. 255.

Having sold and delivered the chip tanks or casks to the Sistersville Brewing Company to be attached to the real estate, on which said real estate the trust mortgage given to secure the bonds was a first lien, and having permitted the said tanks or casks to enter into and become a material part of the plant of the Sistersville Brewing Company, the Detroit Steel Cooperage Company is now estopped from asserting any right or priority in the property or the proceeds derived from the sale thereof, to the injury of the security of the bondholders, but must be regarded as having waived its rights, if any, as against defendants' prior lien.

Phœnix Iron Works Co. v. New York Secur. & T. Co. 28 C. C. A. 76, 54 U. S. App. 408, 83 Fed. 757; Evans v. Kister, 35 C. C. A. 28, 92 Fed. 836; 35 Cyc. 673.

The rights of the mortgagee cannot be affected by any agreement, to which he is not a party, made between the seller and the mortgagor in possession. The rights of the mortgagee are superior to those of the seller of the fixtures attempting to retain title.

Tippett v. Barham, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 130, 103 C. C. A. 430, 180 Fed. 76; Lorain Steel Co. v. Norfolk & B. Street R. Co. 187 Mass. 500, 73 N. E. 646; Watertown Steam Engine Co. v. Davis, 5 Houst. (Del.) 192; Richardson v. Copeland, 6 Gray, 536, 66 Am. Dec. 424; Clary v. Owen, 15 Gray, 522; United States v. New Orleans & O. R. Co. (New Orleans & O. R. Co. v. Mellen) 12 Wall. 362, 20 L. ed. 434; Porter v. Pittsburg Bessemer Steel Co. 122 U. S. 267, 30 L. ed. 1210, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1206; Phœnix Iron Works Co. v. New York Secur. & T. Co. 28 C. C. A. 76, 54 U. S. App. 408, 83 Fed. 757; Hunt v. Bay State Iron Co. 97 Mass. 279; Meagher v. Hayes, 152 Mass. 228, 23 Am. St. Rep. 819, 25 N. E. 105; Union Trust Co. v. Southern Sawmills & Lumber Co. 92 C. C. A. 101, 166 Fed. 193; Re Williamsburg Knitting Mill, 190 Fed. 871.

The failure of the petitioner to have the Sistersville Brewing Company pay it the $2,000 in cash when the tanks were shipped, and the $740 when the tanks were erected and tested, and give a note for the residue, shows laches on its part.

Chapman v. Lathrop, 6 Cow. 110, 16 Am. Dec. 433; Furniss v. Hone, 8 Wend. 248; Lupin v. Marie, 6 Wend. 77, 21 Am. Dec. 256; Mathews v. Smith, 8 Houst. (Del.) 22, 31 Atl. 879; Peabody v. Maguire, 79 Me. 572, 12 Atl. 631.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill in equity for an injunction against the sale of certain tanks, fixtures, and fittings supplied by the petitioner to the defendant brewing company, and for a return of the same. The bill was dismissed by the circuit court, and the decree was affirmed by the circuit court of [716] appeals. 115 C. C. A. 349, 669, 195 Fed. 447, 1023, where Pritchard, J., dissented from the refusal of a rehearing.

The contract under which the tanks were furnished provided that the title should remain in the petitioner until they were fully paid for, and that the petitioner might remove them on default. It was made on August 8, 1908, and duly recorded on December 7 of the same year. Before those dates the brewing company had made a mortgage of its land, brewery, "and all the buildings, machinery, and appliances thereon erected or to be erected," and the mortgage had been recorded. There were subsequent mortgages, judgment liens, etc., but they do not need special mention. A bill was brought to foreclose the first mortgage, to which the petitioner was not made a party. A receiver was appointed and a sale ordered and advertised. The petitioner then brought this bill against the various adverse claimants, joining the receiver by leave of court. The statute of West Virginia makes a reservation of title such as the petitioner's "void as to creditors of, and purchasers without notice from, such buyer" unless a notice of the reservation is recorded as therein required. Code (1906) § 3101.

In Holt v. Henley, 232 U. S. 637, ante, 767, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 459, the court had to consider a similar question of priority in view of a Virginia statute like that of West Virginia upon which the petitioner relies, and, although in that case the conditional sale had not been recorded, it was held that the vendor was to be preferred. The main question now before us is whether this case is to be decided differently on the ground that the tanks were "an essential, indispensable part of the completed structure contemplated by the mortgage,"—a question left open in the former decision. 232 U. S. 641. The tanks were essential to the working of the brewery, and after they were installed the opening into the recess in which they stood was bricked up. It may [717] be assumed that they became part of the realty as between mortgagor and mortgagee, but that is immaterial in equity, however it may have been at the old common law. The question is not whether they were attached to the soil, but we repeat, whether the fact that they were necessary to the working of the brewery gives a preference to the mortgagee. We see no sufficient ground for that result. This class of need to use property belonging to another is not yet recognized by the law as a sufficient ground for authority to appropriate it. If the owner of the tanks had lent them, it would be an extraordinary proposition that it lost title when they were bricked in. That it contemplated the ultimate passing of title upon an event that did not happen makes its case no worse except so far as by statute recording is made necessary to save its rights. The common law knows no objection to what commonly is called a conditional sale. William W. Bierce v. Hutchins, 205 U. S. 340, 347, 348, 51 L. ed. 828, 833, 834, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524.

Digitized by Google

The cases to which the possible exception left open in Holt v. Henley applies are principally those in which the property claimed has become so intimately connected with or embodied in that which is subject to the mortgage that to reclaim it would more or less physically disintegrate the property held by the mortgagee; e. g., Porter v. Pittsburg Bessemer Steel Co. 122 U. S. 267, 30 L. ed. 1210, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1206. A man sometimes may lose title without his consent, and it has been held that he loses it even to an innocent converter who has added labor of a value far in excess of that of the original chattel. Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311, 7 Am. Rep. 653. When the obvious destination of an article is to be incorporated into a structure in such a way that to remove it would destroy the other work, like bricks or beams in a building, there is still stronger ground for not giving to title an absolute right of way. But unless we give a mystic importance to bolts and screws, the mere knowledge that the chattel will be attached to the freehold is of no importance, [718] except, perhaps, as against innocent purchasers for value before the sale was recorded, which the mortgagees were not. Holt v. Henley, 232 U. S. 637, 640, 641, ante, 767, 772, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 459. The damage that will be done by removal in this case is trifling and the petitioner offers to make it good.

The West Virginia decisions that had been rendered before the petitioner's contract, was made, like those of Virginia, favored the petitioner's right, Hurxthal v. Hurxthal, 45 W. Va. 584, 32 S. E. 237. We do not understand Lazear v. Ohio Valley Steel Foundry Co. 65 W. Va. 105, 63 S. E. 772, to lay down a different doctrine. We take it rather as turning on the special effect of a sale to receivers whose certificates it was thought were backed by a promise of the court that they should constitute a first lien. Therefore, we find it unnecessary to consider whether otherwise the doctrine of Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 20, 27 L. ed. 359, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10, coupled with our own opinion that the rule applied in the earlier decision is correct, would require us to follow that rather than the later case.

Decree reversed.

Mr. Justice Lurton dissents.

OCEANIC STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY, Limited, as Owner of the Steamship Titanic,

v.

WILLIAM J. MELLOR and Harry Anderson.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 718–734.)

Shipping — limitation of liability — foreign vessel.

1. The owner of a foreign vessel sunk in a collision with an iceberg on the high seas when sued in the United States may maintain in the Federal courts the proceeding for a limitation of liability authorized by U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 4283–4285, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 2943, 2944, and admiralty rules 54 and 56, although there may either be nothing before the court to show what, if any, is the law of the foreign country to which the vessel belongs touching the owner's liability, or it may appear that such law makes provision for the limitation of the vessel owner's liability upon terms and conditions differing from those prescribed by the Federal laws.

[For other cases, see Shipping, V. c, 2, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

NOTE.—On limitation of shipowner's liability—see note to Lawton v. Comer, 7 L.R.A. 55.

Digitized by Google

Conflict of laws — limitation of shipowner's liability — foreign vessel.

2. The law of the United States, and not that of the foreign country to which the ship belongs, will be enforced by the Federal courts in a proceeding by the owner of a foreign vessel sunk in a collision with an iceberg on the high seas for the limitation of liability authorized by the Federal laws and admiralty rules.

[For other cases, see Conflict of Laws, 110-114, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 798.]

Argued January 13 and 14, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

ON a Certificate from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit presenting two questions respecting the right of the owner of a foreign vessel to maintain proceedings for limitation of liability in the Federal courts, and the further question as to what law will be enforced in such proceedings. First two questions answered in the affirmative. Third question answered by holding that the law of the United States governs.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles C. Burlingham, Norman B. Beecher, and J. Parker Kirlin argued the cause and filed a brief for the Oceanic Steam Navigation Company:

The limited liability act of the United States applies equally to American and to foreign shipowners. It establishes the maritime law of the United States to be universally applied in our courts as the expression by Congress of our conception of justice.

The Scotland (National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer) 105 U. S. 24, 26 L. ed. 1001; La Bourgogne (Deslions v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique) 210 U. S. 95, 52 L. ed. 973, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664.

The English cases which had previously construed the British limited liability act, and refused to extend its provisions to foreign shipowners, were strongly urged upon this court in the Scotland, in support of a narrow construction of our law. The conclusions reached in those cases and the arguments advanced in their support were completely rejected by this court. A consideration of those arguments may be of use in view of the arguments now once more advanced to induce this court to give a narrow construction to our own act.

The Carl Johan, cited in The Dundee, 1 Hagg. Adm. 113; The Girolamo, 3 Hagg. Adm. 187; Cope v. Doherty, 4 Kay & J. 367, 2 De G. & J. 614, 27 L. J. Ch. N. S. 600, 4 Jur. N. S. 699, 6 Week. Rep. 695; General Iron Screw Collier Co. v. Schurmanns, 1 Johns. & H. 180, 29 L. J. Ch. N. S. 877, 6 Jur. N. S. 883, 8 Week. Rep. 732.

The principle of the law of the flag is important only as carrying onto the high seas laws which, by their terms, would otherwise not be effective there.

The Hamilton (Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Gilmore) 207 U. S. 398, 52 L. ed. 264, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133.

While it cannot be doubted that the law of the flag, namely, the law of Great Britain, will be enforced in our courts so far as relates to the creation of the right, in enforcing the obligation thus created, the law of the forum, namely, the law of the United States, determines the extent to which such obligation will be enforced in our courts.

Cuba R. Co. v. Crosby, 222 U. S. 473, 478, 56 L. ed. 274, 275, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132.

This court has uniformly adhered to the broad and liberal rule of construction laid down in the Scotland.

Butler v. Boston & S. S. S. Co. 130 U. S. 527, 550, 32 L. ed. 1017, 1022, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612; Providence & N. Y. S. S. Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co. 109 U. S. 578, 588, 27 L. ed. 1038, 1042, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379.

The law of limited liability is a part of our maritime code, and is applied whether favorable or adverse to foreign ships.

The Scotland (National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer) 105 U. S. 31, 26 L. ed. 1003; The H. F. Dimock, 52 Fed. 598; Re Morrison, 147 U. S. 14, 22, 37 L. ed. 60, 63, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 246; The City of Norwalk, 55 Fed. 98; Butler v. Boston & S. S. S. Co. 130 U. S. 527, 32 L. ed. 1017, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612.

The decisions of this court uniformly applying the Harter act, irrespective of the nationality of the vessel involved, are controlling authorities in the construction of the limited liability act.

The Silvia, 171 U. S. 462, 465, 43 L. ed. 241, 243, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 7; The Chattahoochee, 173 U. S. 540, 550, 43 L. ed. 801, 806, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 491; The Jason, 225 U. S. 32, 56 L. ed. 969, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 560; Knott v. Botany Worsted Mills, 179 U. S. 69, 76, 45 L. ed. 90, 95, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30.

The rule of limited liability as prescribed in the American limited liability act has been applied in every case which has come before the courts of the United States, irrespective of the nationality of the vessel or its owner.

Thomassen v. Whitwell, 9 Ben. 403, Fed. Cas. No. 13,929; The John Bramall, 10 Ben. 495, Fed. Cas. No. 7,334; Churchill v. The British America, 9 Ben. 516, Fed. Cas. No. 2,715; The State of Virginia, 60 Fed. 1018;

Digitized by Google

Levinson v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. 17 Alb. L. J. 285, Fed. Cas. No. 8,292; The Thingvalla, 1 C. C. A. 87, 1 U. S. App. 829, 48 Fed. 764; The Strathdon, 89 Fed. 374; The Norge, 156 Fed. 845; La Bourgogne (Deslions v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique) 210 U. S. 95, 52 L. ed. 973, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664.

The circumstance that the disaster out of which this proceeding arose involved but a single vessel of foreign nationality in no way affects the application of the American limited liability act.

The Wild Ranger, Lush. 553, 31 L. J. Prob. N. S. 206, 6 L. T. N. S. 164; La Bourgogne, supra; Chartered Mercantile Bank v. Netherlands India Steam Nav. Co. L. R. 10 Q. B. Div. 521, 52 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 220, 48 L. T. N. S. 546, 31 Week. Rep. 445, 5 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 65, 47 J. P. 260.

Mr. Justice Bradley's dictum in the Scotland was addressed to the law by which the mutual rights of parties are to be determined in ascertaining their primary liabilities and administering justice between them.

La Bourgogne (Deslions v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique) 210 U. S. 95, 115, 52 L. ed. 973, 983, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664; The Chattahoochee, 173 U. S. 540, 550, 43 L. ed. 801, 806, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 491; The Belgenland (The Belgenland v. Jensen) 114 U. S. 355, 368, 569, 29 L. ed. 152, 157, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 860.

The purpose of the act and of the rules in admiralty adopted to carry out its provisions was not merely to fix a limit upon the liability of the shipowner, but to provide for the determination of that liability in a single proceeding, the result of which would be binding upon all parties.

Providence & N. Y. S. S. Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co. 109 U. S. 578, 590, 27 L. ed. 1038, 1042, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379; Butler v. Boston & S. S. S. Co. 130 U. S. 527, 552, 32 L. ed. 1017, 1022, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612; The San Pedro (Metropolitan Red Wood Lumber Co. v. Doe) 223 U. S. 365, 371, 56 L. ed. 473, 474, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 275, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1221.

Wherever any suggestion is made in Mr. Justice Bradley's opinion that, under certain circumstances, a foreign law might be applied, he is careful to hedge it about with such limitation as—"provided it were shown what that law was. If not shown, we would apply our own law to the case."

The Scotland (National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer) 105 U. S. 29, 26 L. ed. 1003.

And again: "Each nation, however, may declare what it will accept, and, by its courts, enforce, as the law of the sea, when parties choose to resort to its forum for redress. And no persons subject to its jurisdiction, or seeking justice in its courts, can complain of the determination of their rights by that law, unless they can propound some other law by which they ought to be judged."

The Scotland (National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer) 105 U. S. 31, 32, 26 L. ed. 1003, 1004.

If, as may be thought from the reference by the learned district judge to MacLachlan on Shipping as authority for his statement of British law, he intended to take judicial notice of that law, he must have overlooked the case of Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. (The Montana) 129 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 788, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 469, where this court said, at page 445: "The law of Great Britain since the Declaration of Independence is the law of a foreign country, and, like any other foreign law, is matter of fact, which the courts of this country cannot be presumed to be acquainted with, or to have judicial knowledge of, unless it is pleaded and proved."

The rule is as well established in courts of admiralty as in courts of common law or courts of equity.

Ibid.

The claimants ask this court to read an exception into our statute, and to refuse to apply it to foreign ships under certain circumstances. This is but to ask a reconsideration of the views expressed in the Scotland, where this court held that, as the terms of our act were not restricted to any nationality or domicil, it should not be restricted by construction. Such an attempt to read qualifying words into an act of Congress proved unsuccessful in the Employers' Liability Cases (Howard v. Illinois C. R. Co.) 207 U. S. 463, 500, 52 L. ed. 297, 309, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141. See also Illinois C. R. Co. v. McKendree, 203 U. S. 514, 528–530, 51 L. ed. 298, 304, 305, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 153.

Neither the American nor the British limited liability act in any way inheres in the right, as was the case with the statutes considered in Slater v. Mexican Nat. R. Co. 194 U. S. 120, 48 L. ed. 900, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581, and Davis v. Mills, 194 U. S. 451, 48 L. ed. 1067, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 692; Stoomvaart Maatschappy Nederland v. Peninsular & O. Steam Nav. Co. L. R. 7 App. Cas. 800.

Nor is there any interdependence between Lord Campbell's act and the British limited liability act.

Glaholm v. Barker, L. R. 1 Ch. 229, 35 L. J. Ch. N. S. 259, 12 Jur. N. S. 82, 13 L. T. N. S. 653, 14 Week. Rep. 296.

The act complained of is always to be diagnosed in the light of the law of the place where committed, and its character determined according to that law; but the particular kind of and the extent of the remedy to be applied necessarily depend on the notions of justice entertained by the forum by which it is to be administered. The rule is like that pertaining to contracts. The lex loci determines their validity and meaning, but, when found valid and the true interpretation ascertained, the law of the forum steps in and declares the time, mode, and extent of the remedy.

Digitized by Google

Dorr Cattle Co. v. Des Moines Nat. Bank, 127 Iowa, 162, 98 N. W. 918, 4 Ann. Cas. 519.

If, then, the limited liability act is to be regarded as a statute respecting the remedy, and of a similar nature to any other statute of limitation, it must necessarily govern as the lex fori.

Scudder v. Union Nat. Bank, 91 U. S. 406, 413, 23 L. ed. 245, 249.

Messrs. Frederick M. Brown and George Whitefield Betts, Jr., argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Francis H. Kinnicutt, Kenneth Gardner, and John C. Prizer, filed a brief for William J. Mellor and Harry Anderson:

The rule that liability for a tort on land is governed by the lex loci delicti is universal.

Kaiser Ferdinand Nordbahn v. M. 57 Reichsgericht, 142; Wilson v. McNamee, 102 U. S. 572, 574, 26 L. ed. 234, 235: Herrick v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 31 Minn. 11, 47 Am. Rep. 771, 16 N. W. 413; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 670, 36 L. ed. 1123, 1128, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224; Powell v. Great Northern R. Co. 102 Minn. 448, 113 N. W. 1017.

The only instance, according to the weight of the American authorities, in which the lex loci delicti will not be permitted to govern substantive rights and liabilities to the same extent as if the courts of the locus delicti had been invoked, is that in which the enforcement of the lex loci delicti would be contrary to the public policy of the state of the forum.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 190, 198, 38 L. ed. 958, 960, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 978.

The Brantford City, 29 Fed. 395.

As regards the enforcement of the penal and criminal laws of a foreign country, the curia fori refuses, it is true, to give its co-operation, but it is not ordinarily called upon to apply a rule at variance with that of the lex loci.

Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 681, 36 L. ed. 1123, 1132, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224.

In maritime disasters upon the high seas, involving one foreign vessel or several vessels of the same foreign nationality, the law of the country to which the vessel or vessels belong governs the rights of all parties.

1 Calvo, Droit International, 4th ed. 552, bk. VI. § 3; Bluntschli, International Law, § 317; 1 Vattel, Law of Nations, chap. 19, § 216; 2 Rutherford, Institutes of Natural Law, chap. 9, §§ 8, 19; 1 Kent, Com. p. 26; Wheaton, International Law, 8th ed. § 106; 1 Wharton, International Law Dig. § 26; Whart. Confl. L. 3d ed. §§ 356, 473; Crapo v. Kelly, 16 Wall. 610, 624, 625, 21 L. ed. 430, 436, 437; Minor, Confl. L. § 195; Dicey, Confl. L. 2d ed. § 663; Patterson v. The Eudora, 190 U. S. 169, 176, 47 L. ed. 1002, 1006, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 821; The Hamilton (Old Dominiion S. S. Co. v. Gilmore) 207 U. S. 398, 405, 52 L. ed. 264, 270, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133; The Scotia, 14 Wall. 170, 184, 20 L. ed. 822, 824; United States v. Palmer, 3 Wheat. 610, 631, 4 L. ed. 471, 477; United States v. Klintock, 5 Wheat. 144, 5 L. ed. 55; Wilson v. McNamee, 102 U. S. 572, 574, 26 L. ed. 234, 235; Re Ah Sing, 13 Fed. 289; Re Moncan, 8 Sawy. 350, 14 Fed. 48; Marshall v. Murgatroyd, L. R. 6 Q. B. 31, 40 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 7, 23 L. T. N. S. 393, 19 Week. Rep. 72; La Bourgogne (Deslions v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique) 210 U. S. 95, 138, 52 L. ed. 973, 993, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664, 71 C. C. A. 489, 139 Fed. 438; The E. B. Ward, Jr. 17 Fed. 459; McDonald v. Mallory, 77 N. Y. 546, 33 Am. Rep. 664; Lindstrom v. International Nav. Co. 117 Fed. 170, 60 C. C. A. 649, 123 Fed. 475; Southern P. Co. v. De Valle Da Costa, 111 C. C. A. 417, 190 Fed. 689, 100 C. C. A. 313, 176 Fed. 843; The Jane Grey, 95 Fed. 693; Stewart v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 168 U. S. 445, 42 L. ed. 537, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105; Lloyd v. Guibert, L. R. 1 Q. B. 127, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 870; The Dio Adelphi (1879) 91 Journal du Palais (Court House Journal) for 1880 603, 609, 5 Desjardins, Dr. Comm. Marit, 118; The Amalia, 1 Moore, P. C. C. N. S. 482, Brown. & L. 151, 2 New Reports, 533, 32 L. J. Prob. N. S. 191, 8 Jur. N. S. 1111, 8 L. T. N. S. 805, 12 Week. Rep. 24.

The only exception to this statement which a laborious study of the judicial decisions and the work of text writers and commentarians of many countries has disclosed is a dictum by Vice Chancellor Wood, in delivering his judgment in Cope v. Doherty, 4 Kay & Johns, 367, a limitation proceeding, involving a collision in 1857 at sea between two American vessels.

Where, however, a collision occurs on the high seas between vessels of different nations whose laws are in conflict with each other, very divergent views have been expressed as to the proper solution. Only two theories, however, are well supported on principle and by authority, viz.:

Digitized by Google

(1) That the rights and liabilities (including limitation of liability) must be governed by the law of the flag of the vessel that was in fault in respect of the collision ("navire abordeur") and

(2) That they must be governed by the lex fori.

The former theory was adopted, subject to a slight qualification, by the 1885 International Congress of Antwerp (1885, Clunet, Droit International Privé, 593, 604), and has been applied by the French courts. This court adopted the latter theory in the case of The Scotland (National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer) 105 U. S. 24, 30, 26 L. ed. 1001, 1003. The German courts apply a composite system in which both theories are included.

The Apollo, Decision 4 Nov. 1891 of Cour de Cassation, 103 Journal du Palais (Courthouse Journal) for 1892, pt. 1, p. 69; 1892 Clunet, Dr. Int. Privé, 153, 181; The Apollo, 1903 Clunet, Dr. Int. Privé, 136, 154; The Stokesley (1905 Darras, Dr. Int. Privé, 114, 125); The Kong Inge (S. R. M. v. J. C. B. u. Genossen) 49 Reichsgericht 182, Decision of 18 Nov. 1901; The Seine, 74 Reichsgeright 46, Decision of 6 July, 1910; Valroger, Droit Maritime, § 2124.

The solution which the English courts have adopted, in respect of collisions between ships of different nations, depends upon a conception of sanctity inherent in the "general maritime law" which is extraordinary, to say the least. According to eminent English authorities, positive municipal laws and regulations must, in this class of cases, yield to the general maritime law, even if the collision in question occurs in the territorial waters of the country of the forum (The Zollverein, Swabey, Adm. 96, 2 Jur. N. S. 429, 4 Week. Rep. 555; The Saxonia, Lush. 410, 15 Moore, P. C. C. 262, 31 L. J. Prob. N. S. 201, 8 Jur. N. S. 315, 10 Week. Rep. 431; The Nostra Signora de los Dolores, 1 Dodson, Adm. 290; The Wild Ranger, Lush. 553, 32 L. J. Prob. N. S. 49, 9 Jur. N. S. 134, 7 L. T. N. S. 725, 11 Week. Rep. 255; The Leon, L. R. 6 Prob. Div. 148, 50 L. J. Prob. N. S. 59, 44 L. T. N. S. 613, 29 Week. Rep. 916, 4 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 404), unless the intention of the lawgiving authority that the municipal law shall displace the general maritime law is expressed with unmistakable clearness (The Amalia, 1 Moore, P. C. C. N. S. 471, Brown. & L. 151, 2 New Reports, 533, 32 L. J. Prob. N. S. 191, 9 Jur. N. S. 1111, 8 L. T. N. S. 805, 12 Week. Rep. 24).

This conception of the British courts has met with little approval even from British scholars.

Westlake, Priv. International Law, 5th ed. §§ 202, 202a, pp. 288–291.

The English conception of the general law maritime is thoroughly discredited in this country, where a greater degree of confidence in the justice and wisdom of statutory enactments seems to be indulged.

The Scotland (National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer) 105 U. S. 24, 32, 26 L. ed. 1001, 1004; The Lottawanna (Rodd v. Heartt) 21 Wall. 558, 572, 22 L. ed. 654, 661.

The English doctrine would afford no support to the contentions of the White Star Line. For the limited-liability principle never was a part of the general maritime law (The Volant, 1 W. Rob. 387; The Aline, 1 W. Rob. 117), and has not acquired, for the United States, the force of general maritime law since the act of 1851 was adopted (The Scotland [National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer] 105 U. S. 24, 29, 26 L. ed. 1001, 1003; La Bourgogne [Deslions v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique] 210 U. S. 95, 116, 52 L. ed. 973, 984, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664).

The readiest reply to appellant's argument is that Mr. Justice Blatchford, who concurred in the Scotland, has explained the scope of the decision of the court in a manner wholly at variance with all of appellant's contentions.

Thommasen v. Whitwill, 21 Blatchf. 45, 12 Fed. 894.

Diversity of citizenship of parties litigant is not a factor of legal significance.

Mulhall v. Fallon, 176 Mass. 266, 54 L.R.A. 934, 79 Am. St. Rep. 309, 57 N. E. 386; Smith v. Condry, 1 How. 28, 11 L. ed. 35; Cammell v. Sewell, 5 Hurlst. & N. 728, 29 L. J. Exch. N. S. 350, 6 Jur. N. S. 916, 2 L. T. N. S. 799, 8 Week. Rep. 639, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 891; The Scotia, 14 Wall. 170, 185, 20 L. ed. 822, 825; The Lamington, 87 Fed. 752; The Eagle Point, 136 Fed. 1010, 73 C. C. A. 569, 142 Fed. 453, 201 U. S. 644, 50 L. ed. 902, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 760; The Hamilton (Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Gilmore) 207 U. S. 398, 405, 52 L. ed. 264, 270, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133; Lindstrom v. International Nav. Co. 117 Fed. 170, 60 C. C. A. 649, 123 Fed. 475; Southern P. Co. v. De Valle Da Costa, 111 C. C. A. 417, 190 Fed. 689, 100 C. C. A. 313, 176 Fed. 843; United States v. Holmes, 5 Wheat. 412, 417, 5 L. ed. 122, 123.

In using the word "parties" in several passages of the Scotland decision, Mr. Justice Bradley was probably referring not to parties to the litigation, but to parties or actors in the collision, i. e., ships. It is not unusual in the law maritime to refer to ships as persons or parties.

Digitized by Google

Tucker v. Alexandroff, 183 U. S. 424, 438, 46 L. ed. 264, 270, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195; Ralli v. Troop, 157 U. S. 386, 403, 39 L. ed. 742, 750, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 657; The John G. Stevens, 170 U. S. 113, 120, 42 L. ed. 969, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 544.

The doctrine in the Scotland has invariably been regarded by this and other courts in connection with the decision of subsequent cases, as declaring the law of the flag to be the lex loci delicti where the maritime disaster involved a ship or ships of the same nation (as actors or parties in the collision or disaster), or as applying the lex fori, as a rule of justice where the disaster involved ships whose nations recognized different laws.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 190, 198, 38 L. ed. 958, 960, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 978; Herrick v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 31 Minn. 11, 47 Am. Rep. 771, 16 N. W. 413; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 593, 36 L. ed. 829, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905; Smith v. Condry, 1 How. 28, 11 L. ed. 35; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 670, 36 L. ed. 1123, 1128, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224; La Bourgogne (Deslions v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique) 210 U. S. 95, 115, 52 L. ed. 973, 983, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664; Cuba R. Co. v. Crosby, 222 U. S. 473, 478, 56 L. ed. 274, 275, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132; The Brantford City, 29 Fed. 384; Northern P. R. Co. v. Mase, 11 C. C. A. 63, 27 U. S. App. 238, 63 Fed. 116; The Belgenland, 114 U. S. 355, 370, 29 L. ed. 152, 157, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 860.

A single-ship disaster involves the same principle as a collision between two ships of the same nation.

The Lamington, 87 Fed. 752; The Egyptian Monarch, 36 Fed. 773; The Maud Carter, 29 Fed. 156; Pope v. Nickerson, 3 Story, 465, Fed. Cas. No. 11,274.

It is fundamental that the statutes of any state or nation have no extraterritorial force or effect in regulating acts or occurrences beyond its territorial boundaries.

Re Sawers, L. R. 12 Ch. Div. 528, 41 L. T. N. S. 46, 28 Week. Rep. 334, 4 Eng. Rul. Cas. 1; Phillips v. Eyre, L. R. 6 Q. B. 28, 10 Best & S. 1004, 40 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 28, 22 L. T. N. S. 869; The Nostra Signora de los Dolores, 1 Dodson, Adm. 290; American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co. 213 U. S. 347, 357, 53 L. ed. 826, 832, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511, 16 Ann. Cas. 1047; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sowers, 213 U. S. 55, 70, 53 L. ed. 695, 702, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397; The Scotia, 14 Wall. 170, 184, 185, 20 L. ed. 822, 824, 825; Crapo v. Kelly, 16 Wall. 610, 21 L. ed. 430; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 10 L. ed. 274; The Lamington, 87 Fed. 752; Whitford v. Panama R. Co. 23 N. Y. 471; Mahler v. Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. 35 N. Y. 352; Thompson v. Ketcham, 8 Johns. 190, 5 Am. Dec. 332; Le Forest v. Tolman, 117 Mass. 109, 19 Am. Rep. 400; Powell v. Great Northern R. Co. 102 Minn. 448, 113 N. W. 1017; Northern P. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 190, 197, 38 L. ed. 958, 960, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 978; Rundell v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 49 L.R.A. 92, 40 C. C. A. 625, 100 Fed. 660; United States v. Klintock, 5 Wheat. 144, 5 L. ed. 55; United States v. Davis, 2 Sumn. 482, Fed. Cas. No. 14,932; 1 Kent, Com. p. 26; United States v. Palmer, 3 Wheat. 610, 631, 634, 643, 4 L. ed. 471, 477, 478, 480.

Formerly the British limitation act was substantially identical with ours. It read, "No owner of any sea-going ship shall . . . be answerable in damages to an extent beyond the value of his ship and the freight due or to grow due," etc. Our act has always read, "The liability of the owner of any vessel . . . shall in no case exceed the amount or value of the interest of such owner in such vessel and her freight then pending."

The British courts invariably held American and other foreign vessels liable without limit for negligent disasters at sea, while this form of the British limitation act was in force; although it does not appear that the British courts were ever asked to apply the American act as the lex loci delicti, after the American act had been duly pleaded and proved.

The Wild Ranger, Lush. 553, 32 L. J. Prob. N. S. 49, 9 Jur. N. S. 134, 7 L. T. N. S. 725, 11 Week. Rep. 255; Cope v. Doherty, 2 De G. & J. 614, 27 L. J. Ch. N. S. 600, 4 Jur. N. S. 699, 6 Week. Rep. 695; The Carl Johan, cited in The Girolamo, 3 Hagg. Adm. 186; The Amalia, [illegible] Moore, P. C. C. N. S. 471, 475, Brown. [illegible] L. 151, 2 New Reports, 533, 32 L. [illegible] Prob. N. S. 191, 9 Jur. N. S. 1111, 87 [illegible] T. N. S. 805, 12 Week. Rep. 24.

Our courts may well pause before givi[illegible] British shipowners here the benefit of [illegible] more favorable rule of international la[illegible] than is accorded to American shipowne[illegible] in the British courts.

The Amalia, supra; The Santa Cruz, [illegible] C. Rob. 50; The Adeline, 9 Cranch, 24[illegible] 288, 3 L. ed. 719, 734.

It is said that as the Harter act appli[illegible] to acts done at sea by foreign vessels, t[illegible] limitation act should follow the same ru[illegible] The fundamental difference between the t[illegible] acts is indicated by the difference of sco[illegible] which the language of the acts expres[illegible] by the difference in national policy repre[illegible] sented by the two acts, as construed by our highest court, and by the difference of actual legislative intent shown by the debates in Congress.

Digitized by Google

The Chattahoochee, 173 U. S. 540, 550, 43 L. ed. 801, 806, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 491; United States v. Klintock, 5 Wheat. 144, 152, 5 L. ed. 55, 56; American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co. 213 U. S. 347, 53 L. ed. 826, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511, 16 Ann. Cas. 1047; The Delaware, 161 U. S. 459, 472, 40 L. ed. 771, 776, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 516; The Irrawaddy (Flint v. Christall) 171 U. S. 187, 43 L. ed. 130, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 831; Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. (The Montana) 129 U. S. 397, 459, 32 L. ed. 788, 798, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 469; La Bourgogne (Deslions v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique) 210 U. S. 95, 120, 52 L. ed. 973, 985, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664; Richardson v. Harmon, 222 U. S. 96, 103, 56 L. ed. 110, 113, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27; Moore v. American Transp. Co. 24 How. 1, 39, 40, 16 L. ed. 674, 681, 682; Providence & N. Y. S. S. Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co. 109 U. S. 578, 588, 27 L. ed. 1038, 1042, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379, 617; The Main v. Williams, 152 U. S. 122, 128, 38 L. ed. 381, 383, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 486; Chamberlain v. Western Transp. Co. 44 N. Y. 308, 4 Am. Rep. 681; Ayer & L. Tie Co. v. Kentucky, 202 U. S. 409, 50 L. ed. 1082, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679, 6 Ann. Cas. 205; Blake v. National City Bank, 23 Wall. 307, 317, 23 L. ed. 119, 120; Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Stranahan, 214 U. S. 320, 333, 53 L. ed. 1013, 1019, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 671; Jennison v. Kirk, 98 U. S. 453, 459, 25 L. ed. 240, 243, 4 Mor. Min. Rep. 504; Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 U. S. 457, 464, 36 L. ed. 226, 229, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511; Wadsworth v. Boysen, 78 C. C. A. 437, 148 Fed. 771; Shallus v. United States, 89 C. C. A. 445, 162 Fed. 653; American Net & Twine Co. v. Worthington, 141 U. S. 468, 474, 35 L. ed. 821, 824, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 55; The Collector v. Richards (Arthur v. Richards) 23 Wall. 246, 258, 23 L. ed. 95, 96; Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S. 470, 495, 48 L. ed. 525, 535, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 349; United States v. Wilson, 58 Fed. 768; Ex parte Farley, 40 Fed. 69.

Messrs. Benjamin Micou, Richard P. Whiteley, and George S. Graham filed a brief as amici curiæ on behalf of Louise Robins et al.:

In effect, the collision might just as well have taken place in an English port, as a ship on the high seas is a part of the country to which she belongs.

The Lamington, 87 Fed. 752; Crapo v. Kelly, 16 Wall. 610, 21 L. ed. 430; Wilson v. McNamee, 102 U. S. 572, 26 L. ed. 234; Wheaton, International Law, 8th ed. §§ 106 et seq; 1 Kent, Com. p. 26; Whart. Confl. L. § 356; 2 Grotius, De Jure Belli, chap. 4, § 13.

If the tort complained of was committed within the limits of Great Britain (and a British ship in collision with an iceberg upon the high seas is, to this extent, British territory) then its liability must be governed by British laws.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 190, 38 L. ed. 958, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 978; Slater v. Mexican Nat. R. Co. 194 U. S. 120, 48 L. ed. 900, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; Mexican C. R. Co. v. Eckman, 205 U. S. 538, 51 L. ed. 920, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 791.

As far back as the learned Chief Justice Taney's day, that eminent jurist, in a case involving the collision of two American-owned vessels in the port of Liverpool, held that when a collision of vessels occurs in an English port, the rights of the parties depend upon the provisions of the British statutes then in force; and if doubt exists as to their true construction, that this court will adopt that which is sanctioned by the courts of Great Britain.

Smith v. Condry, 1 How. 28, 11 L. ed. 35. See also The China, 74 U. S. 53, 19 L. ed. 67; The Halley, L. R. 2 Adm. & Eccl. 3.

Where the lex loci delicti governs and is sued under in a foreign jurisdiction, any limitations upon liability must be those of the lex loci delicti, and not of the lex fori.

Slater v. Mexican Nat. R. Co. 194 U. S. 120, 48 L. ed. 900, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581.

Since any suit for damages must be brought against the steamship company under the laws of Great Britain, and since those laws control the rights of parties interested and the liabilities of the company defendant, our courts would be clearly without jurisdiction to entertain any proceedings to limit liability under our statutes and rules. The tort having been committed within British territory, the laws of Great Britain only can apply.

American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co. 213 U. S. 347, 53 L. ed. 826, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511, 16 Ann. Cas. 1047; The Eagle Point, 73 C. C. A. 569, 142 Fed. 453; The Lamington, 87 Fed. 752; Cuba R. Co. v. Crosby, 222 U. S. 473, 56 L. ed. 274, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132; The Scotland (National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer) 105 U. S. 24, 26 L. ed. 1001; The Belgenland, 114 U. S. 355, 29 L. ed. 152, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 860; La Bourgogne (Deslions v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique) 210 U. S. 95, 52 L. ed. 973, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664.

Digitized by Google

Messrs. Howard S. Harrington, Henry J. Bigham, D. Roger Englar, and Oscar R. Houston filed a brief for Mary A. Holverson et al.:

A vessel on the high seas is regarded as part of the territory of the nation whose flag she flies.

Crapo v. Kelly, 16 Wall. 610, 21 L. ed 430; The Hamilton (Old Dominion S. S Co. v. Gilmore) 207 U. S. 398, 52 L. ed. 264, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133; Wilson v. McNamee, 102 U. S. 572, 574, 26 L. ed. 234, 235; The Lamington, 87 Fed. 752.

In tort actions the lex loci delicti commissi governs with respect to all matters of substantive law.

The Hamilton (Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. Gilmore) 207 U. S. 398, 52 L. ed. 264, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133; Cuba R. Co. v. Crosby, 222 U. S. 473, 478, 56 L. ed. 274, 275, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132.

The amount to which the owner of a vessel may limit his liability for injuries to passengers and cargo is a question of substantive right, and not of procedure.

Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 670, 36 L. ed. 1123, 1128, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224; Northern P. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 190, 38 L. ed. 958, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 978; Slater v. Mexican Nat. R. Co. 194 U. S. 120, 48 L. ed. 900, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; Mexican C. R. Co. v. Eckman, 205 U. S. 538, 51 L. ed. 920, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 791; Dicey, Confl. L. 2d ed. p. 651; Minor, Confl. L. § 195; Whart. Confl. L. § 473.

Similar limitations have been held to be matters of substantive law, governable by the lex loci.

The Eagle Point, 73 C. C. A. 569, 142 Fed. 453; Pope v. Nickerson, 3 Story, 465, Fed. Cas. No. 11,274; The Lamington, 87 Fed. 752.

The American limitation act was intended to apply only to cases arising within the jurisdiction of the United States, or to cases in which it would be unjust to apply any other law.

United States v. Palmer, 3 Wheat. 610, 4 L. ed. 471; American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co. 213 U. S. 347, 357, 53 L. ed. 826, 832, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511, 16 Ann. Cas. 1047; The Scotland (National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer) 105 U. S. 24, 26 L. ed. 1001.

Considering both the decision and the dictum in the Scotland together, the case may be analyzed as laying down the following principles:

(1) If a collision occurs on the high seas between American vessels, or between vessels of two or more different nationalities having different laws on the subject, or if a collision occurs within the territorial waters of the United States, the American courts will apply the American limitation act.

(2) If a collision occurs on the high seas between vessels of the same nationality, or between vessels of different nationalities whose laws with respect to limitation of liability are similar, or if a collision occurs within the territorial waters of a foreign country, the American courts will apply the law of the flag of the vessel or of the country in whose territorial waters the disaster occurred.

This case has been cited with approval and followed in the following cases in this court involving the limitation act:

The Great Western, 118 U. S. 520, 537, 30 L. ed. 156, 162, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1172; The City of Norwich (Place v. Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co.) 118 U. S. 468, 490, 30 L. ed. 134, 142, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1150; Butler v. Boston & S. S. S. Co. 130 U. S. 527, 555, 556, 32 L. ed. 1017, 1023, 1024, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612; Re Garnett, 141 U. S. 12, 13, 35 L. ed. 633, 634, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840; Craig v. Continental Ins. Co. 141 U. S. 638, 645, 35 L. ed. 886, 887, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 97; La Bourgogne (Deslions v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique) 210 U. S. 95, 115, 120, 52 L. ed. 973, 983, 985, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664.

The decision in each of these cases is entirely consistent with the opinion of Mr. Justice Bradley, and there is nothing in any of them that suggests any criticism of any portion of that opinion.

The fact that the Harter act has been held to apply to all foreign vessels carrying goods to and from American ports is quite beside the point. The purposes of the two acts are quite different; one is intended to promote American shipping, the other to protect American importers and exporters from unreasonable provisions in bills of lading. The distinction between the two acts is shown by the very case upon which the petitioner relies.

The Chattahoochee, 173 U. S. 540, 550, 43 L. ed. 801, 806, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 491.

Mr. A. Gordon Murray filed a brief for Adele Nasrallah et al.:

The English law is a fact to be proved and shown to apply.

The Scotland (National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer) 105 U. S. 24, 26 L. ed. 1001; Cuba R. Co. v. Crosby, 222 U. S. 473, 56 L. ed. 274, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132; La Bourgogne (Deslions v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique) 210 U. S. 95, 52 L. ed. 973, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664.

Claims for loss of life are within the statute.

Butler v. Boston & S. S. S. Co. 130 U. S.

Digitized by Google

555, 32 L. ed. 1023, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612; La Bourgogne (Deslions v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique) 210 U. S. 95, 140, 52 L. ed. 973, 993, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664.

Where such losses occurred under circumstances where it was conceived that the particular law of the land in which the court called upon to adjudicate between the parties is situated did not apply, it has been pointed out that the court would consider by which law the rights of the respective parties were to be adjudged; and it is a fundamental principle that where the law of the land or forum does not apply, it is perfectly competent for the court to judge the parties by the law that does apply, provided it is shown what that law is, and that applying such law does not work injustice to any particular party.

The Scotland (National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer) 105 U. S. 24, 29, 30, 26 L. ed. 1001, 1003.

The proceeding in the court below is a proceeding in admiralty for the prevention of a multiplicity of suits, as well as to award limitation of liability, if the owner is entitled to it.

Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Balfour, 179 U. S. 55, 45 L. ed. 82, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28; Dowdell v. United States Dist. Ct. 71 C. C. A. 288, 139 Fed. 444.

It has been denominated an equitable action.

Re Morrison, 147 U. S. 14, 34, 37 L. ed. 60, 67, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 246.

Not in a sense inconsistent with the admiralty jurisdiction however.

Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Balfour, 179 U. S. 55, 45 L. ed. 82, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28.

A court of equity will do full justice.

Camp v. Boyd, 229 U. S. 530, 551, 57 L. ed. 1317, 1326, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 785; Cuba R. Co. v. Crosby, 222 U. S. 473, 479, 56 L. ed. 274, 276, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132.

The doctrine of stare decisis is a wholesome doctrine.

Vail v. Arizona, 207 U. S. 201, 205, 52 L. ed. 169, 171, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 107.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes here upon a certificate from the circuit court of appeals. The facts stated are as follows, with slight abbreviation. The Titanic, a British steamship, which had sailed from Southampton, England, on her maiden voyage for New York, collided on the high seas with an iceberg, on April 14, and sank the next morning, with the loss of many lives and total loss of vessel, cargo, personal effects, mails, and everything connected with the ship except certain lifeboats. The owner, alleging that the loss was occasioned and incurred without its privity or knowledge, filed a petition for limitation of its liability under the laws of the United States (Rev. Stat. §§ 4283–4285, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 2943, 2944), and Admiralty Rules 54 and 56. Before it did so a number of actions to recover for loss of life and personal injuries resulting from the disaster had been brought against the petitioners in Federal and state courts. The persons who sustained loss were of many different nationalities, including citizens of the United States. Mellor, a British subject, excepted to the petition, on the ground that "the acts by reason of which and for which [the petitioner] claims limitation of liability took place on board a British registered vessel on the high seas," and therefore the law of the United States would not apply. Anderson, a citizen of the United States, excepted on the ground that the law of the United States [731] could not and that of England was not shown to apply. The district court dismissed the petition as to these two. 209 Fed. 501. The petitioner appealed, and the circuit court of appeals certified the following questions:

A. Whether, in the case of a disaster upon the high seas, where (1) only a single vessel of British nationality is concerned and there are claimants of many different nationalities; and where (2) there is nothing before the court to show what, if any, is the law of the foreign country to which the vessel belongs, touching the owner's liability for such disaster,—such owner can maintain a proceeding under §§ 4283–4285, U. S. Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 2943, 2944), and the 54th and 56th Rules in Admiralty?

B. Whether if, in such a case, it appears that the law of the foreign country to which the vessel belongs makes provision for the limitation of the vessel owner's liability, upon terms and conditions different from those prescribed in the statutes of this country, the owners of such foreign vessel can maintain a proceeding in the courts of the United States, under said statutes and rules?

In the event of the answer to question B being in the affirmative,

C. Will the courts of the United States in such proceeding enforce the law of the United States or of the foreign country in respect to the amount of such owner's liability?

The general proposition that a foreign ship may resort to the courts of the United States for a limitation of liability under Rev. Stat. § 4283 is established. The Scotland (National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer) 105 U. S. 24, 26 L. ed. 1001; La

Digitized by Google

Bourgogne (Deslions v. La Compagnie Générale Transatlantique) 210 U. S. 95, 52 L. ed. 973, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664. These were cases respectively of collisions between American and English and English and French vessels. See also The Chattahoochee, 173 U. S. 540, 43 L. ed. 801, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 491. The Germanic (Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Aitken) 196 U. S. 589, 598, 49 L. ed. 610, 614, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 317. But it is argued that there is an exception in a case like this, where only a single foreign ship is concerned. The argument is supported by a quotation from Mr. Justice Bradley in The Scotland, to the effect that if a collision occurred [732] on the high seas between two vessels belonging to the same nation, the court would determine the controversy by the law of their flag. For, it is said, if the foreign law would govern in that case, it must govern in this, and therefore, at least, in the absence of allegations bringing the case within the foreign law, the petition must be dismissed. If, in the observation referred to, Mr. Justice Bradley had been speaking of proceedings of this class, it would be important, as sanctioning the view that the United States courts offered a forum concursus for the administration of other systems as well as of our own; but we apprehend that he was speaking of an ordinary collision case, and merely indicating that, in such a case, the principle usually governing foreign torts would apply. That principle may be accepted as equally governing here, but it does not carry us far.

It is true that the act of Congress does not control or profess to control the conduct of a British ship on the high seas. See American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co. 213 U. S. 347, 356, 53 L. ed. 826, 832, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511, 16 Ann. Cas. 1047. It is true that the foundation for a recovery upon a British tort is an obligation created by British law. But it also is true that the laws of the forum may decline altogether to enforce that obligation on the ground that it is contrary to the domestic policy, or may decline to enforce it except within such limits as it may impose. Cuba R. Co. v. Crosby, 222 U. S. 473, 478, 480, 56 L. ed. 274-276, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 40, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132; Dicey, Confl. L. 2d ed. 647. It is competent, therefore, to Congress to enact that, in certain matters belonging to admiralty jurisdiction, parties resorting to our courts shall recover only to such extent or in such way as it may mark out. Butler v. Boston & S. S. S. Co. 130 U. S. 527, 32 L. ed. 1017, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612. The question is not whether the owner of the Titanic by this proceeding can require all claimants to come in, and can cut down rights vested under English law, as against, for instance, Englishmen living in England, who do not appear. It is only whether those who do see [733] fit to sue in this country are limited in their recovery irrespective of the English law. That they are so limited results, in our opinion, from the decisions of this court. For on what ground was the limitation of liability allowed in The Scotland or La Bourgogne? Not on their being subject to the act of Congress or any law of the United States in their conduct, but if not on that ground, then it must have been because our statute permits a foreign vessel to limit its liability according to the act when sued in the United States. There may be some little uncertainty in the language of Mr. Justice Bradley in the earlier case. A slight suggestion that the statute is applied because of a vacuum,—the absence of any law properly governing the transaction. But it was no necessary part of his argument that people were to be made liable after the event by the mere choice of a forum; and if they were, it would not be because of the act of Congress. That does not impose, but only limits, the liability,—a liability assumed already to exist on other grounds. The essential point was that the limitation might be applied to foreign ships if sued in this country, although they were not subject to our substantive law.

It is not necessary to consider whether the act of Congress may not limit the rights of shippers or American vessels to recover for injuries in our waters or on the high seas, so that if they sued in a foreign court they could not be allowed to recover more than the act allows, if our construction of the law were followed. A law that limits a right in one case may limit a remedy in another. This statute well might be held to announce a general policy, governing both obligations that arise within the jurisdiction and suits that are brought in the courts of the United States. Emery v. Burbank, 163 Mass. 326, 328, 28 L.R.A. 57, 47 Am. St. Rep. 456, 39 N. E. 1026. It clearly limits the remedy, as we have shown, in cases where it has nothing to say about the rights. With the explanation that we have made we may repeat here Justice [734] Bradley's words: "The rule of limited responsibility is now our maritime rule. It is the rule by which, through the act of Congress, we have announced that we propose to administer justice in maritime cases."

We see no absurdity in supposing that if the owner of the Titanic were sued in different countries, each having a different rule affecting the remedy there, the local rule should be applied in each case. It can be imagined that, in consequence of such diverse proceedings, the owner might not be able to comply with the local requirements for limitation, as it also is conceivable that, if it sought the advantage of an alien law, it might as a condition have to pay more than its liability under the law of its flag in some cases. But the imagining of such possible difficulties is no sufficient reason for not applying the statute as it has been construed, on the whole, it would seem, with good effect.

Digitized by Google

It follows from what we have said that the first two questions must be answered in the affirmative, and the third, the law of the United States.

Answer: A, Yes.

B, Yes.

C, The law of the United States.

Mr. Justice McKenna considers it a proper deduction from The Scotland that the law of the foreign country should be enforced in respect of the amount of the owner's liability.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

CASES

ARGUED AND DECIDED

IN THE

SUPREME COURT

OF THE

UNITED STATES

AT

OCTOBER TERM, 1913.

Vol. 234.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

REFERENCE TABLE

OF SUCH CASES

DECIDED IN U. S. SUPREME COURT,

OCTOBER TERM, 1913,

AND REPORTED HEREIN,

VOLUME 234,

AS ALSO APPEAR IN

OFFICIAL REPORTER'S EDITION.

Off. Rep. 234 U. S.	Title.	Here in.
1	Tap Line Cases (United States v. Louisiana & P. R. Co.)	1185
3–5	" "	1186
5–7	" "	1187
7–10	" "	1188
10–11	" "	1189
22–23	" "	1193
23–25	" "	1194
25–28	" "	1195
28–29	" "	1196
29	United States v. Butler County R. Co.	1196
31–33	" "	1197
33–36	" "	1198
36	United States v. Axman	1198
38–41	" "	1200
41–44	" "	1201
44–45	" "	1202
46	Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Woodford	1202
48	" "	1206
48–51	" "	1207
51–52	" "	1208
52	Atlantic Transport Co. v. Imbrovek	1208
56–57	" "	1210
57–59	" "	1211
59–62	" "	1212
62–63	" "	1213
63	Atlantic Transport Co. v. Maryland use of Szczesek	1213
64	" "	1214
64	Schmidt & Story v. Bank of Commerce	1214
65–67	" "	1215
67–70	" "	1216
70	" "	1217
70–72	Ex parte Roe	1217
72–73	" "	1218
74	Taylor v. Anderson	1218
74–76	" "	1219
76	" "	1220
76	Washington Securities Co. v. United States	1220
77–78	" "	1222
78–80	Washington Securities Co. v. United States	1223
80	New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. National Rice Milling Co.	1223
81–84	" "	1225
84–86	" "	1226
86	Wabash R. Co. v. Hayes	1226
88	" "	1229
88–91	" "	1230
91	Ocampo v. United States	1231
92	" "	1232
92–95	" "	1233
95–98	" "	1234
98–100	" "	1235
100–103	" "	1236
103	" "	1237
103	Carlson v. Washington ex rel. Curtiss	1237
104–106	" "	1238
106–109	" "	1239
109–112	" "	1 10
112–114	" "	1241
114–117	" "	1242
117	" "	1243
117	Virginia v. West Virginia	1243
118	" "	1243
118–121	" "	1244
121–122	" "	1245
123	Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Cohen	1245
123–124	" "	1247
124–125	" "	1248
125–126	" "	1249
126–128	" "	1250
131–132	" "	1252
132–134	" "	1253
134–137	" "	1254
137	" "	1255
138	Texas & P. R. Co. v. American Tie & Timber Co.	1255
140–142	" "	1256
142–144	" "	1257
144–147	" "	1258
147–149	" "	1259

Digitized by Google

Off. Rep. 234 U. S.	Title.	Here in.
149	New York L. Ins. Co. v. Head	1259
154	" "	1261
154–157	" "	1262
157–159	" "	1263
159–162	" "	1264
162–164	" "	1265
164–165	" "	1266
166	New York L. Ins. Co. v. Head	1266
166–167	" "	1266
167	Florida East Coast R. Co. v. United States	1267
173–174	" "	1267
174–177	" "	1268
177–180	" "	1269
180–182	" "	1270
182–185	" "	1271
185–188	" "	1272
188	" "	1273
188	Van Dyke v. Cordova Copper Co.	1273
189–190	" "	1273
190–192	" "	1274
192	Mullen v. Simmons	1274
195–197	" "	1275
197–199	" "	1276
199	International Harvester Co. v. Missouri	1276
202–205	" "	1279
205–207	" "	1280
207–210	" "	1281
210–212	" "	1282
212–215	" "	1283
215	" "	1284
216	International Harvester Co. v. Kentucky	1284
219–220	" "	1286
220–222	" "	1287
222–224	" "	1288
224	Keokee Consolidated Coke Co. v. Taylor	1288
226–227	" "	1289
227	" "	1290
228	United States v. Buffalo Pitts Co.	1290
229–230	" "	1291
230–233	" "	1292
233–236	" "	1293
236	" "	1294
236	United States v. United Engineering & Contracting Co.	1294
237	" "	1295
237–240	" "	1296
240–242	" "	1297
242–244	" "	1298
245	United States v. First Nat. Bank	1298
246–248	" "	1299
248–251	" "	1300
251–252	" "	1301
257–258	" "	1303
258–261	" "	1304
261–262	" "	1305
263	Lazarus, Michel, & Lazarus v. Prentice	1305
265	" "	1306
265–268	" "	1307
268–269	" "	1308

Off. Rep. 234 U. S.	Title.	Here in.
270	Stone, Sand & Gravel Co. v. United States	1308
274–276	" "	1310
276–278	" "	1311
278–280	" "	1312
280	Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Georgia	1312
286–288	" "	1316
288–291	" "	1317
291–293	" "	1318
293–294	" "	1319
294	Interstate Commerce Commission v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co.	1319
302–304	" "	1324
304–306	" "	1325
306–309	" "	1326
309–311	" "	1327
311–314	" "	1328
314	" "	1329
315	Interstate Commerce Commission v. Southern Pacific Co.	1329
315–316	" "	1329
316	" "	1330
317	Port Richmond & B. P. Ferry Co. v. Bd. of Chosen Freeholders	1330
320	" "	1331
320–323	" "	1332
323–325	" "	1333
325–328	" "	1334
328–330	" "	1335
330–333	" "	1336
333	" "	1337
333	Sault Ste. Marie v. International Transit Co.	1337
337–338	" "	1339
338–341	" "	1340
341–342	" "	1341
342	Houston, East & West Texas R. Co. v. United States	1341
345	" "	1345
345–349	" "	1346
349–350	" "	1347
350–352	" "	1348
352–355	" "	1349
355–357	" "	1350
357–360	" "	1351
360	" "	1352
360	Citizens Banking Co. v. Ravenna Nat. Bank	1352
363–364	" "	1353
364–366	" "	1354
366–369	" "	1355
369	Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co.	1356
371–373	" "	1358
373–375	" "	1359
375–378	" "	1360
378–380	" "	1361
380	Gilson v. United States	1361
381–383	" "	1362
383–384	" "	1363
385	Grannis v. Ordean	1363
386	" "	1365
386–389	" "	1366
390–391	" "	1367
391–394	" "	1368
394–396	" "	1369

Digitized by Google

Off. Rep. 234 U. S.	Title.	Here in.
396–398	Grannis v. Ordean	1370
399	Dale v. Pattison	1370
399–400	" "	1371
400–402	" "	1372
402–403	" "	1373
404–405	" "	1374
405–408	" "	1375
408–410	" "	1376
411	" "	1377
412	Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harris	1377
415	" "	1380
415–418	" "	1381
418–420	" "	1382
420–422	" "	1383
422	Johnson v. Gearlds	1383
423–424	" "	1384
424–427	" "	1385
427–429	" "	1386
429–430	" "	1387
433–434	" "	1388
434–437	" "	1389
437–439	" "	1390
439–442	" "	1391
442–445	" "	1392
445–447	" "	1393
447–448	" "	1394
448–450	Equitable Surety Co. v. United States use of W. McMillan & Son	1394
450–452	" "	1395
454–455	" "	1396
455–457	" "	1397
457–458	" "	1398
459	Missouri P. R. Co. v. Larabee	1398
459–461	" "	1399
461–463	" "	1400
463–466	" "	1401
466–469	" "	1405
469–471	" "	1406
471–474	" "	1407
474–475	" "	1408
476	Intermountain Rate Cases (United States v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co.)	1408
477–480	" "	1419
480–482	" "	1420
482–485	" "	1421
485–487	" "	1422
487–490	" "	1423
490–494	" "	1424
494–495	" "	1425
495	United States v. Union P. R. Co.	1426
496–497	" "	1429
497	Illinois ex rel. Dunne v. Economy Light & Power Co.	1429
510–511	" "	1434
511–514	" "	1435
514–517	" "	1436
517–519	" "	1437
519–522	" "	1438
522–524	" "	1439
525	Lane v. Watts	1440
526–528	" "	1451
528–530	" "	1452
530–533	" "	1453
533–536	" "	1454

Off. Rep. 234 U. S.	Title.	Here in.
536–538	Lane v. Watts	1455
538–541	" "	1456
541–542	" "	1457
542	Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Brown	1457
546	" "	1458
546–547	" "	1459
548	Pipe Line Cases (United States v. Ohio Oil Co.)	1459
557–558	" "	1469
559–561	" "	1470
561–563	" "	1471
563–566	" "	1472
566–569	" "	1473
569–571	" "	1474
571–574	" "	1475
574–575	" "	1476
576	Charleston & W. C. R. Co. v. Thompson	1476
576–577	" "	1478
577–578	" "	1479
579	International Harvester Co. v. Kentucky	1479
582–584	" "	1481
584–587	" "	1482
587–589	" "	1483
589–591	International Harvester Co. v. Kentucky	1484
592	Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Higdon	1484
594	" "	1487
594–597	" "	1488
597–600	" "	1489
600	" "	1490
600	Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers Asso. v. United States	1490
604–606	" "	1496
606–608	" "	1497
608–611	" "	1498
611–613	" "	1499
613–614	" "	1500
615	Jones v. Jones	1500
615–617	" "	1502
617–619	" "	1503
619	Moore-Mansfield Constr. Co. v. Electrical Installation Co.	1503
620–622	" "	1504
622–625	" "	1505
625–626	" "	1506
627	Louisiana v. McAdoo	1506
628–629	" "	1507
629–631	" "	1508
631–634	" "	1509
634	" "	1510
634–635	Collins v. Kentucky	1510
635–638	" "	1511
638	" "	1512
639	Malone v. Kentucky	1512
640	Order of St. Benedict v. Steinhauser	1512
641	" "	1513
641–644	" "	1514
644–646	" "	1515
646–649	" "	1516
649–652	" "	1517
652	" "	1518
652	Selig v. Hamilton	1518
655	" "	1521

Digitized by Google

Off. Rep. 284 U. S.	Title.	Here in.
655-658	Selig v. Hamilton	1522
658-660	" "	1523
660-663	" "	1524
663-666	" "	1525
666-667	" "	1526
667-668	Chapman & D. Lumber Co. v. Board of Directors St. Francis Levee Dist.	1526
668-669	" "	1527
669	Burke v. Southern P. R. Co.	1527
671-673	" "	1541
673-675	" "	1542
675-678	" "	1543
678-680	" "	1544
680-683	" "	1545
683-686	"	1546
686-688	" "	1547
688-691	" "	1548
691-693	" "	1549
693-696	" "	1550
696-698	" "	1551
698-701	" "	1552
701-703	" "	1553
703-706	" "	1554

Off. Rep. 284 U. S.	Title.	Here in.
706-709	Burke v. Southern P. R. Co.	1555
709-711	" "	1556
711	" "	1557
712	Hull v. Burr	1557
713-715	" "	1559
715-717	" "	1560
717-720	" "	1561
720-722	" "	1562
722-724	" "	1563
724-725	" "	1564
725	Southern R. Co. v. Crockett	1564
727-728	" "	1565
728-731	" "	1566
731-734	" "	1567
734-735	" "	1568
735-738	" "	1569
738	" "	1570
738	Roller v. Murray	1570
739	" "	1570
739-742	" "	1571
742-744	" "	1572
744-747	" "	1573
747	" "	1574
748-769	Memorandum Decisions	1575-1584

284 U. S.

Digitized by Google

THE DECISIONS

OF THE

Supreme Court of the United States

AT

OCTOBER TERM, 1913.

---

[1] UNITED STATES and Interstate Commerce Commission, Appts.,[1]
v.
LOUISIANA & PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY et al. (No. 829.)

ATCHISON, TOPEKA, & SANTA FE RAILWAY COMPANY et al., Appts.,
v.
LOUISIANA & PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY et al. (No. 830.)

UNITED STATES and Interstate Commerce Commission, Appts.,
v.
WOODWORTH & LOUISIANA CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY et al. (No. 831.)

ATCHISON, TOPEKA, & SANTA FE RAILWAY COMPANY et al., Appts.,
v.
WOODWORTH & LOUISIANA CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY et al. (No. 832.)

UNITED STATES and Interstate Commerce Commission, Appts.,
v.
MANSFIELD RAILWAY & TRANSPORTATION COMPANY et al. (No. 833.)

ATCHISON, TOPEKA, & SANTA FE RAILWAY COMPANY et al., Appts.,
v.
MANSFIELD RAILWAY & TRANSPORTATION COMPANY et al. (No. 834.)

UNITED STATES and Interstate Commerce Commission, Appts.,
v.
VICTORIA, FISHER, & WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY et al. (No. 835.)

ATCHISON, TOPEKA, & SANTA FE RAILWAY COMPANY et al., Appts.,
v.
VICTORIA, FISHER, & WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY et al. (No. 836.)

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 1-29.)

Commerce court — review of order of Interstate Commerce Commission — affirmative or negative action.

1. An order of the Interstate Commerce Commission which, amending a prior order refusing to compel certain trunk line railroads to establish or re-establish through routes and joint rates with, and to grant allowances and divisions to, certain "tap lines," required such trunk lines to desist from making allowances to the tap lines out of joint through rates for proprietary freight, and provided that if the trunk lines should fail, by a stated time, to re-establish through routes and joint rates on nonproprietary freight, the Commission would, upon proper petition, enter an order requiring the establishment of such routes and rates, or enter upon an inquiry with respect thereto,—is affirmative rather than negative in character, and was hence reviewable in the commerce court.

[For other cases, see Commerce Court, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1913 Supp.]

Carriers — who are.

2. The right of the public to use the facilities of a railroad, and to demand service of it, rather than the extent of its business, is the real criterion by which to determine whether or not it is a common carrier.

[For other cases, see Carriers, I., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Carriers — tap lines — division of joint rates.

3. "Tap line" railroads connecting timber lands and lumber mills with trunk line railroads, although owned by the persons who also own the timber and mills which they principally serve, must be regarded as common carriers as well of the freight belonging to the owners of such tap lines as of nonproprietary traffic, and as such to be entitled to participate with such trunk line railroads in joint through rates, where such tap line roads are organized as common carriers under the state laws, are so treated by the public authorities of the state, are engaged in carrying for hire the goods of those who see fit to employ them, are authorized to exercise the right of eminent domain by the state of their incorporation, and are treated and dealt with as common carriers by connecting systems of other carriers.

[1] Reported by the Official Reporter under the title of "The Tap Line Cases."

Digitized by Google

[For other cases, see Carriers, III., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[Nos. 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836.]

Argued April 8, 9, and 13, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

EIGHT APPEALS from the United States Commerce Court to review decrees annulling in part orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission denying in part the right of certain tap line railroads to participate as common carriers in joint rates. Affirmed.

See same case below, 209 Fed. 244.

Statement by Mr. Justice Day:

These are all appeals from decrees of the United States commerce court (209 Fed. 244), annulling orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, refusing in whole or in part to compel certain common carriers which had filed schedules canceling former schedules covering through routes and joint rates with the Louisiana & Pacific Railway Company, the Woodworth & Louisiana Central Railway Company, the Mansfield Railway & Transportation Company, and the Victoria, Fisher, & Western Railroad Company, appellees, hereinafter referred to as the tap lines, to establish or re-establish through routes and joint rates and to grant allowances and divisions to the tap lines.

The Commission, after an extensive investigation of the tap lines in the lumber regions, particularly in the states of Arkansas, Missouri, Louisiana, and Texas, on April 23 and May 14, 1912, filed its report and supplementary report (23 Inters. Com. Rep. 277, 549). The report deals at some length with the manner in which logs and lumber are moved in that territory, and the practices attending such traffic. The Commission found the identification of the road with the industry, the necessity of incorporation to secure divisions and allowances, the great amount in the aggregate paid by the trunk lines to the tap lines, and the resulting discrimination, the fact that allowances were dependent upon the bargain the tap lines might exact from the trunk lines for a proportion of their traffic, and not upon the amount of service rendered, and the fact that most of the lumber mills were near public carriers, and that the tap lines would not be kept in operation if the mills were removed. General principles for determining the charactor [4] of carriers were set forth, and the conclusion stated that the real relation of a tap line was a question to be decided upon the facts in each case.

The Commission entered upon a particular examination of the various lines under investigation, among others, the appellees in these appeals. It found:

The Louisiana & Pacific Railway Company, controlled by the R. A. Long interests, owning a controlling interest in the Hudson River Lumber Company, the King-Ryder Lumber Company, Longville Lumber Company, and the Calcasieu Long Leaf Lumber Company, consists of the following tracks, all of which were originally constructed as private logging roads: (1) A track from De Ridder Junction, Louisiana (all of the lines involved in these cases are within that state), to Bundicks, a distance of 8 miles. The mill of the Hudson River Lumber Company, in whose interest this track is operated, is located at De Ridder, within a few hundred feet of the trunk lines; Bundicks is apparently a logging camp with a company store. (2) A track from Lilly Junction to Walla, about 7½ miles, the latter being a point in the woods where the King-Ryder Lumber Company has a commissary, and where is located a small independent yellow-pine mill, owned by the Bundick Creek Lumber Company. The mill of the King-Ryder Company is at Bon Ami, a town of 2,000, located on the Lake Charles & Northern Railroad Company, a short distance from and connected by it with Lilly Junction. (3) A track of 2 miles at Longville, a town of 2,000 people, where the Longville Lumber Company has its mill and a store, and where also are several independent stores. (4) A track of 9 miles from Fayette to Camp Curtis, a place of 200 population, where the Calcasieu Long Leaf Lumber Company has a store, its mill being at Lake Charles. (5) A track of 1 mile from Bridge Junction to Lake Charles station. The towns De Ridder, Bon Ami, Lilly Junction, Longville, Fayette, and [5] Lake Charles are connected by the Lake Charles & Northern Railroad, a Southern Pacific Railway Company line, originally built by the Long interests as a part of the Louisiana & Pacific, and sold to the Lake Charles & Northern with the reservation of trackage rights advantageous to the Louisiana & Pacific. By means of this arrangement the Louisiana & Pacific connects with the Kansas City

Digitized by Google

Southern and the Santa Fe at De Ridder, with the Frisco at Fulton (a station south of Fayette), and with the Southern Pacific, Iron Mountain, & Kansas City Southern at Lake Charles. Its equipment consists of 22 locomotives, 6 cabooses, 41 freight cars, and 270 logging cars, and a private car used by its officers, who are connected with the lumber companies, in traveling around the country. The lumber companies have many miles of unincorporated logging tracks connecting with the Louisiana & Pacific at various points. There are a number of other stations on the line, among them Bannister, where the Brown Lumber Company owns a small, independent mill.

The operation is this: The lumber companies load the logs and switch them over the logging spurs to connection with the tap line which hauls them to the mill, an average distance of 30 miles, for which no charge is made. The tap line switches the carloads of lumber from the mill at Lake Charles, a distance of three quarters of a mile, to the Southern Pacific; at De Ridder, only a few hundred feet to the trunk lines; from the Lake Charles mill to the Frisco, a distance of 18 miles; from the Bon Ami mill to the Southern Pacific at Lake Charles, a distance of 40 miles; and from the Longville mill to the Southern Pacific at Lake Charles, a distance of 24 miles,—the average haul for the controlling companies being nearly 20 miles. By written agreement 50 per cent of the lumber must be routed over the Frisco and 40 per cent over the Southern Pacific, but this is not always done. 243,122 tons of lumber, as against 8,819 tons of merchandise, were shipped in 1910, 98 per cent of the whole tonnage [6] being supplied by the controlling interests. The passenger receipts for 1910 were $473.77. A logging train runs daily on each branch, and there is one "mixed" train, loaded chiefly with logs and lumber, between Lake Charles and De Ridder. The allowances paid by the trunk lines range from 1½ to 5½c. per 100 pounds out of their earnings under the group-lumber rate. The operating revenue for the year ending June 30, 1910, was $220,985.94, with operating expenses of $145,433.69, and there was an accumulated surplus of $73,581.07 on that date.

The Commission found that no charge was made for hauling the logs to the mills by the tap line, and that for the short switching service allowances were made as above stated, and concluded that it regarded the whole arrangement as indefensible and unlawful, and saw no ground upon which any allowance might lawfully be made.

The Woodworth & Louisiana Central Railway Company and the Rapides Lumber Company, situated at Woodworth, are identical in interest. The mill is near the Iron Mountain, which has a spur track to the mill, and the tap line has a standard gauge track from the mill to La Moria, about 6 miles, where it connects with the Southern Pacific Railway, Texas & Pacific Railway, and Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific Railway, and a narrow-gauge track in the other direction for 18 miles, whence spur tracks go into the timber. The equipment consists of 1 standard-gauge locomotive, 5 narrow-gauge locomotives, and 2 standard and 9 narrow-gauge cars. The steel in the logging spurs and 4 of the narrow-gauge locomotives used by the lumber company on the spurs are owned by the tap line and leased to the lumber company; while the right of way for the narrow-gauge track is leased from the lumber company.

The tap line hauls the logs from its terminus to the mill without charge, where they are dumped by the trainmen into the mill pond. The carloads of lumber are switched [7] by the tap line from the planing mill to the place where they are taken by the Iron Mountain, about 25 feet. About 95 per cent of the lumber goes through La Moria, being switched there by the tap line; the allowances from the Iron Mountain out of through rates being from 1½ to 5½c. per 100 pounds, while from the trunk lines at La Moria from 2 to 5½c. There are no joint rates except on lumber. For the year ending June 30, 1910, there were 40,707 tons of freight handled for the lumber company and 2,100 tons of outside traffic. It has no passenger business. Its operations for that year showed a deficit, but there was a surplus from previous years of nearly $10,000. It files annual reports with the Commission.

The Mansfield Railway & Transportation Company and the Frost-Johnson Lumber Company are identical in interest. The tap line extends from Mansfield to a logging camp in the woods, known as Hunter, a distance of about 16 miles, and the line which was originally incorporated by the citizens of Mansfield in 1881, consisting of 2 miles of track from the town to a connection with the Texas & Pacific at Mansfield Junction. Later the Mansfield Company acquired the 2 mile track and equipment, and the interests controlling it purchased a large amount of timber lands near Mansfield at a point called Oak Hill, where a mill was built, and spur tracks were laid into the timber, which were later turned over to the Mansfield Company, with the free privilege reserved to the lumber company to operate logging trains between the timber and the mill, which operation is performed by a subsidiary company. The purchase price did not reflect the value of the reservation. There are about 25 miles of unincorporated logging tracks. The tap line also has a connection with the Kansas City Southern. It owns a locomotive, a passenger coach, and a box car.

Digitized by Google

The service performed by the tap line is switching cars between the mill and the Kansas City Southern, about ¾ [8] of a mile, although the mill is within 300 feet of the Kansas City Southern, and was formerly connected by a spur track which was abandoned and taken up, and to the Texas & Pacific, a distance of 2¼ miles. The tap line bears the expense of maintaining its tracks extending into the woods.

No other yellow-pine mills are served by the tap line, but there is a hardwood mill adjacent to the Frost-Johnson mill, obtaining a substantial portion of its logs from the latter company or subsidiaries, the price including delivery at the hardwood mill, the logs being hauled by the logging company under its trackage right. Some logs are also obtained from the Texas & Pacific, for the switching of which the hardwood mill pays the tap line $2.50 a car or less. The tap line maintains joint rates on hardwood as well as yellow pine.

Practically no traffic other than that in which the lumber company is interested moves over the track from Mansfield to Hunter, but a good deal of outside traffic moves over the original 2 miles from Mansfield to Mansfield Junction. 16,539 tons of miscellaneous freight were handled during the year ending June 30, 1910, most of which passed over the Mansfield Junction branch, and much of which was for the controlling interests or their employees; while during the same time 28,596 tons, of lumber were handled, 91.4 per cent of which was supplied by the lumber company. A daily train is operated by the tap line in each direction on regular schedule, handling passengers, mail, and express; but in 1910 the passenger revenues were only $1,209.76, while its freight revenues were $25,617.19.

The Commission noticed the abandonment of the 300-foot spur track, and then the payment of an allowance of 1 to 4c. per 100 pounds, and held that it was a mere manipulation of the situation in order to establish an unlawful relation; and also held that since the tap line crosses the [9] right of way of the Texas & Pacific within a short distance, the allowance of a like amount by the Texas & Pacific for switching from the mill to Mansfield and down to the junction was unlawful.

The Victoria, Fisher, & Western Railroad Company and the Louisiana Long Leaf Lumber Company have the same stockholders and officers. The tap line extends from Victoria, where it connects with the Texas & Pacific, to Fisher, where it crosses the Kansas City Southern Railway, and then extends to Cain, in all about 31 miles. A part of the track was built some time ago, and was acquired by the lumber company in 1900. In 1902 the railroad company was incorporated and its stock exchanged as a stock dividend for the line. There are about 25 miles of logging spurs and side tracks. The equipment consists of 5 locomotives, 4 cabooses, 3 box cars, 1 flat car, and 105 logging cars. It does not operate any trains on regular schedule. There are two mills owned by the Lumber Company, one about a mile from the junction with the Texas & Pacific, and the other about half a mile from the tracks of the Kansas City Southern.

The tap line hauls the logs from the forest to the mill, charging $1.50 per 1,000 feet, which is supposed to cover only the service performed on the logging spurs, and not the haul over the main track. The greater part of the lumber from Fisher is turned over to the Kansas City Southern, involving a one-half mile switch by the tap line, and from Victoria is moved by the tap line 1 mile to the Texas & Pacific; a small amount of the lumber from each mill is taken by the tap line to the more distant trunk line, but the same divisions are paid. The allowances range from ¾ to 4c. per 100 pounds, and the joint rates are the same as the rates published from adjacent mills on the trunk lines, except traffic moving to Texas, for which 1¼c. per 100 pounds is added to the junction-point rate. No passengers are carried, and of 316,670 tons [10] of freight for the year 1910, over 99 per cent was furnished by the proprietary company. And the accumulated surplus at the end of June, 1910, was $13,509.17.

The Commission held that the tap line could not participate as a common carrier in joint rates on the products of the proprietary company, but said that the lumber rate of the trunk lines applied from the adjacent mills, and that they might make a reasonable allowance for switching.

The Commission made an order in such matter on May 14, 1912, which it amended on October 30, 1912. The amended order, so far as these appeals are concerned, provided:

"The Commission upon the record finds in the case of the . . . Woodworth & Louisiana Central Railway Company; Mansfield Railway & Transportation Company; Louisiana & Pacific Railway Company; Victoria, Fisher, & Western Railroad Company,—that the tracks and equipment, with respect to the industry of the several proprietary companies, are plant facilities, and that the service performed therewith for the respective proprietary lumber companies in moving logs to their respective mills, and performed therewith in moving the products of the mills to the trunk lines, is not a service of transportation by a common carrier railroad, but is a plant service by a plant facility; and that any allowances or divisions out of the rate on account thereof are unlawful and result in undue and unreasonable preferences and unjust discriminations, as found in the said reports;"

Digitized by Google

and it ordered that the trunk lines should cease and for two years abstain from making any such allowances to the tap lines named.

The commission further ordered that if the trunk lines failed by a time stated, to re-establish the through routes and joint rates in effect on April 30, 1912, on traffic other than the products of the mills of certain proprietary companies, [11] among others, the appellees herein, it would, upon proper petition, enter an order requiring the establishment of such routes and rates, or enter upon an inquiry with respect thereto, and further provided that all divisions of joint rates should be submitted to the Commission for approval.

The appellees thereupon, by their several petitions filed in the United States commerce court, sought to have the order of the Commission, so far as applicable to them, enjoined and annulled. The Interstate Commerce Commission, the Atchison, Topeka, & Santa Fe Railway Company, the Gulf, Colorado, & Santa Fe Railway Company, and the Railroad Commission of Louisiana, intervened. The commerce court said that the question was whether the Commission had acted arbitrarily and on improper considerations in determining under what circumstances a common carrier tap line would be deemed to be performing a mere plant service for a proprietary company, and held that as the service rendered to the proprietary and nonproprietary mills by the tap lines was the same, and as it was held to be a transportation service by an interstate common carrier as to the nonproprietary mills, it must be held to be a similar service as to the proprietary mills, and concluded that the Commission was without power to prohibit the making of joint rates by the trunk lines and the tap lines, and the payment of some division of such rates to the tap lines for their services in hauling logs to and lumber from the proprietary mills, and annulled the order of the Commission in this respect and so far as it applied to the appellees.

The United States and the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Atchison, Topeka, & Santa Fe Railway Company, and the Gulf, Colorado, & Santa Fe Railway Company, entered separate appeals from the decrees of the commerce court in the four cases instituted by the appellees.

Mr. Blackburn Esterline, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, argued the cause, and, with Solicitor General Davis and Mr. Karl W. Kirchwey, filed a brief for the United States:

The portion of the Commission's order of which appellees complain was merely a refusal of the relief for which they prayed, and was negative in character.

Hooker v. Knapp, 225 U. S. 302, 56 L. ed. 1099, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 769; Procter & G. Co. v. United States, 225 U. S. 282, 56 L. ed. 1091, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 761; United States v. Pacific & A. R. & Nav. Co. 228 U. S. 87, 57 L. ed. 742, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 443.

The findings of the Commission, if based on substantial evidence, are conclusive.

Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 227 U. S. 88, 57 L. ed. 431, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Union P. R. Co. 222 U. S. 541, 548, 56 L. ed. 308, 311, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 108; Procter & G. Co. v. United States, 225 U. S. 282, 297, 56 L. ed. 1091, 1096, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 761; United States v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 225 U. S. 306, 325, 56 L. ed. 1100, 1106, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 817.

The court will look behind the fact of separate incorporation to ascertain the actual relations of the parties.

Crane Iron Works v. United States, 209 Fed. 238; Fourche River Lumber Co. v. Bryant Lumber Co. 230 U. S. 316, 57 L. ed. 1498, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 887; Miller & Lux v. East Side Canal & Irrig. Co. 211 U. S. 293, 53 L. ed. 189, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 111; Southern P. Terminal Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 219 U. S. 498, 521, 55 L. ed. 310, 318, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 279; United States v. Union Stock Yard & Transit Co. 226 U. S. 286, 304, 57 L. ed. 226, 233, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 83.

The conclusions reached by the Commission did not proceed upon arbitrary or unlawful distinctions, and are supported by evidence:

1. That certain of the tap lines before it were not bona fide common carriers as to their proprietary traffic, but merely plant facilities, and were therefore not entitled to a division out of the through rate.

Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 10 Inters. Com. Rep. 193; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. United States, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 551, 84 C. C. A. 324, 156 Fed. 558, affirmed in 212 U. S. 563, 53 L. ed.

Digitized by Google

653, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Standard Lumber Co. 98 C. C. A. 81, 174 Fed. 107; Crane Iron Works v. United States, 209 Fed. 238; Fathauer Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 18 Inters. Com. Rep. 517; Fourche River Lumber Co. v. Bryant Lumber Co. 230 U. S. 316, 322, 57 L. ed. 1498, 1501, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 887; General Electric Co. v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 14 Inters. Com. Rep. 237; Re Allowances for Transfer of Sugar, 14 Inters. Com. Rep. 619; Re Transportation of Salt, 10 Inters. Com. Rep. 1; Industrial Lumber Co. v. St. Louis, W. & G. R. Co. 19 Inters. Com. Rep. 50; Industrial Railways Case, 29 Inters. Com. Rep. 212; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Diffenbaugh, 222 U. S. 42, 56 L. ed. 83, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 22; Kaul Lumber Co. v. Central of Georgia R. Co. 20 Inters. Com. Rep. 450; Santa Fe, P. & P. R. Co. v. Grant Bros. Constr. Co. 228 U. S. 177, 185, 57 L. ed. 787, 791, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 474; Star Grain & Lumber Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 17 Inters. Com. Rep. 338; Solvay Process Co. v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 14 Inters. Com. Rep. 246; E. E. Taenzer & Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 112 C. C. A. 153, 191 Fed. 543; United States v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 231 U. S. 274, ante, 218, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 75.

2. That the switching service within 3 miles of the trunk line, being one which the trunk line held itself out to perform under the through rate, was a service "connected with transportation" when performed by the shipper or its agent; but that switching for a greater distance, so performed, was purely an accessorial service.

American Sugar Ref. Co. v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 200 Fed. 652; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. United States, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 551, 84 C. C. A. 324, 156 Fed. 561; Fourche River Lumber Co. v. Bryant Lumber Co. 230 U. S. 316, 323, 57 L. ed. 1498, 1501, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 887; General Electric Co. v. New York, C. & H. R. R. Co. 14 Inters. Com. Rep. 237; Industrial Railways Case, 29 Inters. Com. Rep. 212; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Diffenbaugh, 222 U. S. 42, 56 L. ed. 83, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 22; Re Allowances for Transfer of Sugar, 14 Inters. Com. Rep. 619; Mitchell Coal & Coke Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 230 U. S. 247, 264, 57 L. ed. 1472, 1479, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 916; Solvay Process Co. v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 14 Inters. Com. Rep. 246; United States v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 231 U. S. 274, 293, ante, 218, 227, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 75.

3. Hence, that a plant facility tap line performing this service within the 3-mile limit was entitled to an allowance under § 15, but to no division out of the through rate.

4. That a common carrier tap line was entitled to a division or allowance out of the through rate on a haul of either more or less than 3 miles.

5. That the movement of the logs to the mill was not a transportation service to be paid for out of the through rate, but an accessorial service for which the shipper should pay.

6. That any allowance for switching within 1,000 feet of a trunk line was a mere device to effect an unlawful payment.

Fourche River Lumber Co. v. Bryant Lumber Co. 230 U. S. 316, 57 L. ed. 1498, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 887; Mitchell Coal & Coke Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 230 U. S. 247, 265, 57 L. ed. 1472, 1479, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 946.

Assuming that the commerce court correctly interpreted the Commission's finding and order, the latter were not without support in the evidence nor erroneous in law.

Crane Iron Works v. United States, 209 Fed. 238; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Illinois C. R. Co. 215 U. S. 452, 470, 54 L. ed. 280, 287, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 155; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Union P. R. Co. 222 U. S. 541, 547, 56 L. ed. 308, 310, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 108.

Questions of discrimination, preference, divisions, and allowances are questions of fact peculiarly within the competency of the Commission.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. United States, 231 U. S. 736, ante, 460, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 316; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. United States, 215 U. S. 481, 54 L. ed. 292, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 215 U. S. 479, 54 L. ed. 291, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 163; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 218 U. S. 88, 54 L. ed. 946, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651; Mitchell Coal & Coke Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 230 U. S. 247, 57 L. ed. 1472, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 916; Morrisdale Coal Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 230 U. S. 304, 57 L. ed. 1494, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 938; Robinson v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 222 U. S. 506, 56 L. ed. 288, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 114; United States v. Pacific & A. R. & Nav. Co. 228 U. S. 87, 57 L. ed. 742, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 443.

Any inference drawn by the Commission even from undisputed testimony is conclusive upon the courts unless erroneous as a matter of law.

Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 227 U. S. 88, 57 L. ed. 431, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Union P. R. Co. 222 U. S. 541, 547, 56 L. ed. 308, 311, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 108; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. United States, 197 Fed. 58.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Charles W. Needham argued the cause, and, with Mr. Joseph W. Folk, filed a brief for the Interstate Commerce Commission:

A switching service upon a private siding or spur track is an independent service which precedes or follows a line haul.

Dixon v. Central of Georgia R. Co. 110 Ga. 173, 35 S. E. 369.

An accessorial service allowed to a single shipper is discriminatory where the service was not given to all shippers at that place.

Wight v. United States, 167 U. S. 512, 42 L. ed. 258, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822.

Prior to the enactment of the "commodities clause" and the conference of power upon the Commission to determine whether or not rates and practices by railroads are unlawful, and to prescribe reasonable rates and practices for the future, this court held that a practice by two line carriers which resulted in a violation of the Federal act prohibiting discrimination in transportation rates could be enjoined: that the court could look through the forms adopted by the carriers—the business in itself then being otherwise legitimate—to ascertain whether in fact it resulted in a violation of the act to regulate commerce. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 200 U. S. 361, 50 L. ed. 515, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 272. The power which the court in that case exercised has since been vested in this Commission.

The fact that these tap lines have been incorporated by proprietary mill owners, and may be regarded as common carriers as to some outside traffic, does not prevent the Commission from finding, if it be true, that as to the traffic of the proprietary mill, they are a plant facility performing a plant service.

Sante Fe, P. & P. R. Co. v. Grant Bros. Constr. Co. 228 U. S. 177, 57 L. ed. 787, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 474.

The act to regulate commerce prohibits rebating, directly or indirectly, "by any device whatever."

Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 209 U. S. 56, 52 L. ed. 681, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 428.

A common carrier may, however, as to some of its work, act in a strictly private capacity.

Sante Fe, P. & P. R. Co. v. Grant Bros. Constr. Co. supra.

And it may as to certain shippers, and particularly as to a proprietary company, be a mere plant facility, and perform merely plant or industrial services, as distinguished from transportation services.

Crane Iron Works v. United States, 209 Fed. 238.

Messrs. Robert Dunlap and James L. Coleman argued the cause, and, with Messrs. T. J. Norton and Gardiner Lathrop, filed a brief for the Atchison, Topeka, & Santa Fe Railway Company:

The tap line division is a rebate, and the various steps taken by appellees in their attempts to legalize such rebate are mere devices to evade the payment of the published tariff rate in full. The incorporation of the various tap line railroads and the other steps taken by them were for the sole purpose of continuing, under the name of a division, the old open rebate which was paid direct to the lumber companies. Masquerading as railroads the lumber companies were making their traffic a matter of bargain and sale, and by the device of a secret division were compelling the trunk lines to bid against each other in the dark for such business. Such was the finding of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 206 U. S. 441, 444, 51 L. ed. 1128, 1129, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 700.

The Federal law cannot be evaded by a resort to incorporation under a state statute, for all that may be done under the state statute is subject to the paramount Federal law.

Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197, 48 L. ed. 679, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 436.

While it is true, perhaps, that each of the steps taken by the tap lines and lumber companies in pursuance of this scheme might be called legal, yet they result in an illegality.

Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 49 L. ed. 518, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276; Brundred v. Rice, 49 Ohio St. 640, 34 Am. St. Rep. 589, 32 N. E. 169.

The Commission is not precluded by the mere charter or professions of the tap line incorporation papers to inquire whether it has been utilized and is being used as a device to circumvent the prohibitions of the interstate commerce law.

United States v. Milwaukee Refrigerator Transit Co. 142 Fed. 247; E. E. Taenzer & Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 112 C. C. A. 153, 191 Fed. 543, 95 C. C. A. 436, 170 Fed. 240.

Fictions of law shall not be permitted to work any wrong.

United States v. 1960 Bags of Coffee, 8 Cranch, 415, 3 L. ed. 608.

When logic and the policy of a state conflict with a fiction due to historical tradition, the fiction must give way.

Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 206, 47 L. ed. 445, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277.

Courts have frequently, and especially of late years, gone behind the corporate fiction and ascertained who were the real parties in interest, in order to prevent the carrying out of either some fraud or some circumvention of the law.

Digitized by Google

1 Cook, Corp. 6th ed. § 6, pp. 31, 32; 2 Cook, Corp. 6th ed. §§ 663, 664, pp. 1972, 1974, 1975, 1983–1987; Re Rieger, 157 Fed. 609; Miller & Lux v. East Side Canal & Irrig. Co. 211 U. S. 293, 53 L. ed. 189, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 111; Lehigh Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Kelly, 160 U. S. 327, 40 L. ed. 444, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 307; Kendall v. Klapperthal Co. 202 Pa. 596, 52 Atl. 92; Watson v. Bonfils, 53 C. C. A. 535, 116 Fed. 157; Seymour v. Spring Forest Cemetery Asso. 144 N. Y. 340, 26 L.R.A. 859, 39 N. E. 365; Hunter v. Baker Motor Vehicle Co. 190 Fed. 665.

Passing from these cases which announce the general principle that incorporation cannot cover fraud, we come to cases involving the same principle, but with reference to facts almost identical with the facts in this case.

Southern P. Terminal Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 219 U. S. 498, 55 L. ed. 310, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 279; United States v. Union Stock Yard & Transit Co. 226 U. S. 286, 307, 309, 57 L. ed. 226, 234, 235, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 83; E. E. Taenzer & Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 95 C. C. A. 436, 170 Fed. 240; General Electric Co. v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 14 Inters. Com. Rep. 237; Solvay Process Co. v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 14 Inters. Com. Rep. 246; Crane R. Co. v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 16 Inters. Com. Rep. 248; Crane Iron Works v. Central R. Co. 17 Inters Com. Rep. 514; Re Transportation of Salt, 10 Inters Com. Rep. 1; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. United States, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 551, 84 C. C. A. 324, 156 Fed. 558; Industrial Railways Case, 29 Inters. Com. Rep. 212.

The tap line, as was found by the Interstate Commerce Commission, is a mere agency of the lumber company, and is therefore, as to the traffic of the lumber company, no more a common carrier than would be the lumber company itself. Being an agency of the shipper, the tap line cannot secure indirectly for the shipper that rebate which the shipper could not have secured directly.

Crane Iron Works v. United States, 209 Fed. 238.

It seems quite clear that a common carrier is one who carries for everyone, or the public in general, and not one who carries principally for himself. Indeed, in so far as a railroad company may carry free for its own use or in its own interest, it is a private carrier, and as to such traffic the railroad company is not subject to the prohibitions of the interstate commerce law aimed against common carriers.

Santa Fe, P. & P. R. Co. v. Grant Bros. Constr. Co. 228 U. S. 177, 57 L. ed. 787, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 474.

Yet no one would contend that the railroad company, because it is a common carrier, could lawfully, in respect to its own property, prefer itself, directly or indirectly, in respect to the transportation or marketing of the same over that of other shippers.

New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 200 U. S. 361, 50 L. ed. 515, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 272.

In many cases where roads of this character have come before the courts upon matters requiring the court to ascertain their true nature, it has been held that they were not common carriers.

Wade v. Lutcher & M. Cypress Lumber Co. 33 L.R.A. 255, 20 C. C. A. 515, 41 U. S. App. 45, 74 Fed. 517; Demko v. Carbon Hill Coal Co. 69 C. C. A. 74, 136 Fed. 162; Williams v. Northern Lumber Co. 113 Fed. 382; Eastern & W. Lumber Co. v. Rayley, 85 C. C. A. 296, 157 Fed. 532; E. E. Taenzer & Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 95 C. C. A. 436, 170 Fed. 240; McKilvergan v. Alexander & E. Lumber Co. 124 Wis. 60, 102 N. W. 332, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 751.

Messrs. H. M. Garwood and Luther M. Walter argued the cause, and, with Mr. W. R. Thurmond, filed a brief for appellees:

The Commission has already held, and rightly, that since the act did not define the term "common carrier," the Commission must look to the common law for the definition.

Manufacturers' R. Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 21 Inters. Com. Rep. 312.

The service performed by each of the appellee railroads herein is a service of transportation by a common carrier railroad within the meaning of the act to regulate commerce.

Columbia Conduit Co. v. Com. 90 Pa. 307, 14 Mor. Min. Rep. 197; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 29 L. ed. 158, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 382, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826; Kansas & T. Coal R. Co. v. Northwestern Coal & Min. Co. 161 Mo. 288, 51 L.R.A. 936, 84 Am. St. Rep. 717, 61 S. W. 864; Butte, A. & P. R. Co. v. Montana Union R. Co. 16 Mont. 504, 31 L.R.A. 298, 50 Am. St. Rep. 508, 41 Pac. 232; Bridal Veil Lumber Co. v. Johnson, 30 Or. 205, 34 L.R.A. 368, 60 Am. St. Rep. 818, 46 Pac. 790; Madera R. Co. v. Raymond Granite Co. 3 Cal. App. 668, 87 Pac. 27; Contra Costa Coal Mines R. Co. v. Moss, 23 Cal. 323; Kettle River R. Co. v. Eastern R. Co. 41 Minn. 461, 6 L.R.A. 111, 43 N. W. 473; State, DeCamp, Prosecutor, v. Hibernia Underground R. Co. 47 N. J.

Digitized by Google

L. 46; Ulmer v. Lime Rock R. Co. 98 Me. 581, 66 L.R.A. 387, 57 Atl. 1001; Amos Kent Lumber & Brick Co. v. Tax Assessor, 114 La. 862, 38 So. 587; Chapman v. Trinity Valley & N. R. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 138 S. W. 440; Greasy Creek Mineral Co. v. Ely Jellico Coal Co. 132 Ky. 692, 116 S. W. 1189; United States ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Delaware & H. Co. 213 U. S. 366, 417, 53 L. ed. 836, 852; 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 527; United States v. Union Stock Yard & Transit Co. 226 U. S. 286, 57 L. ed. 226, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 83; United States v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 231 U. S. 274, ante, 218, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 75.

The appellee railroads are not plant facilities, and do not perform a plant facility service for the appellee lumber companies herein.

Beaumont & G. N. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 24 Inters. Com. Rep. 163; Crane Iron Works v. United States, 209 Fed. 238.

There was no evidence upon which the Commission could base its finding that the participation by the appellee railroads in joint rates upon the logs and lumber of the appellee lumber companies constitutes an undue and unreasonable preference, or subjects any party to unjust discrimination within the meaning of the act to regulate commerce.

F. H. Beavey & Co. v. Union P. R. Co. 176 Fed. 409, 222 U. S. 42, 56 L. ed. 83, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 22; Mitchell Coal & Coke Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 230 U. S. 247, 264, 265, 277, 57 L. ed. 1472, 1479, 1480, 1484, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 916.

Mr. Wylie M. Barrow argued the cause, and, with Mr. Ruffin G. Pleasant, Attorney General of Louisiana, filed a brief for the Railroad Commission of Louisiana:

We cannot apprehend how any doubt should arise as to the standing of these railroads as common carriers.

Winona R. Co. v. Blake, 94 U. S. 180, 24 L. ed. 99; Agee v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 142 Ala. 344, 37 So. 680; Amos Kent Lumber & Brick Co. v. Tax Assessor, 114 La. 862, 38 So. 587; New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357-384, 21 L. ed. 627-642; Ulmer v. Lime Rock R. Co. 98 Me. 579, 66 L.R.A. 387, 57 Atl. 1001; State, De Camp, Prosecutor, v. Hibernia Underground R. Co. 47 N. J. L. 43; National Docks R. Co. v. Central R. Co. 32 N. J. Eq. 755; Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. v. Porter, 43 Minn. 527, 46 N. W. 75; Phillips v. Watson, 63 Iowa, 28, 18 N. W. 659; Chicago Dock & Canal Co. v. Garrity, 115 Ill. 155, 3 N. E. 448; Gaylord v. Chicago Sanitary Dist. 204 Ill. 576, 63 L.R.A. 582, 98 Am. St. Rep. 235, 68 N. E. 522; Butte, A. & P. R. Co. v. Montana Union R. Co. 16 Mont. 504, 31 L.R.A. 298, 50 Am. St. Rep. 508, 41 Pac. 232; Lake Superior & M. R. Co v. United States, 93 U. S. 442, 23 L. ed. 965; United States v. Union Stock Yard & Transit Co. 226 U. S. 286, 57 L. ed. 226, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 83; Norway Plains Co. v. Boston & M. R. Co. 1 Gray, 263, 61 Am. Dec. 423.

The courts have always taken judicial notice of the fact that a railroad company is a common carrier where a statute declares it to be such, and declaration and proof of such a fact is unnecessary.

Caldwell v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 89 Ga. 550, 15 S. E. 678; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Cahill, 8 Colo. App. 158, 45 Pac. 285.

Mr. Justice Day, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

A preliminary objection is made to the jurisdiction of the commerce court in that the order of the Commission is not reviewable because merely of a negative character. The commerce court examined this question, and in view of the amended order of October 30, 1912, reached the conclusion that the order was affirmative in its nature, and of a character permitting of review by proper proceedings in that court under the act giving it jurisdiction in such cases. We find no reason to differ with this conclusion, and are of opinion that the commerce court had jurisdiction in the case.

It is further insisted upon the authority of Proctor & G. Co. v. United States, 225 U. S. 282, 56 L. ed. 1091, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 761, and other cases in this court which have followed that decision, that in the present cases the decision rests upon conclusions of the Commission as to matters of fact only, which are within the sole jurisdiction of that body, and not reviewable in the courts. But we shall consider the case upon the findings of fact preceding this opinion, which are identical with those made by the Commission, and test the conclusions reached as matters of law, giving proper consideration to matters of fact which are not in dispute.

The final decree of the commerce court vacated and set aside the portion of the Commission's order reading as follows:

"That the tracks and equipment with respect to the industry of the several proprietary companies are plant facilities, and that the service performed therewith for the [23] respective proprietary lumber companies in moving logs to their respective mills, and performed therewith in moving the products of the mills to the trunk lines, is not a service of transportation by a common carrier railroad, but is a plant service by a plant facility; and that any allowances or divisions out of the rate on account thereof are unlawful and result in undue and unreasonable preferences and unjust discriminations, as found in the said reports.

Digitized by Google

"3. It is ordered, that the principal defendants [trunk lines, naming them], be, and they are hereby, notified and required to cease and desist, and for a period of two years hereafter, or until otherwise ordered, to abstain from making any such allowances to any of the above-named parties to the record in respect of any such above-described service."

The question now before this court is the correctness of this decree.

A perusal of the findings and orders of the Commission make it apparent that the grounds of decision upon which it proceeded were two: first, that these roads were mere plant facilities; second, that they were not common carriers as to proprietary traffic. The Commission held that before incorporation they were plant facilities, and that after incorporation they remained such. What the Commission means by plant facilities may be gathered from a consideration of some of its decisions. In General Electric Co. v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 14 Inters. Com. Rep. 237, a network of interior switching tracks, constructed to meet the necessities of the business, were held to be mere plant facilities. The same principle was applied to the internal trackage of large industrial plants in Solvay Process Co. v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 14 Inters. Com. Rep. 246. These systems of internal trackage were not common carriers, and. however extensive, were intended to and did furnish service for the plants which owned and [24] operated them. But a common carrier performing service as such, regulated and operated under competent authority, as observed by Commissioner Prouty in Kaul Lumber Co. v. Central of Georgia R. Co. 20 Inters. Com. Rep. 450, 456, is no longer a mere appendage of a mill, "but a public institution." It thus becomes apparent that the real question in these cases is the true character of the roads here involved. Are they plant facilities merely, or common carriers with rights and obligations as such?

It is insisted that these roads are not carriers because the most of their traffic is in their own logs and lumber, and that only a small part of the traffic carried is the property of others. But this conclusion loses sight of the principle that the extent to which a railroad is in fact used does not determine the fact whether it is or is not a common carrier. It is the right of the public to use the road's facilities and to demand service of it, rather than the extent of its business, which is the real criterion determinative of its character. This principle has been frequently recognized in the decision of the courts. We need not cite the many state cases in which it has been so held, in view of the fact that the same principle was laid down in the late case of Union Lime Co. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 233 U. S. 211, ante, 924, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 522. In that case the supreme court of Wisconsin sustained the extension of a spur track to reach the quarries and lime kilns of a single company as a public use authorizing the exercise of the right of eminent domain, and this court affirmed the judgment. Dealing with the contention that the Wisconsin statute was invalid because it authorized action appropriating property upon the exigency of a private business, this court said (p. 221):

"A spur may, at the outset, lead only to a single industry or establishment; it may be constructed to furnish an outlet for the products of a particular plant; its cost may be defrayed by those in special need of its service at the [25] time. But none the less, by virtue of the conditions under which it is provided, the spur may constitute at all times a part of the transportation facilities of the carrier which are operated under the obligations of public service and are subject to the regulation of public authority. As was said by this court in Hairston v. Danville & W. R. Co. 208 U. S. 608, 52 L. ed. 641, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 331, 13 Ann. Cas. 1008: 'The uses for which the track was desired are not the less public because the motive which dictated its location over this particular land was to reach a private industry, or because the proprietors of that industry contributed in any way to the cost.' There is a clear distinction between spurs which are owned and operated by a common carrier as a part of its system and under its public obligation, and merely private sidings. See State, De Camp, Prosecutor, v. Hibernia Underground R. Co. 47 N. J. L. 43; Chicago, B & N. R. Co. v. Porter, 43 Minn. 527, 46 N. W. 75; Ulmer v. Lime Rock R. Co. 98 Me. 579, 66 L.R.A. 387, 57 Atl. 101; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Petty, 57 Ark. 359, 20 L.R.A. 434, 21 S. W. 884; Dietrich v. Murdock, 42 Mo. 279; Bedford Quarries Co. v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. 175 Ind. 303, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 641, 94 N. E. 326."

The Commission has recognized this principle as applicable to tap lines, for in Central Yellow Pine Asso. v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 10 Inters. Com. Rep. 193, 199, it said:

"While these logging roads are almost or quite without exception mill propositions at the outset, built exclusively for the purpose of transporting logs to the mill, they soon reach a point where they engage in other business to a greater or less extent. As the length of the road increases, as the lumber is taken off and other operations obtain a foothold along the line, various commodities besides lumber are transported, and this business gradually develops until in several cases what was at first a logging road pure and simple has become a common carrier of miscellaneous freight and passengers. Almost all these lines, even where they are run as private enterprises, [26] do more or less outside transportation, and it would be difficult to draw any line of demarcation between the logging road as such and the logging road which has become a general carrier of freight."

Digitized by Google

This representation, it is contended by the attorney general of Louisiana, who appears here in behalf of the Louisiana Railroad Commission, intervener, is aptly descriptive of the growth and development of railroads in that state.

Furthermore, these roads are common carriers when tried by the test of organization for that purpose under competent legislation of the state. They are so treated by the public authorities of the state, who insist in this case that they are such, and submit in oral discussion and printed briefs cogent arguments to justify that conclusion. They are engaged in carrying for hire the goods of those who see fit to employ them. They are authorized to exercise the right of eminent domain by the state of their incorporation. They were treated and dealt with as common carriers by connecting systems of other carriers,—a circumstance to be noticed in determining their true character. United States v. Union Stock Yard & Transit Co. 226 U. S. 286, 57 L. ed. 226, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 83. They are engaged in transportation as that term is defined in the commerce act and described in decisions of this court. Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 29 L. ed. 715, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475; Covington Stock-Yards Co. v. Keith, 139 U. S. 128, 35 L. ed. 73, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461; Southern P. Terminal Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 219 U. S. 498, 55 L. ed. 310, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 279; United States v. Union Stock Yard & Transit Co. supra.

Applying the principles which we have stated as determinative of the character of these roads, and without repeating the facts concerning them, they would seem to fill all the requirements of common carriers so employed, unless the grounds upon which they were determined not to be such by the Commission are adequate to that end. The Commission itself as to all shippers other than those controlled by the so-called proprietary companies treated [27] them as common carriers, for it has ordered the trunk lines to re-establish through routes and joint rates as to such traffic. But, says the government (and it insists that this fact alone might well control the decision), the roads are owned by the persons who also own the timber and mills which they principally serve.

This fact is not shown to be inconsistent with the laws of the state in which they are organized and operated. On the contrary, the public authorities of that state are here insisting that these companies are common carriers. Congress has not made it illegal for roads thus owned to operate in interstate commerce. While Congress, in enacting the commodities clause amending § 1 of the act to regulate commerce (34 Stat. at L. 584, chap. 3591, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1288), sought to divorce transportation from production and manufacture, and to make transportation a business of and by itself, unallied with manufacture and production in which a carrier was itself interested, the debates, which may be resorted to for the purpose of ascertaining the situation which prompted this legislation, show that the situation in some of the states as to the logging industry and transportation was sharply brought to the attention of Congress, and led to the exemption from the commodities clause of timber and the manufactured products thereof, thus indicating the intention to permit railroads to haul such lumber and products although it owned them itself. And that Congress had the constitutional power to enact such exemption was held in United States ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Delaware & H. Co. 213 U. S. 366, 416, 417, 53 L. ed. 836, 852, 853, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 527. This declaration of public policy which is now part of the commerce act cannot be ignored in interpreting the power and authority of the Commission under the act. The discussion resulting in the action of Congress shows that railroads built and owned by the same persons who own the timber were regarded as essential to the development of the timber regions in the Southwest, [28] and the necessity of such roads was dwelt upon and set forth with ample illustration by Commissioner Prouty in his concurring opinion in this case.

As we have said, the Commission by its order herein required the trunk lines to re-establish through routes and joint rates as to property to be transported by others than the proprietary owners over the trunk lines. This order would of itself create a discrimination against proprietary owners, for lumber products are carried from this territory upon blanket rates applicable to all within its limits. It follows that independent owners would get this blanket rate for the entire haul of their products while proprietary owners would pay the same rate plus the cost of getting to the trunk line over the tap line. The Commission, by the effect of its order, recognizes that railroads organized and operated as these tap lines are, if owned by others than those who own the timber and mills, would be entitled to be treated as common carriers and to participate in joint rates with other carriers. We think the Commission exceeded its authority when it condemned these roads as a mere attempt to evade the law and to secure rebates and preferences for themselves.

Digitized by Google

It is doubtless true, as the Commission amply shows in its full report and supplemental report in these cases, that abuses exist in the conduct and practice of these lines and in their dealings with other carriers, which have resulted in unfair advantages to the owners of some tap lines and in discriminations against the owners of others. Because we reach the conclusion that the tap lines involved in these appeals are common carriers, as well of proprietary as nonproprietary traffic, and as such entitled to participate in joint rates with other common carriers, that the determination falls far short of deciding—indeed, does not at all decide—that the division of such joint rates may be made at the will of the carriers involved and without any power of the Commission to control. That body has the [29] authority and it is its duty to reach all unlawful discriminatory practices resulting in favoritism and unfair advantages to particular shippers or carriers. It is not only within its power, but the law makes it the duty, of the Commission to make orders which shall nullify such practices resulting in rebating or preferences, whatever form they take and in whatsoever guise they may appear. If the divisions of joint rates are such as to amount to rebates or discriminations in favor of the owners of the tap lines because of their disproportionate amount in view of the service rendered, it is within the province of the Commission to reduce the amount so that a tap line shall receive just compensation only for what it actually does.

For the reasons stated, we think the Commerce Court did not err in reaching its conclusion and decision, and its judgment is affirmed.

UNITED STATES and Interstate Commerce Commission, Appts.,
v.
BUTLER COUNTY RAILROAD COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 29–36.)

Carriers — tap lines — division of joint rates.

A "tap line" railroad is entitled to the same allowance from the trunk lines out of joint through rates for logs and lumber offered to such tap line by its proprietary company as it receives out of the joint rate for nonproprietary log and lumber traffic, in view of the exception in favor of lumber and manufactured products thereof contained in the provisions of the Hepburn act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. at L. 584, chap. 3591, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1288), forbidding railway carriers to transport in interstate commerce articles or commodities with which they are associated or in which they are interested.

[For other cases, see Carriers, III., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 837.]

Argued April 13, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

APPEAL from the United States Commerce Court to review a decree annulling in part an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission under which a tap line railroad was denied the right to receive the same allowance from the trunk lines out of the joint through rates for proprietary as for nonproprietary log and lumber traffic. Affirmed.

See same case below, 209 Fed. 260.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Blackburn Esterline, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, argued the cause, and, with Solicitor General Davis and Mr. Karl W. Kirchwey, filed a brief for the United States.

Mr. Charles W. Needham argued the cause, and, with Mr. Joseph W. Folk, filed a brief for the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. William A. Glasgow, Jr., argued the cause, and, with Mr. James M. Beck, filed a brief for appellee:

The commerce court had jurisdiction of the complainant's bill and power to grant the relief prayed.

Procter & G. Co. v. United States, 225 U. S. 282, 293, 56 L. ed. 1091, 1095, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 761.

Having fixed the proper and legal joint rate on lumber and forest products, the Commission had no power to prescribe the proportion or division of such rate to be received by each carrier party thereto, unless the carriers should fail to agree among themselves upon the apportionment or division thereof.

Digitized by Google

Interstate Commerce Commission v. Northern P. R. Co. 216 U. S. 538, 545, 54 L. ed. 608, 609, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 417.

The fact that a company shipping over a line of railroad owns the stock of that road does not determine the question of whether the road is a common carrier or not.

Re Divisions of Joint Rates, 10 Inters. Com. Rep. 399; Crane R. Co. v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 15 Inters. Com. Rep. 252.

If complainant is a common carrier, it must be entitled to its share of interstate rates. The law enjoins that very thing upon the litigating parties, and it enjoins upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, upon proper showing and conditions, the enforcement of that law.

Malvern & F. Valley R. Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 182 Fed. 685.

Mr. Justice Day delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee, the Butler County Railroad Company, filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission its petition asking for the re-establishment of through routes and joint rates with certain trunk lines, which was consolidated with and decided upon the same record as the complaints before the Commission in the Tap Line Case involved in [32] the previous cases Nos. 829 to 836, just decided, 234 U. S. 1, ante, 1185, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 741. The general statement of the Commission in its report and supplemental report, filed April 23 and May 14, 1912 (23 Inters. Com. Rep. 277, 549), referred to in those cases, preceded the following findings of fact:

The Butler County Railroad Company, the Brooklyn Cooperage Company, which owns the railroad company, and the Great Western Land Company, owning most of the timber reached by the railroad, are all subsidiaries of the American Sugar Refining Company.

The tap line, which was acquired from the cooperage company, consists of a section of track at Linstead, near Poplar Bluff, Missouri, extending into the plant of the cooperage company, and connecting it with the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway and the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad, which are within three-quarters of a mile of the plant, and the principal track extending about 7 miles from Lowell Junction, a station on the Iron Mountain, 7½ miles from Poplar Bluff, to Baileys, with a branch about 3 miles from Rossville, an intermediate point, and with trackage rights over unincorporated spurs from Baileys belonging to the cooperage company, and over the Iron Mountain from Lowell Junction to Poplar Bluff, paying for the latter 65c. a train mile for 25 cars. It has 2 locomotives, 2 passenger coaches, 3 cabooses, and about 100 freight and log cars.

The tap line hauls the logs, all of which are hardwood, from a connection with the unincorporated track to Lowell Junction, then over the Iron Mountain to Linstead, and thence to the mill over its own track, where they are unloaded by the cooperage company. The regular manufacturing rate under the Missouri distance tariff is charged the cooperage company by the tap line, 1 to 1½ c. per 100 pounds, approximately $4 per car. The loaded cars are switched to the Frisco or Iron Mountain, less than 1 [33] mile, and the appellee receives from them an allowance of from 2 to 5c. per 100 pounds. The rates from tap line points, including the mill at Linstead, are in all cases 2c. higher than the rates of the trunk lines from Poplar Bluff, excepting to New Orleans and New York, to which points most of the shipments of the cooperage company go, and to which Poplar Bluff rates apply.

One hundred and eighty-four thousand six hundred and eighty-eight tons of forest products and 2,475 tons of other freight were hauled during the year ending June 30, 1910; of the first amount 107,527 tons being furnished by the controlling interests, 77,161 tons by outsiders, but all the timber coming from the lands of the Great Western Land Company, and of the miscellaneous freight, 1,195 tons of inbound machinery and coal being for the proprietary companies. Passenger revenues were $4,104.22. Three mixed trains in each direction are operated daily between Linstead and Melville, a point beyond Baileys on the unincorporated track, two being used principally for passenger service.

The Great Western Land Company furnishes timber to several independent industries on the tracks of the tap line near Linstead, the tap line switching their product to the trunk lines. Their factory sites are leased from the cooperage company, the purpose of making such leases being to secure traffic upon which the tap line might obtain divisions. A few independent producers on the main track of the tap line team their supplies and ship their products over the tap line. They pay the local rate of the tap line and the trunk line rate, or a through rate that is 2 cents higher than the Poplar Bluff rate.

The Commission found that the sugar company, having refineries at New Orleans and New York, so adjusted the rates to such places as to induce movements to them and restrict movements to other points, and limited the amount the tap line might receive on proprietary traffic [34] moved from the mill to the Iron Mountain and Frisco to a switching charge fixed at $1.50 per car.

Digitized by Google

The order of the Commission, so far as it related to the appellee, required the trunk lines named to re-establish and maintain with it the through interstate routes and joint rates in effect, in accordance with their respective tariffs filed with the Commission on April 30, 1912; provided that the rates on yellow-pine lumber and articles taking the same rates from points on the line of the appellee should not exceed the current rates in effect from the junction points, and

"Provided further, that the allowances or divisions out of such joint rates to be paid by said principal defendants [the trunk lines], respectively, to the said last-named parties to the record [the appellee and others] on the products of the mills of the said respective proprietary companies named in said report, shall not exceed the divisions or allowances specified in the aforesaid supplemental report of the Commission [in this instance the switching charge of $1.50 per car] which are hereby fixed as maximum divisions or allowances thereon, until further order, the Commission finding upon the record that any allowances or divisions in excess thereof result in undue preferences and unjust discriminations and are unlawful."

The appellee then brought suit in the United States commerce court, seeking to enjoin and annul the order of the Commission in so far as it forbade a division out of the joint rates of more than $1.50 per car. The commerce court held, after stating that the Commission had found this road to be a common carrier both of logs and of lumber, and not a plant facility, but had denied it the right to receive either a division or allowance for the log traffic, and only an allowance for the lumber traffic of the proprietary mill, while permitting it to receive a division out of the joint rate for both log and lumber traffic of nonproprietary companies, that the reasons stated in the other [35] opinion applied here, and that the distinctions made were arbitrary, and the order beyond the power of the Commission, and the commerce court decreed that that part of the order of the commerce court above quoted, with reference to the divisions and allowances to be made out of the joint rates, be vacated and set aside as to the appellee. 209 Fed. 260.

The United States and the Interstate Commerce Commission, the latter having intervened in the proceeding in the commerce court, prosecuted this appeal.

This case was argued on the same day with the other tap line cases, and much that is said in those cases is applicable here. The Commission ordered the restoration of the schedule of tariffs of April 30, 1912, thus recognizing the right of this road to participate in joint tariffs with other common carriers and to receive a division out of the joint rates. But the Commission excepted from this right traffic offered to the appellee by its proprietary company, evidently upon the theory enforced in the other cases before the Commission that, as to such traffic, the railroad company had not the rights of a common carrier, and as to such traffic limited the compensation of the railroad company to a switching charge of $1.50 per car.

We think the commerce court correctly held the fact that the same ownership controlled the freight offered and the railroad company would not justify the different rate imposed upon the same kind of traffic. Under the commodities clause of the act to regulate commerce, as amended (34 Stat. at L.) 584, chap. 3591, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1288), the right of a carrier, as we have said in the former opinion in these cases, to carry this class of freight, although owned by it, is recognized as lawful. This being so, such carrier, until the law otherwise provides, has the right to treat such freight in the same manner as it does like freight independently owned. Of course, if the division of the rates [36] is a mere cover for rebates or discriminations, such practices may be controlled by the Commission under the authority given to it in the act to regulate commerce.

We find no error in the disposition the Commerce Court made of this case, and its judgment is therefore affirmed.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plff. in Err.,
v.
RUDOLPH AXMAN† and American Bonding Company of Baltimore.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 36–45.)

Public contracts — breach — reletting.

A change in the place of dumping the spoil, made when reletting the contract for the completion of the dredging work in San Pablo bay, prevents the United States from recovering under the provision of the original contract by which it might annul the same for the contractor's default, and recover whatever sums might †Death of Rudolph Axman, one of the defendants in error herein, suggested, and appearance of Julia A. Axman filed and entered March 9, 1914, as a party defendant in error herein.

Digitized by Google

be expended in completing the contract in excess of the contract price, where, by the original contract, the place of dumping the spoil was made an essential and specific requirement, which could only be modified by written agreement, and the engineer in charge had refused permission to dump the spoil elsewhere.

[For other cases, see Contracts, VIII.; United States, VI. e, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 242.]

Argued March 9, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

IN ERROR to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit to review a judgment which affirmed, on a second writ of error, a judgment of the Circuit Court for the Northern District of California in favor of defendants in a suit by the United States to recover on a contract for public work. Affirmed.

See same case below, 113 C. C. A. 512, 193 Fed. 644.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Solicitor General Davis argued the cause and filed a brief for the United States:

Where the government relets a contract, the sureties—and a fortiori the principal—are not relieved because there are differences in the terms which diminish the cost of the work as relet.

United States v. McMullen, 222 U. S. 460, 56 L. ed. 269, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 128.

Mr. Frank W. Aitken argued the cause, and, with Mr. John R. Aitken, filed a brief for Julia A. Axman:

There can be no recovery except for completing the work.

O'Connor v. Henderson Bridge Co. 95 Ky. 633, 27 S. W. 251, 983; American Surety Co. v. Woods, 45 C. C. A. 282, 105 Fed. 741, 106 Fed. 263.

In completing a contract, the cost of doing the same work, in accordance with the same specifications, can alone be considered, even where there has been a breach and damages are allowed.

White v. Sisters of Charity, 79 Ill. App. 646.

Perhaps no principle is better established than the rule that where a surety's liability has been changed by the substitution of one obligation for another, the court will not enter upon an inquiry as to whether the change was in fact detrimental. Where a substantial change is shown, the question of detriment will not be inquired into.

Miller v. Stewart, 9 Wheat. 700, 6 L. ed. 194; Prairie State Nat. Bank v. United States, 164 U. S. 227, 41 L. ed. 412, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 142; Reese v. United States, 9 Wall. 13, 19 L. ed. 541; Stearns, Suretyship, §§ 50, 72; State v. Medary, 17 Ohio, 565; Brandt, Suretyship, 812; Taylor v. Johnson, 17 Ga. 521; Calvert v. London Dock Co. 2 Keen, 638, 7 L. J. Ch. N. S. 90, 2 Jur. 62; Holme v. Brunskill, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 495, 47 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 610, 38 L. T. N. S. 838; Burnes v. Fidelity & D. Co. 96 Mo. App. 467, 70 S. W. 518; Alcatraz Masonic Hall Asso. v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 3 Cal. App. 338, 85 Pac. 157; Durrell v. Farwell, 88 Tex. 98, 30 S. W. 539, 31 S. W. 185; United States v. Freel, 92 Fed. 306.

The surety on such a contract as this is released even by a mere waiver, by the government, of part of the work.

United States v. Corwine, 1 Bond, 339, Fed. Cas. No. 14,871.

The contract did not authorize the change.

United States v. Freel, 92 Fed. 299, 39 C. C. A. 491, 99 Fed. 239, 186 U. S. 309, 46 L. ed. 1177, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 875; American Bonding & T. Co. v. Gibson County, 62 C. C. A. 397, 127 Fed. 673; United States v. Robeson, 9 Pet. 319, 327, 9 L. ed. 142, 145.

The question is not whether the government would have had to do the work exactly and precisely as required by the specifications. The change made was material and substantial. The identity of the work was changed: the things to be done under the second contract were not the things contemplated by the first. The rule is well stated in Reissaus v. Whites, 128 Mo. App. 135, 106 S. W. 607.

Mr. Edward Duffy argued the cause, and, with Mr. Jesse W. Lilienthal, filed a brief for the American Bonding Company:

The test of the liability of the defendants is not to be measured by the question as to whether or not the main purpose of the contract was the dredging of the channel. The test is whether or not the work done by the North American Dredging Company was the work which Axman had left undone.

United States v. McMullen, 222 U. S. 460, 56 L. ed. 269, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 128.

In arriving at the intention of the parties it is necessary to consider the terms of the contract, and to keep in mind that, as this contract was drawn by the plaintiff in error, any ambiguity in its terms must be solved most strongly against it.

United States v. O'Brien, 220 U. S. 321, 55 L. ed. 481, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 406.

The changes made did not bind either Axman or his surety.

United States v. McMullen, supra; United States v. Freel, 186 U. S. 309, 46 L. ed. 1177, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 875.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Justice Day delivered the opinion of the court:

Suit was brought by the United States to recover on a contract between the United States and Axman, with the American Bonding Company, as surety, for dredging in San Pablo bay, California. The first trial resulted in a judgment for the United States, which was reversed by the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit. 93 C. C. A. 322, 167 Fed. 922. [39] On new trial judgment directed in favor of the defendants was affirmed by the circuit court of appeals (113 C. C. A. 512, 193 Fed. 644), and the case is brought here.

It appears that on the 25th of August, 1902, the United States called for bids for dredging in San Pablo bay. On September 30, 1902, Axman submitted his proposal to furnish all the plant, labor, and materials for the work. On November 21, 1902, a written contract was entered into between Axman and the United States for the work. Axman was to do such dredging in the bay as might be required by the government engineer, in accordance with certain specifications, for the sum of 11.44 cents per cubic yard. The specifications, which were made a part of the contract, contained, among others, the following paragraphs:

"35. The shoal to be dredged is in San Pablo bay, California, is about 5 miles in length, and has a least depth of 19 feet at low water. It extends from Pinole point to Lone Tree point, and is distant 1¼ to 1½ statute miles N. W. of the points referred to. The average depth of the excavation is about 9 feet.

"36. The work to be done is to excavate a channel through the shoal, to have a bottom width of 300 feet; a depth of 30 feet at mean low water, and a length of about 27,000 feet; to deposit the spoil as near the south shore as practicable, within lines drawn between Pinole point and Lone Tree point, at such places as may be designated by the engineer officer in charge; and to impound the material behind bulkheads or dikes of suitable construction, subject to approval by the engineer officer in charge. which must be built and maintained by and at the expense of the contractor during the life of the contract."

"39. All dredging material is to be deposited within the limits of the area described in paragraph 36. The method of deposit will be subject to approval by the engineer officer in charge."

[40] "31. The contractor will be required to commence work under the contract within sixty days after the date of notification of approval of the contract by the Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army, to prosecute the said work with faithfulness and energy, and to complete it within twenty-eight (28) months after the date of commencement."

"46. The work must progress at the rate of at least 100,000 cubic yards per month, and to entitle the contractor to the monthly payments provided for in paragraph 30 of these specifications, an average of not less than 100,000 cubic yards per month must have been dredged and deposited; the calculation of averages to be made from the day on which the contract requires the work to be commenced."

A place for the building of the bulkhead was designated in accordance with paragraph 36 of the specifications, and Axman built a bulkhead 2,400 feet long, consisting of two arms, one of 1,800 feet and one of 600 feet. The outlines of the channel to be dredged were also indicated. Axman began work and continued intermittently until December 24, 1903, up to which date he had removed 196,000 cubic yards, but had not in any month removed 100,000 cubic yards. It appears that the barges in Axman's outfit were of such draft that they were unable to get behind the bulkhead except at high tide; that he applied to the engineer officer in charge to be allowed to dump the spoil on the north side of the channel or down at "The Sisters," but permission was refused him so to do. This place is the one where the material was subsequently dumped when the contract was relet.

Paragraph 4 of the contract provides:

"4. If, in any event, the party of the second part shall delay or fail to commence with the delivery of the material or the performance of the work on the day specified herein, or shall, in the judgment of the engineer in charge, fail to prosecute faithfully and diligently the [41] work in accordance with the specifications and requirements of this contract, then, in either case, the party of the first part, or his successors legally appointed, shall have power, with the sanction of the Chief of Engineers, to annul this contract by giving notice in writing to that effect to the party (or parties, or either of them) of the second part, and upon the giving of such notice all payments to the party or parties of the second part under this contract shall cease, and all money or reserve percentage due or to become due the said party or parties of the second part, by reason of this contract, shall be retained by the party of the first part until the final completion and acceptance of the work herein stipulated to be done; and the United States shall have the right to recover from the party of the second part whatever sums may be expended by the party of the first part in completing the said contract in excess of the price herein stipulated to be paid the party of the second part for completing the same, and also all costs of inspection and superintendence incurred by the said United States, in excess of those payable by the said United States during the period herein allowed for the completion of the contract by the party of the second part; and the party of the first part may deduct all the above-mentioned sums out of or from the money or reserve percentage retained as aforesaid; and upon the giving of the said notice the party of the first part shall be authorized to proceed to secure the performance of the work or delivery of the materials, by contract or otherwise, in accordance with law."

Digitized by Google

There are other paragraphs permitting the Chief of Engineers, if he sees fit, to employ additional plant or purchase materials, etc., to insure the completion of the work within the time specified, charging the cost thereof to the contractor; such provision, however, not to be construed so as to affect the right of the government to annul the contract. The government, on the ground that Axman [42] had failed to comply with the requirements of the specifications, proceeded under the provisions of paragraph 4, wherein it will be seen it was stipulated that the United States might have the right to recover from the party of the second part whatever sums might be expended by the party of the first part in completing the contract.

When the contract was relet it was advertised in the alternative, giving the contractor the right to deposit spoil where Axman was required to deposit it within lines drawn between Pinole point and Lone Tree point at such places as might be designated by the engineer officer, and to impound the material behind bulkheads of suitable construction, subject to the approval of the engineer officer, to be built and maintained at the expense of the contractor, or to deposit the spoil in water exceeding 50 feet in depth lying within the area bounded by lines drawn from The Sisters to Point San Pablo, thence to Marin Islands, and thence back to The Sisters. The bid accepted and the contract made provided for the deposit of the spoil in deep water at The Sisters. At the trial the government offered evidence of witnesses as to the fairness of the price paid the North American Dredging Company, the new contractor, under the relet contract, and as to whether it cost more to dredge and dump the spoil behind the line drawn between Pinole point and Lone Tree point than to dredge and dump in deep water. All of the opinion evidence offered by the government was received by the court under objection, and at the conclusion of the case ruled out, and the jury instructed to render a verdict for the defendants.

It is thus apparent that the real question in the case is whether the contract relet for the completion of the work under paragraph 4 of the original contract was a contract for work for which Axman was bound and which he had failed to carry out, or whether it was a different contract, and therefore one for which Axman and his surety cannot [43] be held, and which cannot be used for the measure of recovery for breach of the original contract.

The government insists that the main purpose of the original contract was to secure the dredging of the channel, and that the place of dumping the spoil was but incidental. The contract, however, does not so read. It specifically made the place of dumping the spoil an essential and particular term of the contract. It is not necessary to inquire into the reason which actuated the government in making this requirement. It may be that it desired the spoil to be retained at a place outside of the channel, and that such retention was a better way of doing the work than to deposit the spoil in deep water. It is enough to say that the contract, part of which we have heretofore set forth, specifically provided for dumping the spoil behind the bulkhead. As we have said, the engineer refused permission to dump the spoil at a place other than that designated in the specifications. This position of the engineer was warranted by the terms of the contract, for by paragraph 36 of the specifications the depositing of material and impounding it behind bulkheads, as provided in the contract, were made an essential part of the work to be done, and it is provided by specification 38 that material deposited otherwise than as specified will not be paid for, and by paragraph 39 that all dredged material was to be deposited within the area specified in paragraph 36, and by paragraph 53 that all material must be excavated and deposited under the supervision of the engineer officer in charge. It therefore follows that not only was Axman to dredge the channel as required by the contract, but he was to deposit the spoil as therein specified. Dredging the channel would not be enough to show performance of his contract, unless he complied with the other material requirement as to the deposit of the spoil. The new contract contained a different stipulation as to the dumping of the spoil. Upon the showing made in this case we think the change in the [44] place of dumping the spoil was very material, and could not be made consistently with the terms of the agreement under which Axman undertook to perform the work or be liable as stipulated in paragraph 4.

Digitized by Google

Both sides refer to the case of United States v. McMullen, 222 U. S. 460, 56 L. ed. 269, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 128. In that case a suit was brought upon a contract and bond, the contract providing for certain dredging. The contractor asked for leave to dump the spoil in deep water instead of on shore, which was at first refused, but afterwards granted. The contractor, however, failed to do the work and abandoned it. The Navy Department declared the contract void, and, after advertising, entered into a new contract. The defense principally made and treated of in the opinion of the court rested upon the alleged extension of time, which, it was contended, worked a discharge of the surety. After disposing of that question in favor of the government, this court said (p. 471):

"The objection that the second contractor does not appear to have completed the work intended to be accomplished by the first, that is, to have made a channel of a certain depth, does not impress us. The first contract was for certain work for a certain object, but limited and subject to change as the appropriations might require. The second was for the same on the same plans and specifications, the only difference being in the parties, the price, and the liberty given to the second contractor to dump in deep water, which diminished the cost. In the first contract the government reserved an absolute right of choice in this regard. Whether the object of the contract was attained is immaterial, so long as the work done towards it was work that the first contractor had agreed to perform."

We thus observe that in the McMullen Case it was found that the liberty given to the second contractor to dump in deep water did not change the contract, because in the [45] first contract the government reserved an absolute right of choice in this regard. In the present case there was no such right of choice. The place of dumping spoil was made, as we have said, a specific requirement of the contract. Under § 6 such changes as are here involved must be agreed upon in writing by the contracting parties, the agreement setting forth clearly reasons for the change, giving quantity and prices, to take effect only upon the approval of the Secretary of War. Minor changes are provided for in § 58 of the specifications, but clearly such an important change as this one has proven to be is not of that character.

In the McMullen Case, in treating of the right reserved in the first contract giving the government an absolute choice of the dumping ground, it was concluded, "whether the object of the contract was attained is immaterial, so long as the work done towards it was work that the first contractor had agreed to perform." We are clearly of the opinion in this case that the work done under the second contract was not the work which the first contractor had agreed to perform. While it is true it accomplished the dredging of the channel in the same bay, it did this with a disposition of the spoil not permitted under the first contract, and in a material matter was different from the contract first entered upon.

We reach the conclusion that the Circuit Court of Appeals rightly decided this case, and its judgment is accordingly affirmed.

---

[46] LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
CATESBY WOODFORD and John T. Ireland.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 46-52.)

Error to state court — Federal question — how raised.

A Federal question is not so presented as to sustain a writ of error from the Federal Supreme Court to the highest court of a state where the latter court declined to pass upon the question, because it was not appropriately raised in the trial court in the manner required by the state practice, and there does not appear to have been any attempt on the part of the state court to evade the decision of such question by an unwarranted resort to alleged rules of local practice.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1251-1256, 1271-1277, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 531.]

Submitted March 23, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

Note.—On the general subject of writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4 L. ed. U. S. 97; Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884; and Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

On what adjudications of state courts can be brought up for review in the Supreme Court of the United States by writ of error to those courts—see note to Apex Transp. Co. v. Garbade, 62 L.R.A. 513.

On how and when questions must be raised and decided in a state court in order to make a case for a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States—see note to Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. McGrew, 63 L.R.A. 33.

As to when Federal question is raised in time to sustain the appellate jurisdiction of the Federal Supreme Court over state courts—see note to Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. McGuire, 49 L. ed. U. S. 414.

Digitized by Google

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the State of Kentucky to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Fayette Circuit Court, in that state, in favor of plaintiffs in a suit against a carrier to recover damages for the loss of a shipment. Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

See same case below, 152 Ky. 398, 153 S. W. 722; on rehearing, 153 Ky. 185, 154 S. W. 1083.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles H. Moorman, Benjamin D. Warfield, and Henry Lane Stone submitted the cause for plaintiff in error. Mr. Robert A. Thornton was on the brief:

This case does not fall under the third clause, but under the second clause, of § 709, of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Chapman v. Goodnow (Chapman v. Crane) 123 U. S. 540, 548, 31 L. ed. 235, 238, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 211; Columbia Water Power Co. v. Columbia Electric Street R. Light & P. Co. 172 U. S. 475, 488, 43 L. ed. 521, 525, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247; Erie R. Co. v. Purdy, 185 U. S. 153, 46 L. ed. 850, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 605; French v. Hopkins, 124 U. S. 524, 31 L. ed. 536, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 589; Morrison v. Watson, 154 U. S. 111, 38 L. ed. 927, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 995; M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. ed. 579; Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 53, 54, 56 L. ed. 327, 347, 348, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 1, 45 L. ed. 395, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240.

There was no intentional relinquishment by plaintiff in error of a known right; therefore, there was no waiver amounting to an estoppel.

29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 1091, 1095; Cable v. United States L. Ins. Co. 49 C. C. A. 216, 111 Fed. 19; Christenson v. Carleton, 69 Vt. 91, 37 Atl. 226; First Nat. Bank v. Hartford Life & Annuity Ins. Co. 45 Conn. 25; Ansonia v. Cooper, 66 Conn. 184, 33 Atl. 905; Rice v. Fidelity & D. Co. 43 C. C. A. 270, 103 Fed. 427; Stackhouse v. Barnston, 10 Ves. Jr. 466; Wells, F. & Co. v. Neiman-Marcus Co. 227 U. S. 469, 57 L. ed. 600, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 267.

Messrs. R. A. Thornton, Charles H. Moorman, and Benjamin D. Warfield filed a separate brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Robert B. Franklin submitted the cause for defendant in error. Mr. Robert C. Talbott was on the brief:

The final judgment of the highest court of a state is not reviewable in the Supreme Court of the United States as a decision in favor of the validity of a state statute challenged as repugnant to the Federal Constitution, or as a denial of a right or immunity under such Constitution, where such question is not raised or specially set up in the trial court, and the appellate court does nothing more than decline to pass upon the Federal question because it is not raised in the trial court as required by the state practice.

Erie R. Co. v. Purdy, 185 U. S. 148, 46 L. ed. 847, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 605.

A judgment of a state court upholding a state statute which is claimed to violate the Federal Constitution is not reviewable in the Supreme Court of the United States where the state court declined to pass on the Federal question, because it was not raised in the trial court as required by the state practice.

Layton v. Missouri, 187 U. S. 356, 47 L. ed. 214, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 137.

The Federal right, title, privilege, or immunity must be set up or claimed in the trial court whenever, under the state practice, the highest state court, in reviewing the judgments of the trial court, refuses to consider questions not therein raised.

Baldwin v. Kansas, 129 U. S. 52, 32 L. ed. 640, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 193; Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 143, 31 L. ed. 80, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 21, 22; Brooks v. Missouri, 124 U. S. 394, 31 L. ed. 454, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 443; Morrison v. Watson, 154 U. S. 111, 38 L. ed. 927, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 995; Erie R. Co. v. Purdy, 185 U. S. 148, 46 L. ed. 847, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 605.

To give this court jurisdiction to review the decision of a state court, any title, right, privilege, or immunity claimed under the Constitution or United States statutes must have been specially set up in the proper court below.

Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 31 L. ed. 80, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 21, 22.

To give this court jurisdiction to revise the judgment of the state court, it must appear that the point on which plaintiff relies was made in the state court and decided against him.

Maxwell v. Newbold, 18 How. 511, 15 L. ed. 506; Taylor v. Morton, 2 Black, 481, 17 L. ed. 277; Susquehanna Boom Co. v. West Branch Boom Co. 110 U. S. 57, 28 L. ed. 69, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 408; Caperton v. Bowyer, 14 Wall. 216, 20 L. ed. 882; Cockroft v. Vose, 14 Wall. 5, 20 L. ed. 875; Messenger v. Mason, 10 Wall. 507, 19 L. ed. 1028; Farney v. Towle, 1 Black, 350; 17 L. ed. 216; Hoyt v. Shelden (Hoyt v. Thompson) 1 Black, 518, 17 L. ed. 65; Santa Cruz County v. Santa Cruz R. Co. 111 U. S. 361, 28 L. ed. 456, 4 Sup. Ct.

Digitized by Google

Rep. 474; The Victory, 6 Wall. 382, 18 L. ed. 848.

The Supreme Court of the United States can exercise appellate jurisdiction over the supreme court of a state in only a few special cases; and the ground of jurisdiction must be stated with precision, and it must appear of record that the right claimed was presented to the state court, and that the decision was against such right.

Poydras De La Lande v. Louisiana, 18 How. 192, 15 L. ed. 350.

It is necessary to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under U. S. Rev. Stat. 709, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575, that the title, right, privilege, or immunity relied on be specifically set up or claimed in the state court at the proper time and in the proper way. The decision must be against the title, right, privilege, or immunity so set up or claimed.

Schuyler Nat. Bank v. Bollong, 150 U. S. 85, 37 L. ed. 1008, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24.

Where, at the trial before a jury, no objection was made to the form of the oath, or on making the motion for a new trial, or on the motion for arrest of judgment, and such objection was first suggested in the state supreme court, and that court refused to consider the objection on the ground that it was not taken at the trial,—the Supreme Court of the United States cannot consider it, because the right was not set up or claimed in the proper court below.

Baldwin v. Kansas, 129 U. S. 52, 32 L. ed. 640, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 193.

A title is not claimed under an act of Congress so as to give the Supreme Court of the United States jurisdiction of a state court denying the validity of such title, where the claim is made only in the argument of counsel, and not in the pleadings.

Yesler v. Washington Harbor Line, 146 U. S. 646, 36 L. ed. 1119, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 190.

The suggestion of a violation of a Federal right, first made in a petition for the review, in the highest state court, of the judgment of an intermediate appellate court, is too late to serve as a basis for the exercise of the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States, where it does not affirmatively appear that the state court passed upon the Federal question, and the denial of the petition may well have been upon the ground that the question, not having been suggested in the court below, could not be made available on appeal.

Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. McGuire, 196 U. S. 128, 49 L. ed. 413, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 200.

A Federal question is not set up in a state court soon enough to sustain a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States, where it is first presented by new pleas filed after the case was decided by the supreme court of the state and remanded to the lower court for a new trial, and the supreme court, on a second appeal, refused to reopen the question involved on the first hearing, to let in the Federal defense presented by the new pleas.

Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 1, 45 L. ed. 395, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240.

A writ of error to a state court must be dismissed by the Supreme Court of the United States if no Federal question was decided by the state court.

California v. Holladay, 159 U. S. 415, 40 L. ed. 202, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 53.

It is not sufficient to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction in the case of a writ of error to the supreme court of a state that a Federal question might have been raised, or might have been decided, and was involved in the case; but it must appear, either in direct terms or by necessary intendment, that it was in fact brought to the notice of the court and decided by it.

Crowell v. Randell, 10 Pet. 368, 9 L. ed. 458; Ocean Ins. Co. v. Polleys, 13 Pet. 157, 10 L. ed. 105; Coons v. Gallaher, 15 Pet. 18, 10 L. ed. 645; Mills v. Brown, 16 Pet. 525, 10 L. ed. 1055.

To give the United States Supreme Court jurisdiction of a writ of error to the state court, the record must show that a Federal question not only might have been, but actually was, raised and decided adversely to the plaintiff in error.

Endowment Benev. Asso. v. Kansas, 120 U. S. 103, 30 L. ed. 593, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Church v. Kelsey, 121 U. S. 282, 30 L. ed. 960, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 897; Clark v. Pennsylvania, 128 U. S. 395, 32 L. ed. 487, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113; Gray v. Coan, 154 U. S. 589, 38 L. ed. 1088, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1168.

Even though it does not conclusively appear to be the fact, yet, where the state court may properly have disposed of the case without deciding the Federal question, its judgment is not reviewable in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Klinger v. Missouri, 13 Wall. 257, 20 L. ed. 635.

The Supreme Court will not review a final state court judgment, even if it denies some title, right, privilege, or immunity of the unsuccessful party, unless it appears from the record that such title, right, privilege, or immunity was specially set up or claimed and denied in the state court as belonging to such party under the Constitution or some treaty, statute, commission, or authority of the United States.

Digitized by Google

F. G. Oxley Stave Co. v. Butler County, 166 U. S. 648, 41 L. ed. 1149, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 709.

To give the United States Supreme Court jurisdiction, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575, it must appear of record that a Federal question was specifically set up or claimed in the state court at the proper time and in the proper way, and that its decision was against it.

Brooks v. Missouri, 124 U. S. 394, 31 L ed. 454, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 443; Leeper v. Texas, 139 U. S. 462, 35 L. ed. 225, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 577; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Southern P. Co. 137 U. S. 48, 34 L. ed. 614, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10; French v. Hopkins, 124 U. S. 524, 31 L. ed. 536, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 589; Chappell v. Bradshaw, 128 U. S. 132, 32 L. ed. 369, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40.

An assignment of errors cannot avail to present a Federal question when there is an entire absence in the record of any fact showing that such question was decided in the state court.

Fowler v. Lamson, 164 U. S. 252, 41 L. ed. 424, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 112.

The right, title, privilege, or immunity relied on must not only be specially set up or claimed, but at the proper time and in the proper way.

Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. McGrew, 188 U. S. 292, 47 L. ed. 480, 62 L.R.A. 33, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 375; Sayward v. Denny, 158 U. S. 180, 39 L. ed. 941, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777; Morrison v. Watson, 154 U. S. 111, 38 L. ed. 927, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 995; Miller v. Texas, 153 U. S. 535, 38 L. ed. 812, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 874; Maxwell v. Newbold, 18 How. 515, 15 L. ed. 508; Hoyt v. Shelden (Hoyt v. Thompson) 1 Black, 518, 17 L. ed. 65.

The proper time is in the trial court, whenever that is required by the state practice, in accordance with which the highest court of a state will not revise the judgment of the court below, on questions not therein raised.

Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 31 L. ed. 80, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 21, 22; Jacobi v. Alabama, 187 U. S. 133, 47 L. ed. 106, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48; Layton v. Missouri, 187 U. S. 356, 47 L. ed. 214, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 137; Erie R. Co. v. Purdy, 185 U. S. 148, 46 L. ed. 847, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 605; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. McGrew, 188 U. S. 308, 47 L. ed. 484, 63 L.R.A. 33, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 375; Baldwin v. Kansas, 129 U. S. 52, 32 L. ed. 640, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 193.

The decision of a supreme court of a state on the second appeal in the case, that it will not reopen the question involved upon the first hearing to let in a Federal defense presented by new pleas filed after the case was sent down for a new trial, merely settles the question of practice, and does not present a Federal question.

Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 8, 45 L. ed. 401, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240.

Where the case is diposed of on the ground of waiver, no Federal question is presented.

Beaupre v. Noyes, 138 U. S. 397, 34 L. ed. 991, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 296; Eustis v. Bolles, 150 U. S. 361, 37 L. ed. 1111, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131.

A decision of a state court resting on the grounds of state procedure does not present a Federal question.

Tripp v. Santa Rosa Street R. Co. 144 U. S. 126, 36 L. ed. 371, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 655; Iowa C. R. Co. v. Iowa, 160 U. S. 389, 40 L. ed. 467, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 344; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Butler, 159 U. S. 87, 40 L. ed. 85, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 991; Wood v. Brady, 150 U. S. 18, 37 L. ed. 981, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 6; Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 565, 40 L. ed. 1075, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 904.

A decision of a state court in an action founded on a statute of another state creating an action for death, qualified by one year's limitation, that the failure to plead the statute in the complaint was cured by its inclusion in the answers, filed more than one year after the death, presents no question as to the full faith and credit to be given such statute, so as to sustain a writ of error under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575, but involves nothing more than a question of local pleading and practice.

Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Miller, 221 U. S. 408, 55 L. ed. 789, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 534; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Gross, 221 U. S. 417, 55 L. ed. 796, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 536.

A Federal question, although referred to in the assignments of error in the state appellate court and in the Federal Supreme Court, cannot be considered by the latter where it does not appear that the state court dealt with the question, and it may have refused to do so on the ground that it was not raised in the trial court.

Cox v. Texas, 202 U. S. 446, 50 L. ed. 1099, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 671.

The Federal Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to review a judgment of a state court involving a question of estoppel or quasi estoppel broad enough to support the judgment without reference to any Federal question. Leonard v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 198 U. S. 416, 49 L. ed. 1108, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 750, holding that a decision of a state court that defendants in ejectment, who had successfully insisted in a prior suit in a Federal court that only a portion of a tract of land was in issue, cannot invoke the rule that a judgment determining the ownership of a portion of a tract is conclusive between the same parties, claiming under the same titles, as to the ownership of the entire tract, is not reviewable as denying any Federal rights asserted under the Federal court's judgment; as the state court merely applied the doctrine which forbids parties from assuming inconsistent positions in judicial proceedings.

Digitized by Google

Even, however, if we were at liberty to disregard the action of the state court and attribute to the plaintiff in error the status claimed by him, as in addition the court below held that the right to the relief prayed was in any event barred by long delay and laches, this would be sufficient to prevent us from reviewing the alleged Federal question.

Moran v. Horsky, 178 U. S. 205, 207, 44 L. ed. 1038, 1039, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 856; Preston v. Chicago, 226 U. S. 447, 57 L. ed. 293, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 177.

Whether the jurisdiction of this court is properly invoked depends upon whether any Federal right or immunity was duly set up or claimed by the plaintiff in error in the state court, and there overruled.

El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Eichel, 226 U. S. 590, 57 L. ed. 369, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 179.

The preliminary question is whether any such claim or right, under the 14th Amendment, was "specially set up" in the state court, and whether the record shows that the right so specially set up was denied.

Consolidated Turnp. Co. v. Norfolk & O. V. R. Co. 228 U. S. 326, 57 L. ed. 857, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 510.

The court's denial of the petition for rehearing after having "maturely considered" it, is no more than a refusal to rehear the case.

Ibid.

The right to review the judgment of the Illinois court arises under § 709 of U. S. Rev. Stat. and is therefore limited to a Federal right specially set up by the party seeking to take advantage of it, and denied by the state court.

Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Hackett, 228 U. S. 559, 57 L. ed. 966, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581.

No question of Federal right reviewable by the Federal Supreme Court by writ of error to the Oklahoma supreme court was raised by the act of the United States court for the Indian territory in overruling a demurrer by which defendant sought to assert a right under the Federal Constitution to a trial by jury, where, under the local practice, such an objection is not a ground for demurrer.

Dill v. Ebey, 229 U. S. 199, 57 L. ed. 1148, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 620.

A judgment of the supreme court of Oklahoma in a case originally begun in the United States court for the Indian territory is not reviewable in the Federal Supreme Court, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575, on the ground of a deprivation of the right to trial by jury, where such right was asserted in the territorial court by demurrer, in which, under the local practice, it had no proper place, and was first reiterated in a motion for new trial in the state court when there was no issue of fact to be tried.

Dill v. Ebey, supra.

A decision of the state court adverse to the parties asserting a title to lands under state grants, which they claim cannot be defeated without a denial of Federal constitutional immunities, is not reviewable by writ of error from the Federal Supreme Court, where the state court rested its decision upon the effect of a decree in another suit as res judicata, and on the statute of limitations and laches as barring an attempt to vacate such decree.

Wood v. Chesborough, 228 U. S. 672, 57 L. ed. 1018, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 706.

[48] Mr. Justice Day delivered the opinion of the court:

Catesby Woodford and John T. Ireland, defendants in error, plaintiffs below, brought suit in the Fayette circuit court, of Kentucky, against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, plaintiff in error, defendant below, to recover damages for the loss of a number of race horses and injury to others shipped by them on November 17, 1910, over the lines of the defendant from Lexington, Kentucky, to Juarez, Mexico. There was a verdict for the plaintiffs in the trial court, judgment upon which was affirmed by the court of appeals of Kentucky (152 Ky. 398, 153 S. W. 722), and the case is here upon writ of error.

The amended petition contained an allegation that the defendant agreed by contract entered into in Fayette county, Kentucky, to transport the horses from Lexington to Juarez, and set forth the cause and extent of the loss to plaintiffs. The defendant answered, traversing the allegations of the petition, and pleading contributory negligence, and the plaintiffs filed their reply. The defendant by motion sought to have the contract sued upon, which it alleged was in writing, filed as an exhibit to the petition, and subsequently the plaintiffs filed the contract of shipment, and the same was noted of record. It provided, among other things, that, in consideration of the reduced rate, the extent of the damages for which the defendant would be liable should not exceed $150 for a stallion or jack, and $100 for a horse or mule, the agreed value of the animals, and across the face of the contract were stamped the following words: "The attention of the shippers has been called to the terms, conditions, value, etc., herein named." It also appears that the contract of shipment was produced and filed in evidence by the plaintiffs.

Digitized by Google

One of the instructions requested by the defendant was to the effect that, if the jury found for the plaintiffs, they [49] should fix the damages at the fair market value of the horses killed, and the difference in value before and after the injury of the other horses. After verdict and judgment for plaintiffs, the defendant filed its motion and grounds, and additional grounds, for a new trial, none of which, however, were based upon the provisions of the contract of shipment or any act of Congress. The court, in overruling the motion, said, however, that it had also heard counsel "upon the Federal question raised by the defendant as to whether the contract in question for the transportation of said colts and fillies mentioned in the petition from Lexington, Kentucky, to Juarez, in the Republic of Mexico, was in violation of the provisions, or any of them, of an act of Congress of the United States entitled, 'An Act to Regulate Commerce,' approved February 4, 1887 [24 Stat. at L. 379, chap. 104, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3154]," as amended, "and having considered the said motion and grounds for a new trial of this cause, and having also considered the said Federal question, and being of the opinion that said contract did not and does not violate any of the provisions of said act of Congress, the motion is hereby overruled and a new trial is refused."

The case was taken by appeal to the court of appeals of Kentucky. After submission of the case to that court, the defendant filed a supplemental brief, urging the application of the law of the case of Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 57 L. ed. 314, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148, and further insisted upon such application in its brief in reply to the plaintiffs' reply brief. The court of appeals noticed that the claim that the law of the Croninger Case controlled was first suggested by defendant in its supplemental brief, after submission of the case to that court, and that the case had been tried under the rule of law in Kentucky that a contract relieving a carrier from its common-law liability, and limiting recovery to less than the value of the property carried, is in violation of the Kentucky Constitution, and held that it was elementary that questions not raised in the trial court in an appropriate [50] way, which, by the Code of Practice of Kentucky, is in writing, would not be considered on appeal; and, after detailing the proceedings in the trial court, concluded that no Federal question had thus been made. The defendant, by petition for rehearing, again insisted that the Federal question had been properly presented, but the court of appeals, admitting that state courts must take judicial notice of acts of Congress, and that it was not essential that the Federal question should have been raised in any special form in the trial court, held that the facts on which such question rested must be presented in the record; that the provisions of the written contract, upon which the defendant then relied, not having been pleaded, no Federal question was presented; and moreover, that the defendant had asked for an instruction inconsistent with the view then presented, and conducted its case throughout the trial on that basis (153 Ky. 185, 154 S. W. 1083).

That the defendant was entitled to make a defense under the act to regulate commerce, as amended (34 Stat. at L. 584, chap. 3591, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1288), is evidently an afterthought. The case was tried upon the theory that the Kentucky Constitution and statutes were controlling, and it was not until after the decision of Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger, supra, that an attempt was made to claim the benefit of the bill of lading based upon schedules filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is true that a written bill of lading showing a limitation of $100 in value for each horse was filed in the case by the plaintiff below after the motion of the defendant had been filed, as the amended record discloses, but in order to assert this defense it was necessary not only to have the contract filed, but that the defendant below should set up the facts showing that such defense was available to it. No pleading was filed by the defendant alleging compliance with the act to regulate commerce by the filing of schedules containing the limitation as to the liability upon which [51] reliance is now placed. As we have already said, the record discloses that, at the trial, the defendant, instead of relying upon the limited liability now claimed, entirely ignoring such limitation, itself asked and obtained an instruction that if the jury should find for the plaintiff, it should fix the damages in such sum as would represent the loss suffered. Of course, the request to give this instruction was entirely inconsistent with the claim of limited liability under the Federal statute.

If a Federal question can be said to be involved at all, it was introduced into the record upon the argument of the motion for a new trial. Disposing of that question, the court of appeals of Kentucky set forth that the question was not raised by the pleadings or requested instructions, or by motion for a new trial, or written motion of any kind, and concluded that it must have been raised orally. It pointed out that under the Kentucky Code of Practice such contentions were required to be in writing, and that if the defendant desired to take advantage of its limited liability, it must, under the Code of the state, specifically rely upon that defense in its answer. In making this holding, the Kentucky court but enforced a rule of practice of that state. The decisions of this court not only have repeatedly held that a Federal right, in order to be reviewable here, must be set up and denied in the state court, but have often held that such claim of denial is not properly brought to the attention of this court where it appears that the state court declined to pass upon the question because it was not raised in the trial court, as required by the state practice. Schuyler Nat. Bank v. Bollong, 150 U. S. 85, 37 L. ed. 1008, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24; Erie R. Co. v. Purdy, 185 U. S. 148, 46 L. ed. 847, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 605; Layton v. Missouri, 187 U. S. 356, 47 L. ed. 214, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 137. In this case there is no reason to believe that there was an attempt on the part of the state court to evade the decision of Federal questions, duly set up, by unwarranted resort to alleged rules under local practice, and upon this [52] point this case comes within former rulings of this court, as we have seen.

Digitized by Google

As to the contention that the case really raised a Federal question because it involved the constitutional validity of a state statute when opposed to the exclusive rights secured under a Federal law,—an examination of the record shows that no such question was made in the state court, nor was it necessarily involved in the decision made, in such sense as to make the case reviewable here on that ground.

It follows that the case must be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

ATLANTIC TRANSPORT COMPANY OF WEST VIRGINIA, Petitioner,
v.
FRANK IMBROVEK.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 52–63.)

Admiralty jurisdiction — torts — injury to stevedore.

The admiralty jurisdiction of a Federal district court extends to a cause of action against a stevedore company arising out of an injury to one of its employees, caused by its negligent failure to secure the hatch covers on a vessel lying in navigable waters, whereby such employee was injured while engaged in loading and stowing the ship's cargo, since even if it be assumed that the requirement as to locality in tort cases, while indispensable, is not necessarily exclusive, still the wrong which was the subject of the suit was of a maritime nature.

[For other cases, see Admiralty, 118–121, 135–138, 299–301, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 215.]

Argued January 29 and 30, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

ON WRIT of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit to review a decree which affirmed a decree of the District Court for the District of Maryland in favor of the libellant in a suit to recover for personal injuries received in loading and stowing a ship's cargo. Affirmed.

See same case below, 113 C. C. A. 398, 193 Fed. 1019.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Edward Duffy argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Ralph Robinson and Nicholas P. Bond, filed a brief for petitioner:

One fact must be kept in mind in order to understand the English decisions. We refer to the venue. In a common-law court, locality was the basis of jurisdiction. The judge was a county judge, and the venue had to be laid originally in the hundred and later in the county where the cause of action arose, and the jury which tried the case must come from that county. In the earliest time all causes of action were local. In the course of time, however, there crept into the law from necessity the distinction between local and transitory actions. Thereafter a transitory action could be brought where the defendant was found; but in order to get jurisdiction over a foreign transitory action a fiction was finally devised under which the action must be stated to have arisen in its true locality, to which was added under a videlicet, the place where the action was brought, and this latter statement could not be traversed. To such an extent was this carried, that if a suit were brought at common law for the seizure of a ship on the high seas, the pleading stated that the ship was taken on the high seas, to wit, at Cheapside in London, and the defendant was not allowed to prove that Cheapside was not on the high seas.

Bacon, Abr. "Actions Local & Transitory;" McKenna v. Fiske, 1 How. 241, 247, 11 L. ed. 117, 119; Reg. v. Keyn, L. R. 2

Digitized by Google

Exch. Div. 162, 46 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 17, 13 Cox, C. C. 403, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 946; Mostyn v. Fabrigas, Cowp. pt. 1, p. 161, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 11th ed. 591; Gilbert, Pr. 3d ed. 84, 85; British South Africa Co. v. Companhia de Mocambique [1893] A. C. 617, 63 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 70, 6 Reports, 1, 69 L. T. N. S. 604.

The jurisdiction, as of right, of the admiralty, was limited to causes of a maritime nature.

2 Browne, Adm. 1 Am. ed. pp. 94, 95; Benedict, Adm. 4th ed. pp. 39, 46, 47; Stevens v. The Sandwich, 1 Pet. Adm. 233, Fed. Cas. No. 13,409.

All Justice Story is contending for in DeLovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. 399, Fed. Cas. No. 3,776, is, that the nature of the cause is the sole test.

The Blackheath (United States v. Evans) 195 U. S. 361, 49 L. ed. 236, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 46; Martin v. West, 222 U. S. 191, 56 L. ed. 159, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 592, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 42.

In determining whether a tort is maritime or not we must consider three things: locality, subject-matter of complaint, and person with regard to whom complaint is made.

Reg. v. London Ct. Judge [1892] 1 Q. B. 273.

We believe that we have noted in this brief all the torts which are mentioned in the Black Book of Admiralty as within the jurisdiction of admiralty.

They are as follows:

(1) Negligent collision between ships. The ship is personified, at least, under the modern cases, and it can injure and is responsible for the injury, irrespective of whether or not it is being navigated by its owner. The modern cases refuse jurisdiction in the case of a collision of a ship with a bridge or wharf, although the latter is used for commerce on water.

Cleveland Terminal & Valley R. Co. v. Cleveland S. S. Co. 208 U. S. 316, 52 L. ed. 508, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 414, 13 Ann. Cas. 1215; Martin v. West, supra.

(2) Collision with an anchor of another ship. This is nothing but the modern doctrine of jurisdiction in cases of obstruction to navigation. Admiralty has always had within its jurisdiction the regulation of navigation. It looks after both obstructions to navigation and aids to navigation. It enforces a claim for damages whether arising from a submerged pile (Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Philadelphia, & H. de G. Steam Towboat Co. 23 How. 209, 16 L. ed. 433) or from an unlawful structure in the water (Atlee v Northwestern Union Packet Co. 21 Wall. 389, 22 L. ed. 619). It likewise enforces a claim for damages to an aid to navigation done by a ship (The Blackheath, supra), and would probably enforce such a claim when the damage is done by an individual.

(3) Damage to a ship by the negligence of its pilot. The English court has refused to extend this jurisdiction to a claim for damages to one ship by the negligence of the pilot of another.

Reg. v. London Ct. Judge, supra.

(4) Injury to a ship by reason of someone removing the anchor or cutting the cable.

(5) Injury to a mariner in the service of the ship. In such case the ship was liable whether negligent or otherwise only for the maintenance and care of the mariner. This is the rule to-day, except where the injury happens by reason of the unseaworthiness of the ship, or of a failure to supply and keep in order the proper appliances appurtenant to the ship (The Osceola, 189 U. S. 158, 47 L. ed. 760, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 483), in which event the mariner is entitled to damages. The modern cases have brought within this jurisdiction an injury to a person lawfully on board a ship, caused by the negligence of the ship (Leathers v. Blessing, 105 U. S. 626, 26 L. ed. 1192), and to a stevedore, injured by the negligence of the ship (The Max Morris, 137 U. S. 1, 34 L. ed. 586, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 29). But the modern cases have refused jurisdiction when the negligence of the ship operates injuriously to a structure on land (The Plymouth [Hough v. Western Transp. Co.] 3 Wall. 20, 18 L. ed. 125).

The doctrine of locality has produced endless difficulties, as witness the discussion of the two ladder cases: The Strabo, 90 Fed. 110, and The H. S. Pickands, 42 Fed. 239, and the discussion as to whether, if a sailor falls from the yard arm by the negligence of the ship, the jurisdiction would depend on whether he fell into the water and was drowned, or fell on the wharf and was killed. Indeed, Justice Brown has pointed out the difficulties of the locality doctrine in an article in 9 Columbia L. Rev. 1.

As a result of the Hackfeld Case (U. S. Dist. Ct. Hawaii, 1902) and this case three articles have been written which may aid this court in the determination of the question of jurisdiction.

16 Harvard L. Rev. 210; 18 Harvard L. Rev. 299; 25 Harvard L. Rev. 381.

Messrs. W. H. Price, Jr., and John E. Semmes, Jr., argued the cause, and, with Messrs. John E. Semmes, Jesse N. Bowen, and Matthew Gault, filed a brief for respondent:

The allegations of the libel, that is, the statement of the case, confer jurisdiction in the absence of evidence that such allegations are fraudulently made solely for the purpose of obtaining jurisdiction.

Digitized by Google

(1) Where there is an allegation that the jurisdictional amount is involved, and it subsequently develops by the evidence that the jurisdictional amount is not involved, the court has authority to enter judgment for a less amount, unless the allegations were fraudulently made for obtaining jurisdiction.

Smith v. Greenhow, 109 U. S. 669, 27 L. ed. 1080, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 421; Barry v. Edmunds, 116 U. S. 550, 29 L. ed. 729, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 501; Schunk v. Moline, M. & S. Co. 147 U. S. 500, 37 L. ed. 255, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 416; Smithers v. Smith, 204 U. S. 632, 51 L. ed. 656, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 297.

(2) Where the requisite diversity of citizenship exists at the commencement of a suit, no subsequent change in the situation of the parties ousts the jurisdiction of the court.

Morgan v. Morgan, 2 Wheat. 290, 4 L. ed. 242; Clarke v. Mathewson, 12 Pet. 164, 9 L. ed. 1041; Mollan v. Torrance, 9 Wheat. 537, 6 L. ed. 154.

(3) Where Federal and non-Federal questions are involved in the same suit, and jurisdiction has properly attached for the purpose of determining the Federal question, the Federal court has a right, and in fact, it is its duty, to finally determine all matters in dispute.

Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 257, 270, 25 L. ed. 648, 652; New Orleans, M. & T. R. Co. v. Mississippi, 102 U. S. 135, 141, 26 L. ed. 96, 98; Chappell v. United States, 160 U. S. 499, 40 L. ed. 510, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397; Williamson v. United States, 207 U. S. 425, 52 L. ed. 278, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 163; Siler v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 213 U. S. 175, 53 L. ed. 753, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 451; Omaha Horse R. Co. v. Cable Tram-Way Co. 32 Fed. 729.

In questions of contracts, as distinguished from torts, admiralty jurisdiction depends mainly upon the subject-matter, —that is, the nature of the service and engagement,—and is limited to such subjects as are purely maritime.

Ex parte Easton, 95 U. S. 72, 24 L. ed. 374; New England Mut. M. Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 11 Wall. 1, 26, 20 L. ed. 90, 97.

By reason of the jealousy of the English common-law courts against the admiralty, the latter's jurisdiction is narrower and more restricted in England than in any other country. In the United States the admiralty jurisdiction of the courts is not confined or restricted by restraining statutes, or the prejudiced interpretations of these statutes by the judiciary.

Morewood v. Enequist, 23 How. 492, 16 L. ed. 516; New England Mut. M. Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 11 Wall. 1, 20 L. ed. 90; New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 6 How. 344, 385, 12 L. ed. 465, 483; The Blackheath (United States v. Evans) 195 U. S. 361, 49 L. ed. 236, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 46; The Lottawanna (Rodd v. Heartt) 21 Wall. 558, 574, 22 L. ed. 654, 661.

The sole test of admiralty jurisdiction has been the locality of the person or thing injured at the time of impact with the intentional or negligent force.

The Plymouth (Hough v. Western Transp. Co.) 3 Wall. 36, 18 L. ed. 128; Thomas v. Lane, 2 Sumn. 9, Fed. Cas. No. 13,902; De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. 398, Fed. Cas. No. 3,776; Leathers v. Blessing, 105 U. S. 626, 26 L. ed. 1192; The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 12 How. 443, 13 L. ed. 1058; The Blackheath (United States v. Evans) 195 U. S. 361, 49 L. ed. 236, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 46; Cleveland Terminal & Valley R. Co. v. Cleveland S. S. Co. 208 U. S. 316, 52 L. ed. 508, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 414, 13 Ann. Cas. 125; The Troy, 208 U. S. 321, 52 L. ed. 512, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 416; The Jefferson, 215 U. S. 130, 54 L. ed. 125, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 54, 17 Ann. Cas. 907; Martin v. West, 222 U. S. 191, 56 L. ed. 159, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 592, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 42.

The tort in this case was essentially maritime in its nature.

The Gilbert Knapp, 37 Fed. 209; The George T. Kemp, 2 Low. Dec. 477, Fed. Cas. No. 5,341; The Segurança, 58 Fed. 908; The Mattie May, 47 Fed. 69; The Senator, 21 Fed. 191; The Coningsby, 202 Fed. 814.

Mr. Justice Hughes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a libel to recover for personal injuries sustained by the libellant as a stevedore in the employ of the Atlantic Transport Company (the petitioner), which was engaged in loading the Pretoria, belonging to the Hamburg-American Steam Packet Company, while lying in the port [57] of Baltimore. The libel was brought against both the owner of the ship and the stevedore company. It was dismissed as to the former, but a recovery against the latter was allowed by the district court (190 Fed. 229) and sustained by the circuit court of appeals (113 C. C. A. 398, 193 Fed. 1019). This writ of certiorari was granted.

The libellant was one of a gang engaged in loading and stowing copper. He was working on the ship, under one of the hatches. The covers of the hatch were in three sections, the division being made by two movable iron beams placed athwart the ship. The coverings of the middle section had been removed and placed on top of the fore and after sections. On the dock, the copper was piled upon a rope mat which was lifted by a winch, swung over the hatch, and lowered into the hold. On one of its return trips the mat caught under the after cross beam, which was instantly jerked out of its support, and, with the lengthwise timbers resting on it and the hatch covers, fell into the hold, severely injuring the libellant. The district court (referring to the petitioner, the Atlantic Transport Company, as the stevedore) said: "There would have been no accident had the entire hatch been uncovered. To uncover a hatch takes time and labor. If bad weather comes, it must be covered. Unnecessary uncovering is to be avoided. It is easy to make a partially covered hatch absolutely safe. The cross beams of the hatch have holes in their ends. There are corresponding holes in the hatch combings. Pins can be put through these holes. It takes about five minutes to put them in. When in place, an accident such as gave rise to this case cannot happen. The ship's carpenter of the Pretoria keeps the pins when not in use. Accidents often happen because an opened hatch has been left unguarded, or because the hatch coverings fall into the hold. When they do there is usually a dispute as to whether the ship or the stevedore is to blame. In the case at bar the ship and the stevedore were represented [58] by the same proctors and by the same advocates. The stevedore acquits the ship. . . . The stevedore proved that, when the ship came into port, it took complete charge of the hatches. It uncovered so much of them as it saw fit. If the pins were in and it wanted them cut, it took them out. It laid them on the deck. The ship's carpenter gathered them up. If the pins were out and it wanted them in, it told the ship's carpenter. He put them in." For its failure to use due diligence in seeing that the libellant had a safe place in which to work, the district court held the Transport Company liable.

Digitized by Google

The principal question is whether the district court had jurisdiction; that is, whether the cause was one "of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction." Const. Art. 3, § 2; Rev. Stat. § 563, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 455; Judicial Code, § 24 [36 Stat. at L. 1091, chap. 231, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp 1911, p. 135], act of Sept. 24, 1789, chap. 20, § 9, 1 Stat. at L. 73, 77. As the injury occurred on board a ship while it was lying in navigable waters, there is no doubt that the requirement as to locality was fully met. The petitioner insists, however, that locality is not the sole test, and that it must appear that the tort was otherwise of a maritime nature. And this was the view taken by the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit, in affirming a decree dismissing a libel for want of jurisdiction in a similar case. Campbell v. H. Hackfeld & Co. 62 C. C. A. 274, 125 Fed. 696.

At an early period the court of admiralty in England exercised jurisdiction "over torts, injuries, and offenses at ports within the ebb and flow of the tide, on the British seas and on the high seas." De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. 398, 406, 464, 474, Fed. Cas. No. 3,776. While its authority was denied when the injurious action took place infra corpus comitatus, it was not disputed that jurisdiction existed when the wrong was done "upon the sea, or any part thereof which is not within any county." 4 Co. Inst. 134. The jurisdiction in admiralty of the courts of the United States is not controlled by the restrictive statutes and judicial prohibitions [59] of England (Waring v. Clarke, 5 How. 441, 457, 458, 12 L. ed. 226, 234, 235; New England Mut. M. Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 11 Wall. 1, 24, 20 L. ed. 90, 97; The Lottawanna [Rodd v. Heartt] 21 Wall. 558, 576, 22 L. ed. 654, 662), and the limitation with respect to torts committed within the body of any county is not applicable here. Waring v. Clarke, supra; Jackson v. The Magnolia, 20 How. 296, 15 L. ed. 909. "In regard to torts," said Mr. Justice Story in Thomas v. Lane, 2 Sumn. 1, 9, Fed. Cas. No. 13,902, "I have always understood, that the jurisdiction of the admiralty is exclusively dependent upon the locality of the act. The admiralty has not, and never (I believe) deliberately claimed to have, any jurisdiction over torts, except such as are maritime torts, that is, such as are committed on the high seas, or on waters within the ebb and flow of the tide." This rule —that locality furnishes the test—has been frequently reiterated, with the substitution (under the doctrine of The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 12 How. 443, 13 L. ed. 1058) of navigable waters for tide waters. Thus, in the case of Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Philadelphia & H. de G. Steam Towboat Co. 23 How. 209, 215, 16 L. ed. 433, 435, the court said: "The jurisdiction of courts of admiralty, in matters of contract, depends upon the nature and character of the contract; but in torts, it depends entirely on locality." Again, in the case of The Plymouth (Hough v. Western Transp. Co.) 3 Wall. 20, 18 L. ed. 125, where jurisdiction was denied upon the ground that the substance and consummation of the wrong took place on land, and not on navigable water, the court said: "The jurisdiction of the admiralty over maritime torts does not depend upon the wrong having been committed on board the vessel, but upon its having been committed upon the high seas or other navigable waters. A trespass on board of a vessel, or by the vessel itself, above tidewater, when that was the limit of jurisdiction, was not of admiralty cognizance. The reason was, that it was not committed within the locality that gave the jurisdiction. The vessel itself was unimportant. . . . The jurisdiction of the admiralty does not depend upon the [60] fact that the injury was inflicted by the vessel, but upon the locality, —the high seas or navigable waters where it occurred. Every species of tort, however occurring, and whether on board a vessel or not, if upon the high seas or navigable waters, is of admiralty cognizance." See Manro v. Almeida, 10 Wheat. 473, 6 L. ed. 369; Waring v. Clarke, 5 How. 459, 12 L. ed. 235; New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 6 How. 344, 394, 12 L. ed. 465, 487; The Commerce (Commercial Transp. Co. v. Fitzhugh) 1 Black, 574, 579, 17 L. ed. 107, 109; Rock Island Bridge (Galena, D. D. & M. Packet Co. v. Rock Island Bridge Co.) 6 Wall. 213, 215, 18 L. ed. 753, 754; The Belfast, 7 Wall. 624, 637, 19 L. ed. 266, 269; Ex parte Easton, 95 U. S. 68, 72, 24 L. ed. 373, 374; Leathers v. Blessing, 105 U. S. 626, 630, 26 L. ed. 1192, 1194; Panama R. Co. v. Napier Shipping Co. 166 U. S. 280, 285, 41 L. ed. 1004, 1005, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 572; The Blackheath (United States v. Evans) 195 U. S. 361, 365, 367, 49 L. ed. 236-238, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 46; Cleveland Terminal & Valley R. Co. v. Cleveland S. S. Co. 208 U. S. 316, 319, 52 L. ed. 508, 511, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 414, 13 Ann. Cas. 1215; Martin v. West, 222 U. S. 191, 56 L. ed. 159, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 592, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 42; The Neil Cochran, Brown, Adm. 162, Fed. Cas. No. 10,087; The Ottawa, Brown, Adm. 356, Fed. Cas. No. 10,616; Holmes v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 6 Sawy. 262, 5 Fed. 75, 77; The Arkansas, 5 McCrary, 364, 17 Fed. 383, 384; The F. & P. M. 33 Fed. 511, 513; The H. S. Pickands, 42 Fed. 239, 240; Hermann v. Port Blakely Mill Co. 69 Fed. 646, 647; The Strabo, 90 Fed. 110; 2 Story, Const. § 1666. It is also apparent that Congress, in providing for the punishment of crimes committed upon navigable waters, has regarded the locality of the offense as the basis for the exercise of its authority. Act of April 30, 1790, chap. 9, § 8, 1 Stat. at L. 112, 113; act of March 3, 1825, chap. 65, 4 Stat. at L. 115; Rev. Stat. §§ 5339, 5345, 5346, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 3627, 3630, 3631; Criminal Code, § 272, 35 Stat. at L. 1088, 1142, chap. 321, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, pp. 1588, 1671; United States v. Bevans, 3 Wheat. 336, 387, 4 L. ed. 404, 416; United States v. Wiltberger, 5 Wheat. 76, 5 L. ed. 37; United States v. Rodgers, 150 U. S. 249, 260, 261, 285, 37 L. ed. 1071, 1075, 1076, 1084, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109; Wynne v. United States, 217 U. S. 234, 240, 54 L. ed. 748, 749, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 447.

Digitized by Google

But the petitioners urge that the general statements which we have cited, with respect to the exclusiveness of the test of locality in cases of tort, are not controlling; and that in every adjudicated case in this country in which the jurisdiction of admiralty with respect to torts has been sustained, the tort, apart from the mere place of its occurrence, [61] has been of a maritime character. It is asked whether admiralty would entertain a suit for libel or slander circulated on board a ship by one passenger against another. See Benedict, Admiralty, 4th ed. § 231. The appropriate basis, it is said, of all admiralty jurisdiction, whether in contract or in tort, is the maritime nature of the transaction or event; it is suggested that the wider authority exercised in very early times in England may be due to its antedating the recognition by the common-law courts of transitory causes of action, and thus arose by virtue of necessity.

We do not find it necessary to enter upon this broad inquiry. As this court has observed, the precise scope of admiralty jurisdiction is not a matter of "obvious principle or of very accurate history." The Blackheath (United States v. Evans) 195 U. S. 361, 365, 367, 49 L. ed. 236-238, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 46. And we are not now concerned with the extreme cases which are hypothetically presented. Even if it be assumed that the requirement as to locality in tort cases, while indispensable, is not necessarily exclusive, still in the present case the wrong which was the subject of the suit was, we think, of a maritime nature, and hence the district court, from any point of view, had jurisdiction. The petitioner contends that a maritime tort is one arising out of an injury to a ship, caused by the negligence of a ship or a person, or out of an injury to a person by the negligence of a ship; that there must either be an injury to a ship or an injury by the negligence of the ship, including therein the negligence of her owners or mariners; and that, as there was no negligence of the ship in the present case, the tort was not maritime. This view we deem to be altogether too narrow.

The libellant was injured on a ship, lying in navigable waters, and while he was engaged in the performance of a maritime service. We entertain no doubt that the service in loading and stowing a ship's cargo is of this character. Upon its proper performance depend in large measure the [62] safe carrying of the cargo and the safety of the ship itself; and it is a service absolutely necessary to enable the ship to discharge its maritime duty. Formerly the work was done by the ship's crew; but, owing to the exigencies of increasing commerce and the demand for rapidity and special skill, it has become a specialized service devolving upon a class "as clearly identified with maritime affairs as are the mariners." See The George T. Kemp, 2 Low. Dec. 482, Fed. Cas. No. 5,341; The Circassian, 1 Ben. 209, Fed. Cas. No. 2,722; Roberts v. The Windermere, 2 Fed. 722; The Canada, 7 Sawy. 173, 7 Fed. 119; The Hattie M. Bain, 20 Fed. 389; The Gilbert Knapp, 37 Fed. 209; The Main, 2 C. C. A. 569, 2 U. S. App. 349, 51 Fed. 954; Norwegian S. S. Co. v. Washington, 6 C. C. A. 313, 13 U. S. App. 459, 57 Fed. 224; The Seguranca, 58 Fed. 908; The Allerton, 93 Fed. 219; Hughes, Admiralty, 113; Benedict, Admiralty, 4th ed. § 207. The libellant was injured because the care required by the law was not taken to protect him while he was doing this work. We take it to be clear that the district court, sitting in admiralty, was entitled to declare the applicable law in such a case, as it was within the power of Congress to modify that law. Waring v. Clarke, 5 How. 459, 12 L. ed. 235; The Lottawana (Rodd v. Heartt) 21 Wall. 558, 576, 22 L. ed. 654, 662. The fact that the ship was not found to be liable for the neglect is not controlling. If more is required than the locality of the wrong in order to give the court jurisdiction, the relation of the wrong to maritime service, to navigation, and to commerce on navigable waters, was quite sufficient. Even with respect to contracts where subject-matter is the exclusive test, it has been said that the true criterion is "whether it was a maritime contract, having reference to maritime service or maritime transactions." New England Mut. M. Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 11 Wall. 1, 26, 20 L. ed. 90, 97. The Constitution provides that the judicial power shall extend "to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction," and the act of Congress defines the jurisdiction of the district court, with respect to civil causes, in terms of like scope. To hold that a case of a tort committed on board a ship [63] in navigable waters, by one who has undertaken a maritime service, against one engaged in the performance of that service, is not embraced within the constitutional grant and the jurisdictional act, would be to establish a limitation wholly without warrant.

Digitized by Google

The remaining question relates to the finding of negligence. It is urged that the neglect was that of a fellow servant, and hence that the petitioner was not liable. Both courts below, however, concurred in the finding that the petitioner omitted to use proper diligence to provide a safe place of work. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 386, 37 L. ed. 772, 780, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914. As the question belongs to a class which, under the distribution of judicial power, is determinable by the circuit court of appeals in last resort, we shall not undertake to discuss it at length or to restate the evidence. Chicago Junction R. Co. v. King, 222 U. S. 222, 224, 56 L. ed. 173, 174, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 79; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Brown, 229 U. S. 317, 320, 57 L. ed. 1204, 1205, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840, 3 N. C. C. A. 826; Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. Lindsay, 233 U. S. 42, 50, ante, 838, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581. It is sufficient to say that we are satisfied, from an examination of the record, that the ruling was justified.

Affirmed.

ATLANTIC TRANSPORT COMPANY OF WEST VIRGINIA, Petitioner,

v.

STATE OF MARYLAND TO THE USE OF MARY SZCZESEK, Widow of Martin Szczesek.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 63, 64.)

This case is governed by the decision in Atlantic Transport Company v. Imbrovek, ante, 1208.

[No. 216]

Argued January 29 and 30, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

ON WRIT of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit to review a decree which affirmed a decree of the District Court for the District of Maryland in favor of the libellant in a suit to recover for personal injuries received in loading and stowing a ship's cargo. Affirmed.

See same case below, 113 C. C. A. 408, 193 Fed. 1019.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Edward Duffy argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Ralph Robinson and Nicholas P. Bond, filed a brief for petitioner.

Messrs. W. H. Price, Jr., and John E. Semmes, Jr., argued the cause, and, with Messrs. John E. Semmes, Jesse N. Bowen, and Matthew Gault, filed a brief for respondent.

For contentions of counsel, see their briefs as reported in Atlantic Transport Co. v. Imbrovek, 234 U. S. 52, ante, 1208, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 733.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Justice Hughes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a libel filed on behalf of the widow and infant children of Martin Szczesek to recover damages for injuries resulting in his death. Szczesek was a stevedore in the employ of the Atlantic Transport Company, the petitioner, and was engaged in loading the ship Pretoria. The district court allowed a recovery against the petitioner (190 Fed. 240), which the circuit court of appeals affirmed. 113 C. C. A. 408, 193 Fed. 1019.

The questions presented are the same as those which were considered in Atlantic Transport Co. v. Imbrovek, decided this day [234 U. S. 52, ante, 1208, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 733], and, for the reasons stated in the opinion in that case, the decree is affirmed.

Affirmed.

SCHMIDT & STORY, Franz Schmidt, Charles M. Story, Charles M. Crossman, et al., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

BANK OF COMMERCE.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 64–70.)

Error to territorial supreme court — following decision below — pleading and practice.

1. The rulings of a territorial supreme court on questions of pleading and practice will ordinarily be accepted by the Federal Supreme Court.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VIII. m, 1; Courts, VII. d, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Bills and notes — defenses — fraud — renewals.

2. Makers of promissory notes whose signatures thereto were obtained by the fraudulent representations of the payee may defend on that ground a suit brought by such payee, although they were liable upon prior notes for the same amount, which were renewed by the notes in suit,—especially where there were additional makers and in effect new cosureties on the new notes.

[For other cases, see Bills and Notes, VII. b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Bills and notes — defenses — fraud — comakers.

3. The payee's fraud in obtaining the signatures of some of the makers of the promissory notes in suit is available to other makers as a defense under N. M. Laws 1907, chap. 83, § 55, providing that "the title of a person who negotiates an instrument is defective within the meaning of this act when he obtained the instrument or any signature thereto by fraud, duress, or force and fear, or other unlawful means, for an illegal consideration, or when he negotiates it in breach of faith, or under such circumstances as amount to a fraud."

[For other cases, see Bills and Notes, VII. b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Bills and notes — defenses — fraud — comakers.

4. The defense that the signatures of several comakers of the promissory notes in suit were obtained by means of fraudulent representations by the payee is no less available to other makers because they signed the notes several days before they were signed by the makers upon whom the fraud was practised, where the payee's position, sustained by the court, is that the defense under N. M. Laws 1907, chap. 83, § 125, that the notes were altered by the addition of the other signatures, is not available under the pleadings and cannot be considered.

[For other cases, see Bills and Notes, VII. b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 281.]

Argued March 19, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the Territory of New Mexico to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the District Court of the County of Socorro, in that territory, entered upon a verdict directed in favor of the payee of certain promissory notes, as against all the makers except one, as to whom the payee was permitted to take a nonsuit. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

See same case below, 16 N. M. 414, 120 Pac. 670.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Francis E. Wood argued the cause, and, with Mr. O. N. Marron, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

Plaintiffs in error were sureties to the bank on the notes for the principal debt of Broyles, and any change in their contract, or the slightest fraud in procuring their signatures thereto, released them.

Smith v. Sheldon, 35 Mich. 42, 24 Am. Rep. 533; Putney v. Schmidt, 16 N. M. 400, 120 Pac. 720; Magee v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. 92 U. S. 93, 23 L. ed. 679; Griswold v. Hazard, 141 U. S. 260, 35 L. ed. 678, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 972, 999; Davies v. London & P. M. Ins. Co. L. R. 8 Ch. Div. 469, 47 L. J. Ch. N. S. 511, 38 L. T. N. S. 478, 26 Week. Rep. 794; McMicken v. Webb, 6 How. 292, 12 L. ed. 443; Martin v. Thomas, 24 How. 315, 16 L. ed. 689; United States v. Freel, 186 U. S. 309, 316, 46 L. ed. 1177, 1181, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 875; Page v. Krekey, 137 N. Y. 307, 21 L.R.A. 409, 33 Am. St. Rep. 731, 33 N. E. 311; Dan. Neg. Inst. 4th ed. § 1309.

The lower courts erred in ruling that the fraud and alteration in the notes were not

NOTE.—As to review by the United States Supreme Court of territorial decisions—see note to Miners' Bank v. Iowa, 13 L. ed. U. S. 867.

Digitized by Google

available to the defendants because they failed to show themselves injured thereby.

14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 137, 140, 141; Harlow v. La Brum, 151 N. Y. 278, 45 N. E. 859; Williams v. Kerr, 152 Pa. 565, 25 Atl. 618; Stewart v. Lester, 49 Hun, 63, 1 N. Y. Supp. 699; MacLaren v. Cochran, 44 Minn. 255, 46 N. W. 408; Sonnesyn v. Akin, 14 N. D. 248, 104 N. W. 1026; Brett v. Cooney, 75 Conn. 338, 33 Atl. 729; United States v. The Amistad, 15 Pet. 518, 10 L. ed. 826; Rogers v. Hadley, 32 L. J. Exch. N. S. 248, 2 Hurlst. & C. 227, 9 Jur. N. S. 898, 9 L. T. N. S. 292, 11 Week. Rep. 1074; Dan. Neg. Inst. 4th ed. § 177; Joyce, Defenses to Commercial Paper, § 116.

It was error to refuse to submit to the jury the question as to whether the signature of Lewis was not obtained by fraud.

Hodge v. Smith, 130 Wis. 326, 110 N. W. 192; Aukland v. Arnold, 131 Wis. 64, 111 N. W. 212.

Mr. Harry M. Dougherty argued the cause, and, with Mr. James G. Fitch, filed a brief for defendant in error:

Had all the allegations of fraud been properly pleaded and been permissible under the issues, still the facts in this case are such that the defendant in error would have been entitled to a peremptory instruction.

Mersman v. Werges, 112 U. S. 142, 28 L. ed. 642, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 65; Ming v. Woolfolk, 116 U. S. 599, 29 L. ed. 740, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 489; Marshall v. Hubbard, 117 U. S. 416, 29 L. ed. 919, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 806; Stratton's Independence v. Dines, 126 Fed. 978; 20 Cyc. 42; First Nat. Bank v. Maxfield, 83 Me. 576, 22 Atl. 479; Parker v. Jewett, 52 Minn. 514, 55 N. W. 56.

Mr. Justice Hughes delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought by the Bank of Commerce in the district court for Socorro county in the territory of New Mexico to recover upon two promissory notes. The plaintiff bank was the payee and the defendants Broyles, Schmidt & Story, Crossman, Brown, Pratt (alias Anderson), Lewis, and Evans, were the makers. Broyles defaulted; [66] the other defendants answered, alleging in substance that they had signed the notes for Broyles's accommodation, and had been induced to sign by the fraudulent representations of the bank. Upon the trial, the motion of the plaintiff for a direction of a verdict was granted as against all the defendants except Lewis, and as to him the plaintiff was permitted to take a nonsuit. The judgment on the verdict was affirmed by the supreme court of the territory. 16 N. M. 414, 120 Pac. 670.

Several questions of pleading and practice are presented, but, in view of their local character, we accept, as to these, the rulings of the territorial court. Phœnix L. Co. v. Landis, 231 U. S. 578, ante, 377, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 179; Work v. United Globe Mines, 231 U. S. 595, ante, 389, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 274; Santa Fé C. R. Co. v. Friday, 232 U. S. 694, ante, 802, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468. We shall therefore assume that the complaint was sufficient; and that the defenses of alteration, the unauthorized filling of blanks, and the failure to credit certain payments, were not available because not suitably pleaded. The supreme court of the territory also held that although both parties had requested peremptory instructions, the defendants were entitled, upon the denial of their motion, to ask that the case be submitted to the jury, and that this request was properly made. See Empire State Cattle Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 210 U. S. 1, 52 L. ed. 931, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 607, 15 Ann. Cas. 70.

The question before us, then, is whether, in view of the state of the evidence upon the defense that the notes were procured by fraud, the trial court erred in directing a verdict for the plaintiff. It is apparent that there was evidence sufficient to go to the jury that the signatures of some of the defendants had been obtained by means of fraudulent representations. Upon this point, the supreme court of the territory said: "The defense, as we have seen, was principally that the signing of the notes was procured by fraud. There was undoubtedly evidence that the defendants Anderson" (impleaded as Pratt), "Evans, Brown, and Lewis were told by plaintiff's representative [67] prior to signing the notes that Broyles was solvent, and were further told that plaintiff had ample collateral for the notes, and there was also evidence from which the jury might have concluded that the defendants signed the notes in reliance upon these representations. We find also upon the record room for a conclusion by the jury, that these statements were untrue, and that they were known when made to be untrue. Indeed, the trial court recognized this, for as to Lewis, in whose favor the testimony on this point was no stronger than on behalf of Anderson, Evans, and Brown, the court held that the matter was one for the jury." Notwithstanding this estimate of the evidence, the court sustained the recovery against the last-named defendants, holding that, as they were liable upon former notes for the same amount, which were renewed by the notes in suit, the defense was not available. It was said that, even assuming the notes in suit to have been given "as the result of a wilful misrepresentation," the defendants, being bound by the former notes, were "held to no greater duty than previously rested upon them," and hence could not defend upon the ground that they were induced to sign the notes by fraudulent representations.

Digitized by Google

We are unable to agree with this conclusion. The question was not one of a recovery of damages in deceit. Ming v. Woolfolk, 116 U. S. 599, 602, 603, 29 L. ed. 740, 741, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 489. If there was fraud, it vitiated the transaction, and the plaintiff could not avail itself of its own wrong by enforcing the notes. The fact that the three defendants, Anderson, Evans, and Brown, were liable on the former notes, did not place them under any legal obligation whatever to make the notes in suit. It appeared that the former notes were signed by Broyles, Anderson, Evans, and Brown; the last three being in effect sureties for Broyles; and as the court states, "upon the giving of the present notes, these former notes were surrendered by plaintiff bank and destroyed." On the new notes Lewis, Schmidt & Story, and Crossman were additional [68] makers and in effect new cosureties. Not only was there new paper, but the legal position of Anderson, Evans, and Brown was materially changed. Broyles was discharged from liability on the old notes, and, with respect to the new, there were six (treating the firm of Schmidt & Story as one) in the position of cosureties instead of three. No one of the three defendants in question who were parties to the original paper could pay it and hold the other two to their original measure of contribution. The new notes constituted new promises with distinct legal consequences. It is clear that the plaintiff could not enforce them if they were fraudulently induced.

There was no evidence of fraudulent representations to the defendants Schmidt & Story and Crossman, but they contend that they are not bound if their comakers were relieved from liability by reason of the plaintiff's fraud. Reference is made to § 55 of the negotiable instruments act, Laws of 1907 (N. M.) chap. 83, which provides: "The title of a person who negotiates an instrument is defective within the meaning of this act when he obtained the instrument or any signature thereto, by fraud, duress, or force and fear, or other unlawful means, for an illegal consideration, or when he negotiates it in breach of faith, or under such circumstances as amount to a fraud." It has been held by the supreme court of Wisconsin, in construing the same language in the Wisconsin act, that if one of the signatures of several comakers is obtained by fraud, the defense is also available to the other makers, since the equality of burden is disturbed. Hodge v. Smith, 130 Wis. 326, 110 N. W. 192; Aukland v. Arnold, 131 Wis. 64, 66, 67, 111 N. W. 212. In the case last cited the court said, referring to Hodge v. Smith, supra: "It was there held that the title of a person who negotiates commercial paper is defective when he has obtained any signature thereto by fraud, and that if the party so defrauded be relieved from liability thereon, then such fraud makes such paper voidable [69] by all the other persons who signed it, though they did not participate in and were ignorant of such fraudulent conduct at the time they signed it. This conclusion was reached upon the ground that, when several persons assume such an obligation, it is material and important that all who join as makers should share equally in bearing the burden of its payment, and if, through the fraud of the person holding it, such equality of burden is disturbed and the burden increased as to some of the persons signing it, such fraud renders the title defective as to all of the persons who signed it." While this construction of the statute was apparently accepted, it was held that the defense was not open to Schmidt & Story and Crossman for the reason that they signed the notes several days before the signatures of the other defendants upon whom the fraud was practised were obtained, and that there was no evidence in the record "as to whether the defendants Schmidt, Story, and Crossman, or any of them, had any knowledge that there were to be any other signers than themselves." Accordingly, it was said that, so far as the record showed, the notes were "complete and binding obligations" upon these defendants at the time they executed the same, and that fraud in obtaining the signatures of the subsequent cosigners would not affect the equality of the burden they had assumed.

This, as it seems to us, is not an adequate answer to the defendants' contention. It is true that these defendants have endeavored to maintain that the notes were altered by the addition of the other signatures, relying upon negotiable instruments law, § 125. See Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1387. But the supreme court of the territory ruled that under the pleadings this defense was not available and could not be considered. The plaintiff could not maintain this position and at the same time defeat the defense of fraud upon the ground that the notes were complete instruments, and as such had become the binding [70] obligations of these defendants before the others signed. Taking the notes as they stood upon the pleadings and proof, we think that these defendants (Schmidt & Story and Crossman) must be regarded as comakers with the other defendants, to whom the representations are said to have been made, and it follows that if any of the signatures of these comakers were obtained by fraud, the equality of burden was altered. The plaintiff's fraud, assuming it to have been committed, changed the legal effect of the promise of these defendants. For these reasons we think that they were entitled to have the evidence as to fraudulent representation submitted to the jury, and that the direction of the verdict in favor of the plaintiff was error.

Digitized by Google

The judgment is reversed and the case is remanded to the Supreme Court of the State of New Mexico for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

EX PARTE ROE.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 70-73.)

Mandamus — to review judicial action —remand of cause to state court.

The refusal of a Federal district judge to remand to the state court whence it had been removed a suit against a Federal corporation involving the requisite jurisdictional amount, and therefore removable, unless made otherwise by the fact that it also arose under the employers' liability act of April 22, 1908 (35 Stat. at L. 65, chap. 149, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1322), as amended by the act of April 5, 1910 (36 Stat. at L. 291, chap. 143, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1324), cannot be reviewed by mandamus, since such ruling would be subject to appellate review after final judgment.

[For other cases, see Mandamus, 61-66, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 13, Original.]

Argued April 6, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

PETITION for Writ of Mandamus to the judge of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Texas, to compel the remand of a cause to the state court whence it had been removed. Rule discharged. Petition dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. S. P. Jones argued the cause and filed a brief for petitioner.

Mr. F. H. Prendergast argued the cause and filed a brief for respondent:

A mandamus will not issue from the Supreme Court to compel the district judge to remand a cause to the state court, when the judge has heard the motion to remand and denied it, because the action of the court on the motion to remand involved the exercise of judicial discretion.

Ex parte Harding, 219 U. S. 363, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 392, 55 L. ed. 252, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 324.

Mr. Joseph W. Bailey also argued the cause for respondent.

Mr. Justice Van Devanter delivered the opinion of the court:

By an action begun in a state court in Harrison county, Texas, W. L. Roe sought to recover from the Texas & Pacific Railway Company, a Federal corporation, $30,000 as damages for personal injuries sustained through its negligence while he was in its employ as a brakeman, and while both were engaged in interstate commerce. In due time and in the accustomed way, the case was removed into the district court of the United States for that district upon the sole ground that it was one arising under a law of the United States, in that the defendant was chartered by an act of Congress. The plaintiff then moved that the case be remanded upon the ground that it also arose under the Federal employers' liability act (35 Stat. at L. 65, chap. 149, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1322; 36 Stat. at L. 291, chap. 143, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1324), and therefore was not removable. After a hearing, the motion was denied, for reasons assigned in the second branch of the opinion in Van Brimmer v. Texas & P. R. Co. 190 Fed. 394, 397. The plaintiff then petitioned this court for a writ of mandamus commanding [72] the judge of the district court to remand the case. A rule to show cause was granted, and the respondent answered that the motion to remand had been denied because, upon consideration, he believed the case was lawfully removed.

As the case arose under a law of the United States, namely, the defendant's Federal charter (see Pacific R. Removal Cases, 115 U. S. 1, 29 L. ed. 319, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1113; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cody, 166 U. S. 606, 41 L. ed. 1132, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 703, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 763), and the requisite amount was in controversy, it is conceded that it was removable unless made otherwise by the fact that it also arose under the Federal employers' liability act. In the 6th section, as amended in 1910, that act declares: "The jurisdiction of the courts of the United States under this act shall be concurrent with that of the courts of the several states, and no case arising under this act, and brought in any state court of competent jurisdiction, shall be removed to any court of the United States." A like restriction upon removals appears in § 28 of the Judicial Code [36 Stat. at L. 1094, chap. 231, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. p. 140].

---

NOTE.—On mandamus to compel removal of case to Federal court, or the remanding of case to state court—see note to Re Harding, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 392.

Digitized by Google

The question presented to the district court by the motion to remand was whether these provisions were intended to forbid a removal in every case falling within the employers' liability act, regardless of the presence of some independent ground of removal, as in this instance, or only to declare that the fact that a case arises under that act shall not be a ground of removal. Regarding the latter of these alternatives as sustained by the better reasoning, the court denied the motion; and upon this petition for mandamus we are asked to review that ruling, pronounce it erroneous, and direct the respondent to retract it and remand the case.

Whether the ruling was right or wrong, it was a judicial act, done in the exercise of a jurisdiction conferred by law, and, even if erroneous, was not void or open to collateral attack, but only subject to correction in an appropriate appellate proceeding. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. [73] McCabe, 213 U. S. 207, 53 L. ed. 765, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 430; Re Metropolitan Trust Co. 218 U. S. 312, 54 L. ed. 1051, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18. Like any other ruling in the progress of the case, it will be regularly subject to appellate review after final judgment, and the authorized mode of obtaining such a review, the action being at law, is by a writ of error. Judicial Code, §§ 128, 238; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 160 U. S. 556, 582, 40 L. ed. 536, 542, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389.

The accustomed office of a writ of mandamus, when directed to a judicial officer, is to compel an exercise of existing jurisdiction, but not to control his decision. It does not lie to compel a reversal of a decision, either interlocutory or final, made in the exercise of a lawful jurisdiction, especially where in regular course the decision may be reviewed upon a writ of error or an appeal. Bank of Columbia v. Sweeney, 1 Pet. 567, 7 L. ed. 265; Life & Fire Ins. Co. v. Adams, 9 Pet. 571, 602, 9 L. ed. 233, 244; Ex parte Taylor, 14 How. 3, 13, 14 L. ed. 302, 306; Ex parte Many, 14 How. 24, 14 L. ed. 311; Ex parte Newman, 14 Wall. 152, 169, 20 L. ed. 877, 888; Ex parte Sawyer, 21 Wall. 235, 22 L. ed. 617; Ex parte Flippin, 94 U. S. 348, 24 L. ed. 194; Ex parte Loring, 94 U. S. 418, 24 L. ed. 165; Ex parte Des Moines & M. R. Co. 103 U. S. 794, 26 L. ed. 461; Ex parte Baltimore & O. R. Co. 108 U. S. 566, 27 L. ed. 812, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876; American Constr. Co. v. Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. 148 U. S. 372, 379, 37 L. ed. 486, 489, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 758; Re Atlantic City R. Co. 164 U. S. 633, 41 L. ed. 579, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208; Re Oklahoma, 220 U. S. 191, 209, 55 L. ed. 431, 435, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426; Ex parte First Nat. Bank, 228 U. S. 516, 57 L. ed. 946, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 591. And this is true of a decision denying a motion to remand. Ex parte Hoard, 105 U. S. 578, 26 L. ed. 1176; Re Pollitz, 206 U. S. 623, 51 L. ed. 1081, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729; Ex parte Nebraska, 209 U. S. 436, 52 L. ed 876, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; Ex parte Gruetter, 217 U. S. 586, 54 L. ed. 892, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 690; Ex parte Harding, 219 U. S. 363, 55 L. ed. 252, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 392, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 324. In the last case the subject was extensively considered and it was held that the writ of mandamus may not be used to correct alleged error in a refusal to remand where, after final judgment, the order may be reviewed upon a writ of error or an appeal. To that view we adhere, and therefore we are not here at liberty to consider the merits of the question involved in the District Court's ruling.

Rule discharged; petition dismissed.

---

[74] SIMON TAYLOR et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.
JOE ANDERSON et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 74–76.)

Pleading — jurisdictional averments — raising Federal question by anticipating defense.

Allegations in the petition in an action of ejectment that defendants were asserting ownership in themselves under a certain deed, and that such deed was void under congressional legislation restricting the alienation of lands allotted to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, do not present a case arising under the laws of the United States of which a Federal circuit court has jurisdiction without diversity of citizenship.

[For other cases, see Pleading, 337–349; Courts, 506–508, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 338.]

Submitted April 30, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Oklahoma to review a judgment dismissing, for want of jurisdiction, the petition in an action in ejectment. Affirmed.

See same case below on demurrer, 197 Fed. 383.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Napoleon B. Maxey submitted the cause for plaintiffs in error:

The petition in this case states more than is necessary, but plaintiff was only trying to meet the suggestions of the trial court, and those statements may be treated as surplusage; and we most earnestly contend that, when stripped of all unnecessary allegations, there is still a Federal question stated.

Digitized by Google

Northern P. R. Co. v. Soderberg, 188 U. S. 526, 47 L. ed. 575, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 365; Doolan v. Carr, 125 U. S. 618, 31 L. ed. 844, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1228; Macon Grocery Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 215 U. S. 501, 54 L. ed. 300, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 184.

Mr. H. A. Ledbetter submitted the cause for defendants in error:

A plaintiff whose statement of his own claim does not disclose a Federal question cannot create jurisdiction in a circuit court by anticipating the defendants' claim, and by alleging that the defendants will set up a defense under some law of the United States.

Tennessee v. Union & Planters' Bank, 152 U. S. 454, 460, 38 L. ed. 511, 513, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654; Central R. Co. v. Mills, 113 U. S. 249, 28 L. ed. 949, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 456; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 66, 44 L. ed. 673, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 545; Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. v. Skottowe, 162 U. S. 490, 40 L. ed. 1048, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 869; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Texas, 170 U. S. 226, 42 L. ed. 1017, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 603; Joy v. St. Louis, 201 U. S. 332, 50 L. ed. 776, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478; Cook County v. Calumet & C. Canal & Dock Co. 138 U. S. 635, 34 L. ed. 1110, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 435; Telluride Power Transmission Co. v. Rio Grande Western R. Co. 175 U. S. 639, 44 L. ed. 305, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 245; Little York Gold-Washing & Water Co. v. Keyes, 96 U. S. 199, 24 L. ed. 656; Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. Bell, 176 U. S. 321, 44 L. ed. 486, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399; Shulthis v. McDougal, 225 U. S. 561, 56 L. ed. 1205, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 704; Filhiol v. Maurice, 185 U. S. 108, 46 L. ed. 827, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 560.

Mr. Justice Van Devanter delivered the opinion of the court:

The judgment here under review is one of dismissal for want of jurisdiction. The action was in ejectment. The petition alleged that the plaintiffs were owners in fee and entitled to the possession; that the defendants had forcibly taken possession and were wrongfully keeping the plaintiffs out of possession, and that the latter were damaged thereby in a sum named. Nothing more was required to state a good cause of action. Snyder's Comp. Laws (Okla.) §§ 5627, 6122; Joy v. St. Louis, 201 U. S. 332, 340, 50 L. ed. 776, 780, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478. But the petition, going beyond what was required, alleged [75] with much detail that the defendants were asserting ownership in themselves under a certain deed, and that it was void under the legislation of Congress restricting the alienation of lands allotted to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians. However essential or appropriate these allegations might have been in a bill in equity to cancel or annul the deed, they were neither essential nor appropriate in a petition in ejectment. Apparently, their purpose was to anticipate and avoid a defense which it was supposed the defendants would interpose; but, of course, it rested with the defendants to select their ground of defense, and it well might be that this one would not be interposed. In the orderly course, the plaintiffs were required to state their own case in the first instance, and then to deal with the defendants' after it should be disclosed in the answer. Snyder's Comp. Laws, §§ 5634, 5642, 5668; Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. 188 U. S. 632, 639, 47 L. ed. 626, 631, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 434. Diversity of citizenship was not alleged, and, unless the allegations respecting the invalidity, under the legislation of Congress, of the defensive claim attributed to the defendants, operated to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the circuit court, the judgment of dismissal was plainly right.

It is now contended that these allegations showed that the case was one arising under the laws of the United States,—namely, the acts restricting the alienation of Choctaw and Chickasaw allotments,—and therefore brought it within the circuit court's jurisdiction. But the contention overlooks repeated decisions of this court by which it has become firmly settled that whether a case is one arising under the Constitution or a law or treaty of the United States, in the sense of the jurisdictional statute (now § 24, Judicial Code [36 Stat. at L. 1091, chap. 231, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 135]), must be determined from what necessarily appears in the plaintiff's statement of his own claim in the bill or declaration, unaided by anything alleged in anticipation or avoidance of defenses which [76] it is thought the defendant may interpose. Tennessee v. Union & Planters' Bank, 152 U. S. 454, 460, 464, 38 L. ed. 511, 513, 515, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654; Third Street & Suburban R. Co. v. Lewis, 173 U. S. 457, 460, 43 L. ed. 766, 767, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 451; Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. Bell, 176 U. S. 321, 329, 44 L. ed. 486, 490, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399; Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. and Joy v. St. Louis, supra; Devine v. Los Angeles, 202 U. S. 313, 333, 50 L. ed. 1046, 1053, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mottley, 211 U. S. 149, 53 L. ed. 126, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 42; Shulthis v. McDougal, 225 U. S. 561, 569, 56 L. ed. 1205, 1210, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 704; Denver v. New York Trust Co. 229 U. S. 123, 133-135, 57 L. ed. 1101, 1120, 1121, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651. Tested by this standard, as it must be, the case disclosed by the petition was not one arising under a law of the United States.

Digitized by Google

Whether or not in other respects the plaintiffs overlooked an authorized mode of securing relief to which they may be entitled need not now be considered. See 35 Stat. at L. 312, 314, chap. 199, § 6; Bowling v. United States, decided May 4, 1914 [233 U. S. 528, ante, 1080, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 659], and cases cited.

Judgment affirmed.

WASHINGTON SECURITIES COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 76–80.)

Appeal — review of facts — concurrent findings.

1. Findings of fact in a suit to cancel patents for public land as fraudulently procured will not be disturbed by the Federal Supreme Court unless shown to be clearly erroneous.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 4931–4959, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Evidence — sufficiency — knowledge of fraud in homestead entry.

2. A finding that a corporation purchasing from the patentees under the homestead laws took title with notice or knowledge that such patents were fraudulently procured by falsely representing to the land officers that the lands were agricultural in character, and not known to be valuable coal lands, is supported by evidence that the vice president of such corporation, who represented it in the negotiations, had theretofore as the agent of another company, learned that the latter was interested in coal development work on such lands, and was, with others, bearing the expense of that work with a view to acquiring the lands as coal lands; that this was recalled to his mind at the time of the negotiations; that he caused the land to be examined by an engineer, who found and reported the existence of a tunnel and other openings disclosing the coal; and that, following that report, the transaction was consummated on the theory that the lands were valuable for their coal contents, there being no claim that there was any development work or coal discovery after the entries were made, and both tunnel and openings giving visible evidence that they were not recently made.

[For other cases, see Evidence, XII. f, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Courts — conclusiveness of decision of Land Department — fraud.

3. The finding of the land officers, in proceedings resulting in the issuance of patents upon commuted homestead entries, that such lands were agricultural and not coal lands, although not open to collateral attack, is not conclusive against the government when it sues to cancel the resulting patents upon the ground that they were fraudulently procured by false representations as to the character of the lands.

[For other cases, see Courts, 260a–267a, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 367.]

Argued May 7 and 8, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

APPEAL from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit to review a decree which affirmed a decree of the Circuit Court of the Western District of Washington, Northern Division, canceling certain homestead patents. Affirmed.

See same case below, 114 C. C. A. 79, 194 Fed. 59.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. H. R. Clise argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Charles Kennedy Poe and Charles Poe, filed a brief for appellant:

Where the findings of the lower courts are based wholly upon flimsy or insufficient testimony, or are unsupported by any substantial testimony whatever, they will be set aside.

Beyer v. Le Fevre, 186 U. S. 114–119, 46 L. ed. 1080–1082, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 765.

This rule applies to the government as well as to an individual; and its application is doubly essential in a case of this character, where the very gravamen of the suit is fraud, and its object the cancelation of a patent.

United States v. Stinson, 197 U. S. 200, 49 L. ed. 724, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426.

As fraud is never presumed, it is incumbent upon the government to establish it by clear, unequivocal, and convincing testimony.

United States v. Mills, 169 Fed. 686; United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co. 124 Fed. 393, 200 U. S. 321, 50 L. ed. 499, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 282; United States v. Clark, 200 U. S. 601, 50 L. ed. 613, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340.

Knowledge acquired by an agent, outside the scope of his employment, is not imputable to the principal.

Houseman v. Girard Mut. Bldg. & Loan Asso. 81 Pa. 256; Story, Agency, § 140; Davis Improved Wrought Iron Wagon Wheel Co. v. Davis Wrought Iron Wagon Co. 22 Blatchf. 221, 20 Fed. 699; Brennan v. Emery-Bird-Thayer Dry Goods Co. 99 Fed. 971.

In Distilled Spirits (Harrington v. United States) 11 Wall. 356, 20 L. ed. 167, the question of how far a purchaser is affected by notice of prior liens, trusts, or frauds, by the knowledge of his agent who effects the purchase, was directly before this court, and the doctrine of imputed knowledge discussed at length. The court carefully reviewed the authorities and concluded:

Digitized by Google

(1) That the presumption of knowledge depends upon the lapse of time between the purchase and the time when the knowledge was acquired by the agent.

(2) That the principal was not bound by such knowledge unless present to the agent's mind at the time of the purchase.

(3) That there must be clear and satisfactory proof that it was so present, and that, if the agent acquired the knowledge at the time he effected the purchase, no question can be raised as to his having it at the time.

It certainly cannot be presumed as a matter of law that Mr. Smith recalled the meager circumstances connected with this land, which the record shows to have occurred nearly sixteen years ago, and it is only reasonable to assume that he forgot them, or, at least, that they were not so clearly present to his mind as to charge the appellant with them by invoking the doctrine of imputed knowledge. This seems especially true, in view of his direct denial.

United States v. Clark, 200 U. S. 601, 50 L. ed. 613, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340.

The cancelation of an executed contract is an exercise of the most extraordinary power of a court of equity, and one which should never be used for an alleged fraud unless it is established by clear, unequivocal, and convincing testimony. It cannot be done upon a bare preponderance of evidence; and fraud is never presumed, but the burden of producing proof, and of establishing it, is upon the government, from which it is not relieved, although the proposition to be established is of a negative nature.

United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co. 124 Fed. 393, affirmed in 200 U. S. 321. 50 L. ed. 499, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 282; United States v. Mills, 169 Fed. 686; Maxwell Land-Grant Case (United States v. Maxwell Land-Grant Co.) 121 U. S. 325, 381, 30 L. ed. 949, 959, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1015; United States v. Iron Silver Min. Co. 128 U. S. 673, 674, 32 L. ed. 571, 572, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195; Colorado Coal & I. Co. v. United States, 123 U. S. 307, 31 L. ed. 182, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; United States v. Stinson, 197 U. S. 200, 204, 49 L. ed. 724, 725, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426; United States v. Clark, 200 U. S. 601, 50 L. ed. 613, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340; United States v. Marshall Silver Min. Co. 129 U. S. 579, 32 L. ed. 734, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 343, 16 Mor. Min. Rep. 205; United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 25 L. ed. 93; United States v. San Jacinto Tin Co. 125 U. S. 273, 31 L. ed. 747, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 850; Beyer v. Le Fevre, 186 U. S. 114, 46 L. ed. 1080, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 765.

There is unquestionably testimony, and a good deal of it of a hearsay character, which tends to show that the property was known as mineral land; but this does not satisfy the statutes of the United States, or the decisions of this court, construing them, as the land must be known to be mineral-ly valuable as required by law at the date of the patent. And none of the witnesses testified that there were any known mines upon the land, or anything more than a mere prospect, which might or might not prove valuable.

Colorado Coal & I. Co. v. United States, 123 U. S. 307, 327, 328, 31 L. ed. 182, 190, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; United States v. Central P. R. Co. 93 Fed. 871; Deffeback v. Hawke, 115 U. S. 392, 404, 405, 29 L. ed. 423, 426, 427, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 95; Davis v. Wiebbold, 139 U. S. 507, 521, 524, 35 L. ed. 238, 243, 244, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628; Dower v. Richards, 151 U. S. 658, 663, 38 L. ed. 305, 307, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 452, 17 Mor. Min. Rep. 704.

There must be knowledge, and not mere belief, of the mineral character of the land.

Iron Silver Min. Co. v. Reynolds, 124 U. S. 374, 383, 384, 31 L. ed. 466, 470, 471, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 598.

The rule is less liberal in favor of the mineral character of land where the contest is between an agricultural claimant and a mineral claimant than where it is between two mineral claimants.

Chrisman v. Miller, 197 U. S. 313, 323, 49 L. ed. 770, 774, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468.

The law constantly presumes that public officers charged with the performance of official duty have not neglected the same.

Hays v. Hill, 23 Wash. 740, 63 Pac. 576; United States v. Clark, 200 U. S. 601, 50 L. ed. 613, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340.

We do not understand that it is the practice of this court, in the exercise of its great appellate jurisdiction, to go out of its way to decide facts properly for the consideration of another branch of the government, or to vacate patents upon such miscroscopic equities as are presented here.

Ross v. Day, 232 U. S. 110, ante, 528, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 233.

Where the proceedings are wholly ex parte, and the governor compelled to rely on the evidence of the party charged with fraud, the Department's finding of a particular fact or circumstance is not binding or conclusive. On the other hand, where there is a disputed question presented to or considered by the Department, their decisions are final to the same extent as those of other judicial or quasi judicial tribunals.

Digitized by Google

United States v. Minor, 114 U. S. 233, 29 L. ed. 110, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 836; Vance v. Burbank, 101 U. S. 514, 25 L. ed. 929; Greenameyer v. Coate, 212 U. S. 434, 53 L. ed. 587, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 345; Quinby v. Conlan, 104 U. S. 420, 26 L. ed. 800; DeCambra v. Rogers, 189 U. S. 119, 47 L. ed. 734, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 519.

Assistant Attorney General Knaebel argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee:

Since this question depends entirely upon the facts, the finding of both courts below is conclusive, in the absence of clear error.

Texas & P. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 232 U. S. 338, ante, 630, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 438; Chicago Junction R. Co. v. King, 222 U. S. 222, 56 L. ed. 173, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 79; Dun v. Lumbermen's Credit Asso. 209 U. S. 20, 52 L. ed. 663, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 335, 14 Ann. Cas. 501.

The finding of the courts below was sustained by ample evidence.

(a) The land was known coal land, and therefore reserved by law from homestead entry.

Diamond Coal & Coke Co. v. United States, 233 U. S. 236, ante, 936, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 507.

(b) There was fraud in the entries: the entrymen knew, or were chargeable with knowledge of, the character of the land.

(c) The patents were unlawful even though the entrymen were honestly mistaken. Even if it were possible to believe that the entrymen were all honestly mistaken, the result would be the same. The legal right to issue the patents depended on the character of the land, and not upon the state of the entrymen's minds.

Mullan v. United States, 118 U. S. 271, 278, 30 L. ed. 170, 173, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1041.

The burden was upon the defendant to allege and prove clearly all the elements of the defense.

Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. 177, 211, 9 L. ed. 388, 400; McDonald v. Belding, 145 U. S. 492, 498, 36 L. ed. 788, 790, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 892; Smith v. Orton, 131 U. S. lxxv, lxxviii, Appx. and 18 L. ed. 62, 64; Simmons Creek Coal Co. v. Doran, 142 U. S. 417, 437, 35 L. ed. 1063, 1071, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 239; Johnson v. Georgia Loan & T. Co. 72 C. C. A. 639, 141 Fed. 593; Secombe v. Campbell, 5 Bann. & Ard. 429, 632, 2 Fed. 358; Nickerson v. Meacham, 5 McCrary, 5, 14 Fed. 884; Lakin v. Sierra Buttes Gold Min. Co. 25 Fed. 337; Jewett v. Palmer, 7 Johns. Ch. 65, 11 Am. Dec. 401; Rozell v. Chicago Mill. & Lumber Co. 76 Ark. 525, 89 S. W. 469; 39 Cyc. 1778.

Conceding that, generally speaking, it is not incumbent on the purchaser of patented land to inquire into the proceedings before patent, it must also be conceded as a self-evident proposition that he is charged with notice of the recitals contained in the patent itself.

Simmons Creek Coal Co. v. Doran, 142 U. S. 437, 35 L. ed. 1063, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 239.

Notice to the attorney was notice to the defendant.

39 Cyc. 1763, note 96; Armstrong v. Ashley, 204 U. S. 272, 51 L. ed. 482, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 270; Jennings v. Carter, 53 Ark. 242, 13 S. W. 800; Stokes v. Riley, 121 Ill. 166, 11 N. E. 877; Griffith v. Griffith, 9 Paige, 315; Sickles v. White, 66 Tex. 178, 17 S. W. 543; Polk v. Cosgrove, 4 Biss. 437, Fed. Cas. No. 11,248; Griffin v. Franklin, 224 Mo. 667, 123 S. W. 1092.

The rule that notice to the agent is notice to the principal applies not only to knowledge acquired by the agent in the particular transaction, but to knowledge acquired by him in a prior transaction, and present to his mind when he is acting as such agent.

Distilled Spirits (Harrington v. United States) 11 Wall. 356, 20 L. ed. 167.

There was no conclusive adjudication of the character of the land in the Land Office proceedings.

United States v. Stone, 2 Wall. 525, 17 L. ed. 765; Mullan v. United States, 118 U. S. 271, 30 L. ed. 170, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1041; Germania Iron Co. v. United States, 165 U. S. 379, 41 L. ed. 754, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 337; Williams v. United States, 138 U. S. 514, 34 L. ed. 1026, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 457.

Mr. Justice Van Devanter delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit to cancel four patents issued under the commutation provision of the homestead law, and embracing a full section of land in King county, Washington. The bill charged that the patents were fraudulently procured by falsely representing to the land officers that the lands were agricultural in character, and therefore subject to homestead entry, when in truth they were at the time known to be valuable coal lands, and therefore excepted from the operation of the homestead law. After the patents were issued the lands were conveyed to the appellant, and there was a further charge that it took the title with notice and knowledge of the fraud. The circuit court found that these charges were true, and entered [78] a decree for the government; and the circuit court of appeals, taking a like view of the evidence, affirmed the decree. 114 C. C. A. 79, 194 Fed. 59.

The rule is well settled that findings of fact concurred in by two lower courts will not be disturbed by this court unless shown to be clearly erroneous. Stuart v. Hayden, 169 U. S. 1, 14, 42 L. ed. 639, 643, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 274; Towson v. Moore, 173 U. S. 17, 24, 43 L. ed. 597, 600, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 332; Dun v. Lumbermen's Credit Asso. 209 U. S. 20, 23, 52 L. ed. 663, 665, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 335, 14 Ann. Cas. 501; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 232 U. S. 338, ante, 630, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 438. Applying the rule to the evidence in this case, we think the findings below should not be disturbed.

Digitized by Google

Only two of appellant's contentions merit special notice.

Without any uncertainty the evidence demonstrated that the lands were known to be valuable coal lands when the homestead entries were made and commuted, and that the affidavits and proofs to the contrary, upon which the patents were procured, were false. Not only were the lands in a well-known coal region and generally reputed to be coal lands, but a tunnel, slope, and other openings upon them, costing about $8,000, had disclosed that they contained coal of such quality and quantity as to render them valuable for coal mining. The entrymen so understood, and resorted to severe measures to keep coal prospectors off the lands.

The appellant's chief contention is, that there was no evidence, or, at least, no substantial evidence, that it took the title with notice or knowledge of the fraud perpetrated by the entrymen. But the record shows otherwise. The appellant's vice president, who represented it in the negotiations, had theretofore, as agent of another company, learned that the latter was interested in the coal development work before mentioned, and was, with others, bearing the expense of that work with a view to acquiring the lands as coal lands. This was recalled to his mind at the time of the negotiations. He caused the section to be [79] examined by an engineer, who found and reported the tunnel and other openings disclosing the coal, and, following that report, the transaction was consummated on the theory that the lands were valuable for their coal contents. There was no claim that there was any development work or coal discovery after the entries were made, and it is quite apparent from what was said of the engineer's report that the tunnel and openings gave visible evidence that they were not recently made. Of course, the appellant was bound to take notice that the patentees with whom it was dealing had obtained the lands under the homestead law, for it was so recited in the patents. Simmons Creek Coal Co. v. Doran, 142 U. S. 417, 437, 35 L. ed. 1063, 1071, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 239. In these facts there was, as we think, persuasive evidence that the appellant took the title with notice or knowledge of the fraud.

It is contended also that the proceedings resulting in the patents were not ex parte, but adversary; that the land officers found the lands to be agricultural in character, and that this finding was conclusive upon the government. No doubt those officers found from the proofs submitted to them that the lands were agricultural, and not coal lands, for that was a prerequisite to issuing the patents, but the proceedings were not adversary in any true sense of the term. The applications and proofs of the entrymen were strictly ex parte. The government was not called upon to make any adverse showing, no issue was framed, no hearing was had, and no one represented the government save in the sense that the land officers did so. As this court has often held, the finding of the land officers in such a proceeding, although not open to collateral attack, is not conclusive against the government when it sues to cancel the resulting patent upon the ground that it was obtained by means of false and fraudulent proofs. United States v. Minor, 114 U. S. 233, 29 L. ed. 110, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 836; J. J. McCaskill Co. v. United States, 216 U. S. 504, 509, 54 L. ed. 590, 594, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 386, and cases cited. In such [80] a suit the action of the land officers is given appropriate effect by treating it as presumptively right, and as requiring the government to carry the burden of proving the fraud by that class of evidence which commands respect, and that amount of it which produces conviction. Diamond Coal & Coke Co. v. United States, 233 U. S. 236, 239, ante, 936, 939, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 507.

Decree affirmed.

NEW ORLEANS & NORTHEASTERN RAILROAD COMPANY and Southern Railway Company, Plffs. in Err.,

v.

NATIONAL RICE MILLING COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 80–86.)

Error to state court — Federal question — decision on non-Federal ground.

A judgment of a state court enforcing the liability of two connecting carriers for the loss of an interstate shipment of rice,

---

NOTE.—On the general subject of writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4 L. ed. U. S. 97; Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884; and Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

On what adjudications of state courts can be brought up for review in the Supreme caused by an extraordinary flood, the waters of which, reaching some cars containing quicklime, started a fire which spread to the rice, is not reviewable in the Federal Supreme Court, although the state court ruled adversely upon the carriers' contention that, under the combined operation of the Carmack amendment of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. at L. 584, chap. 3591, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1307), § 7, stipulations in the bill of lading, and the common-law rule, they were not liable unless the plaintiff should show that the carrier on whose line the loss occurred negligently failed to take reasonable precautions to avoid it, where the court also found as a matter of fact from the testimony of the carriers' witnesses that such carrier negligently permitted the cars containing the rice to remain within the influence of the rising flood and in immediate proximity to the quicklime, when ordinary prudence required their removal to a place of safety.

Digitized by Google

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1465-1528, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 615.]

Argued February 27, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana to review a judgment which, on a rehearing, affirmed a judgment of the Civil District Court for the Parish of Orleans, enforcing the liability of connecting carriers for the loss of an interstate shipment. Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

See same case below, 132 La. 615, 61 So. 708.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. Blanc Monroe argued the cause, and, with Mr. John K. Graves, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

The sole issue, in our judgment, is not an issue of fact, but is an issue of law. That issue is: Is the Federal rule of liability to be applied to this case, or must the state rule be applied?

Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. C. H. Albers Commission Co. 223 U. S. 573, 56 L. ed. 556, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 316; Dower v. Richards, 151 U. S. 658, 667, 38 L. ed. 305, 308, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 452, 17 Mor. Min. Rep. 704; Acme Harvester Co. v. Beekman Lumber Co. 222 U. S. 300, 305, 56 L. ed. 208, 212, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96; Creswill v. Grand Lodge, K. P. 225 U. S. 246, 261, 56 L. ed. 1074, 1080, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822; Schlemmer v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co. 205 U. S. 1, 11, 51 L. ed. 681, 685, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 407.

Does the judgment of the lower court rest upon a question of general law, broad enough to sustain it, so that the decision of the Federal question is unnecessary?

Henderson Bridge Co. v. Henderson, 173 U. S. 592, 608, 43 L. ed. 823, 829, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 553.

The state court's decision, as is plainly shown by its opinion on rehearing, is based upon the fundamental error that the burden to negative the existence of negligence contributing to the loss caused by the act of God was upon the carriers. This error was an error of law, and an error in misinterpreting or failing to apply the Federal law. This error goes to the root of the decision, and its correction will destroy the decision. The application of the doctrine of Schlemmer v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co. supra, requires a review by this court.

Messrs. J. Blanc Monroe, Monte M. Lemann, and John K. Graves also filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

The Federal question is properly before this court.

Mallett v. North Carolina, 181 U. S. 589, 45 L. ed. 1015, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 241; Leigh v. Green, 193 U. S. 79, 48 L. ed. 623, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390.

Mr. William Catesby Jones argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Gustave Lemle and Arthur A. Moreno, filed a brief for defendant in error:

The judgment of the lower court rests upon a question of general law broad enough to sustain it, and the decision of the so-called Federal question is unnecessary.

Arkansas Southern R. Co. v. German Nat. Bank, 207 U. S. 270, 52 L. ed. 201, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 78; Eustis v. Bolles, 150 U. S. 361, 37 L. ed. 1111, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; Baker v. Baldwin, 187 U. S. 61, 47 L. ed. 75, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 19; Vandalia R. Co. v. Indiana, 207 U. S. 359, 52 L. ed. 246, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 130; Seneca Nation of Indians v. Christy, 162 U. S. 283, 40 L. ed. 970, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 828; Pierce v. Somerset R. Co. 171 U. S. 641, 43 L. ed. 316, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 64; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 160 U. S. 556, 40 L. ed. 536, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389; Gaar, S. & Co. v. Shannon, 223 U. S. 468, 56 L. ed. 510, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 236; Consolidated Turnp. Co. v. Norfolk & O. V. R. Co. 228 U. S. 596, 57 L. ed. 982, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609.

Court of the United States by writ of error to those courts—see note to Apex Transp. Co. v. Garbade, 62 L.R.A. 513.

On how and when questions must be raised and decided in a state court in order to make a case for a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States—see note to Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. McGrew, 63 L.R.A. 33.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Justice Van Devanter delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action to recover the value of two cars of rice destroyed by fire in August, 1908, while being transported over connecting railroads from New Orleans, Louisiana, to Charleston, South Carolina. The rice was shipped upon through bills of lading issued by the initial carrier, and was destroyed while in the second carrier's custody at Old Hamburg, South Carolina. The two cars, with others [82] containing quicklime, were side-tracked in the yard at that place awaiting further movement towards their destination. The yards adjoined the Savannah river, which was then almost out of its banks and steadily rising as a result of extraordinary rains and cloudbursts extending up the river and its tributaries 100 miles. The waters continued to rise, spread over the yard to a considerable depth, and ultimately reached the quicklime, thereby causing the cars to burn and destroying the rice. The cars had been in the yard about sixteen hours when the fire started. The action was against both carriers, and it was alleged in the petition, which based the right of recovery upon the Carmack amendment to the interstate commerce act (34 Stat. at L. 584, 595, chap. 3591, § 7, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1307), that the loss of the rice was caused by the negligence of the second carrier, and that the two carriers were jointly liable. Issue was joined, and, after a trial, the district court of the parish rendered a judgment against the carriers jointly and in solido, which the supreme court of the state at first reversed, and then, after a rehearing, affirmed. 132 La. 615, 61 So. 708. The carriers sued out this writ of error, basing their right so to do upon a claim that by the judgment of affirmance they were denied a right or immunity asserted under a law of the United States.

A motion to dismiss was presented along with the merits, and we think it is well taken.

The bills of lading contained these stipulations:

"This company or other carriers over whose line the property may pass shall not be held responsible for loss or damage (unless through proved carelessness or negligence of their employees) resulting . . . from heat, cold, fire, flood, storms, mobs, or other causes not subject to the carrier's control.

"Neither this company nor any of its connecting carriers shall be liable for any damage to or destruction of [83] said property by fire, unless such damage or destruction shall result directly and exclusively from their negligence or that of their employees, and unless such negligence shall be affirmatively established by the owner of said property."

In the supreme court of the state the carriers contended that, under the combined operation of the Carmack amendment as interpreted in Adams Exp. Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 57 L. ed. 314, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 257, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148, the stipulations in the bills of lading, and the common-law rule applied in Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Reeves, 10 Wall. 176, 19 L. ed. 909, and other cases,† they were entitled to exoneration upon showing that the rice was destroyed by the extraordinary flood, unless it also was shown that the second carrier contributed to the loss by negligently failing to take reasonable precautions to avoid it when the rising waters gave warning of the danger; and it was particularly urged as a part of this contention that the burden was upon the plaintiff to show such negligence, and not upon the carriers to show the absence of it. But the court, although disapproving the latter phase of the contention, and thinking the carriers were charged by the law of Louisiana with the burden of showing that there was no negligence, did not rest its judgment upon that ground. On the contrary, it examined the evidence, which comprehensively covered the subject, to ascertain whether, upon the hypothesis that the contention of the carriers was sound, they were liable, and from that examination it found as matter of fact that the second carrier had negligently permitted the cars of rice to remain within the influence of the rising flood and in immediate proximity to the quicklime when ordinary prudence required that they be moved to a place of safety; and that this was [84] made an independent ground of the judgment is shown by the court's extended discussion of the evidence and by the following excerpts from its opinion:

"A close reading of the evidence compels the conclusion that there was not sufficient forethought on the part of the officers in charge of the railroad yards. We have seen that the river was rising rapidly on the morning of the 26th of August. Some of the witnesses testified that by 7 o'clock it had covered the switch tracks, and yet nothing was done to protect property. Leisurely enough, the employees went about their business and gave very little concern to the rising waters. Those who did attempt to save property (if what they did can be considered in that light) displayed very little activity, beginning at 8 o'clock, taking out a few cars and leaving others in the old Hamburg yards. That is all they did. These yards were submerged by water to a height above the floor of the cars. The question arises: Was it possible, before the waters reached their greatest height, to move the cars to a safer place than where they were hauled to on the morning of the 26th of August; that is, to the old Hamburg yards? We have noted, before 8 o'clock or 8:30 o'clock A. M., not the least attempt was made to move the cars out of the yard where they had been placed. Mr. Benson, inspector of the Southern Railway Company, testified that on the morning of the 26th of August, he reported at the Hamburg yard at 7 o'clock to go to work, and at that time the water had just reached the rail in front of the block office. There were a crew and an engine in the yard. Why were they not put at work at that time to save the freight?

†Clark v. Barnwell, 12 How. 272, 280, 281, 283, 13 L. ed. 985, 988, 989; Western Transp. Co. v. Downer, 11 Wall. 129, 133, 20 L. ed. 160, 161; Cau v. Texas & P. R. Co. 194 U. S. 427, 432, 48 L. ed. 1053, 1057, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663, 16 Am. Neg. Rep. 659.

Digitized by Google

"Another witness, the night operator, renders it still more evident that it was possible to move the train in the morning, for he says that when he went to work the yard was entirely free from water on the 26th of August in the morning. An attempt was made to rescue the cars between 8 and half past 8 o'clock A. M. It failed. They [85] went too late to rescue these cars. There had been ample time to save them.

. . . . . .

"These floods were frequent, and yet defendant remained indifferent, and even sent its cars to the lowest places on the yard, where they were permitted to remain without making a serious and timely attempt to take them away.

"From all this evidence we are led to the inference, which we think is positive, that there was negligence. A little timely activity would have brought about a different result, and would have saved plaintiff's property, or would have placed defendant in a position to successfully defend itself.

"Unquestionably the river was rising rapidly on the morning of the 26th at 7 o'clock; in thirty-five minutes it covered the switch tracks. It does not seem that anything was done to prevent the destruction of the cars. Leisurely enough, the employees went about their respective occupations, and now, when they give an account of themselves, it does seem as if they wish to lay all the trouble on the rising waters, although they remained indifferent when they should have exerted themselves.

. . . . . .

"Admitting for a moment all that is claimed under the Carmack amendment, under any of the laws of this country, indifferent railroad people, who receive freight to be transported some distance, and who, just before the waters of a storm have flowed down, stop the cars on the way, and run them to the lowest part of their yards, and place them next to cars loaded with quicklime, easily ignited by water, and leave them at that place while other cars are taken out, and who make no attempt to haul them out, although the waters are rising slowly enough for such work after warning given, are not protected from the charge of negligence under the law."

[86] True, the testimony upon which the court rested its conclusion that negligence was proved did not come from the plaintiff's witnesses, but from those for the carriers, and was largely elicited by cross-examination, but that is quite immaterial. The plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of all the testimony in the case, from whatever source it came, and was not required, even though having the burden of proof, to go through the ceremony of proving any fact otherwise established.

As it clearly appears that the judgment rested upon a ground which was not only adequate to sustain it, but in entire harmony with the carrier's asserted Federal right, it cannot be said that there was a denial of that right in the sense contemplated by § 237 of the Judicial Code [36 Stat. at L. 1156, chap. 231, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 227]. Whether the right was well founded we therefore need not consider.

Writ of error dismissed.

WABASH RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
JOHN R. HAYES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 86-91.)

Commerce — employers' liability — exclusiveness of Federal regulation — local practice.

1. A declaration stating a good cause of action under the Federal employers' liability

---

Note.—On the general subject of writs of error from the United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4 L. ed. U. S. 97; Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884; and Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

On what adjudications of state courts can be brought up for review in the Supreme Court of the United States by writ of error to those courts—see note to Apex Transp. Co. v. Garbade, 62 L.R.A. 513.

Digitized by Google

act of April 22, 1908 (35 Stat. at L. 65, chap. 149, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1322), may be treated as affording a basis for a recovery under the state law after first eliminating the allegation that the injury occurred in interstate commerce, which the proof demonstrated was unwarranted, since by so doing the court is merely giving effect to a rule of local practice, the application of which was not in anywise in contravention of the Federal statute.

[For other cases, see Commerce, I. c, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Error to state court — frivolousness of Federal question.

2. The contention that a right or immunity under the Federal employers' liability act of April 22, 1908, was denied by the ruling of a state court that a declaration stating a good cause of action under that act could serve as the basis of recovery under the state law after first eliminating the allegation that the injury occurred in interstate commerce, which the proof demonstrated was unwarranted, is so lacking in merit as not to serve as the basis for a writ of error from the Federal Supreme Court to the state court.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1110-1137, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 843.]

Submitted April 27, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Appellate Court of Illinois for the First District to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Superior Court of Cook County, in that state, in favor of plaintiff in a personal-injury action against a common carrier. Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

See same case below, 180 Ill. App. 511.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. L. Minnis, John Maxey Zane, and Charles F. Morse submitted the cause for plaintiff in error:

The rule that the question of what may

On how and when questions must be raised and decided in a state court in order to make a case for a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States—see note to Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. McGrew, 63 L.R.A. 33.

On necessity of color of merit in Federal question to sustain writ of error to state court—see note to Offield v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 51 L. ed. U. S. 231.

Recovery under state law when action under Federal employers' liability act fails.

Although the action was brought under the Federal employers' liability act, and the proof demonstrates that there is no cause of action under that statute, still the suit will not be dismissed if the plaintiff has made out a good cause of action at common law. Jones v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 149 Ky. 566, 149 S. W. 951. Here the complaint stated a cause of action under the Federal statute which it was held error to dismiss upon the ground that the employee was not engaged in interstate commerce, the evidence being such that the jury might have found him entitled to recover at common law.

To the same effect is Midland Valley R. Co. v. Ennis, 109 Ark. 206, 159 S. W. 214, where, the proof having failed to establish the allegation in the complaint that the deceased employee was engaged in handling interstate commerce at the time he received his injury, defendant asked for a peremptory instruction to the jury. The court said: "It is insisted now that, appellee having sued under the employers' liability act, he cannot recover in this action under the laws of the state of Oklahoma for an injury which occurred while deceased was engaged in intrastate commerce. Facts which gave the right to recover under the state law, and those which give the right to recover under the Federal statutes, constitute separate and distinct causes of action, for the Federal statute is exclusive where the incident is embraced within interstate commerce service, and does not apply where it is in intrastate service. The two causes of action may, however, be joined in the same complaint. Kirby's Dig. § 6079, subdiv. 6. There cannot, however, be a recovery upon a cause of action other than that stated in the pleadings and upon which the issue is joined. Patrick v. Whitely, 75 Ark. 465, 87 S. W. 1179, 5 Ann. Cas. 672; St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 57 L. ed. 1129, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651. A change in the cause of action may, however, be waived. Sarber v. McConnell, 64 Ark. 450, 43 S. W. 395.

"Our statute on the subject of amendment of pleadings is very liberal and provides that 'the court may, at any time, in furtherance of justice, and on such terms as may be proper, amend any pleadings or proceedings by adding or striking out the name of any party, or by correcting a mistake in the name of a party, or a mistake in any other respect, or by inserting other allegations material to the case; or, when the amendment does not change substantially the claim or defense, by conforming the pleading or proceeding to the facts proved.' Kirby's Dig. § 6145. Under this section the court may, in its discretion, before the commencement of the trial, allow a complaint to be amended so as to change the cause of action to another one which might have been joined in the same action, and at any time during the progress of the trial may permit an amendment which does not change substantially the claim, so as to conform to the facts proved. The only limitation in the statute is that, after the proof is introduced, the pleadings cannot be amended so as to substantially change the cause of action.

"It is unnecessary to determine now, in view of the fact that the case is to be reand what may not be treated as surplusage is a question on which the decision of the state courts is final obviously has no application where, as here, the ruling on the question of surplusage finds its only justification and support in, and proceeds directly and logically from, the refusal of the court to give to a Federal law the construction asked by the party aggrieved.

Digitized by Google

Leathe v. Thomas, 207 U. S. 93, 99, 52 L. ed. 118, 120, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30; Vandalia R. Co. v. Indiana, 207 U. S. 359, 367, 52 L. ed. 246, 248, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 130.

If the facts stated are the facts necessary to state a cause of action under the statute, the statute need not be pleaded nor need reference be made to it.

Cound v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 173 Fed. 527; Clark v. Southern P. Co. 175 Fed. 122; Hall v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 149 Fed. 564.

Since it is immaterial for the purpose of this motion whether our construction of the Federal statute or that adopted and applied by the appellate court of Illinois is the correct one,—since in either case a Federal question is involved conferring jurisdiction upon this court,—we shall not enter upon any extended argument on that question. However, it seems to us that, notwithstanding the holdings of a few state courts and possibly of inferior Federal courts to the contrary, the decisions of this court have removed whatever doubt there may ever have been on this subject.

St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 57 L. ed. 1129, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651; Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. ed. 327, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; North Carolina R. Co. v. Zachary, 232 U. S. 248, ante, 591, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305; El Paso & N. E. R. Co. v. Gutierrez, 215 U. S. 87, 54 L. ed. 106, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 21;

---

versed on another ground, whether appellant waived the change in the cause of action, or whether the error in allowing the change was prejudicial so as to call for reversal of the case. On the remand of the cause the appellee can, if so advised, amend the pleadings so as to state a cause of action based upon intrastate service of the deceased, and thus make out a right of action under the state law."

The cases bear out the suggestion in Wabash R. Co. v. Hayes that, had the suit been presented in an alternative way in separate counts, one containing and another omitting the allegation that the injury occurred in interstate commerce, there would be no objection to proceeding to a judgment under the latter count, after it appeared that the first could not be sustained.

Thus, in Bankson v. Illinois C. R. Co. 196 Fed. 171, the court said: "No reason is perceived why, if the plaintiff, at the time of commencing the action, is uncertain as to whether, under the facts, she is entitled to recover under the employers' liability act of Congress, or the general law of negligence in force in the states of Iowa or Illinois, she may not state in different counts of her petition the acts of negligence she relies upon, and recover either under the act of Congress or the general law of negligence as the facts, when developed, may show; and it seems entirely clear that, under the Iowa practice act, she cannot, upon filing her petition, be required to then elect upon which of said causes of action she will rely for recovery."

And a demurrer on the ground of misjoinder of counts will not lie to a declaration in which counts at common law were joined with counts under the Federal employers' liability act. Bouchard v. Central Vermont R. Co. — Vt. —, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 89 Atl. 475. The court said that the object of the pleader in joining the two sets of counts may be inferred to have been uncertainty as to what the evidence would develop as to the interstate character of the employment of the injured servant, and a purpose to have a count applicable to the facts that the evidence might tend to show; that the two sets of counts state what might be regarded as different causes of action, but that this alone was not an objection to the joinder. "There is no difficulty about the matter," said the court, "unless it is found in the inconsistency of the counts,—a point somewhat dwelt upon by the defendant. It is true that the counts are inconsistent in that the Federal law is exclusive to the extent to which it applies, so that if the plaintiff makes out a case of liability under that law there can be no liability under the common-law counts. But the common-law doctrine of repugnancy relates to inconsistent matters of substance in the same count or plea. Counts and pleas which are merely inconsistent are not, for that reason, repugnant in a legal sense."

But where a state law differs so radically from the Federal statute that it is impossible for the court to proceed under both statutes, the plaintiff will be required to elect upon which cause of action she will rely for recovery. South Covington & C. Street R. Co. v. Finan, 153 Ky. 340, 155 S. W. 742. The court pointed out that under the state statute a prima facie case of negligence on the part of the employer was made out when any defect or unsafe condition was shown, while under the Federal statute the plaintiff must show negligence under the ordinarily applicable rules, and that the court must, of necessity, proceed under one of the statutes and discard the other.

Generally, on the question of constitutionality, application, and effect of the Federal employers' liability act—see note to Lamphere v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 38.

Digitized by Google

Cound v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 173 Fed. 527.

The right conferred by the Federal employers' liability act was claimed in the courts of Illinois and was there expressly denied.

St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McWhirter, 229 U. S. 265, 57 L. ed. 1179, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 858; St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, supra; Troxell v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 227 U. S. 434, 57 L. ed. 586, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 274.

A Federal right is sufficiently set up or claimed in the state court to satisfy the requirements of § 237 of the Federal Judicial Code, irrespective of the time when the question is raised, if the state court actually passes upon the question so raised.

Chambers v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 207 U. S. 142, 52 L. ed. 143, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 34; North Carolina R. Co. v. Zachary, 232 U. S. 248, ante, 591, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305; McKay v. Kalyton, 204 U. S. 458, 463, 51 L. ed. 566, 569, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 346; Kentucky Union Co. v. Kentucky, 219 U. S. 140, 55 L. ed. 137, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 171; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 218 U. S. 551, 54 L. ed. 1147, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 95; Mallett v. North Carolina, 181 U. S. 589, 45 L. ed. 1015, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 241; Nutt v. Knut, 200 U. S. 12, 50 L. ed. 348, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 216; Green Bay & M. Canal Co. v. Patten Paper Co. 172 U. S. 58, 67, 43 L. ed. 364, 368, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 97; Powell v. Brunswick County, 150 U. S. 440, 37 L. ed. 1136, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 166.

Mr. James C. McShane submitted the cause for defendant in error:

Even if defendant's claim, as now made, had been specially set up as a right or immunity under the Federal act, it was not such, but was merely a question of general law relating to pleading and practice in a state court, and does not present a Federal question.

Buena Vista County v. Iowa Falls & S. C. R. Co. 112 U. S. 165, 28 L. ed. 680, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Miller, 221 U. S. 408, 416, 55 L. ed. 789, 796, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 534; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Butler, 159 U. S. 87, 91, 40 L. ed. 85, 86, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 991; Long Island Water Supply Co. v. Brooklyn, 166 U. S. 685, 41 L. ed. 1165, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 718; Johnson v. Drew, 171 U. S. 93, 43 L. ed. 88, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 800; Johnson v. Risk, 137 U. S. 300, 34 L. ed. 683, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 111; Iowa C. R. Co. v. Iowa, 160 U. S. 389, 40 L. ed. 467, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 344; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 212 U. S. 86, 53 L. ed. 417, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 220; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Wilson, 213 U. S. 52, 53 L. ed. 693, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 403; F. G. Oxley Stave Co. v. Butler County, 166 U. S. 648, 41 L. ed. 1149, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 709; Brinkmeier v. Missouri P. R. Co. 224 U. S. 268, 56 L. ed. 758, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 412; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf, 226 U. S. 570–578, 57 L. ed. 355–364, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135.

The decision of the state courts on the question of pleading involved was correct.

Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Spurney, 197 Ill. 471, 64 N. E. 302; Barnes v. Northern Trust Co. 169 Ill. 118, 48 N. E. 31; Illinois Steel Co. v. Schymanowski, 162 Ill. 447, 44 N. E. 876; New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Blumenthal, 160 Ill. 40, 43 N. E. 809; Weber Wagon Co. v. Kehl, 139 Ill. 644, 29 N. E. 714; Chicago City R. Co. v. O'Donnell, 207 Ill. 478, 69 N. E. 882, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 517; Jones v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 149 Ky. 566, 149 S. W. 951; Payne v. New York, S. & W. R. Co. 201 N. Y. 436, 95 N. E. 20; Acardo v. New York Contracting & Trucking Co. 116 App. Div. 793, 102 N. Y. Supp. 7; Paris & G. N. R. Co. v. Boston, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 142 S. W. 947, affirmed in 231 U. S. 742, ante, 462, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 318; Bennett v. Great Northern R. Co. 115 Minn. 128, 131 N. W. 1066; Southern R. Co. v. Howerton, — Ind. App. —, 101 N. E. 121; Taylor v. Southern R. Co. — Ind. App. —, 101 N. E. 506; Erie R. Co. v. Kennedy, 112 C. C. A. 76, 191 Fed. 332; Ullrich v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 193 Fed. 768; Ahrens v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 121 Minn. 335, 141 N. W. 297; Helm v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 156 Ky. 240, 160 S. W. 945; Atkinson v. Bullard, — Ga. App. —, 80 S. E. 220.

Mr. Justice Van Devanter delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action against a railroad company to recover for a personal injury sustained by the plaintiff through the negligence of the company while he was employed as a switchman in it railroad yard in Cook county, Illinois. The action was brought in the superior court of that county, and a trial to the court and a jury resulted in a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff. The judgment was affirmed by the appellate court for that district (180 Ill. App. 511), which was the highest court of the state in which a decision of the case could be had, and this writ of error was then sued out by the company. By a motion to dismiss the writ our jurisdiction to review the judgment is challenged. Shortly stated, the facts bearing upon the disposition of the motion are these:

Digitized by Google

The plaintiff's declaration alleged that the injury occurred while the defendant was engaged, and while the plaintiff was employed by it, in interstate commerce. The [89] other allegations were such that, with that one, they stated a good cause of action under the Federal employers' liability act (35 Stat. at L. 65, chap. 149, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1322), and, without it, they stated a good cause of action under the common law prevailing in the state. There was a plea of not guilty; and upon the trial, the proof failing to show that the injury occurred in interstate commerce, the court, at the defendant's request, instructed the jury that the Federal employers' liability act had no application to the case. Then, over the defendant's objection, the court treated the allegation respecting interstate commerce as eliminated, and submitted the case to the jury as one controlled by the common law prevailing in the state. The plaintiff recovered under that law. In the appellate court the defendant contended that, even though the allegation that the injury occurred in interstate commerce proved unwarranted, the declaration could not be treated, consistently with the Federal act, as affording any basis for a recovery under the law of the state, common or statutory. But the court held otherwise and sustained the recovery under the state law. Whether that ruling operated as a denial of a right or immunity to which the defendant was entitled under the Federal act is the question, and the only question, sought to be presented by the assignments of error.

Had the injury occurred in interstate commerce, as was alleged, the Federal act undoubtedly would have been controlling, and a recovery could not have been had under the common or statute law of the state; in other words, the Federal act would have been exclusive in its operation, not merely cumulative. Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 53-55, 56 L. ed. 327, 347, 348, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 158, 57 L. ed. 1129, 1133, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651; North Carolina R. Co. v. Zachary, 232 U. S. 248, 256, ante, 591, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Horton, 233 U. S. 492, ante, 1062, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 635. On the other hand, if the injury occurred outside of interstate [90] commerce, the Federal act was without application, and the law of the state was controlling. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Behrens, 233 U. S. 473, ante, 1051, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 646. That the injury did occur outside of interstate commerce was declared in the court's instruction to the jury, and the defendant, having requested the instruction, is bound by it. It therefore must be taken as settled that the right of recovery arose under the state law.

The plaintiff asserted only one right to recover for the injury, and in the nature of things he could have but one. Whether it arose under the Federal act or under the state law, it was equally cognizable in the state court; and had it been presented in an alternative way in separate counts, one containing and another omitting the allegation that the injury occurred in interstate commerce, the propriety of proceeding to a judgment under the latter count, after it appeared that the first could not be sustained, doubtless would have been freely conceded. Certainly, nothing in the Federal act would have been in the way.

Instead of presenting his case in an alternative way, the plaintiff so stated it as to indicate that he was claiming only under the Federal act. And when the proofs demonstrated that the injury arose outside of interstate commerce, and therefore that no recovery could be had under the Federal act, the court was confronted with the question whether the declaration could be amended, or regarded as amended, to conform to the proofs. Holding that this could be done, the court treated the mistaken allegation that the injury occurred in interstate commerce as eliminated. Therein the court merely gave effect to a rule of local practice, the application of which was not in anywise in contravention of the Federal act. See Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 56, 57, 56 L. ed. 348, 349, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875.

It follows that the contention that the defendant was denied a right or immunity to which it was entitled under [91] the Federal act is not only untenable, but so devoid of color as to furnish no basis for this writ of error. See Sawyer v. Piper, 189 U. S. 154, 47 L. ed. 757, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 633.

As it is not claimed that, by reason of the shifting from one law to the other, the defendant was cut off from presenting any defense which was open only under the latter, or that the course taken by the plaintiff deprived the defendant of a right of removal otherwise existing, we intimate no opinion in either connection.

Writ of error dismissed.

Digitized by Google

MARTIN OCAMPO and Teodoro M. Kalaw, Plffs. in Err.,
v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 91–103.)

Constitutional law — due process of law —criminal prosecutions — preliminary examination.

1. The right of the accused under existing laws to a preliminary examination could be dispensed with, as is done by Philippine Commission act No. 612, § 2, in cases triable only in the court of first instance in the city of Manila, where the prosecuting attorney, after a due investigation of the facts, shall have presented an information against such accused in proper form, without infringing the prohibition of the Philippine Bill of Rights (act of July 1, 1902, 32 Stat. at L. 692, chap. 1369), § 5, against the denial of due process of law.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, IV. b, 9, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Constitutional law — equal protection of the laws — criminal prosecutions —preliminary examination.

2. Denying to an inhabitant of Manila the right to a preliminary examination which is accorded to all other persons in the Philippine Islands, as is done by the provision of the Philippine Commission act No. 612, § 2, that in cases triable only in the court of first instance in the city of Manila, the accused shall not be entitled as of right to a preliminary examination in any case where the prosecuting attorney, after a due investigation of the facts, shall have presented an information against him in proper form, does not contravene the prohibition of the Philippine Bill of Rights (act July 1, 1902, § 5), against the denial of the equal protection of the laws.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, IV. a, 8, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Constitutional law — delegation of judicial power — finding of probable cause.

3. A preliminary finding of probable cause for the arrest of the accused is only a quasi judicial act, not such that, because of its nature, it must necessarily be confided to a strictly judicial officer or tribunal.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, III. b, 4, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Criminal law — commitment — probable cause.

4. The preliminary inquiry into the facts conducted by the prosecuting attorney of the city of Manila, under Philippine Commission act No. 612, § 2, and upon which he files a sworn information against the accused, must be deemed a sufficient compliance with the requirement of the act of July 1, 1902, § 5, enacting a Bill of Rights for the Philippine Islands, that "no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation," in view of the provision in § 9 of that act, authorizing modifications of practice and procedure.

[For other cases, see Criminal Law, III. c, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Libel — in newspaper — liability of owner.

5. An administrator, manager, and one of the owners of a newspaper, is a proprietor within the meaning of Philippine Commission act No. 277, § 6, making every author, editor, or proprietor of a newspaper chargeable with the publication of any libel therein as fully as if he were the author of the same.

[For other cases, see Libel, I., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Appeal — in criminal cases — increasing sentence.

6. The supreme court of the Philippine Islands, established in place of the existing audiencia or supreme court by Philippine Commission act No. 136, with original and appellate jurisdiction, has the power to increase the punishment on an appeal from a conviction of criminal libel, notwithstanding General Orders No. 58, §§ 42–44, 50, and Philippine Commission act No. 194, § 4, under which the judgments of the courts of first instance are final unless an appeal be taken.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, IX. e, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 270.]

Argued March 12 and 13, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands to review a judgment which affirmed, with an increase in the sentence imposed upon one of the defendants, a conviction of libel in the Court of First Instance of the City of Manila. Affirmed.

See same case below, 18 Philippine, 1.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William R. Harr argued the cause, and, with Mr. Clement L. Bouvé, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

The proof of probable cause required by the fundamental law must be submitted to

---

NOTE.—As to what constitutes due process of law, generally—see notes to People v. O'Brien, 2 L.R.A. 255; Kuntz v. Sumption, 2 L.R.A. 655; Re Gannon, 5 L.R.A. 359; Ulman v. Baltimore, 11 L.R.A. 224; Gilman v. Tucker, 13 L.R.A. 304; Pearson v. Yewdall, 24 L. ed. U. S. 436; and Wilson v. North Carolina, 42 L. ed. U. S. 865.

As to validity of class legislation, generally—see notes to State v. Goodwill, 6 L.R.A. 621; and State v. Loomis, 21 L.R.A. 789.

As to constitutional equality of privileges, immunities, and protection, generally—see note to Louisville Safety Vault & T. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 14 L.R.A. 579.

On liability of editor or manager of newspaper for libel published without his knowledge—see note to Folwell v. Miller, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 332.

Digitized by Google

the committing magistrate himself, and not simply to an official accuser.

Re Rule of Court, 3 Woods, 502, Fed. Cas. No. 12,126; United States v. Tureaud, 20 Fed. 621; State v. Gleason, 32 Kan. 245, 4 Pac. 363, 5 Am. Crim. Rep. 172; Swart v. Kimball, 43 Mich. 443, 5 N. W. 635.

The right to a preliminary examination or hearing is manifestly a valuable right, especially in a jurisdiction where grand juries do not exist, and if such protection against unjust prosecution is accorded to one person or class of persons by the Philippine Commission, it is manifestly a denial of the equal protection of the laws not to accord it to others.

Re Lowrie, 8 Colo. 499, 54 Am. Rep. 558, 9 Pac. 489; Re Jilz, 3 Mo. App. 243; People v. Mangold, 71 Mich. 335, 39 N. W. 6; People ex rel. Jeschly v. Police Justice, 7 Mich. 456.

Ocampo was not and is not proprietor of the paper.

8 Cyc. 683; Folwell v. Miller, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 332, 75 C. C. A. 489, 145 Fed. 495, 7 Ann. Cas. 455; Rex v. Gutch, Moody & M. 437.

Not only is an "administrator" not within the language of the statute, but he is also not within the considerations which have suggested that responsibility for the publication of a libelous article should be imposed upon the proprietor and editor.

Folwell v. Miller, supra; Mecabe v. Jones, 10 Daly, 223; Weil v. Nevin, 1 Monaghan (Pa.) 65; Spooner v. Daniels, Fed. Cas. No. 13,244a.

Solicitor General Davis argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error:

Trial upon information is due process of law.

Bolln v. Nebraska, 176 U. S. 83, 44 L. ed. 382, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 287; Davis v. Burke, 179 U. S. 399, 45 L. ed. 249, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 210; Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 28 L. ed. 232, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 111, 292; Maxwell v. Dow, 176 U. S. 581, 44 L. ed. 597, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 448, 494; McNulty v. California, 149 U. S. 645, 37 L. ed. 882, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 959.

Investigation by the prosecuting attorney, with the aid of compulsory process, is an adequate substitute for preliminary examination before a committing magistrate.

United States v. McGovern, 6 Philippine, 621; United States v. Raymundo, 14 Philippine, 416; United States v. Wilson, 4 Philippine, 317.

The information, being under oath, was a sufficient showing of probable cause.

Ackerman v. State, 7 Wyo. 504, 54 Pac. 228; State v. Belding, 43 Or. 95, 71 Pac. 330; State v. McGilvery, 20 Wash. 240, 55 Pac. 115; United States v. Ronzone, 14 Blatchf. 69, Fed. Cas. No. 16,192.

Act No. 612, although confined to the city of Manila, does not deny to plaintiffs in error or to others the equal protection of the laws.

Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Gardner v. Michigan, 199 U. S. 325, 50 L. ed. 212, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 106; Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 30 L. ed. 578, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Missouri v. Lewis (Bowman v. Lewis) 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. ed. 989.

The words "proprietor" and "owner" may be treated as fairly synonymous.

Ferguson v. Arthur, 117 U. S. 482, 29 L. ed. 979, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 861; Koppel v. Downing, 11 App. D. C. 93; Latham v. Roach, 72 Ill. 179; Yeungling v. Schile, 20 Blatchf. 452, 12 Fed. 97.

One who, as owner or proprietor, furnishes the machinery, the money, or the men to circulate a publication, cannot shut his eyes to its contents and so escape responsibility.

Folwell v. Miller, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 332, 75 C. C. A. 489, 145 Fed. 495, 7 Ann. Cas. 455; Gebhardt v. England, 8 N. J. L. J. 146; Ickes v. State, 16 Ohio C. C. 31, 8 Ohio C. D. 442; McDonald v. Woodruff, 2 Dill. 244, Fed. Cas. No. 8,770; Perret v. New Orleans Times Newspaper, 25 La. Ann. 170; Townshend, Slander & Libel, 4th ed. § 123.

The supreme court of the Philippine Islands had the power to increase the punishment of Kalaw.

Dowdell v. United States, 221 U. S. 325, 55 L. ed. 753, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 590; Flemister v. United States, 207 U. S. 372, 52 L. ed. 252, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 129; Pico v. United States, 228 U. S. 225, 57 L. ed. 812, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 482; Trono v. United States, 199 U. S. 521, 50 L. ed. 292, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 121, 4 Ann. Cas. 773; United States v. Abijan, 1 Philippine, 83; United States v. Atienza, 1 Philippine, 736.

Mr. Justice Pitney delivered the opinion of the court:

On November 5, 1908, an information was filed in the court of first instance of the city of Manila, charging plaintiffs in error, with others, as editors, proprietors, owners, directors, writers, managers, administrators, printers, and publishers of the newspaper "El Renacimiento," with publishing in that city a libel against Dean C. Worcester, then a member of the Philippine Commission. The information was subscribed and sworn to by the acting prosecuting attorney, and appended to it, and likewise sworn to by him, was the following declaration: [93] "A preliminary investigation has been conducted under my direction, having examined the witnesses under oath, in accordance with the provisions of § 39 of act 183 (Manila charter), as amended by § 2 of act 612 of the Philippine Commission." Both affidavits were made before the judge of the court of first instance, who thereupon issued warrants of arrest, pursuant to which the parties accused were on the same day brought before the court. The information was read to them, and the court allowed them until November 7th to answer. Their attorney, being present, asked that they be furnished with a copy of the information, which request was granted, and a copy was delivered to each of the accused. Thereafter, and on November 7th, before entering any demurrer or answer, they moved to vacate the order of arrest, upon the ground that it was made without any preliminary investigation held by the court, and without any tribunal, magistrate, or other competent authority having first determined that the alleged crime had been committed, and that there was probable cause to believe the defendants guilty of it; the procedure adopted being, as was claimed, in violation of §§ 12 and 13 of General Orders, No. 58, issued by the military governor April 23, 1910, and of paragraphs 1, 3, 11, and 18 of § 5 of the Philippines bill, enacted by the Congress of the United States on July 1, 1902; and it was insisted that § 2 of act No. 612 of the Philippine Commission, which took from accused persons in the city of Manila the right to a preliminary investigation, was contrary to the cited paragraphs of the Philippines bill, because it provided that accused persons in that city might be deprived of their liberty without due process of law, denied to the inhabitants of that city the equal protection of the law, deprived persons detained there to answer for a criminal offense of the "proper judicial proceedings," and violated the guaranty against arbitrary detention.

Digitized by Google

[94] This motion being overruled, defendants moved for an order requiring the prosecuting attorney to submit to the court and to them for examination the proceedings of the preliminary investigation alleged to have been conducted by him. This motion was likewise overruled.

Defendants then asked the court to hold a preliminary investigation before calling upon them to either demur to or answer the complaint. This motion being denied, demurrers were filed, which were overruled, and the defendants were called upon to plead to the information. They stood mute, and a plea of not guilty was entered for each of them. Upon their request, separate trials were granted. Ocampo was found guilty, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment and to pay a fine of 2,000 pesos and one fifth of the costs of the action. Kalaw was also found guilty, and sentenced to nine months' imprisonment and to pay a fine of 3,000 pesos and one fifth of the costs. Upon their writ of error, the supreme court of the Philippine Islands affirmed the judgment as to Ocampo, and modified the sentence imposed upon Kalaw so as to increase the period of his imprisonment to twelve months. 18 Philippine, 1. The present writ of error was then sued out.

The insistence is here renewed, that the arrest and trial of plaintiffs in error were without a preliminary finding of probable cause, and therefore in violation of rights secured to them by the Philippine Bill of Rights (act of July 1, 1902, § 5, chap. 1369, 32 Stat. at L. 692). This act, following the provisions of certain of the Amendments of the Constitution of the United States, declares, inter alia:

"Sec 5. That no law shall be enacted in said islands which shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law or deny to any person therein the equal protection of the laws.

. . . . . .

[95] "That no person shall be held to answer for a criminal offense without due process of law; . . .

. . . . . .

"That no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation. . . . ".

Prior to its enactment, and under date April 23, 1900, General Orders, No. 58, had been promulgated by the military governor, amending the Criminal Code of Procedure in certain respects, and providing by §§ 12 and 13 that every person making complaint charging the commission of a crime must inform the magistrate of all persons believed to have any knowledge of its commission, whereupon the magistrate must issue subpœnas requiring them to attend as witnesses, and must examine the informant or prosecutor and the witnesses, and take their depositions in writing, and, if satisfied from the investigation that the crime complained of had been committed, and that there was reasonable ground to believe that the party charged had committed it, the magistrate must issue an order of arrest.

By § 40 of act No. 183 of the Philippine Commission (the Manila charter, enacted August 1, 1901), municipal courts with criminal jurisdiction were established, and were empowered to conduct preliminary examinations, and to release, or commit and bind over, any person charged with an offense, to secure his appearance before the proper court; it being, among other things, provided that "every person arrested shall, without unnecessary delay, be brought before a municipal court or a court of first instance for preliminary hearing, release on bail, or trial."

Digitized by Google

Section 44 provided for two justices of the peace for the city of Manila, to exercise within the city the civil jurisdiction conferred upon justices of the peace in act No. 136; but they were debarred from exercising any criminal jurisdiction, such jurisdiction within the city being confined to courts of first instance and the municipal courts.

[96] By act No. 186 (August 5, 1901), the existing courts of justices of the peace in the city of Manila were abolished, and civil actions and proceedings then pending therein were transferred to the courts of justices of the peace established under act No. 183, while pending criminal actions and proceedings were transferred to the municipal courts established under act No. 183.

Act No. 194 (August 10, 1901), in its 1st section provides: "Every justice of the peace in the Philippine Islands is hereby invested with authority to make preliminary investigation of any crime alleged to have been committed within his municipality, jurisdiction to hear and determine which is by law now vested in the judges of courts of first instance." And it is by the same section made the duty of every justice of the peace, when written complaint under oath is made to him that a crime has been committed within his municipality, and there is reason to believe that any person has committed it, or when he has knowledge of facts tending to show the commission of a crime within his municipality by any person, to issue an order for the arrest of the accused, and have him brought before the justice for preliminary examination. Section 2 prescribes the procedure, which accords to the accused the right to examine the complaint and affidavits, to be present and hear and cross-examine the witnesses for the government, to offer witnesses in his own behalf, and give his own testimony if he desires; and "upon the conclusion of the preliminary investigation, if the justice of the peace is of the opinion that there is reasonable cause to believe that an offense has been committed and that the accused is guilty thereof, he shall so declare, and shall adjudge that the accused be remanded to jail for safe-keeping to await the action of the judge or court of first instance, unless he give bail, etc. On the other hand, if the justice of the peace be of the opinion that no crime has been committed, or that there is no reasonable ground to [97] believe the accused guilty thereof, the justice of the peace shall order the discharge of the accused. Such discharge, however, shall not operate as a final acquittal of the accused, but he may be again arrested and prosecuted for the same offense."

It was and is contended by plaintiffs in error that the procedure thus indicated ought to have been followed in their case.

The prosecution proceeded upon the theory that the above requirements as to preliminary examination and the finding of probable cause were repealed as to the city of Manila by act No. 612 of the Philippine Commission (February 3, 1903), § 2 of which provides:

"In cases triable only in the court of first instance in the city of Manila, the defendant shall have a speedy trial, but shall not be entitled as of right to a preliminary examination in any case where the prosecuting attorney, after a due investigation of the facts, under § 39 of the act of which this is an amendment [act No. 183], shall have presented an information against him in proper form: Provided, however, that the court of first instance may make such summary investigation into the case as it may deem necessary to enable it to fix bail or determine whether the offense is bailable."

Section 39 of the charter act, here referred to, provides:

"The prosecuting attorney of the city of Manila shall have charge of the prosecution of all crimes, misdemeanors, and violations of city ordinances, in the court of first instance and the municipal courts of the city of Manila. He shall investigate all charges of crimes, misdemeanors, and violations of ordinances, and prepare the necessary informations, or make the necessary complaints against the persons accused, and discharge all other duties in respect to criminal prosecutions enjoined upon provincial fiscals in the general provincial act and the Criminal Code of Procedure. . . . The prosecuting attorney or any [98] of his assistants may, if he deems it wise, conduct investigations in respect to crimes, misdemeanors, and violations of ordinances by taking oral evidence of reputed witnesses, and for this purpose may, by subpœna, summon witnesses to appear and testify under oath before him, and the attendance or evidence of an absent or recalcitrant witness may be enforced by application to the municipal court or the court of first instance."

It was this procedure that was followed in the present case. If act No. 612 is consistent with the Declaration of Rights contained in § 5 of the act of Congress of July 1, 1902, there can be no question that it necessarily operates to repeal, with respect to the city of Manila, inconsistent provisions previously in force there, as above mentioned.

Digitized by Google

Section 5 of the act of Congress contains no specific requirement of a presentment or indictment by grand jury, such as is contained in the 5th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. And in this respect the Constitution does not, of its own force, apply to the Islands. Hawaii v. Mankichi, 190 U. S. 197, 47 L. ed. 1016, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 787, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 465; Dorr v. United States, 195 U. S. 138, 49 L. ed. 128, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 808, 1 Ann. Cas. 697; Dowdell v. United States, 221 U. S. 325, 332, 55 L. ed. 753, 757, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 590.

That the requirement of an indictment by grand jury is not included within the guaranty of "due process of law" is, of course, well settled. Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 28 L. ed. 232, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 111, 292; McNulty v. California, 149 U. S. 645, 37 L. ed. 882, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 959; Dowdell v. United States, 221 U. S. 325, 332, 55 L. ed. 753, 757, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 590; Lem Woon v. Oregon, 229 U. S. 586, 589, 57 L. ed. 1340, 1341, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 783, and cases cited.

It is contended that since act No. 612 denies to the inhabitants of Manila the right to a preliminary examination which is accorded to all other people in the Islands, it denies the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the act of Congress. But it was long ago decided that this guaranty does not require territorial uniformity. In Missouri v. Lewis (Bowman v. Lewis) 101 U. S. 22, 30, 25 L. ed. 989, 992, this court (by Mr. Justice Bradley) said:

"The last restriction [of the 14th Amendment], [99] as to the equal protection of the laws, is not violated by any diversity in the jurisdiction of the several courts as to subject-matter, amount, or finality of decision, if all persons within the territorial limits of their respective jurisdictions have an equal right, in like cases and under like circumstances, to resort to them for redress. Each state has the right to make political subdivisions of its territory for municipal purposes, and to regulate their local government. As respects the administration of justice, it may establish one system of courts for cities and another for rural districts, one system for one portion of its territory and another system for another portion. Convenience, if not necessity, often requires this to be done, and it would seriously interfere with the power of a state to regulate its internal affairs to deny to it this right. We think it is not denied or taken away by anything in the Constitution of the United States, including the Amendments thereto."

And see Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 72, 30 L. ed. 578, 580, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Chappell Chemical & Fertilizer Co. v. Sulphur Mines Co. 172 U. S. 474, 43 L. ed. 520, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 268; Mallett v. North Carolina, 181 U. S. 589, 598, 45 L. ed. 1015, 1020, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 241.

It is, however, further contended that act No. 612 only undertakes to deny to the inhabitants of the city the right to a preliminary investigation when the prosecuting attorney sees fit to conduct an ex parte examination, and that it does not cover the subject of probable cause for the arrest of the accused, or affect the right accorded by §§ 12 and 13 of General Orders, No. 58, and by that paragraph of § 5 of the act of Congress of July 1, 1902, which declares "that no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation." In overruling this contention the supreme court of the Philippine Islands followed its previous rulings in United States v. Wilson, 4 Philippine, 317, 322; United States v. McGovern, 6 Philippine, 621, 623; United States v. Raymundo, 14 Philippine, 416, 436.

[100] It is insisted that the finding of probable cause is a judicial act, and cannot properly be delegated to a prosecuting attorney. We think, however, that it is erroneous to regard this function, as performed by committing magistrates generally, or under General Orders, No. 58, as being judicial in the proper sense. There is no definite adjudication. A finding that there is no probable cause is not equivalent to an acquittal, but only entitles the accused to his liberty for the present, leaving him subject to rearrest. It is expressly so provided by § 14 of General Orders, No. 58, as it is by § 2 of act 194, above quoted. Such was the nature of the duty of a committing magistrate in the common-law practice, and it is recognized in Rev. Stat. § 1014, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 716. Benson v. McMahon, 127 U. S. 457, 462, 463, 32 L. ed. 234, 236, 237, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1240; Re Oteiza y Cortes, 136 U. S. 330, 335, 34 L. ed. 464, 467, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1031, 8 Am. Crim. Rep. 241; Todd v. United States, 158 U. S. 278, 283, 39 L. ed. 982, 983, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 889. In short, the function of determining that probable cause exists for the arrest of a person accused is only quasi judicial, and not such that, because of its nature, it must necessarily be confided to a strictly judicial officer or tribunal. By § 9 of the act of July 1,

Digitized by Google

1902 (32 Stat. at L. 695, chap. 1369), Congress enacted: "That the supreme court and the courts of first instance of the Philippine Islands shall possess and exercise jurisdiction as heretofore provided and such additional jurisdiction as shall hereafter be prescribed by the government of said Islands, subject to the power of said government to change the practice and method of procedure. The municipal courts of said Islands shall possess and exercise jurisdiction as heretofore provided by the Philippine Commission subject in all matters to such alteration and amendment as may be hereafter enacted by law;" etc. Here we find clear warrant for modifications of the practice and procedure; and since § 5 of the same act (quoted above) does not prescribe how "probable cause" shall be determined, it is, in our opinion, as permissible for the local legislature to confide this duty to a prosecuting [101] officer as to intrust it to a justice of the peace. Consequently, a preliminary investigation conducted by the prosecuting attorney of the city of Manila, under act No. 612, and upon which he files a sworn information against the party accused, is a sufficient compliance with the requirement "that no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation."

The views above expressed render it unnecessary for us to consider whether the objections thus far dealt with were waived by the plaintiffs in error when they gave bond at the time of their arrest.

It is next insisted that the conviction of Ocampo was erroneous for want of evidence that he was a proprietor of the newspaper or participated in the publication of the libel. The law is to be found in act No. 277 of the Philippine Commission (Phil. Penal Code 1911, p. 167), of which two sections may be quoted:

"Sec. 2. Every person who wilfully and with a malicious intent to injure another publishes or procures to be published any libel shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $2,000, or imprisonment for not exceeding one year, or both."

"Sec. 6. Every author, editor, or proprietor of any book, newspaper, or serial publication is chargeable with the publication of any words contained in any part of such book or number of each newspaper or serial as fully as if he were the author of the same."

The evidence abundantly supports the conclusion of the courts below that Ocampo was the administrator, manager, and one of the owners of the newspaper known as "El Renacimiento," and there was no error in holding him to be a proprietor within the meaning of § 6.

Finally, it is contended that the supreme court of the Philippines had no jurisdiction to increase the punishment of Kalaw. The court was established by act No. 136 of the Philippine Commission (June 11, 1901), with original [102] and appellate jurisdiction. By § 18 it was given appellate jurisdiction over the courts of first instance; and by § 39 it was enacted that "the existing audiencia or supreme court is hereby abolished, and the supreme court provided by this act is substituted in place thereof." It is in effect conceded that under the Spanish system the courts of first instance were deemed examining courts, having a sort of preliminary jurisdiction, and that their judgments of conviction or acquittal were not final until the case had been passed upon in the audiencia or supreme court. But it is contended that this was so far changed by General Orders, No. 58, §§ 42, 43, 44, and 50, and by act No. 194 of the Philippine Commission, § 4 (August 10, 1901), that the judgments of the court of first instance are final unless an appeal be taken. And so it was held, with respect to cases other than capital, in Kepner v. United States, 195 U. S. 100, 121, 49 L. ed. 114, 121, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 797, 1 Ann. Cas. 655. But this does not settle the question of the jurisdiction of the supreme court of the Islands where an appeal is taken. In the acts referred to, the right of the government, as well as of the defendant, to appeal from the judgment in a criminal case, was recognized. In the Kepner Case it was held that § 5 of the act of Congress of July 1, 1902, in declaring that "no person for the same offense shall be twice put in jeopardy of punishment," prevented an appeal by the government from a judgment of acquittal in the court of first instance. But in Trono v. United States, 199 U. S. 521, 50 L. ed. 292, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 121, 4 Ann. Cas. 773, where the defendants appealed from a judgment of the court of first instance, which, upon an indictment for murder, had found them guilty of the lower crime of homicide, it was held the supreme court of the Islands had power to reverse the judgment and find the accused guilty of the higher crime of murder; distinguishing the Kepner Case. In Flemister v. United States, 207 U. S. 372, 52 L. ed. 252, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 129, a judgment of the insular supreme court, increasing the sentence imposed by the court of first instance, was affirmed. See [103] also Dowdell v. United States, 221 U. S. 325, 327, 55 L. ed. 753, 756, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 590; Pico v. United States, 228 U. S. 225, 230, 57 L. ed. 812, 814, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 482. In short, the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court of the Philippine Islands in criminal cases is not confined to mere errors of law, but extends to a review of the whole case. And such is the settled practice of that court. United States v. Abijan, 1 Philippine, 83, 85; United States v. Atienza, 1 Philippine, 736, 738.

Digitized by Google

Judgment affirmed.

P. A. CARLSON, Plff. in Err.,
v.
STATE OF WASHINGTON, ON THE RELATION OF CHARLES P. CURTISS.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 103–117.)

Error to state court — Federal question — how raised.

1. A decree of the highest state court, which affirmed a decree below, adjudging a person to be in contempt, is reviewable in the Federal Supreme Court, where the state court, instead of disregarding the claim of Federal right set up by defendant in his answer, on the ground that it had been abandoned in the trial court, recognized the Federal contention, and by its decision necessarily overruled it.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1168–1279, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Error to state court — review of facts.

2. The Federal Supreme Court, when reviewing the judgment of a state court, must examine the evidence, if the state court's findings are inadequate, in order to determine what facts might reasonably be found therefrom, and which would furnish a basis for the asserted Federal right.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 2175–2208, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Canals — altering established water level — authority of War Department.

3. The War Department cannot be regarded as having authority to order the blasting out of the embankment at the head of a ship canal under construction, connecting Lake Washington with Salmon bay, on Puget sound, thereby lowering the Lake level, where, prior to the river and harbor act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. at L. 630, chap. 382), all that was done by authority of Congress on the part of the Federal government (aside from surveys and estimates and the acceptance of a conveyance of lands for the right of way) consisted of dredging work in Salmon bay, the first construction work authorized in aid of the ship canal proper being provided for by that act, and being therein limited to the construction by the government of a lock at the narrows at the entrance to Salmon bay, in the expectation that the excavation in the waterway above the lock would be done by state agency, Congress having at all times scrupulously refrained from authorizing anything to be done on the part of the Federal government with reference to lowering the level of Lake Washington, raising the level of Salmon bay, or otherwise altering the level of any part of the waterway, and expressly providing in such statute that all responsibility for this should be assumed by the state agency; and it is immaterial that the title to the right of way was vested in the United States, and that it was presumably intended that the Secretary of War should take charge of the work when finished.

[Matters as to canals, see Canals, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Contempt — disobedience of injunction — justifying under executive order.

4. A disobedience of a decree of a state court enjoining any further excavation of the ship canal connecting Lake Washington with the tidal waters of Puget sound cannot be justified on the ground that the acts charged as amounting to a contempt were done under the direction of the officials of the War Department, acting in pursuance of and in accordance with acts of Congress, if the War Department had no authority to order such action.

[Matters as to contempt, see Contempt, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 307.]

Submitted March 17, 1914. Decided May 25, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Washington to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Superior Court of Thurston County, in that state, punishing a contempt of court. Affirmed.

See same case below, 66 Wash. 639, 120 Pac. 104.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—On the general subject of writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4 L. ed. U. S. 97; Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884; and Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

On what adjudications of state courts can be brought up for review in the Supreme Court of the United States by writ of error to those courts—see note to Apex Transp. Co. v. Garbade, 62 L.R.A. 513.

On how and when questions must be raised and decided in a state court in order to make a case for a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States—see note to Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. McGrew, 63 L.R.A. 33.

On what questions the Federal Supreme Court will consider in reviewing the judgments of state courts—see note to Missouri ex rel. Hill v. Dockery, 63 L.R.A. 571.

On review of questions of fact upon writ of error to a state court—see note to Smiley v. Kansas, 49 L. ed. U. S. 546.

On construction and operation of canals—see note to Mullen v. Lake Drummond Canal & Water Co. 61 L.R.A. 833.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Corwin S. Shank submitted the cause for plaintiff in error:

The injunction which the plaintiff in error disobeyed was in effect an order to tie the hands of the United States government, and was therefore entirely beyond the jurisdiction of the court which granted it.

Belknap v. Schild, 161 U. S. 10, 40 L. ed. 599, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 443; International Postal Supply Co. v. Bruce, 194 U. S. 601, 48 L. ed. 1134, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 820; Re Neagle, 135 U. S. 1, 34 L. ed. 55; Ohio v. Thomas, 173 U. S. 276, 43 L. ed. 699, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 453; Boske v. Comingore, 177 U. S. 459, 44 L. ed. 846, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 701; Minnesota v. Hitchcock, 185 U. S. 373, 46 L. ed. 954, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650; Oregon v. Hitchcock, 202 U. S. 60, 50 L. ed. 935, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 568; Campbell v. Waite, 31 C. C. A. 403, 59 U. S. App. 734, 88 Fed. 102; Re Weeks, 82 Fed. 729; Stegall v. Thurman, 175 Fed. 813; United States v. Lipsett, 156 Fed. 65; Re Turner, 119 Fed. 231.

No appearance for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Pitney delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff in error was adjudged by the superior court of Thurston county, in the state of Washington, to be in contempt of that court, in that, with notice of a decree made by it, restraining and enjoining any further excavation of the Lake Washington canal, or any lowering of the waters of Lake Washington, he proceeded to blow out an embankment at the head of the canal, which, until that [105] time, held the waters of the lake at their natural level, so as to permit these waters to flow into the canal and thereby lower the level of the lake. The supreme court of the state affirmed the judgment (66 Wash. 639, 120 Pac. 104), and the case comes here under § 237, Judicial Code [36 Stat. at L. 1156, chap. 231, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 227], upon the ground that the acts done by plaintiff in error, and because of which he was held to be in contempt of court, were done under the direction and authorization of officers of the War Department of the United States, acting in the performance of their duties in constructing a public improvement consisting of a ship canal extending from Lake Washington to Salmon bay, in pursuance of statutes of the United States.

Our examination of the Federal question is somewhat embarrassed because the findings and statements of fact by the state courts contain no finding respecting some of the facts that are alleged as the basis of the present contention of plaintiff in error. The inadequacy is attributable, no doubt, to the mode in which the alleged Federal right was asserted. Plaintiff in error having been brought before the trial court upon an order to show cause, based upon a sworn complaint or information made by the relator, setting forth circumstantially the blowing out of the embankment in question by one Erickson and by plaintiff in error as his foreman, the latter in his answer denied that he blew out the embankment upon the orders of Erickson, and on the contrary averred that he "did so by express orders of the engineering department of the United States government." There was testimony tending to support this averment, but the trial court, while making no specific finding upon the subject, in effect held that the work was done in behalf of the state of Washington, one of the parties to the cause in which the restraining decree was made. To its findings numerous exceptions were taken, but in none of these was any Federal right asserted, nor was any deficiency in the findings suggested. The supreme [106] court, however, instead of disregarding the claim of Federal right upon the ground that it had been abandoned in the trial court, recognized the contention of plaintiff in error that the "work was done under the direction of the United States engineers who had charge of the work for the government," and by its decision necessarily overruled it. We must therefore deal with the Federal question. North Carolina R. Co. v. Zachary, 232 U. S. 248, 257, ante, 591, 595, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305.

Among the assignments of error is one based upon the refusal of the supreme court to find as a fact that the acts for the performance of which plaintiff in error was held guilty of contempt were done under the direction and authorization of officials of the War Department of the United States, acting in pursuance of and in accordance with the acts of Congress. While, in ordinary cases, we are bound by the findings of the state court of last resort respecting matters of fact, it is hardly necessary to say that that court cannot, by omitting to pass upon the basic questions of fact, deprive a litigant of the benefit of a Federal right, any more than it could do so by making findings that were wholly without support in the evidence. And just as this court, where its appellate jurisdiction is properly invoked and all the evidence is brought before it, will, if necessary for a decision of a Federal question, examine the entire record in order to determine whether there is evidence to support the findings of the state court, so it is our duty, in the absence of adequate findings, to examine the evidence in order to determine what facts might reasonably be found therefrom, and which would furnish a basis for the asserted Federal right. Southern P. Co. v. Schuyler, 227 U. S. 601, 611, 57 L. ed. 662, 669, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 901, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, and cases cited.

Digitized by Google

Since the present record appears to contain all the evidence that was submitted to the state courts, we proceed to supplement the statement made by the supreme court by adding such further facts pertaining to the asserted [107] claim of Federal right as might reasonably have been found, with the following result:

One Erickson, a general contractor, had entered into a contract for excavating a part of the Lake Washington canal. The contract was in writing, dated August 16, 1910, and was made between "Arthur Williams, Captain Corps Engineers, United States Army, hereinafter represented as the contracting officer representing the state of Washington, on the one part, and C. J. Erickson, of Seattle, in the county of King, state of Washington, hereinafter designated as the contractor, of the second part." The work covered by the contract was nearing completion when, on October 22, 1910, in an action pending in the superior court in and for the county of Thurston, between William L. Bilger and others, plaintiffs, and the state of Washington, King county, and Erickson, defendants, upon the application of the plaintiffs for an order enjoining defendants from removing the embankment between the excavated portion of the canal and Lake Washington, the court, being satisfied that such removal might tend to lower the waters of the lake to the detriment and damage of the plaintiffs, announced that a restraining order would issue. In accordance with this announcement a formal decree was made under date October 28. Erickson had notice of the announced decree, and plaintiff in error, who was acting as his foreman upon the work, had written notice of it on October 26, after which he proceeded to blow up the embankment, contrary to the prohibition. Under the state practice, the decree bound them from the time they were informed of it, although it was not yet formally entered. There was evidence tending to show that plaintiff in error acted under orders coming not from Erickson, but from Captain Williams; and his own testimony was to this effect. Other evidence tended to show that the canal strip or right of way was in the control of the War Department, with a watchman actually upon [108] the ground. The contract was not introduced in evidence, and there was only meager testimony as to its contents, which left it doubtful whether the final work of excavating the opening between the head of the canal and the lake was within its provisions. Since there is no distinct finding upon this subject, we will consider the case in both aspects.

The act of Congress especially invoked as authority for what was done by plaintiff in error under direction of Captain Williams is the river and harbor act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. at L. 630, 666, chap. 382), which contains the following:

"Puget sound—Lake Washington waterway: Continuing improvement by the construction of a double lock, with the necessary accessory works, to be located at 'the Narrows,' at the entrance to Salmon bay, in accordance with the project set forth in House Document numbered nine hundred and fifty-three, Sixtieth Congress, first session, one hundred and fifty thousand dollars; and the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such material and work as may be necessary to complete said lock and accessory works, to be paid for as funds may be provided from time to time by law, not to exceed in the aggregate two million, two hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars, including the amount herein appropriated; Provided, that before beginning said work, or making such contract or contracts, the Secretary of War shall be satisfied that King county, or some other local agency, will do the excavation in the waterway above the lock to the dimensions recommended in said project, and will also secure the United States from liability for any claims or damages on account of the grant made to James A. Moore or his assigns by the act of Congress approved June eleventh, nineteen hundred and six [34 Stat. at L. 231, chap. 3072, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1535], or on account of the lowering of the level of Lake Washington, raising the level of Salmon bay, or any other alteration of the level of any part of said waterway."

[109] In order to correctly appreciate the meaning and effect of this language, it is necessary to refer to House Document No. 953, 60th Cong., 1st Sess. (vol. 20), and to certain previous acts of Congress therein mentioned; and while reviewing these acts we may at the same time consider whether any of them contains any justification of what was done by plaintiff in error.

By way of preface, it should be stated that the city of Seattle lies between the tidal waters of Puget sound and Lake Washington, the latter being a body of fresh water 2 miles or more in width and 19 miles or more in length, and having a natural level 30 feet or more above mean low water in the sound. Between this lake and the sound is Lake Union, a smaller body of fresh water (covering about 1,000 acres), and having a natural level much lower than that of Lake Washington, yet considerably above the tide. The lakes had independent natural outlets. Salmon bay is a small body of water connected through Shilshole bay with Puget sound, and is (or was) affected by the ebb and flow of the tide. The outlet of Salmon bay is known as "the Narrows." Salmon bay and Lake Union are wholly within the exterior limits of Seattle, and the city has also a considerable frontage on Lake Washington. This lake, as well as the city, lies within the limits of King county.

Digitized by Google

As early as the year 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 452, chap. 907, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3527), Congress authorized a survey and estimate to be made for a ship canal to connect the waters of these lakes with Puget sound. A survey and report were made accordingly, but nothing resulted until 1894 (28 Stat. at L. 360, chap. 299), when Congress appropriated $25,000 for dredging Salmon bay, and the improvement of the waterway connecting its waters with the lakes, but with a proviso that no part of the money should be expended upon the improvement of the connecting waterway until the entire right of way and a release [110] from all liability to adjacent property owners had been secured to the United States free of cost and to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War. By act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. at L. 948, chap. 189), $5,000 of this amount was authorized to be expended in making a definite survey and location of the improvement and in preparing a cadastral map showing each property required to be deeded to the United States, or from which a release was required. The act of June 3, 1896 (29 Stat. at L. 234, chap. 314, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1540), appropriated $150,000, again with the proviso that no part of it should be expended on the improvement of the waterway connecting the sound with the lakes until the entire right of way and a release from all liability to adjacent property owners had been secured to the United States; and with the further declaration that the canal might be constructed either by the Smith's cove route or by the Shilshole bay route, in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

In 1898 a Board of Engineer Officers was appointed to determine the choice, and recommended the Shilshole bay route, with a lock at the Narrows, near the foot of Salmon bay. This recommendation was approved by the Secretary of War April 14, 1899, and right of way proceedings were completed and deeds obtained and accepted by the Secretary of War in 1900.

The legislature of Washington, by act approved February 8, 1901 (Sess. Laws, p. 7), granted to the United States the right to construct and operate the ship canal upon any lands belonging to and waters of the state in King county, within limits to be defined by the plans and specifications for the improvement as approved by the Secretary of War, with the right to raise the waters of Salmon bay and to lower the waters of Lake Washington in the prosecution of the improvement.

Congress was still unwilling to sanction any particular project for the canal, and by act of June 13, 1902 (32 Stat. at L. 347, chap. 1079), while an appropriation of $160,000 was [111] made under the usual designation for "improving waterway connecting Puget sound with Lakes Union and Washington," it was provided that this sum, together with the unexpended balance to the credit of the improvement, should be expended in dredging a low-water channel 10 feet in depth from Shilshole bay through Salmon bay to the wharves at Ballard (at the head of the bay); with a further proviso that a board of engineers should be appointed by the Secretary of War to make surveys, examinations, and investigations to determine the feasibility and advisability of constructing a canal with necessary locks and dams, connecting Puget sound with the lakes, of sufficient width and depth to accommodate the largest commercial and naval vessels, to examine the route for a similar canal connecting Elliott bay with the lakes, and to report upon the relative advantages of all proposed routes; and it was declared that "nothing herein shall be construed as the adoption of any project for the construction of a waterway connecting Puget sound with Lakes Union and Washington." The board reported, January 6, 1903, that a canal sufficient to accommodate the largest commercial and naval vessels was feasible, but not advisable, chiefly because of the great cost, estimated at over $8,000,000.

The act of March 3, 1905 (33 Stat. at L. 1144, chap. 1482), made a further appropriation of $125,000, limited to dredging the channel to Ballard.

Meanwhile, it appears, the people of Seattle had become discouraged about the prospect of obtaining government aid, and therefore accepted the proposition of one James A. Moore to build upon the government right of way a canal with a suitable timber lock, if the county of King would contribute $500,000 toward it; and an act of Congress of June 11, 1906 (34 Stat. at L. 231, chap. 3072, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, p. 1535), was secured, authorizing him to proceed with this work, subject to such conditions and stipulations as should be imposed by the [112] Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of

Digitized by Google

War for the protection of navigation and the property and other interests of the United States, to include provision for the discharge of waters from Lakes Union and Washington, and afford adequate protection against claims for damages for changing the level of Lake Washington, and subject to provisos which required that plans and specifications should be approved by the Secretary of War, that Moore and his assigns should be liable for any damage occasioned by the construction of the lock and canal by overflow, by a lowering of the waters affected, or otherwise, and that the canal and lock when completed should be turned over to the United States ready for use and free of all expense.

The Moore plan included a timber lock between the lakes, and seems to have contemplated another lock to be constructed by the government at the mouth of Salmon bay. Shortly after the passage of the act just mentioned King county pledged its credit to the extent of $500,000 in aid of the Moore project. A little later however, the local interests inaugurated a movement for the installation of a permanent masonry lock in place of the timber lock, and legislative authorization was procured (act of March 18, 1907, Sess. Laws, p. 582) for the establishment of an assessment district in order to impose upon the shore lands benefited a part of the cost of the improvement. The same legislature supplemented the act of 1901 by a specific grant of a right of way over state lands between the lakes (act of March 16, 1907, Sess. Laws, p. 498).

About the same time Congress was again appealed to, and by act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat. at L. 1108, chap. 2509), the Secretary of War was authorized to "make a survey and estimate of cost of said waterway or canal with one lock, with a view to the construction of the same, in conjunction with the county authorities of King county or other agency, of sufficient size to accommodate the largest commercial or naval vessels afloat; or, if deemed more [113] advisable, with a view to the construction of a canal of less dimensions, and to submit dimensions and estimate of cost of same, together with a report upon what portion of said work will be done or contribution to be made by said county or other agency." And the provisions of the act of June 11, 1906, were thereby so modified as to permit Moore or his assigns to excavate a channel from deep water in Puget sound at the mouth of Salmon bay to deep water in Lake Washington, in lieu of constructing the canal and timber lock specified in that act. In June, 1907, Moore assigned his rights to a corporation created for the purpose of taking them over and co-operating with the assessment district in carrying out the work proposed to be done by local agencies; and it appears that some preliminary work was done upon the ground. By act of Congress of February 6, 1909 (35 Stat. at L. 613, chap. 83), the time allowed to Moore or his assigns for completion of the canal was extended until June 11, 1912.

In view of the history of the matter, the phrase "waterway or canal with one lock" in the act of 1907 evidently indicated a lock at the Narrows, and a continuous waterway thence to Lake Washington; and so it was construed. Pursuant to the authorization of Congress, an elaborate report of a survey and estimate of the cost of the proposed waterway was made by Major Chittenden, of the Engineer Corps, under date December 2, 1907, and submitted with the approval of the Division Engineer to the Chief of Engineers at Washington. It was reviewed by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and approved by them under date March 30, 1908, transmitted by the Chief of Engineers, with his approval, to the Secretary of War, and by the Acting Secretary transmitted to Congress under date May 20, 1908. It is this report and the accompanying documents which constitute House Doc. No. 953, 60th Congress, 1st Sess., vol. 20, referred to in the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. at L. 666, chap. 382), above quoted. [114] The project as thus submitted contemplated the construction of a double lock, to be located at the Narrows at the entrance to Salmon bay, and an unbroken waterway through Salmon bay and Lakes Union and Washington, the differences in level to be overcome by raising Salmon bay and lowering Lake Washington approximately to the level of Lake Union. With reference to that part of the act of 1907 requiring report to be made as to what portion of the work would be done or contribution made by King county or other agency, the recommendation was that, in lieu of a cash contribution, the local interests should be asked to do a specific portion of the work. Major Chittenden proposed that the government should build the lock, and that the local agency should excavate the canal. His recommendation to this effect was concurred in by the Division Engineer and by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and the board further recommended: "That the undertaking of the project by the United States be made contingent upon the furnishing to the Secretary of War of satisfactory evidence: First. That King county or other local agency will do the excavation in the waterway above the lock to the dimensions recommended. Second. That the said King county or other local agency will hold the United States free from any claims or damages on account of the grant made to James A. Moore or his assigns on account of the act of June 11, 1906. Third. That the said King county or other local agency will hold the United States free against any claims or damages on account of lowering the level of Lake Washington, raising the level of Salmon bay, or any other alteration of the level of any part of said waterway."

Digitized by Google

As will appear by reference to the act of 1910, these recommendations were approved and adopted by Congress as a part of the project, and the appropriation, as well as the authorization of the contract, was confined to the construction of a double lock at the Narrows. From the foregoing [115] review, it becomes evident that prior to this act all that was done by authority of Congress on the part of the Federal government (aside from surveys and estimates and the acceptance of a conveyance of lands for the right of way of the canal) consisted of dredging work in Salmon bay; and that the first construction work authorized in aid of the ship canal proper was that provided by the act of 1910, and was limited to the construction by the government of a lock at the Narrows. It is further evident that at all times, and notably in the act of 1910, Congress has scrupulously refrained from authorizing anything to be done on the part of the Federal government with reference to lowering the level of Lake Washington, raising the level of Salmon bay, or otherwise altering the level of any part of the waterway, and that by the act of 1910 it was expressly provided that all responsibility for this should be assumed by King county or some other local agency.

Now, the Bilger suit, as appears by the decree therein already mentioned, was brought by parties who were owners of shore lands abutting upon Lake Washington, and riparian rights pertaining thereto, and the action was based upon the injury threatened to their property and rights by the material lowering of the water of that lake, which was a necessary part of the public improvement. The defendants were the state, the county, and the contractor, and the object of the decree forbidding the further excavation of the canal was to prevent the lowering of the water to the detriment of plaintiffs' property rights. There is nothing to show that the United States had acquired any rights as against these plaintiffs or other property owners of the same class, and any assumption by the War Department of responsibility for interfering with the natural level of the lake is inconsistent with the whole course of legislation to which reference has been made, and especially with the act of 1910. And this renders more [116] clear, what would probably be sufficiently plain from the language above quoted from the instrument, that the contract of August 16, 1910, between Captain Williams and Erickson, was made not in behalf of the United States, but in behalf of the state of Washington. An engineer officer of the United States Army was probably selected to represent the state as a matter of convenience, in view of the fact that before acceptance of the finished work by the government, the approval of the Secretary of War was a necessary prerequisite. But this did not in any wise enlarge the authority of Captain Williams with respect to the performance of the agreement. The act of Congress gave him no authority to act in behalf of the Federal government with respect to the work of excavating the canal, or making a connection between it and Lake Washington which would necessarily lower the level of that lake. Hence it is a matter of no moment, for present purposes, whether the work for which plaintiff in error was held guilty of contempt of court, and which he claims was done under order of Captain Williams, was within or without the Erickson contract.

We are aware that the supreme court of the state of Washington, upon review of the decree in the Bilger suit, held that while the actual work of dredging the canal was done by the state and the county, it was done on behalf of the United States. It was for this reason, in part, that the decree awarding an injunction to restrain the further excavation of the canal was reversed. 63 Wash. 457, 467, 116 Pac. 19. So far as this view may have influenced the court in declaring the policy of the state, we have no concern with it. But we deem it clear that, under the acts of Congress, no agency for the Federal government could arise with respect to anything done in the construction of the canal or the lowering of the level of Lake Washington. Neither the fact that the title to the right of way was vested in the United States, nor [117] the presumed purpose that the Secretary of War should take charge of the work when finished, can override the evident policy of Congress that the canal should be accepted only when completed and ready for use, free of cost to the United States, and that the local interests should do the work of excavation and assume sole responsibility for lowering the level of the water.

Since we are of the opinion that Captain Williams derived no authority from the acts of Congress, it follows that the immunity here asserted with respect to acts done under his command is without legal support. And this renders it unnecessary to consider whether plaintiff in error, being subject to the restraint of the decree of the state court in the Bilger suit as an agent of Erickson, one of the parties thereto, could, without modification of that decree, have successfully claimed immunity for a violation of the restraint upon the plea that he acted under the authority of the Federal government. Upon this question, therefore, we express no opinion.

Digitized by Google

Judgment affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA v. STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 117–122.)

Supreme Court — original jurisdiction — suit between states — filing supplemental answer.

The extraordinary nature of the suit between the commonwealth of Virginia and the state of West Virginia, to determine the amount due to the former by the latter as its equitable share of the public debt of the original state of Virginia, which was assumed by West Virginia at the time of its creation as a state, requires that, contrary to the ordinary rules of legal procedure, the state of West Virginia be permitted, after the Federal Supreme Court has adjudged the amount due, save for clerical errors and the question of interest, to file a supplemental answer asserting the existence of credits which it is averred if properly considered would materially reduce the sum so fixed, and alleging various objections to the allowance of interest, although most of the items embraced in such supplemental answer were contained in the master's report, and all were available then for every defense now based upon them if their consideration had been pressed in the aspect and with the assertions of right now made.

[For other cases, see Supreme Court of the United States, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 2, Original.]

Argued April 16, 17, 1914. Decided June 8, 1914.

ORIGINAL BILL in equity, filed by the commonwealth of Virginia against the state of West Virginia, seeking an adjudication of the amount due to the former as the equitable share of the public debt of the original state of Virginia, which was assumed by the state of West Virginia at the time of its creation as a state. On motion of the state of West Virginia for leave to file a supplemental answer. Granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. A. Lilly, Attorney General of West Virginia, and Mr. John H. Holt, argued the cause, and, with Mr. Charles E. Hogg, filed a brief in support of the motion:

This being a controversy between two sovereign states, the court will afford the fullest opportunity to each of them to bring into the case every substantial matter in any manner bearing upon its settlement, and the widest latitude will be extended with reference to the mode of procedure to reach this end. The court will not concern itself with the ordinary rules of equity procedure observed in suits between individual persons. A case of this sort rests upon higher grounds than those involving merely personal rights and liabilities.

Washington v. Northern Securities Co. 185 U. S. 254, 46 L. ed. 897, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 623.

This court has only recognized certain rules in the exercise of its original jurisdiction as a matter of convenience, rather than of guidance, and probably to avoid confusion and embarrassment to the parties litigant.

Florida v. Georgia, 17 How. 478, 493, 15 L. ed. 181, 189.

In a case in which two sovereign states are contesting a question of boundary, the utmost liberality of practice should unquestionably be adopted in order to enable both parties to present their claims in their full strength.

Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 14 Pet. 210, 10 L. ed. 423; Iowa v. Illinois, 151 U. S. 238, 242, 38 L. ed. 145, 148, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 333.

Mr. V. B. Archer also filed a brief in support of the motion.

Messrs. William A. Anderson and Randolph Harrison argued the cause, and, with Mr. John Garland Pollard, Attorney General of Virginia, and Mr. John B. Moon, filed a brief in opposition.

Mr. Sanford Robinson argued the cause, and, with Mr. Holmes Conrad, also filed a brief in opposition.

Mr. Chief Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

This case, which was begun in 1906, was elaborately argued in 1907 on a demurrer, which was overruled. 206 U. S. 290, 51 L. ed. 1068, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 702. It was again argued in 1908 on a motion to appoint a master. 209 U. S. 514, 52 L. ed. 914, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 614. Before that officer there was an extended hearing, and a full report of all the matters involved was filed in March, 1910. It was then argued on a motion to take further testimony, and was ultimately heard in an argument which extended many [119] days, every party in interest being represented, in the month of January, 1911.

Digitized by Google

Notwithstanding these facts, when in March, 1911, the court came to decide the controversy, although it fully reviewed and passed upon the fundamental issues, as its obvious duty required it to do, and fixed the principal sum due by the state of West Virginia to the state of Virginia, in view of the consideration due to the parties as states, and that the cause was, as then said, "no ordinary commercial suit, but, . . . a quasi-international difference referred to this court in reliance upon the honor and constitutional obligations of the states concerned rather than upon ordinary remedies," the controversy was not completely and irrevocably disposed of, but was left open for a time not specified, to the end that any clerical errors that might have crept into the calculations of the sums due could be corrected, and to give the states time to consider the subject of liability for interest in the light of what had been decided, and to agree as to the rate and period of the interest to be paid on the principal sum which was determined. 220 U. S. 1, 55 L. ed. 353, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 330.

On the convening of the court in the following October, 1911, a motion was made on behalf of the state of Virginia to proceed at once to a final decree. Listening to the suggestion of the state of West Virginia to the effect that it desired further time to consider the subject, and in view of the public considerations which had prevailed when the decree was entered, the motion of Virginia was overruled. 222 U. S. 17, 56 L. ed. 71, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 4.

Yet further, when, in November, 1913, another motion on the part of Virginia was made to set the case down to be finally disposed of at once upon the statement that no agreement between the parties was possible, again giving heed to the request of West Virginia, through its constituted officers, for a postponement for a stated time, and to the statement that they were engaged in an honest endeavor [120] to deal with the controversy, and, if possible, to come to an agreement as to the subjects left open, the motion of Virginia was again refused (231 U. S. 89, ante, 135, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 29), and as it was possible to give to the state of West Virginia all the time which that state, in resisting the motion, asked, and yet secure against the possibility of the hearing being carried over to another term, the case was assigned for hearing on the 13th of April of this year. When that day was reached, the state of West Virginia, in accord with a motion filed some days before, prayed leave to be permitted to file a supplemental answer asserting the existence of credits which, if properly considered, would materially reduce the sum fixed as due to the state of Virginia, the said answer in addition asserting various grounds why interest should not be allowed in favor of Virginia and against West Virginia on the sum due. Resisting this request, the state of Virginia insists that the items embraced in the supplemental answer asked to be filed had in effect already entered into the considerations by which the principal sum due was fixed, and that if not, the case should not be postponed for the purpose of permitting the rights urged in the answer to be availed of because every item concerning such alleged rights was proved in the case before the master, was mentioned in his report, and was known or could have been known by the use of ordinary diligence by those representing West Virginia. And it is this controversy we now come to dispose of.

Without intimating any opinion whatever as to whether the items with which the proposed supplemental answer deals entered into the processes of calculation or reasoning by which the sum due was previously fixed, and moreover, without intimating any opinion as to how far the items embraced in the answer could serve as credits upon the sum previously found due, and therefore to that extent reduce the amount, we think it is obvious that most of the [121] items embraced in the answer were contained in the master's report, and in any event all were available then for every defense now based upon them if their consideration had been pressed in the aspect and with the assertions of right now made.

The question then is, Under these conditions ought the permission to file the supplemental answer be granted? We think it must be conceded that in a case between ordinary litigants the application of the ordinary rules of legal procedure would render it impossible, under the circumstances which we have stated, to grant the request. We are of the opinion, however, that such concession ought not to be here controlling. As we have pointed out, in acting in this case from first to last the fact that the suit was not an ordinary one concerning a difference between individuals but was a controversy between states, involving grave questions of public law, determinable by this court under the exceptional grant of power conferred upon it by the Constitution, has been the guide by which every step and every conclusion hitherto expressed has been controlled. And we are of the opinion that this guiding principle should not now be lost sight of, to the end that when the case comes ultimately to be finally and irrevocably disposed of, as come ultimately it must, in the absence of agreement between the parties, there may be no room for the slightest inference that the more restricted rules applicable to individuals have been applied to a great public controversy, or that anything but the largest justice, after the amplest opportunity to be heard, has in any degree entered into the disposition of the case. This conclusion, which we think is required by the duty owed to the moving state, also in our opinion operates no injustice to the opposing state, since it but affords an additional opportunity to guard against the possibility of error, and thus reach the result most consonant with the honor and dignity of both parties to the controversy.

Digitized by Google

[122] Because of these convictions, we therefore make the following order:

That the motion on the part of the state of West Virginia to file the supplemental answer be and the same is hereby granted; and that the averments in such answer be and the same shall be considered as traversed by the state of Virginia; that the subject-matter of the supplemental answer as traversed be at once referred for consideration and report to Charles E. Littlefield, Esq., the master before whom the previous hearings were had, with directions to hear and consider such evidence and testimony as to the matters set forth in the supplemental answer as the state of West Virginia may deem advisable to proffer, and such counter showing on the part of the state of Virginia as that state may deem advisable to make. The report on the subject to embrace the testimony so taken and the conclusions deduced therefrom, as well as the views of the master concerning the operation and effect of the proof thus offered, if any, upon the principal sum found to be due by the previous decree of this court. Nothing in this order to vacate or change in any manner or in any particular the previous decree, and the same to stand wholly unaffected by the order now made or any action taken thereunder until the examination and report herein provided for is made and this court acts upon the same. It is further directed that the proceedings before the master be so conducted as to secure a report on or before the 2d Monday of October, 1914.

[123] MANHATTAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK and United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, Plffs. in Err.,

v.

DAVID COHEN, Independent Executor of the Estate of Jacob Cohen, Deceased.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 123-137.)

Error to state court — Federal question — full faith and credit — decision on non-Federal grounds.

1. No question concerning the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution which will support a writ of error from the Federal Supreme Court is involved in a ruling of a state court that the validity of an assignment of life insurance policies must be tested by the law of the state of the residence of the insured as to the necessity of an insurable interest, rather than by the law of the state of the assignee's residence, where both parties, wholly independent of the existence of an insurable interest, affirmed the illegality of the transaction out of which the assignments of the policies grew because of the alleged gambling nature of such transaction, and the admitted facts without dispute established that situation, the only dispute being as to the consequences arising out of such illegality, as to which the defendant in error alone suggested that the consideration of full faith and credit controlled.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1465-1528, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Error to state court — frivolousness of Federal question — validity of statute penalizing insurance company's failure to pay claim.

2. The contention that the Texas statute imposing upon life insurance companies a liability to pay damages and an attorney's fee in case of default in the payment of a loss is repugnant to the provisions of U.

NOTE.—On validity of statutory provision for attorney's fee—see note to Builders' Supply Depot v. O'Connor, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 910.

On unconstitutional inequality or discrimination in statutes allowing attorneys' fees—see note to Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Dobney, 47 L. ed. U. S. 821.

Error to state courts in cases involving questions of the equal protection of the laws.

Whether the equal-protection-of-the-laws clause of U. S. Const., 14th Amend., constituted a bar to mandamus proceedings in a state court, is a Federal question. Williams v. Eggleston, 170 U. S. 304, 42 L. ed. 1047, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617.

A case presents a Federal question where the defense of the denial of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by U. S. Const., 14th Amend., is invoked, and is at least plausible on its face. American Sugar Ref. Co. v. Louisiana, 179 U. S. 89, 45 L. ed. 102, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 43.

Digitized by Google

S. Const., 14th Amend., has been so foreclosed by prior decisions as not to serve as the basis of a writ of error from the Federal Supreme Court to a state court to review a judgment enforcing such statutory penalty and damages, which rests upon the premise that the payment of the loss to one of two adverse claimants was one which took the insurance company out of the category of a mere stakeholder, seeking to discharge his duty in good faith, and placed it in the position of a person espousing the cause of one as against the other, and thereby subjecting himself to the legal consequences.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1110–1137; Constitutional Law, IV. a, 6, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Error to state court — Federal question — local or general law.

3. The action of a state court in declaring an assignment of life insurance policies to be void because of the gambling nature of the contract, while permitting the assignor to retain the price paid for such assignment, does not involve a Federal question which will support a writ of error from the Federal Supreme Court, where such action was involved in and controlled by the court's ruling concerning the alleged nature of the transaction, and the applicable principles of both local and general law.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1529–1572, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 160.]

Submitted April 17, 1914. Decided June 8, 1914.

The question must be a real and substantial one (see note to Offield v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 51 L. ed. U. S. 231).

The contention that a state railroad commissioner was denied the equal protection of the laws by his temporary suspension from office by the governor of the state by proceedings taken in accordance with the state laws and Constitution is too unfounded in substance to confer jurisdiction on the Supreme Court of the United States, where there was not, by reason of the statute and the proceedings under it, a plain and substantial departure from the fundamental principles upon which the government is based. Wilson v. North Carolina, 169 U. S. 586, 42 L. ed. 865, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 435.

And the claim that a forfeiture of the charter of a waterworks company for maintaining illegal rates by a decree of a state court after full hearing by all parties in a proceeding by quo warranto denied the company the equal protection of the laws, because by its charter mandamus was prescribed as the remedy for illegal rates, is so clearly without color of foundation as to give the Supreme Court of the United States no jurisdiction to review such decree. New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Louisiana, 185 U. S. 336, 46 L. ed. 936, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 691.

And, apparently because of the obvious want of merit in the contention that a railroad corporation was deprived of its rights under U. S. Const., 14th Amend., by enforcing a claim against it by mandatory injunction, instead of by another and summary form of action, the court, in Iowa C. R. Co. v. Iowa, 160 U. S. 389, 40 L. ed. 467, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 344, dismissed, for want of jurisdiction, a writ of error to review a judgment of a state court compelling a railroad company to operate its road.

A Federal question of serious import, essential to support a writ of error from the Federal Supreme Court, is not involved in a contention that riparian owners were denied the equal protection of the laws by the decision of a state court awarding a municipality paramount rights in the waters of the stream under Spanish and Mexican laws, confirmed by the United States to the municipality as the successor of a Spanish pueblo. Los Angeles Farming & Mill. Co. v. Los Angeles, 217 U. S. 217, 54 L. ed. 736, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 452.

But the contention that the exemption of banks or trust companies and bona fide mortgagees from the operation of Conn. Pub. Acts 1907, chap. 238, prohibiting exacting more than 15 per cent on loans, or accepting a note for a greater amount than that actually loaned, with intent to evade this provision, denies the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by U. S. Const., 14th Amend., is not so clearly lacking in merit as not to serve as the basis of a writ of error from the Federal Supreme Court to a state court. Griffith v. Connecticut, 218 U. S. 563, 572, 54 L. ed. 1151, 1155, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132, 134.

The question must not be merely an abstract or moot one. Hence, a taxpayer who admits that his own tax is correct cannot, on the ground that he will be denied the equal protection of the laws, contrary to the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, have a writ of error from the United States Supreme Court to review a construction by the supreme court of the state of the statutes thereof, as exempting in whole or in part certain corporations from the payment of taxes. Missouri v. Dockery, 191 U. S. 165, 48 L. ed. 133, 63 L.R.A. 571, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 53.

One who has not availed himself of the opportunity to appeal and be heard upon the question of classification which is afforded by a municipal ordinance providing for the licensing of occupations is not in a position to urge upon the Federal Supreme Court, upon writ of error to a state court, that he has been unjustly and illegally discriminated against in the actual operation of the ordinance, in that he has been classified in such a manner as to subject him and his business to a higher tax as a condition of issuing to him a license than that required of many others in the same business. Bradley v. Richmond, 227 U. S. 477, 57 L. ed. 603, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 318.

But the fact that there are no resident

Digitized by Google

IN ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Fourth Supreme Judicial District of the State of Texas to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the District Court of Harris County, in that state, enforcing the statutory liability of an insurance company for damages and attorneys' fees because of its failure to pay a claim. Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

See same case below, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 139 S. W. 51.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice White:

The defendant in error was the plaintiff below, and sued the Manhattan Life Insurance Company, which we shall speak of as the company, on two policies on the life of Jacob Cohen in his own favor, written in 1893, in Texas, where Cohen resided, the company then doing business in that state through an agency. It was averred that although the company had admitted liability on the policies, it had not paid the loss, and was therefore responsible [124] not only for the sum due insured, with interest, but also for 12 per cent as statutory penalty or damages, and $1,000 attorneys' fees.

The answer denied liability to the plaintiff. It admitted issuing the policies, but averred that in 1907 the insured, Cohen, borrowed $875 on each, and pledged the policies as security, which loans were unpaid. It was averred that in July, 1907, Cohen sold to Hilsman, of Atlanta, Georgia, his interest in the policies, and executed assignments and orders on the company to mortgagees in a particular case does not make the question of discrimination between nonresident and resident mortgagees by a state statute a merely abstract or moot question, so as to preclude a decision against the validity of the statute on writ of error to a state court, if such statute makes a discrimination against nonresident mortgagees with respect to sharing in the distribution of the assets of an insolvent foreign corporation. Sully v. American Nat. Bank, 178 U. S. 289, 44 L. ed. 1072, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 935.

---

And the enactment by a state of a new inheritance tax law after a decision of the highest court of the state sustaining the previous legislation on that subject as against the contention that it denied the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by U. S. Const., 14th Amend., does not convert such Federal question into a moot question, so as to preclude a review in the Supreme Court of the United States, unless it is obvious that such new legislation relieved the plaintiffs in error from their obligations under the earlier law. Campbell v. California, 200 U. S. 87, 50 L. ed. 382, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 182.

The question must be adequately presented to, and decided by, the state court, or the Federal Supreme Court will be without jurisdiction. (See note to Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. McGrew, 63 L.R.A. 33.)

An allegation that a statute, as construed by the court, is in violation of the Constitution of the state and of the United States, made in a motion to set aside a judgment on an agreed case which presents no issue as to the validity of the statute, is not sufficient to present a Federal question on the theory that, as the proper construction of the statute has been definitively settled, it can be seen that the statute as thus construed denies the equal protection of the laws. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Louisville, 166 U. S. 709, 41 L. ed. 1173, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 725.

Objections to the valuation of national bank stock for taxation, as being in excess of the actual value, exorbitant and unjust, and not in proportion to other like personal property, but grossly in excess thereof, and constituting unfair and unequal taxation, do not raise any Federal question which will sustain a writ of error from the Federal Supreme Court to a state court, where no mention of the national bank act was made, nor of any right or privilege claimed under it, and the provisions of the United States Revised Statutes were not invoked, by name or otherwise, and there was no assertion that the local statutes under which the assessment was made were repugnant to the terms of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5219, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3502, or to the Federal Constitution. First Nat. Bank v. Estherville, 215 U. S. 341, 54 L. ed. 223, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152.

The judgment of the Ohio supreme court upholding the validity of the provisions of the free banking act of March 21, 1851, § 30, as amended April 24, 1879, under which an indictment had been found against the cashier of a bank incorporated under that act, in the face of the objection that such section, by subjecting officers of institutions so incorporated to criminal liability, when officers of other banking institutions guilty of similar acts are not so subjected, denies the equal protection of the laws, cannot be reviewed by the Federal Supreme Court, where the failure of the state court to file an opinion leaves it doubtful whether that court may not have held that the words "any banking company," as used in the section in question, embrace all banking institutions in the state, whether incorporated under the free banking act or not. Bachtel v. Wilson, 204 U. S. 36, 51 L. ed. 357, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 243.

The decision in the opinion of the highest state court, in reviewing a conviction of crime, of questions respecting due process of law, the equal protection of the laws, and cruel and unusual punishment, will not confer jurisdiction on the Supreme Court of the United States of a writ of error to the state court, in the absence of any claim to protection under the Federal Constitution made therein. Howard v. Fleming, 191 U. S. 126, 48 L. ed. 121, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 49.

A decision upon a Federal question re-

Digitized by Google

deliver the policies to him on payment of the debts for which they were pledged. These documents were annexed to the answer. The origin and course of the negotiation which ultimated in the assignments were thus stated: Hilsman had an agent at San Antonio, Texas, where Cohen lived. The transactions "were begun" and "definitely agreed upon" between Cohen and the agent, "the agreement being that Hilsman would pay Jacob Cohen $460 for his equity in said policies, whereupon Cohen wired Hilsman to send papers, and the following correspondence, by letter and telegram, passed between them." Hilsman in answer to the first telegram from Cohen wrote, inclosing him assignment of the policy and necessary notices to the company, with directions for their execution, and asking, besides, for certain papers which he required to show Cohen's ownership free from the claims of other persons, the letter ending with the statement, "Send all the papers that are herewith inclosed, duly executed, in a sealed envelop, with this draft attached (evidently the draft for the price), and upon arrival, if in good shape, we will duly honor." Cohen replied by letter, explaining that he did not have particular papers which had been asked for, but had others which he thought were their equivalent, and proposing to execute the assignment and send these papers, the letter concluding with the statement, "if this meets with your approval, please wire me upon receipt of this letter, and I [125] shall forward papers." Hilsman answered by telegram favorably, and confirmed it by letter, saying that if the papers were sent, "we will promptly honor the draft, provided the papers are in good shape." On the day the telegram last referred to was received, Cohen transmitted the executed papers with the accompanying documents by mail, saying, "I beg to inclose all documents . . . which I trust you will find correct, and will honor my draft for $460 attached to these documents." The answer specifically alleges that the draft was sent from San Antonio for collection through a bank in that place, and as the answer states that the draft was attached to the papers, and this conformed specting the constitutional guaranty of the equal protection of the laws is involved in the ruling of a state court upon a motion to quash an indictment because of the exclusion of negroes from the grand-jury lists, by which such motion, though but two printed octavo pages in length, was struck from the files under the color of local practice, for prolixity, because it contained an allegation that certain provisions of the newly adopted state Constitution, claimed to have the effect of disfranchising negroes because of their race, worked as a reason and consideration in the minds of the jury commissioners for their action. Rogers v. Alabama, 192 U. S. 226, 48 L. ed. 417, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 257.

---

The whole merits of the controversy are not open for consideration by the Federal Supreme Court merely because the record in the state court presents a question as to the denial of the equal protection of the laws. (See note to Missouri ex rel. Hill v. Dockery, 63 L.R.A. 571.)

The decision of the supreme court of a state that it is competent on a new assessment to determine questions of benefit from the proof, even though in so doing a different result would be reached from that which had been arrived at when a former assessment which has been set aside was made, decides merely a local question, which cannot be considered in reviewing the judgment of the state court. Lombard v. West Chicago Park Comrs. 181 U. S. 33, 45 L. ed. 731, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 507. The court said: "The theory lying at the foundation of all the arguments advanced to show that the court below committed error of a Federal nature is this, and nothing more: that the equal protection of the laws was denied by the supreme court of Illinois because that court, although it treated the assessing ordinance as invalid for the purposes of the first assessment, upheld that ordinance as valid for the second assessment. This but asserts that, because it is considered that there was inconsistency in the reasoning by which the supreme court of Illinois sustained its conclusion, therefore the equal protection of the laws was denied. If the proposition as thus understood was held to be sound, as it cannot be, every case decided in the courts of last resort of the several states would be subject to the revisory power of this court wherever the losing party deemed that the reasoning by which the state court had been led to decide adversely to his rights was inconsistent with the reasoning previously announced by the same court in former cases. In thus stating the ultimate deduction to which the proposition necessarily leads, we do not wish to be understood as implying that we think the reasoning upon which the supreme court of the state of Illinois placed its decision in this case is amenable to the inconsistency which it is insisted it embodies. As that consideration is wholly beyond the pale of our jurisdiction, we have not even approached its consideration."

Whether or not discrimination against negroes because of their race or color was practised by the jury commissioners in the selection of grand and petit jurors is a question of fact, the decision of which by the state court is conclusive on the Federal Supreme Court, on writ of error, unless so grossly wrong as to amount to an infraction of the Federal Constitution. Thomas v. Texas, 212 U. S. 278, 53 L. ed. 512, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 393. (See also note to Smiley v. Kansas, 49 L. ed. U. S. 546.)

The conclusion of a state court that a

Digitized by Google

to the instructions which we have seen were given by Hilsman to Cohen, the answer therefore in effect averred that the papers and draft were delivered to a bank in San Antonio, to be transmitted to Atlanta, the papers to be delivered to Hilsman if, after examination, he found the papers satisfactory and paid the draft. The answer then, in paragraph 8, contained the following averments:

"Said Jacob Cohen, Hilsman, and his said agent, were engaged in speculative transactions, and said assignments were made as a part of and in connection with a certain transaction in what is commonly called 'cotton futures,' the money being paid to and received and used by Jacob Cohen to speculate in the future price of cotton, without its being contemplated that there would be actual delivery thereof, or bargain and sale, and said Hilsman or his said agent, being interested in the transaction, and the purpose of the transaction being known by all the parties, which purpose was carried into effect, through the said agency of J. H. Hilsman and J. H. Hilsman, he being engaged in the brokerage business."

It was averred that after the death of Cohen, both his executor and Hilsman, as owners of the policies, made demand upon the company for payment; that the company admitted liability to someone, and simply professed its [126] desire to have the matter as to who was owner of the policies settled so that it might make payment with safety. To reach this result it was alleged that an unsuccessful effort was made to have the parties agree to appear in a suit where, as to both of them, the company admitting liability, their rights might have been determined; and that failing in this respect, and being advised that under the law of Georgia, where the assignment to Hilsman was made, it was legal, and therefore his claim was valid, as the most expeditious way of clearing up the matter the company paid Hilsman, and took from him an indemnity bond. While admitting that before the assignment and at the time of its tax is uniform, within the meaning of the requirement of the state Constitution, when it is equal upon all persons belonging to the described class on which it is imposed, is not open to review upon writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States to the state court. Armour Packing Co. v. Lacy, 200 U. S. 226, 50 L. ed. 451, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 232.

---

The construction given by the state courts to Tex. act May 25, 1899, as removing the discriminatory features of prior anti-trust laws, is conclusive on the Federal Supreme Court in determining, on writ of error to the state court, whether such statute denies the equal protection of the laws. National Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas, 197 U. S. 115, 49 L. ed. 698, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379.

In Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064, the question presented on a writ of error to a state court was whether due process of law, or the equal protection of the laws, was denied the Chinese by proceedings under certain municipal ordinances providing that it should be unlawful for any person to engage in the laundry business in wooden buildings within the corporate limits "without having first obtained the consent of the board of supervisors." The state court considered these ordinances as vesting in the board of supervisors a not unusual discretion in granting or withholding their assent to the use of wooden buildings as laundries, to be exercised in reference to the circumstances of each case, with a view to the protection of the public against the dangers of fire. The Federal Supreme Court, however, held that the power conferred by these ordinances was a naked and purely arbitrary power, acknowledging neither guidance nor restraint. "The determination of the question whether the proceedings under these ordinances and in enforcement of them are in conflict with the Constitution and laws of the United States," said Mr. Justice Matthews, in delivering the unanimous opinion of the court, "necessarily involves the meaning of the ordinance which, for that purpose, we are required to ascertain and adjudge."

It is the duty of the Supreme Court, by the 14th Amendment, in a case properly before it, to inquire whether, in the administration of the criminal laws of a state, it is sought arbitrarily to deprive any person of his liberty or property, or to refuse him the equal protection of the laws; and such inquiry is not precluded or ended by the mere fact that the judgment complained of was rendered by a state court pursuant to a state statute. Hodgson v. Vermont, 168 U. S. 262, 42 L. ed. 461, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 80.

On the general subject of writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4 L. ed. U. S. 97; Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884; Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

On what adjudications of state courts can be brought up for review in the Supreme Court of the United States by writ of error to those courts—see note to Apex Transp. Co. v. Garbade, 62 L.R.A. 513.

On how and when questions must be raised and decided in a state court in order to make a case for a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States—see note to Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. McGrew, 63 L.R.A. 33.

On review of decisions of state courts presenting the question of full faith and credit—see note to Allen v. Alleghany Co. 49 L. ed. U. S. 551.

Digitized by Google

delivery Hilsman had no interest whatever in the life of Cohen, it was nevertheless averred that the assignment of the policies was valid and authorized under the laws of the states of Georgia and New York. Averring, moreover, that all the acts of the company in the premises had been in good faith, and arose not from any desire to deny liability, but simply from an honest purpose to have it determined who owned the claims under the policy, it was asserted that there could be in no event any liability for interest by way of damages and for the attorneys' fees as prayed.

By leave the plaintiff amended his petition "in replication and answer to . . . the answer of the defendant, Manhattan Life Insurance Company," and asserted, among other things, that the assignments of the policies alleged in the answer were void upon two distinct grounds: (1) Because "under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Texas, the state of New York, and the state of Georgia, and each of them, an assignment of a life insurance policy to a person without insurable interest in the life of the insured is invalid and not binding upon the assignor or his representative." (2) Because "said alleged assignments of the policies of insurance sued upon herein are invalid and not binding upon it, and were without legal consideration under [127] the laws of the state of Texas, the state of New York, and the state of Georgia, for this: that at the time that said assignments and each of them were made, executed, and delivered, that the said Jacob Cohen, J. H. Hilsman, and his said agent, were engaged in speculative transactions, and that said assignments and each of them were made as a part of and in connection with the said transactions in what is commonly called 'cotton futures,' the money being paid to and received and used by the said Jacob Cohen to speculate in future prices of cotton without its being contemplated that there would be actual delivery thereof, or bargain and sale; the said Hilsman and his agent being interested in the transaction, and the purpose of the transaction being at and before the time known to and by all the parties, which said purpose was carried into effect through the said agency, J. H. Hilsman and J. H. Hilsman, he being engaged at that time in the brokerage business; all of which said facts were well known to the defendant insurance company at and before the time that it paid the said policies to the said Hilsman, as in its said answer alleged and set forth."

For the purpose of the trial by the court without a jury a written statement of facts was agreed to by both parties in the form of petitioner's case, the case of the defendant company, and the reply of the petitioner. The statement of the plaintiff admitted the issue of the policies, the lending of the money by the company, and the pledging of the policies to secure it, the transfer or assignment by Cohen for the consideration we have stated, and under the circumstances which we have detailed, the gambling nature of the transaction being expressly stated in accordance with the averment of the answer of the company, and with the allegation of the amended pleading of the plaintiff, the death of Cohen, the claim of both parties on the insurance company, the effort of the company to secure a suit to which both the claimants should be parties in order to [128] relieve it from responsibility, its failure to secure that result, and its payment to Hilsman of the amount upon the giving by him of indemnity, all substantially as alleged in the pleadings we have stated. The agreed facts contained this statement:

"It was not the purpose of the insurance company to contest or delay payment, and the payment to Hilsman was made under the circumstances above set out. It is not the purpose of this agreement to determine how far, if at all, the facts in respect to notice and good faith are material issues in this case, that being deemed a question of law; nor is this agreement to be construed as admitting as a matter of law that Hilsman had any right to said policy or their proceeds, or that said payment, or any part thereof, was rightfully made to him. It is, however, agreed as a fact that Hilsman has not been repaid said sum of $460, and the insurance company has not been repaid the amount of said loan, except as above stated, and that nothing has yet been paid to the plaintiff."

The company, as part of its case, introduced certain statutes of the state of Georgia and decisions of the court of last resort of that state, interpreting the same for the purpose of showing that Cohen had a right to sell and Hilsman to purchase in Georgia the insurance policies, although Hilsman had no insurable interest in Cohen's life. In rebuttal the plaintiff introduced certain decisions of the court of last resort of Georgia, deemed to establish the contrary result, and also offered statutes of that state dealing with gambling transactions and the right to sue concerning the same. The trial court found the facts substantially as embodied in the statements referred to.

Mr. William J. Moroney submitted the cause for plaintiffs in error:

(a) A party has the right, by proper procedure, to protect himself against illegal or excessive demands, or double liability; and a state statute, when it is so construed and applied as to penalize the proper exercise of this right, is repugnant to the 14th Amendment.

Digitized by Google

(b) The Texas statute, Revised Statutes (1905), art. 3071, as construed and applied by the state courts in this case, is wanting in due process of law, and repugnant to the 14th Amendment.

(c) The Federal question presented by the foregoing propositions has not been foreclosed against plaintiffs in error by any previous decision of this court construing the Texas statute; and a Federal question is properly before this court for review.

Fidelity Mut. Life Asso. v. Mettler, 185 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 922, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 662; Iowa L. Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 187 U. S. 335, 47 L. ed. 204, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 126; Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Dobney, 189 U. S. 301, 47 L. ed. 821, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Wynne, 224 U. S. 354, 56 L. ed. 799, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 102, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Polt, 232 U. S. 165, ante, 554, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301.

On writ of error to a state court, presenting the question whether or not a state statute violates a Federal right, this court will accept the construction placed upon the state statute by the state court of last resort in the particular case under review, and will then determine whether or not the statute, as thus construed, and as applied to the particular facts before the court, violates a Federal right. It may thus occur that this court will sustain a state statute, as construed one way, or as applied to one state of facts, while, as construed a different way, or as applied to a different state of facts, the statute would be declared violative of a Federal right. See St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Wynne, 224 U. S. 354, 56 L. ed. 799, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 102, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Jackson Vinegar Co. 226 U. S. 217, 57 L. ed. 193, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40; Collins v. Texas, 223 U. S. 288, 56 L. ed. 439, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 286; Martin v. West, 222 U. S. 191, 56 L. ed. 159, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 592, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 42.

It is, of course, elementary that a mere stakeholder of a fund against which conflicting claims are asserted has a right to have the conflict determined before he can be rightfully compelled to pay to either claimant. This is certainly true when the stakeholder, as in the present case, was rightfully in possession of the fund when the conflicting claims arose, and when the stakeholder was neither a party to the controversy nor in any way responsible for its existence. Not only this, but the courts of Texas have held, in accordance with the general rule of equity on the subject, not only that such stakeholder cannot be penalized because of his innocent connection with a dispute to which he is not a party, but that, instead of paying attorneys' fees to the successful claimant, he is entitled to his own necessary costs and attorneys' fees out of the fund as a credit against the successful claimant.

Bolin v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 61 S. W. 444.

The statutes of Georgia were clearly and fully pleaded and proved by the insurance company in defense of this suit. This defense was not only necessarily involved, but it was actually considered by the state court; and in giving judgment against the insurance company the state court both necessarily and actually denied to these statutes of Georgia the force and effect that the insurance company claimed for them. A claim of Federal right was thus specifically set up by the insurance company, and unequivocally denied by the state court. This was sufficient to confer jurisdiction on this court, although there may have been a failure in the state court to label the proceedings accurately.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sowers, 213 U. S. 55, 53 L. ed. 695, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397; El Paso & N. E. R. Co. v. Gutierrez, 215 U. S. 87, 54 L. ed. 106, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 21; Furman v. Nichol, 8 Wall. 44, 19 L. ed. 370; Tilt v. Kelsey, 207 U. S. 43, 52 L. ed. 95, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Willson v. Black Bird Creek Marsh Co. 2 Pet. 245, 7 L. ed. 412.

On writ of error to a state court this court will review questions of local or general law, when the correct decision of Federal questions depends in whole or in part on such non-Federal question.

Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629; Bridge Proprs. v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 1 Wall. 116, 145, 17 L. ed. 571, 576; Hoadley v. San Francisco (Clark v. San Francisco) 124 U. S. 639, 31 L. ed. 553, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 659; Atty. Gen. ex rel. Kies v. Lowrey, 199 U. S. 239, 50 L. ed. 170, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Wharton, 207 U. S. 328, 52 L. ed. 230, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 121.

Again, and for like reasons, even when the state court places its decision on a non-Federal ground, not directly connected with any Federal question presented for review, and broad enough to support the judgment, in a proper case this court will examine such non-Federal question to determine whether or not its decision by the state court rested on any real or substantial foundation, or whether it was not rather an arbitrary exercise of judicial power.

Digitized by Google

Vandalia R. Co. v. Indiana, 207 U. S. 359, 52 L. ed. 246, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 130.

Again, when it unmistakably appears that the state court erroneously decided a question of local or general law, this court may notice such error, without attributing any improper motive to the state court.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dennis, 224 U. S. 503, 56 L. ed. 860, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 542.

Even if it should be held that the Federal question arising from the "full faith and credit" clause of the Constitution was not so presented in the state court as to confer jurisdiction on this court, nevertheless we submit that, as this court has clearly acquired jurisdiction of the case through another Federal question that admittedly was raised in a proper and timely manner, this court has thereby acquired the jurisdiction at least to decide all Federal questions actually in the case, however inartificially they may be or may have been presented, and also the jurisdiction to decide all non-Federal questions incidental to the review of the Federal questions.

Mr. Wilmer S. Hunt submitted the cause for defendant in error. Messrs. Sterling Myer and C. A. Teagle were on the brief:

When there is a Federal question in the case, but it is so frivolous as to make it manifest that the writ of error was taken for delay merely, the Supreme Court will affirm on motion.

Ruckman v. Bergholz, 131 U. S. cxliii. Appx. and 23 L. ed. 1008; Micas v. Williams, 104 U. S. 556, 26 L. ed. 842; Evans v. Brown, 109 U. S. 180, 27 L. ed 898, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 83; Blythe v. Hinckley, 180 U. S. 333, 45 L. ed. 537, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390.

The objections to the constitutionality of art. 3071, Revised Statutes of Texas, were frivolous, and merely for delay, as such question had been theretofore passed on by the Supreme Court of the United States, and decided in favor of its validity.

Fidelity Mut. Life Asso. v. Mettler, 185 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 922, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 662; Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Dobney, 189 U. S. 301, 47 L. ed. 821, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565; Iowa L. Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 187 U. S. 335, 47 L. ed. 204, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 126; Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Chowning, 86 Tex. 654, 24 L.R.A. 504, 26 S. W. 982; Fidelity & C. Co. v. Allibone, 90 Tex. 660, 40 S. W. 399; Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Maner, 101 Tex. 553, 109 S. W. 1084; Mutual Reserve L. Ins. Co. v. Jay, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 165, 109 S. W. 1117.

When the Federal questions involved in a case are correctly decided by the state supreme court, the judgment of that court must be affirmed without determining any other question not of Federal character.

Myrick v. Thompson, 99 U. S. 297, 25 L. ed. 326; Murdock v. Memphis, 20 Wall. 590, 22 L. ed. 429; Swope v. Leffingwell, 105 U. S. 3, 26 L. ed. 939; Gillis v. Stinchfield, 159 U. S. 658, 40 L. ed. 295, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Duvall, 225 U. S. 477, 56 L. ed. 1171, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 790; Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 41 L. ed. 369, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Castle, 224 U. S. 541, 56 L. ed. 875, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 606.

The Supreme Court will not consider questions not raised and passed on in the court below, nor will the raising of one Federal question in the state court permit the consideration of other Federal questions than the one raised.

Wilson v. McNamee, 102 U. S. 572, 26 L. ed. 234; Keokuk & H. Bridge Co. v. Illinois, 175 U. S. 626, 44 L. ed. 299, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 205; Dewey v. Des Moines, 173 U. S. 193, 43 L. ed. 665, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379; Messenger v. Mason, 10 Wall. 507, 19 L. ed. 1028; Maxwell v. Newbold, 18 How. 511, 15 L. ed. 506; Capital City Dairy Co. v. Ohio, 183 U. S. 238, 46 L. ed. 171, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 120.

Mr. Chief Justice White, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

Upon the pleadings which we have just stated and the facts stipulated, the trial court gave judgment for the plaintiff, Cohen, against the defendant company for the amount of the policies, less the sums which had been loaned thereon by the company, with interest, and with the statutory penalties and attorneys' fees claimed.

To recapitulate, it suffices to say that the assignments of error made by the company in the court below for the [132] purpose of the appeal by it taken but expressed the defenses resulting from its answer and the stipulated facts which we have stated. That is to say, reliance was placed (1) upon the proposition that, in any event, the recourse of the plaintiff was against Hilsman, and not against the company; (2) that the transfer of the policies to Hilsman was a Georgia contract, and valid under the law of that state because the existence of insurable interest at the time of the transfer, although necessary under the Texas law, was not necessary under the Georgia law; (3) that as, in any event, the transaction out of which the assignment of the policies from Cohen to Hilsman grew was admittedly a gambling one, the court would not allow the executor of Cohen to derive any rights from assailing that transaction, but would leave the parties where their illegal contract had placed them; that is, let the assignment to Hilsman stand, and hence leave no right in Cohen, executor, to recover; (4) that the court erred in giving judgment for the statutory penalties and damages because, under the circumstances stated, the liability to pay them was not embraced by the statute under which they were imposed, and that if the statute, as construed, imposed the damages and attorney's fee which were allowed, it was in violation of § 1 of the 14th Amendment.

Digitized by Google

In an elaborate opinion the court disposed of all these contentions. It held that the suit need not be brought against Hilsman, but that it could be brought directly against the company. It decided that the contract of assignment was a Texas contract, and for want of insurable interest in Hilsman was invalid under the laws of that state, although it was in substance admitted that it would have been valid, so far as the question of insurable interest was concerned, if it had been a Georgia contract. Coming to consider the fact that both parties had conceded that the transaction out of which the assignment of the policies grew was purely of a gambling nature, and that that fact [133] had been stipulated, the court refused to sustain the following proposition which was insisted upon by the defendant company: "When an insurance policy is assigned as part of a gaming transaction, the law will give no relief to either party, or to their heirs, executors, or assigns, regardless of all other questions, but will leave the parties where they have voluntarily placed themselves." [— Tex. Civ. App.—, 139 S. W. 58.] On the contrary, the court, relying upon the Texas law upon that subject, the Georgia law on the same subject, and the principles of general law applicable thereto, held that instead of leaving the assignment growing out of the gambling transaction enforceable in the hands of Hilsman, it would, in consequence of the illegality, strike down the whole transaction, and therefore leave the policy in the hands of Cohen, the insured, to whom it belonged before the assignment had been made. And for this reason also the court decided that the sum paid by Hilsman for the transfer need not be repaid by Cohen in order to recover. On the subject of the penalties the court, referring to the cases of Fidelity Mut. Life Asso. v. Mettler, 185 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 922, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 662, and Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Dobney, 189 U. S. 301, 47 L. ed. 821, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565, held that the statute under which they were imposed was not repugnant to the 14th Amendment, and said: "The action of the insurance company in paying the money due on the policies was not, as in Southwestern Ins. Co. v. Woods Nat. Bank, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 107 S. W. 119, an offer of the insurance company to pay to the one of the two real claimants when it should be determined who he was, but a voluntary payment to the rival claimant, who had no right whatever to the amount due on the policy. The company has indemnified itself against its act in paying the money due on the policy to one who was not entitled to receive it; now let it resort to its indemnity."

At the threshold we must dispose of a motion to dismiss. It is apparent from the statement of the case that the only express assertion of Federal right had reference to [134] the statutory penalty and the attorney's fee. The assignments of error, however, assert violations of rights under the Constitution in many particulars, but more especially with reference to the action of the court in treating the sales of the policies as Texas contracts, and refusing to apply the Georgia law, which admittedly differed fundamentally from that of Texas. It is elementary that a Federal question may not be imported into a record for the first time by way of assignments of error made for the purposes of review by this court. Moreover, as a general rule, it is true that for the purposes of review by this court rights under the full faith and credit clause, § 1, article 4 of the Constitution, come within that class which are required to be expressly set up and claimed in the court below. Johnson v. New York L. Ins. Co. 187 U. S. 491, 47 L. ed. 273, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 194; El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Eichel, 226 U. S. 590, 597, 57 L. ed. 369, 373, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 179; Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Hackett, 228 U. S. 559, 565, 57 L. ed. 966, 968, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581. Let it be conceded, as we think it must be, where the record leaves no doubt that rights under the full faith and credit clause were essentially involved and were necessarily passed upon, there would be jurisdiction to review even although such rights had not been expressly asserted below (see Tilt v. Kelsey, 207 U. S. 43, 51, 52 L. ed. 95, 99, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1); the right to review under such condition being in effect but a result of the elementary rule that it is irrelevant to inquire how and when a Federal question was raised in a court below when it appears that such question was actually considered and decided. But these concessions are irrelevant, even although it be further conceded that the ruling of the court below as to the necessity for an insurable interest, and its governing the case by the law of Texas instead of by the law of Georgia, bring this case within the doctrines just stated. We say this because of the existence of another and fundamental question which causes the concessions stated to be immaterial. Both parties, as we have seen, wholly independent of the existence of an insurable [135] interest, affirmed the illegality of the transaction out of which the assignments of the policies grew because of the alleged gambling nature of the transaction, and the admitted facts without dispute established that situation. There being thus an admission by both parties, and no dispute concerning the illegality of the transaction, and a difference only as to the consequences to arise from such illegality, it follows that the case reduces itself to a consideration of that subject. But, on coming to its consideration, it is plain that no question concerning the full faith and credit clause was involved in any contention made below by the plaintiff in error in that regard, since the rights deduced from the admitted illegality of the transaction were placed solely on considerations of the local law of the state of Texas and of the state of Georgia, deemed to be applicable to such condition of things, or upon what was deemed to be the controlling principles of general law on the subject. Indeed, so absolutely is this the case that, as we have seen, the company itself insisted on the illegality and based rights upon it. And it was only on behalf of the defendant in error that considerations involving the full faith and credit clause were suggested as controlling the results in consequence of the admitted illegality of the transaction as a gambling one. A condition which is illustrated by the fact that the reply petition of the plaintiff, while accepting and reiterating the averment of illegality made in the answer of the defendant company, in addition specially alleged that the illegality resulting from the gambling transaction caused the assignment of the policies to be void under the law of New York, where the company was organized, and under the law of Texas, as well as under the law of Georgia. And it was for this reason that the proof which was offered as to the statute law of Georgia on the subject of gambling transactions and the decision or decisions of that state, which it was deemed made the statute applicable, were tendered on behalf of the plaintiff, [136] and not by the defendant company. It would be indeed anomalous when the parties had both relied upon the illegality of the transaction upon grounds wholly independent of any Federal right, and the case had been decided upon that ground, which, in and of itself, is sufficient to sustain the action of the court below, to permit one of the parties, because of his dissatisfaction with the application of such principles, to assert the existence of jurisdiction because the case rested on a Federal issue. It becomes, hence, obvious that the assignments of error outside of the one referring to the repugnancy to the 14th Amendment of the statute imposing damages and penalties afford not the slightest pretext for the exercise of jurisdiction, and they therefore may be put out of view.

Digitized by Google

Coming to consider the latter subject, it may not be doubted that the nonrepugnancy of the assailed statute to the Constitution of the United States has been directly determined by this court in the cases upon which the lower court based its ruling. Fidelity Mut. Life Asso. v. Mettler, 185 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 922, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 662; Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Dobney, 189 U. S. 301, 47 L. ed. 821, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565. But it is said that, as previously upheld, the statute, as construed by the state court, contemplated a liability for the penalties or damages and attorneys' fees only in case there was a wilful refusal to pay, and therefore those decisions have no application here, since the statute, as applied in this case, enforces a liability against the company in spite of its action in the utmost good faith, taken solely for the purpose of determining to whom it must pay the sum due, liability as to which was frankly conceded. But the deduction simply disregards the basis upon which the court below rested its conclusion, and invites us upon a conception of injustice to commit a wrong by reviewing a matter of purely local concern which is not within our cognizance. We say this because clearly the court below rested its conclusion as to liability for the penalty and damages not upon the construction of the [137] statute suggested, but upon the premise that the payment to Hilsman by the insurance company of the sum of the policies under the circumstances stated was a payment which took it out of the category of a mere stakeholder seeking to discharge his duty in good faith, and placed it in the position of a person espousing the cause of one as against the other, and thereby subjecting himself to the legal consequences arising from such action. And the considerations which we have stated also dispose of the contention concerning the wrong which it was insisted was done in declaring the assignment of the policies void because of the gambling nature of the contract, and yet permitting the assignor to hold onto the price paid for such assignment. That question was involved in and controlled by the court's ruling concerning the illegal nature of the transaction and the principles applicable thereto, and therefore it is beyond our competency to review.

Digitized by Google

As the repugnancy of the statute concerning the damages and attorney's fee was the only semblance of ground for invoking our jurisdiction, and as that ground was conclusively established to be without merit when the writ of error was sued out, it follows that there is nothing upon which to base jurisdiction, and the writ of error must be dismissed.

Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

---

[138] TEXAS & PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
AMERICAN TIE & TIMBER COMPANY, Ltd.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 138–149.)

Carriers — discrimination — refusal to accept shipment — exhausting remedy before Interstate Commerce Commission.

1. A suit against a railway company to recover the damages resulting from its refusal to accept interstate shipments of oak railway cross-ties destined for a point beyond its own line may not be maintained in the absence of previous action of the Interstate Commerce Commission, where the carrier's refusal was based upon the want of any applicable filed and published rate, its position being that railway cross-ties were a separate, distinct freight commodity, and, not being specifically mentioned, were not embraced by its filed tariff fixing joint through lumber rates.

[For other cases, see Carriers, III. e, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Carriers — discrimination — refusal to accept shipment — exhausting remedy before Interstate Commerce Commission.

2. The acceptance by a railway company of three interstate carload shipments of oak railway cross-ties destined for a point beyond its own line under its joint through lumber rate does not dispense with the necessity of previous action by the Interstate Commerce Commission before the shipper may maintain a suit against the carrier to recover damages for its failure to accept further shipments, where its refusal is based upon the want of any applicable filed and published rate, its position then being that railway cross-ties were not embraced by its filed tariff fixing joint through lumber rates.

[For other cases, see Carriers, III. e, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Carriers — discrimination — refusal to accept shipment — exhausting remedy before Interstate Commerce Commission.

3. A carrier's insistence, as a mere pretext to prevent an interstate shipment over its line, upon the absence of an applicable filed and published rate, does not justify a resort by the shipper to the courts, in advance of action by the Interstate Commerce Commission, to recover damages resulting from the carrier's refusal to furnish cars for such a shipment.

[For other cases, see Carriers, III. e, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Trial — issues — bad faith.

4. The bad faith of a railway company in insisting, as a mere pretext to prevent an interstate shipment of railway cross-ties over its line, that its filed and published joint through interstate rate on lumber did not cover cross-ties, is not open to consideration in a suit by the shipper against the carrier, based upon the unlawfulness of the carrier's refusal, in view of the filed tariff, to accept the shipment.

[For other cases, see Trial, II., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 180.]

Argued January 20, 21, 1914. Decided June 8, 1914.

IN ERROR to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Circuit Court for the Northern District of Texas, in favor of a shipper in a suit to recover the damages alleged to have resulted from the refusal of a railway company to furnish cars. Reversed.[1]

See same case below, 111 C. C. A. 673, 190 Fed. 1022.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Hiram Glass argued the cause, and, with Mr. W. L. Hall, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

In determining whether certain rates shown in tariffs on file with the Interstate Commerce Commission must be applied to certain commodities moving from one state to another, where, under the pleadings and the evidence, that question may be determined by one court one way and by the Interstate Commerce Commission or another court a different way, thereby bringing about a want of uniformity in the meaning and construction of railroad interstate tariffs, and in the application of rates named in such tariffs, the question must, in the first instance, be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission; and the circuit courts cannot, compatibly with the interstate commerce act, consider and decide such question, or award the relief that is dependent upon a correct decision of such question of fact.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. United States, 215 U. S. 481, 54 L. ed. 292, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co. 204 U. S. 426, 51 L. ed.

[1] Leave granted on June 22, 1914, to present petition for rehearing within sixty days.

Digitized by Google

553, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350, 9 Ann. Cas. 1075, Interstate Commerce Commission v. Illinois C. R. Co. 215 U. S. 452, 54 L. ed. 280, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 155; Morrisdale Coal Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 230 U. S. 304, 57 L. ed. 1494, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 938; Mitchell Coal & Coke Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 230 U. S. 247, 57 L. ed. 1472, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 916; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Macon Grocery Co. 92 C. C. A. 114, 166 Fed. 206; Smith v. Detroit & T. Shore Line R. Co. 175 Fed. 506; Columbus Iron & Steel Co. v. Kanawha & M. R. Co. 101 C. C. A. 621, 178 Fed. 261; Franklin v. Pennsylvania & R. R. Co. 203 Fed. 134; Pacific Coast Biscuit Co. v. Spokane, P. & S. R. Co. 20 Inters. Com. Rep. 546.

Mr. Rollin W. Rodgers argued the cause, and, with Mr. R. P. Dorough, filed a brief for defendant in error:

Every phase of this case, so far as the Commission could pass on it, had been affirmatively settled according to the tie company's contention, and the only question left, as we think, is the amount of the damages. No court before which the case could be filed would or could reach a different conclusion on the undisputed facts, and these rulings of the Commission are binding upon all such courts.

Reynolds v. Western New York & P. R. Co. 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 685; Foster Bros. Co. v. Duluth, S. S. & A. R. Co. 14 Inters. Com. Rep. 232; Pacific Coast Biscuit Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 20 Inters. Com. Rep. 180; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 200 U. S. 361, 50 L. ed. 515, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 272; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 220 U. S. 235, 55 L. ed. 448, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 392.

Previous action by the Interstate Commerce Commission was not necessary.

Lyne v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 170 Fed. 847; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co. 204 U. S. 426, 51 L. ed. 553, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350, 9 Ann. Cas. 1075; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. International Coal Min. Co. 230 U. S. 184, 57 L. ed. 1446, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 893.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has construed the act as to the authority conferred to award reparation, and the character of claims within its powers.

Blume v. Wells, F. & Co. 15 Inters. Com. Rep. 53; Laning-Harris Coal & Grain Co. v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 15 Inters. Com. Rep. 37; Woodward v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 15 Inters. Com. Rep. 170; Pueblo Transp. Asso. v. Southern P. Co. 14 Inters. Com. Rep. 82; Joynes v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 17 Inters. Com. Rep. 361; S. R. Washer Grain Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co. 15 Inters. Com. Rep. 152.

Mr. Chief Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

Basing its cause of action on the act to regulate commerce, the American Tie & Timber Company, defendant [141] in error, hereafter called the tie company, commenced suits in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Texas against the Texas & Pacific Railway Company, plaintiff in error, and the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, to recover damages alleged to have resulted from the refusal of the railway companies to furnish, in September, October, and November, 1907, cars for the loading of oak railway cross-ties at various points on the line of the railways in Arkansas and Louisiana for shipment to Linwood, Kansas, beyond the lines of the companies. The cases were consolidated for trial, subject to a plea to the jurisdiction filed by the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, which plea was afterward sustained and the suit as to that company dismissed. There was a trial, however, as to the Texas & Pacific Railway Company, resulting in a verdict and judgment thereon for $17,112.33, and the writ of error now before us is prosecuted by the railway company to a judgment of the court below affirming the trial court. 111 C. C. A. 673, 190 Fed. 1022.

At the close of the evidence a motion was made to dismiss "because, under the facts and circumstances now disclosed by the record, and compatibly with the act of Congress of the United States to regulate interstate commerce, this court has no power to consider and decide the subject-matters which are complained of, or to award the relief prayed for by plaintiff." The denial of this motion is assigned as error, and we come at once to consider it, and state only so much of the pleadings and evidence as is necessary to adequately present the issue to be decided.

The amended petition, after averring that the tie company was a Louisiana corporation and that the railway company was a corporation organized under the laws of the United States, alleged in substance that in 1901 the railway company issued and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission "its joint through lumber tariff, T. & P. No. 8500-H, applying on lumber, all kinds (except [142] walnut and cherry), laths and shingles and articles taking same rates from points on the Texas & Pacific Railway Company to points in Kansas," by which a joint through rate of 24 cents per 100 pounds was put into effect from points on the railway company's line in Arkansas and Louisiana to Linwood, Kansas, "on, amongst other things, oak lumber," which rate, it was averred, had been continuously in effect from the date of the filing of the said tariff up to the happening of the events complained of.

Digitized by Google

It was averred that on July 23, 1907, the tie company entered into a contract with the Union Pacific Railway Company to deliver to said company f. o. b. cars Linwood, Kansas, 150,000 oak railway cross-ties of specified dimensions at the rate of 15,000 per month, beginning on or before October 1, 1907; at the price of 86 cents per tie, which contract was by its terms based on the rate of 24 cents per hundredweight fixed in the tariff filed as above stated in 1901. That, for the purpose of performing said contract, the tie company accumulated at stations on the railway company's line in Arkansas and Louisiana 44,541 oak cross-ties for shipment to Linwood, Kansas, and on October 10, 1907, requested the railway to furnish cars for the loading of the cross-ties at such points. It was alleged that after furnishing three cars, which were loaded by the railway company and shipped at the rate of 24 cents per 100 pounds, the railway company refused to provide further cars, or to receive the cross-ties for shipment, upon the ground, as stated by it, that it had no through rate applicable to oak railway cross-ties from the several points on its line to Linwood, Kansas. The petition charged, however, that the joint through lumber tariff above referred to and the rate of 24 cents thereby established included oak ties, and that the railway's refusal to provide cars and to carry the ties at its published rate was an unjust and unreasonable discrimination against the tie company, against the several places on the railway [143] company's line where the ties had been accumulated, and against the ties as an article of commerce, which discrimination, it was averred, was practised by the railway company with the object of preventing the movement of the cross-ties to points beyond its line, and of thus compelling the tie company to sell the ties which it had accumulated to the railway company. It was alleged that the refusal to transport the ties had resulted in unreasonable prejudice and disadvantage to the tie company and to the traffic in ties, and in benefit to the railway company as a purchaser and consumer of cross-ties, all of which constituted a violation of the act to regulate commerce. It was averred that, in consequence of the refusal of the railway to furnish the cars, and the resulting inability of the tie company to deliver the ties to the Union Pacific Railway under the contract, that company had canceled the contract to buy the ties. And the amount sought to be recovered was alleged to be the loss resulting to the tie company consequent on such cancelation, together with punitive damages based on the "wilful, wanton, and malicious" conduct on the part of the railway company, and a reasonable attorney's fee.

The railway company, besides denying generally the allegations of the amended petition, alleged that its joint through lumber tariff did not include a rate on oak railway cross-ties, but that cross-ties were a separate and distinct and well-recognized freight commodity, and that at the time mentioned in the petition it had not filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission any tariff under which it could lawfully accept for interstate shipment, at a through rate, the cross-ties offered by the tie company. The answer further denied that its failure to have in effect such a rate was a discrimination against cross-ties or the tie company or any locality, and alleged that oak cross-ties had never before been offered to it in Arkansas and Louisiana for shipment to interstate points on its lines or [144] connections so as to render it advisable to establish such a rate. It was averred that when the railway company first learned, in September, 1907, of the purpose of the tie company to ship cross-ties, it at once notified the tie company that it had no through rate on ties, and therefore would not be able to offer such a rate, but would seek to establish a through rate of 50 cents per hundredweight if sufficient time was allowed it to give the public notices of the filing of the tariff as required by the statute. It was then alleged that thereafter the first intimation that the railway company had of the purposes of the tie company was a letter transmitted to one of its officers from the Interstate Commerce Commission, informing the railway company of the fact that the tie company had filed an informal complaint with the Commission on the ground that, although the railway company's tariff on lumber embraced cross-ties, it had announced its intention not to receive them under the lumber schedule, and protesting in advance against permitting the railway company to file a specific tariff on cross-ties at 50 cents per hundredweight, because, as compared with the 24-cent lumber rate, it would be unreasonable. That at once, to avoid difficulty, the railway company applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission to be allowed immediately to put into effect a cross-tie rate at 24 cents per 100 pounds, the same as the lumber rate, and such request was refused by the Commission. Request was then made to put in such a rate after five days' notice, which was likewise refused, and thereupon in January, 1908, the railway company issued and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission a joint through lumber tariff amended so as to include at the lumber rate "wood railroad cross-ties, all kinds, carloads." The answer then charged that at no time until such tariff became effective, February 13, 1908, could the railway company have lawfully accepted and carried oak railway cross-ties under the provisions of the [145] act to regulate commerce. Referring to an averment in the petition concerning the acceptance of three cars of cross-ties at about this time for shipment at the lumber rate, the answer averred that if the facts were true, it furnished no basis for recovery, as the receipt of the ties inadvertently or otherwise, in the absence of a rate, would have been a violation of law, and afforded no ground for inferring the obligation to continue to do so, and, besides, did not aid the plaintiff's case, which was based upon the refusal of the railway company to take freight at an established and existing rate, not upon any supposed obligation by estoppel to do so when there was no established rate. And by an amendment to the answer it was insisted that under § 9 of the act to regulate commerce (act Feb. 4, 1887, chap. 104, 24 Stat. at L. 382, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3159) the plaintiff could not prosecute its action because, by making a complaint, as it had done, to the Interstate Commerce Commission, concerning the failure to treat the lumber tariff as embracing a rate on cross-ties, the plaintiff had elected to proceed before the Commission.

Digitized by Google

The evidence at the trial tended to support the allegations of the amended petition as to the making of the contract with the Union Pacific Railway Company, the accumulation of cross-ties at the several stations on the railway's line, the request for cars for the shipment of the ties to Linwood, Kansas, the refusal of the railway to provide the cars, the cancelation of the contract by the Union Pacific Railway Company, and the consequent loss to the tie company. The railway company's joint through lumber tariff was introduced in evidence, and it was not disputed that by it a rate of 24 cents per 100 pounds was established on oak lumber, and that oak railway cross-ties were not specifically mentioned. The railway company also introduced in evidence the correspondence between it and the Interstate Commerce Commission, showing, among other things, the request to be allowed to put immediately into effect the cross-tie rate, and the refusal of the [146] Commission to grant the request, and the other facts and circumstances stated in the answer. It is not disputable that the pivotal question in the case was whether oak railway cross-ties were included in the filed tariff fixing a through lumber rate of 24 cents per hundredweight, and so far as the solution of that inquiry depended upon the views of men engaged in the lumber and railroad business, as developed in the testimony, it is equally indisputable that there was an irreconcilable conflict. And this conflict at once leads to a consideration of the principle which dominates the controversy, and upon which its decision, therefore, depends.

There is no room for controversy that the law required a tariff, and therefore, if there was no tariff on cross-ties, the making and filing of such tariff conformably to the statute was essential. And it is equally clear that the controversy as to whether the lumber tariff included cross-ties was one primarily to be determined by the Commission in the exercise of its power concerning tariffs and the authority to regulate conferred upon it by the statute. Indeed, we think it is indisputable that that subject is directly controlled by the authorities which establish that, for the preservation of the uniformity which it was the purpose of the act to regulate commerce to secure, the courts may not, as an original question, exert authority over subjects which primarily come with the jurisdiction of the Commission. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co. 204 U. S. 426, 51 L. ed. 553, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350, 9 Ann. Cas. 1075; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. United States, 215 U. S. 481, 54 L. ed. 292, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164; Robinson v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 222 U. S. 506, 56 L. ed. 288, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 114; Mitchell Coal & Coke Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 230 U. S. 247, 57 L. ed. 1472, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 916; Morrisdale Coal Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 230 U. S. 304, 57 L. ed. 1494, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 938. No question is made as to the controlling effect of the doctrine as a general rule, but it is urged that it is not applicable to this case for the following reasons:

(a) The foundation upon which the doctrine rests, it is [147] insisted, is the necessity of a uniform enforcement of the interstate commerce act and the danger of diversity and conflict arising if questions concerning the existence of tariffs or their reasonableness, of discriminations and preferences, were left to be originally determined by courts of general jurisdiction, thus giving rise to the possibility of one rule in one jurisdiction and another in another. But the argument proceeds to insist that upon the principle that where the reason for the application of a law ceases to exist the law itself ceases to apply, the settled construe-

Digitized by Google

tion of the act to regulate commerce, announced and enforced in the Abilene and other cases, has here no application because it is so plain that oak cross-ties were included in the lumber rate as fixed in the tariff of the railway company that there is no reason for proceeding primarily before the Commission, as there is no possibility of difference on the subject if left to the consideration of the courts. We need not pause to point out the palpable error of law which the proposition involves, since, on the face of the record, it is apparent that the assumption of fact upon which it rests is absolutely without foundation. We say this because nothing could more clearly demonstrate such result than does the conflict and confusion in the testimony concerning whether cross-ties were included in the filed lumber tariff. And indeed, the same demonstration arises from a consideration of some decided cases; as, for instance, American Tie & Timber Co. v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. 99 C. C. A. 44, 175 Fed. 28, 33, presumably a report of this case, where it appears that at the first hearing the trial judge was so clearly of the opinion that cross-ties were not lumber that he so charged the jury, and directed a verdict for the railroad company. See also Greason v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 112 Mo. App. 116, 86 S. W. 722, where it is apparent that the same conclusion was reached.

(b) Because the question has been determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission in Reynolds v. Western New York & P. R. [148] Co. 1 I. C. C. Rep. 393, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 685. An examination of that report, however, discloses that the railway had in effect a published rate on cross-ties eo nomine, and the complaint was that it was unreasonable because it was higher than the rate on lumber. The ruling of the Commission was not that the lumber rate included a rate on ties, but that the rate on ties was unreasonable as compared with the lumber rate, and should be reduced.

(c) Because the railway company, by loading and carrying the three cars of ties under the 24-cent rate, had itself recognized the applicability of the lumber rate to cross-ties, and was concluded thereby. But, without stopping to consider the tendency of the proof establishing the want of foundation for the proposition, we think it is wanting in merit for this obvious reason: If, as we have seen, the question of whether cross-ties were embraced in the filed tariff concerning lumber was involved in such conflict and doubt as to require the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the situation was such that the railway company could not do by indirection that which the statute permitted it to do only by compliance with the law; that is, filing its tariffs in the regular way. Nothing could better serve to demonstrate this self-evident truth than by recurring to the fact that, at the very inception of the controversy the request made by the railway company to the Interstate Commerce Commission to be allowed to immediately put in the rate on cross-ties was refused by that body.

(d) Because the railway company did not refuse to transport the ties in good faith, and insisted upon the absence of a scheduled rate simply as a pretext and device for preventing the shipment of the ties and their delivery in performance of the contract with the Union Pacific Railway, and with the ulterior and wrongful motive of keeping the ties on its line, so as to be able to purchase them itself from the tie company. But without pausing [149] to do more than direct attention to the fact that this proposition is necessarily disposed of by what we have said, that is, by the lawfulness, in view of the state of the existing and filed tariff, of the refusal until the Commission had acted, we think all the contentions under this last head are completely answered by the statement that the suit was based upon the unlawfulness of the action of the railway company in refusing to carry the ties in view of the filed tariffs, and therefore the contentions are not open for our consideration.

It results that error was committed by the court in declining to sustain the motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction, and therefore it is our duty to reverse.

Reversed.

Mr. Justice Pitney dissents.

NEW YORK LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
MARY E. HEAD.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 149-165.)

Constitutional law — due process of law — freedom to contract — extraterritorial operation of statute.

The nonforfeiture provisions of Mo. Rev. Stat. 1899, §§ 5856-5859, 7897-7900, cannot, without denying the right of freedom to contract, guaranteed by U. S. Const., 14th Amend., be applied to invalidate a policy loan agreement made in the state of NOTE.—On the constitutionality of statutes restricting contracts and business, generally—see note to State v. Loomis, 21 L.R.A. 789.

Digitized by Google

New York between a life insurance corporation of that state and the beneficiary, who was a resident of New Mexico, and the settlement effected in New York in accordance with such agreement, conformably to the New York laws, although the original contract was made in the state of Missouri, which had exacted as a condition of the license granted to the insurance company to do business in the state that such company should be subject to the laws of the state as if it were a domestic corporation.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, IV. b, 7, b, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 254.]

Argued March 10, 1914. Decided June 8, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Circuit Court of Jackson County, in that state, for the recovery of the full amount of a policy of life insurance notwithstanding an adjustment under a policy loan agreement in accordance with the laws of the state of New York. Reversed.

See same case below, 241 Mo. 403, 147 S. W. 827.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. James H. McIntosh argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Gardiner Lathrop, Cyrus Crane, and O. W. Pratt, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The original contract of insurance was entered into between nonresidents of Missouri, who agreed that it should be controlled by the laws of New York. This was a valid provision and cannot be annulled by the courts of Missouri.

Smith v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 173 Mo. 329, 72 S. W. 935; Burridge v. New York L. Ins. Co. 211 Mo. 158, 109 S. W. 560; Gibson v. Connecticut F. Ins. Co. 77 Fed. 561; London Assur. Co. v. Companhia de Moagens, 167 U. S. 149, 42 L. ed. 113, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 785; Kroegher v. Calivada Colonization Co. 56 C. C. A. 257, 119 Fed. 652; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Dingley, 49 L.R.A. 132, 40 C. C. A. 459, 100 Fed. 408.

The following cases relied on by defendant in error dealt with contracts of residents or citizens of Missouri, and are therefore distinguishable, to wit:

Cravens v. New York L. Ins. Co. 148 Mo. 604, 53 L.R.A. 305, 71 Am. St. Rep. 628, 50 S. W. 519; Price v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 48 Mo. App. 281; Horton v. New York L. Ins. Co. 151 Mo. 612, 52 S. W. 356; Burridge v. New York L. Ins. Co. 211 Mo. 162, 109 S. W. 560; Smith v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 173 Mo. 329, 72 S. W. 935; Whitfield v. Ætna L. Ins. Co. 205 U. S. 489, 51 L. ed. 895, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Clements (Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Pettus) 140 U. S. 226, 229, 35 L. ed. 497, 498, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Russell, 23 C. C. A. 43, 40 U. S. App. 530, 77 Fed. 94.

The policy loan agreement was not a Missouri contract. It was signed and delivered outside the state of Missouri by parties who were nonresidents of that state, and cannot be controlled or governed by the Missouri nonforfeiture laws.

The original contract could be lawfully amended or changed by the loan agreement.

1 Cooley, Briefs on Ins. p. 900; S. S. White Dental Co. v. Delaware Ins. Co. 105 Fed. 642; Leonard v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 65 Conn. 529, 33 Atl. 511; Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 22 Ind. App. 333, 53 N. E. 251; Kattelman v. Fire Asso. 79 Mo. App. 447.

The right of plaintiff in error to make contracts is protected by § 1 of the 14th Amendment; and to attempt to deprive it of this right raises a constitutional question and gives this court jurisdiction.

Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 590, 591, 41 L. ed. 832, 836, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S 45, 46, 52, 53, 49 L. ed. 937, 939, 940, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133; Lohse Patent Door Co. v. Fuelle, 215 Mo. 458, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 607, 128 Am. St. Rep. 492, 114 S. W. 997; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 722, 24 L. ed. 565, 568; Union Bank v. Oxford, 90 Fed. 9; Olcott v. Fond du Lac County, 16 Wall. 678, 690, 21 L. ed. 382, 386; Havemeyer v. Iowa County, 3 Wall. 294, 18 L. ed. 38; Keller v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 58 Mo. App. 560; Whitfield v. Ætna L. Ins. Co. 205 U. S. 489, 51 L. ed. 895, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578; Greenhood, Pub. Pol. p. 2; Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 52 L. ed. 436, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 137, 38 L. ed. 388, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; State ex rel. Zillmer v. Kreutzberg, 114 Wis. 530, 58 L.R.A. 748, 91 Am. St. Rep. 934, 90 N. W. 1098.

Messrs. James H. McIntosh, Gardiner Lathrop, S. W. Moore, O. W. Pratt, and Cyrus Crane also filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Buckner F. Deatherage argued the cause, and, with Messrs. James S. Botsford and Goodwin Creason, filed a brief for defendant in error:

Under U. S. Const., 14th Amend., Mr. Head and these plaintiff children were guaranteed the same right as if they had lived in Missouri.

Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356-

Digitized by Google

369, 30 L. ed. 220–225, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 209, 32 L. ed. 107, 109, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 38 L. ed. 485, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570; Frazer v. McConway & T. Co. 82 Fed. 257; Templar v. State Examiners, 131 Mich. 254, 100 Am. St. Rep. 610, 90 N. W. 1058; Steed v. Harvey, 18 Utah, 367, 72 Am. St. Rep. 789, 54 Pac. 1011; Pearson v. Portland, 69 Me. 278, 31 Am. Rep. 276.

The courts do not consider the residence of the parties as having any influence in determining the place where a contract is made.

Napier v. Bankers' L. Ins. Co. 51 Misc. 283, 100 N. Y. Supp. 1072; Milliken v. Pratt, 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241; Golson v. Ebert, 52 Mo. 260; Richardson v. DeGiverville, 107 Mo. 422, 28 Am. St. Rep. 426, 17 S. W. 974; Ruhe v. Buck, 124 Mo. 178, 25 L.R.A. 178, 46 Am. St. Rep. 439, 27 S. W. 412; Reed v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 135 Mo. 661, 34 L.R.A. 492, 58 Am. St. Rep. 609, 37 S. W. 904; Horton v. New York L. Ins. Co. 151 Mo. 604, 52 S. W. 356; Elliott v. Des Moines Life Asso. 163 Mo. 132, 63 S. W. 400; Thompson v. Traders' Ins. Co. 169 Mo. 12, 68 S. W. 889; Parks v. Connecticut F. Ins. Co. 26 Mo. App. 511; F. B. Hauck Clothing Co. v. Sharpe, 83 Mo. App. 385; Pietri v. Seguenot, 96 Mo. App. 258, 69 S. W. 1055.

These policies were and are Missouri contracts.

Cravens v. New York L. Ins. Co. 148 Mo. 583, 53 L.R.A. 305, 71 Am. St. Rep. 628, 50 S. W. 519, 178 U. S. 389, 44 L. ed. 1116, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 962; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Clements (Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Pettus) 140 U. S. 226, 35 L. ed. 497, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822; Whitfield v. Ætna L. Ins. Co. 205 U. S. 489, 51 L. ed. 895, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578; Moore v. Northwestern L. Ins. Co. 112 Mo. App. 696, 87 S. W. 988; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Russell, 23 C. C. A. 43, 40 U. S. App. 530, 77 Fed. 94; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Twyman, 122 Ky. 513, 121 Am. St. Rep. 471, 92 S. W. 335, 97 S. W. 391; Capp v. Security Mut. L. Ins. Co. 117 Mo. App. 532, 94 S. W. 734; Horton v. New York L. Ins. Co. 151 Mo. 604, 52 S. W. 356; Joyce, Ins. § 194; Napier v. Bankers' L. Ins. Co. 51 Misc. 283, 100 N. Y. Supp. 1072; Burridge v. New York L. Ins. Co. 211 Mo. 178, 109 S. W. 560.

The loan contracts of 1904 did not have the effect of wiping out the policies.

Smith v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 173 Mo. 341, 72 S. W. 935; Burridge v. New York L. Ins. Co. 211 Mo. 178, 109 S. W. 560; Christensen v. New York L. Ins. Co. 152 Mo. App. 551, 134 S. W. 100.

The policies having contained provisions and stipulations for the making of loans and loan contracts, these loans and loan contracts made in 1904 cannot be considered as separate loans and loan contracts.

Burridge v. New York L. Ins. Co. 211 Mo. 158, 109 S. W. 560; Christensen v. New York L. Ins. Co. 152 Mo. App. 551, 134 S. W. 100.

Respecting the suggestion and argument of counsel that defendant had the right to come into Missouri and make contracts in defiance of law, we submit that the right of contract is not an unlimited, unqualified one, but is always subject to the law in force at the time of making the contract.

Wilson v. Drumrite, 21 Mo. 325; Villa v. Rodriguez (Alexander v. Rodriguez) 12 Wall. 339, 20 L. ed. 410; State ex rel. Crow v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 152 Mo. 1, 45 L.R.A. 363, 52 S. W. 595; State v. Cantwell, 179 Mo. 245, 78 S. W. 569; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Karnes v. American F. Ins. Co. 144 Mo. 413, 46 S. W. 166; Havens v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 123 Mo. 403, 26 L.R.A. 107, 45 Am. St. Rep. 570, 27 S. W. 718; Henry & C. Co. v. Evans, 97 Mo. 47, 3 L.R.A. 332, 10 S. W. 868.

These decisions all proceed upon the theory that where the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee, pledgeor and pledgee, insurance company and insured, or other like fiduciary relations, subsist between the parties, legislation forbidding or governing the subject of contracts is permissible and sustainable. The relation between an insurance company and a policy holder is certainly fiduciary in its character, and is one that courts have more than once decided calls for the protection of the legislature by such wholesome legislation as lies at the foundation of these actions.

Smith v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 173 Mo. 329, 72 S. W. 935; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Twyman, 122 Ky. 513, 121 Am. St. Rep. 571, 92 S. W. 335, 97 S. W. 391; Narramore v. Cleveland, C. & St. L. R. Co. 48 L.R.A. 68, 37 C. C. A. 499, 96 Fed. 298; Andrus v. Fidelity Mut. L. Ins. Asso. 168 Mo. 151, 67 S. W. 582; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 562, 43 L. ed. 552, 554, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281.

Messrs. James S. Botsford, Buckner F. Deatherage, Goodwin Creason, W. P. Borland, and James A. Reed also filed a brief for defendant in error.

Mr. Chief Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

In March, 1894, Richard G. Head, a citizen and resident of New Mexico, being temporarily in Kansas City, Missouri, made application at a branch office of the New York Life Insurance Company for two policies of insurance for $10,000 each on his own life, for the benefit of his minor son, Richard G. Head, Jr. The application stated the residence of Head in New Mexico, and it was stipulated that the policy applied for when issued should [155] be considered as having been issued in New York, and be treated as a New York contract. When Head made the application he handed a note for the premium to the agent with instructions, when the policies came, to turn them over to a friend to hold for him. The policies were issued, were delivered as directed, and were subsequently turned over to Head when he again came to Kansas City. All the premiums but the first, with perhaps one exception, were paid in New Mexico or at an agency of the company in Colorado. Nine years after the issue of the policies, that is, in 1903, in New Mexico, Head transferred one of the policies to his daughter, Mary E. Head, the transfer having been either by way of original authority or ratification duly sanctioned by the proper probate court in the county of New Mexico where Head was domiciled. In 1904, Mary E. Head, under the policy of which she thus became the beneficiary, borrowed from the New York Life Insurance Company the sum of $2,270. The loan was requested by a letter written from Las Vegas, New Mexico, to New York, and accompanied by the policy and an executed loan agreement in the form usually required by the company, and which conformed to the requirements of the New York law. The loan bore 5 per cent interest and the agreement provided that it should be payable at the home office in New York, and that if any premium on the policy or any interest on the loan were not paid when due, "settlement of said loan and of any other indebtedness under said policy shall be made by contin ing said policy without further notice as paid-up insurance of reduced amount in accordance with § 88, chapter 690, of the Laws of 1892 of the state of New York."

Digitized by Google

There was default in April, 1905, in the payment of the interest on the loan and the premium on the policy, and pursuant to the terms of the loan agreement and the law of New York the policy was settled, the sum remaining from the accumulated surplus after paying the loan and [156] the past-due premium being applied to the purchase of paid-up insurance, and the policy was, at the request of Head and his daughter, sent to them in New Mexico in May, 1905, and was in the possession of the daughter when Head died in April, 1906.

In September, 1906, this suit was commenced in a court of the state of Missouri, by Mary E. Head, the beneficiary, to recover the full amount of the policy. Stating the grounds for relief which were relied upon not as literally expressed in the pleadings, but with reference to the ultimate assumption upon which the right to recover was essentially based, it was as follows: That although it was true that if the face of the policy was adhered to and the terms of the loan agreement were considered and the law of New York applied, the settlement of the policy would be binding, it was not so binding, but, on the contrary, was void, because at the time the policy was written there were statutes in force in the state of Missouri which made it the duty of the company to retain from the accumulated surplus a given percentage thereof, and in case it was necessary to save forfeiture, to apply the sum of such retained percentage to the payment of premium on temporary insurance as far as it would go, and if this duty had been discharged when the failure to pay took place, the sum of the retained percentage would have been adequate to extend the insurance to such a period as would have caused the full amount of the policy to be a valid and existing risk at the death of Head. Resting thus upon the Missouri statutes, of course the fundamental assumption upon which the right to recover was based was the controlling operation and effect of the Missouri law upon the policy, upon the terms of the loan agreement, and upon the law of the state of New York which would otherwise govern, as New York was the place where the loan agreement was made and the adjustment of the policy took place. As there is no controversy concerning the meaning of the [157] Missouri statutes if they were controlling, we content ourselves with referring to the sections of the Revised Statutes of Missouri which are relied upon as having produced the consequences stated: Sections 5856–5859 and 7897–7900 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1899. And the defense, considered also in its ultimate aspect, but asserted the validity of the settlement made in New York under the loan agreement, denied the applicability of the statutes of Missouri to that settlement, and expressly insisted that such statutes could not be applied to the situation without violating the due process clause of the 14th Amendment, and depriving of the right of freedom of contract guaranteed by that Amendment, and giving rise to the impairment of the obligation of a contract, contrary to the provisions of § 10, article 1 of the Constitution of the United States.

There was recovery in the court of first instance for the amount claimed under the policy, the court maintaining the supremacy of the Missouri statutes. In the supreme court to which the case was taken after a hearing in a division thereof the judgment below was affirmed on an opinion which expressly held that the policy of insurance was a Missouri contract, controlled by the Missouri law, and that, by the operation and effect of that law, the loan agreement made in the state of New York, and the settlement effected in that state in accordance with that agreement, conformably to the laws of New York, was controlled by the Missouri statute and was void. And the opinion so holding was in express terms adopted by the court in banc where the case was reheard.

Digitized by Google

The rights under the contract clause of the Constitution of the United States and the 14th Amendment, which, as we have stated, were asserted below, form the basis of the assignments of error. As the conflicting contentions concerning these constitutional questions advanced to refute, on the one hand, and to sustain, on the [158] other, the reasons which led the court below to its conclusion, involve the whole case, to briefly state at the outset the propositions upheld below will concentrate the issues and serve to give bold relief to the questions which require to be decided. (a) Determining whether the contract was a Missouri contract, made in that state and governed by its laws, the court held that the express stipulation in the contract to the effect that the policy was to be considered as issued from the home office, and be treated as a New York contract, was overborne by the fact that the application for the policy was made to the Kansas City agency, that the policy was sent there for delivery, and that the first premium was there paid. (b) In deciding that this view was not modified by the fact that the insured was a nonresident of Missouri, and by the further fact that, on the face of the policy, it was clearly manifest that it was executed not for the purpose of having effect in Missouri, but to be operative outside of that state, the court said:

"It has been repeatedly ruled in this state since the enactment of §§ 5856 et seq. of the Revision of 1889 (now Rev. Stat. 1909, § 6946) and the act of 1891 (Laws 1891, p. 75), Rev. Stat. 1899, §§ 1024 and 1026 (now Rev. Stat. 1909, §§ 3037, 3040), that foreign insurance companies admitted to carry on their business in this state can only contract within the limits prescribed by our statutes, and that, in the conduct of the business under the license granted by this state, they 'shall be subjected to all the liabilities, restrictions, and duties which are or may be imposed upon corporations of like character organized under the general laws of this state, and shall have no other or greater powers.' The effect of these decisions is to write into every insurance contract made by a foreign insurance company, so licensed, in this state, all of the provisions of the statutes of this state appurtenant to the making of such contract, and which define and measure the reciprocal rights and duties of the parties thereto. [159] These statutes are declaratory of the public policy of this state, and inhibit the doing of the business of insurance in this state by any corporation contrary to their regulations by annulling all the stipulations which offend the provisions of the statutes. Horton v. New York L. Ins. Co. 151 Mo. 604, 52 S. W. 356; Smith v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 173 Mo. 329, 72 S. W. 935; Burridge v. New York L. Ins. Co. 211 Mo. 158, 109 S. W. 560; Cravens v. New York L. Ins. Co. 148 Mo. 583, 53 L.R.A. 305, 71 Am. St. Rep. 628, 50 S. W. 519; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Cravens, 178 U. S. 389, 44 L. ed. 1116, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 962; Whitfield v. Ætna L. Ins. Co. 205 U. S. 489, 51 L. ed. 895, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578, affirming Keller v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 58 Mo. App. 557." [241 Mo. 413, 147 S. W. 827.]

(c) In disposing of the contention that, as the loan agreement was made in New York by persons not citizens of Missouri, and was sanctioned by the law of New York, it could not be treated as void by extending the Missouri statutes into the state of New York without a violation of the 14th Amendment, and without impairing the obligation of a contract, the court said:

"It is not an open question in this state, that all subsidiary contracts made by the parties to an insurance contract are within the contemplation and purview of the original contract, and are not to be treated as independent agreements. This being so, they are inefficacious to alter, change, or modify the rights and obligations as they existed under the original contract of insurance. Burridge v. New York L. Ins. Co. 211 Mo. 158, 109 S. W. 560; Smith v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 173 Mo. 329, 72 S. W. 935."

Before approaching the constitutional questions relied upon in the light of these rulings we must dispose of a motion to dismiss. It rests upon the ground that, as the court below sustained its ruling by reference to a line of state decisions, a leading one of which had been affirmed by this court (New York L. Ins. Co. v. Cravens, 178 U. S. 389, 44 L. ed. 1116, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 962) prior to the decision below, therefore, as the basis for jurisdiction had been demonstrated to be unfounded by a decision of this court announced prior to the time the writ of error was prosecuted, there was no substantial ground upon which to base the suing out of the writ, and it [160] must be dismissed. But the contention rests upon a plain misconception as to what was involved and decided in the Cravens Case, since that case but concerned a contract of insurance made in Missouri as to a citizen of that state, and required it only to be determined whether rights under the Constitution of the United States had been denied by the ruling of the state court holding void a forfeiture of a policy which had been declared by the corporation for a failure to pay in Missouri a premium there due when such forfeiture was in direct violation of the prohibition of the state law. The difference, therefore, between that case and this, is that which, in the nature of things, must obtain between questions concerning the operation and effect of a state law within its borders and upon the conduct of persons confessedly within its jurisdiction, and its right to extend its authority beyond its borders so as to control contracts made between citizens of other states, and virtually, in fact, to disregard the law of such other states by which the acts done were admittedly valid.

Digitized by Google

Coming to the merits, to narrow the subject to be decided as much as possible, we pass the consideration of the ruling below, holding that, under the proof, the contract was a Missouri contract, and therefore, for the sake of argument only, concede that there was power in the state to treat the contract made for the purposes stated as a Missouri contract, and to subject it, as to matters and things which were legitimately within the state authority, to the rule of the state law. And this concession brings us to consider the second general inquiry, which is the power of the state of Missouri to extend the operation of its statutes beyond its borders into the jurisdiction of other states, so as in such other states to destroy or impair the right of persons not citizens of Missouri to contract, although the contract could in no sense be operative in Missouri, and although the contract was sanctioned by the law of the state where made. That is to say, the right of a state where a contract [161] concerning a particular subject-matter not in its essence intrinsically and inherently local is once made within its borders not merely to legislate concerning acts done or agreements made within the state in the future, concerning such original contract, but to affect the parties to such original contract with a perpetual contractual paralysis following them outside of the jurisdiction of the state or original contract by prohibiting them from doing any act or making any agreement concerning the original contract not in accord with the law of the state where the contract was originally made. In other words, concretely speaking, we must consider the validity of the loan agreement; that is, how far it was within the power of the state of Missouri to extend its authority into the state of New York, and there forbid the parties, one of whom was a citizen of New Mexico and the other a citizen of New York, from making such loan agreement in New York simply because it modified a contract originally made in Missouri. Such question, we think, admits of but one answer, since it would be impossible to permit the statutes of Missouri to operate beyond the jurisdiction of that state and in the state of New York, and there destroy freedom of contract without throwing down the constitutional barriers by which all the states are restricted within the orbits of their lawful authority, and upon the preservation of which the government under the Constitution depends. This is so obviously the necessary result of the Constitution that it has rarely been called in question, and hence authorities directly dealing with it do not abound. The principle, however, lies at the foundation of the full faith and credit clause and the many rulings which have given effect to that clause.[1]

[162] It is illustrated as regards the right to freedom of contract by the ruling in Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427, and it finds expression in the decisions of this court affirmatively establishing that a state may not, consistently with due process clause of the 14th Amendment, extend its authority beyond its legitimate jurisdiction either by way of the wrongful exertion of judicial power or the unwarranted exercise of the taxing power.[2]

---

[1]Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. ed. 1123, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224; Tilt v. Kelsey, 207 U. S. 43, 52 L. ed. 95, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U. S. 230, 52 L. ed. 1039, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 641; American Exp. Co. v. Mullins, 212 U. S. 311, 53 L. ed. 525, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 381, 15 Ann. Cas. 536; Converse v. Hamilton, 224 U. S. 243, 56 L. ed. 749, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 415, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1292. And see Bedford v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 181 U. S. 227, 45 L. ed. 834, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 597.

[2]Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; Overby v. Gordon, 177 U. S. 214, 222, 44 L. ed. 741, 744, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 603; Old Wayne Mut. Life Asso. v. McDonough, 204 U. S. 8, 51 L. ed. 345, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 236; Louisville & J. Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 188 U. S. 385, 47 L. ed. 513, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 463; Delaware,

Digitized by Google

And an analysis of the opinion of the court below makes it clear that its ruling was rested not upon any doubt concerning the obvious operation of the Constitution which we have pointed out, but because it was deemed that the peculiar facts and circumstances of this case took it out of the general rule and caused it to be therefore a law unto itself. We say this because, while it is true the court based its conclusion upon a line of cases previously decided in that state, as all the cases thus relied upon involved only policies of insurance issued in Missouri to citizens of Missouri, and were solely concerned with the effect of acts done in Missouri which it was asserted were forbidden by the statutes of that state existing at the time when the acts were done, it could not have been that the cases were deemed to be controlling upon the principle of stare decisis, but they must have been held to be controlling because of the persuasive force of the reasoning upon which they had been decided. Indeed, this is not left to inference, since the court below in its opinion summarized the reasoning in the previous cases as shown by the passage which we have quoted, and made it the groundwork of its ruling in this case, that reasoning being as follows: Insurance companies chartered by Missouri took their existence from [163] the grant of the state, and therefore had no power to contract in excess of that which was conferred upon them by the state; hence, all acts done by them which were prohibited by the state law were ultra vires and void. But, as foreign insurance companies have no right to come into the state and there do business except as the result of a license from the state, and as the state exacts as a condition of a license that all foreign insurance companies shall be subject to the laws of the state as if they were domestic corporations, it follows that the limitations of the state law resting upon domestic corporations also rest upon foreign companies, and therefore deprive them of any power which a domestic company could not enjoy, thus rendering void or inoperative any provision of their charter or condition in policies issued by them or contracts made by them inconsistent with the Missouri law. But when this reasoning is analyzed, we think it affords no ground whatever for taking this case out of the general rule and making the distinction relied upon. This is so as the proposition cannot be maintained without holding that because a state has power to license a foreign insurance company to do business within its borders, and the authority to regulate such business, therefore a state has power to regulate the business of such company outside its borders, and which would otherwise be beyond the state's authority. A distinction which brings the contention right back to the primordial conception upon which alone it would be possible to sanction the doctrine contended for, that is, that because a state has power to regulate its domestic concerns, therefore it has the right to control the domestic concerns of other states. It is apparent, therefore, that to accept the doctrine it would have to be said that the distribution of powers and the limitations which arise from the existence of the Constitution are ephemeral, and depend simply upon the willingness of any of the states to exact as a condition of a license granted to a foreign corporation [164] to do business within its borders that the Constitution shall be inapplicable and its limitations worth nothing. It would go further than this, since it would require it to be decided not only that the constitutional limitations on state powers could be set aside as the result of a license, but that the granting of such license could be made the means of extending state power so as to cause it to embrace subjects wholly beyond its legitimate authority.

It is true it has been held that, in view of the power of a state over insurance, it might, as the condition of a license given to a foreign insurance company to do business within its borders, impose a condition as to business within the state, which otherwise, but for the complete power to exclude, would be held repugnant to the Constitution. In other words, that a company having otherwise no right whatever, for any purpose, to go in without a license, would not be heard, after accepting the same, to complain of exactions upon which the license was conditioned as unconstitutional, because of its voluntary submission to the same. But even if it be put out of view that this doctrine has been either expressly or by necessary implication overruled, or, at all events, so restricted as to deprive it of all application to this case (see Harrison v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 232 U. S. 318, 332, ante, 621, 626, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 333, and authorities there cited), it here can have no possible application since such doctrine, at best, but recognized the power of a state, under the circumstances stated, to impose conditions upon the right to do the business embraced by the license, and therefore gives no support to the contention here presented, which is that a state, by a license, may acquire the right to exert an authority beyond its borders which it cannot exercise consistently with the Constitution. But the Constitution and its limitations are the safeguards of all the states, preventing any and all of them, under the guise of license or otherwise, from exercising powers not possessed.

L. & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 198 U. S. 341, 49 L. ed. 1077, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 669; Union Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Kentucky, 199 U. S. 194, 50 L. ed. 150, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 36, 4 Ann. Cas. 493; Buck v. Beach, 206 U. S. 392, 51 L. ed. 1106, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 712, 11 Ann. Cas. 732; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 1, 38, 54 L. ed. 355, 370, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 190.

Digitized by Google

[165] As it follows from what we have said that the primary conception upon which the court below assumed this case might be taken out of the general rule, and thereby the state of Missouri be endowed with authority which could not be exercised consistently with the Constitution, was erroneous, it results that the necessity for reversal is demonstrated without requiring us to consider other propositions. But before we come to direct the judgment of reversal, we briefly refer to another aspect of the subject, that is, the ruling of the court below as to the subsidiary nature of the loan agreement, and its consequent control by the broader principle upon which its conclusion was really based. Of course, under the view which we have taken of the case, that is, of the want of power of the state of Missouri, because the contract of insurance was made within its jurisdiction, to forever thereafter control by its laws all subsequent agreements made in other jurisdictions by persons not citizens of Missouri, and lawful where made,—that is, to stereotype, as it were, the will of the parties contracting in Missouri as of the date of the contract,—it is unnecessary to consider whether the loan agreement was or was not subsidiary; but see on this subject, Leonard v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 65 Conn. 529, 33 Atl. 511; Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 22 Ind. App. 332, 53 N. E. 251; S. S. White Dental Mfg. Co. v. Delaware Ins. Co. 105 Fed. 642; 2 Wharton, Confl. L. § 467g and cases cited; and see note in 63 L.R.A. 833.

Reversed.

---

[166] NEW YORK LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
RICHARD G. HEAD, JR., by His Next Friend, B. F. Deatherage.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 166, 167.)

This case is governed by the decision in New York Life Ins. Co. v. Head, ante, 1259.

[No. 225.]

Argued March 10, 1914. Decided June 8, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Circuit Court of Jackson County, in that state, for the recovery of the full amount of a policy of life insurance, notwithstanding an adjustment under a policy loan agreement in accordance with the laws of the state of New York. Reversed.

See same case below, 241 Mo. 420, 147 S. W. 832.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. James H. McIntosh argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Gardiner Lathrop, Cyrus Crane, and O. W. Pratt, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

Messrs. James H. McIntosh, Gardiner Lathrop, S. W. Moore, O. W. Pratt, and Cyrus Crane also filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Buckner F. Deatherage argued the cause, and, with Messrs. James S. Botsford and Goodwin Creason, filed a brief for defendant in error:

Messrs. James S. Botsford, Buckner F. Deatherage, Goodwin Creason, W. P. Borland, and James A. Reed also filed a brief for defendant in error.

For contentions of counsel, see their briefs as reported in New York L. Ins. Co. v. Head, ante, 1259.

Mr. Chief Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

This case is governed by the opinion in No. 254, just decided [234 U. S. 149, ante, 1259, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 879]. The policy sued on was one of the two issued to Richard G. Head in Kansas City, Missouri, in favor of his minor son. It was delivered at Kansas City and the first premium paid there, as in the previous case, and the subsequent premiums were paid in New Mexico. There was borrowed upon the policy by authority of the proper probate court in New Mexico the sum of $2,270, under a loan agreement and pledge; there was a default and an adjustment of the policy as in the other case. The case was tried in the court of first instance with the other case, was embraced in the supreme court of Missouri by the [167] same opinion by which the other case was disposed of, and there thus being no distinction between the two cases, for reasons given in the other case, No. 254, the judgment is reversed.

Digitized by Google

FLORIDA EAST COAST RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
UNITED STATES, Interstate Commerce Commission, Railroad Commissioners of Florida, et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 167–188.)

Interstate commerce commission — judicial review — order without evidence to support it.

The enforcement of an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission reducing gathering rates for citrus fruits and vegetables from production points in Florida to a basing point in the same state will be enjoined where it was rendered without any evidence whatever to support it, this being a question of law which it is the duty of the courts to examine and decide.

[For other cases, see Interstate Commerce Commission, 8–14, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 383.]

Argued January 15 and 16, 1913. Decided June 8, 1914.

APPEAL from the United States Commerce Court to review a decree refusing to enjoin the enforcement of an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission reducing rates. Reversed.

See same case below, 200 Fed. 797.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Frederick C. Bryan and Alexander St. Clair-Abrams argued the cause and filed a brief for appellant.

Mr. Blackburn Esterline, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, argued the cause, and, with Solicitor General Bullitt, filed a brief for the United States.

Mr. Charles W. Needham argued the cause and filed a brief for the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. Frederick M. Hudson argued the cause and filed a brief for the Railroad Commissioners of Florida.

Mr. A. A. Boggs filed a brief for intervening appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

The order of the Interstate Commerce Commission concerning which the appellant, hereafter called the East Coast Line, complained before the court below, and which that court refused to enjoin, was made on a second supplemental petition presented in controversies which had been long pending and twice before decided, such controversies involving many railroads, and being concerned with the rates as to pineapples, citrus fruits, and vegetables from places of production in Florida to exterior points of distribution or consumption. While the report here under consideration, made on the second supplemental petition, deals with only a few of the railroads concerned in the previous inquiries, and with only a part of the controversies involved in the previous cases, yet the reports in the previous cases and the reasons stated by the Commission for its action in those cases are so connected with its action complained of in this case that it is impossible to understand this controversy without recurring to and stating the previous reports of the Commission in the controversies to which we have referred.

[174] We observe before coming to make that statement that none of the testimony taken before the Commission in the cases prior to this one is in the record, it having been stipulated that the facts stated by the Commission in its reports in such previous cases should be taken as the facts of such controversies. For the purpose of the statement which we shall make, the record therefore consists of the reports in such previous cases, of the report in this case, and the testimony taken in this case before the Commission and in the court below. The future application of the facts which we shall state will be facilitated by giving a description of the East Coast Line as stated in the several reports of the Commission to which we shall immediately recur.

The East Coast Line is wholly within the state of Florida, the main line extending from Jacksonville south along the Atlantic coast to Miami, a distance of 366 miles, then to Homestead, 28 miles south, and thence across the Florida Keys to Key West. At the time of the final hearing before the Commission on March 2, 1911, the road was not fully constructed, and was only completed and being operated to Knight's Key, about 83 miles below Homestead. The total mileage of the road was about 583 miles, including 477 miles of main line from Jacksonville to Knight's Key and about 106 miles of branch line above Miami. The cost of the construction from Homestead on was enormous, amounting to nearly $175,000 per mile, and the total cost of the extension from Homestead to Knight's Key, 83 miles, nearly equalled the entire cost of the balance of the road, 500 miles. On July 3, 1907, a petition was filed by the Florida Fruit & Vegetable Shippers' Protective Association against the Atlantic Coast Line, the Seaboard Air Line and Southern Railway Companies and the East Coast Line, complaining of and asking a reduction in interstate rates on pineapples, citrus fruits, and vegetables. The East Coast Line was the only one [175] of the defendant railroads whose traffic was confined to the producing regions in Florida because, while the other lines also undoubtedly penetrated to the area of production, their lines were not confined to Florida, but were trunk lines, carrying not only the product committed to them by producers in Florida, but also the products committed by producers to roads like the East Coast Line, which did not extend beyond Florida, and had therefore to be transshipped if destined to points beyond the state by other roads. In coming to make its report in the case thus referred to, the Commission thus stated the general situation of the railroad traffic of all the roads in Florida concerning the subjects under discussion (No. 1168, 14 Inters. Com. Rep. 483):

Digitized by Google

"The shape and location of the state of Florida is such that these railroads which handle this traffic from the point of production up to the base point necessarily do but a limited business. They extend south considerable distances through a sparsely settled country which neither originates nor consumes a considerable amount of traffic. Some of them reach the seacoast, but none of them connect or can connect with railroads leading beyond, and the amount of through business handled is extremely light. Their traffic is confined almost entirely to bringing out the products which originate upon their lines, and carrying in the supplies which are consumed in the territory served by them. Fruits and vegetables, lumber, naval stores, and in some cases cotton and phosphate rock are the principal commodities carried, and of these, fruits and vegetables produce the most revenue."

In the report by which the Commission disposed of this controversy (No. 1168, 14 Inters. Com. Rep. 476) it divided the rates to be considered into two classes: (a) gathering charges from production points in Florida to base points of which Jacksonville was the only one on the East Coast Line, and (b) rates from base points to points of final [176] destination in other states, the sum of the two rates being the joint through rate.

Considering the three products whose traffic charges were under consideration, the Commission said:

(a) Citrus fruits:

"From an examination of the elaborate figures which were introduced upon the trial showing the character of the traffic handled by these Florida roads, the conditions under which it is handled, their earnings, and the cost of operation running through a series of years, it is difficult to see how these railroads can be expected to transport in a suitable way this fruit and vegetable traffic from points of production to these basing points for a less sum than they now receive. It is difficult to see how, even upon the present tariff, those lines can, in the immediate future, expect to pay any considerable return upon their investment. We feel that these local rates, although they are high in comparison with other local rates, are as low as should be established under all the circumstances."

(b) Vegetables:

"The same observations which have been made upon the orange rates to base points apply with equal pertinency to those upon vegetables. They are named by the railroad commission of Florida. They are made with the understanding that they are really parts of through rates from the point of production to the market of consumption. They are low in comparison with other rates because it is understood that this industry is an important one to the state of Florida, and that a low cost of transportation is essential to its development.

"While these local rates are essentially part of the through charge, and should be dealt with by this Commission as such, it is difficult to see how these Florida railroads can render a proper service upon a lower scale of rates than is now applied. It must be remembered that without the railroad this industry could not exist at all, and that [177] to its satisfactory carrying on the character of the service is fully as important as the rate. It is better that these fruits and vegetables should reach the market on time, and in good condition, than that a few cents per box should be subtracted from the carrying charge. There was very little complaint as to the service; nor did the shippers who testified manifest any desire that these carriers should be required to accept less than reasonable compensation for that service. Our conclusion upon this branch of the case is that the present rates up to the base points, while high in comparison with similar rates in other localities, are as low as they ought to be under the conditions obtaining upon these Florida lines, so that here, as in case of oranges, the real question arises upon the rate from the base point to the northern market."

(c) Pineapples:

"Pineapples are mainly produced in Florida, upon the line of the Florida East Coast Railway, which extends, as already said, down the east side of Florida. This industry has, within recent years, developed rapidly. Florida pineapples to-day sell in all the markets of the United States in competition with foreign pineapples, usually commanding much higher prices than the foreign article. While the period of production in the United States and in Cuba is not exactly the same, still it may fairly be said that the two products do compete.

Digitized by Google

"It was said that Jansen might be selected as a typical producing point upon the Florida East Coast Railway. This station is 257 miles south of Jacksonville, and the rate on pineapples is 24 cents per box of 80 pounds. Rates from other points are relatively about the same as from Jansen; somewhat lower, it will be seen, for the same distance, than from most producing points upon oranges."

Presumably, deeming that the particular situation on the East Coast Line as to the character of its business, its [178] location, its cost, etc., etc., required to be specially pointed out in addition to what was said in the passages quoted, the Commission said:

"The Florida East Coast Railway was built as part of a hotel scheme, and its principal business is the carrying of passengers who frequent these Florida winter resorts. Over 50 per cent of its total receipts are from passenger traffic. Its most important freight business is the transportation of fruits and vegetables, and of these pineapples afford the most considerable amount of revenue. The management of the railroad has paid great attention to the development of this business. In the pineapples region highways are few and transportation by wagon is therefore costly. To relieve this difficulty sidings have been put in the pineapple region at frequent intervals. The traffic representative of this railroad stated that it was possible to load pineapples every half mile upon his line in the pineapple-producing region. When once loaded, great attention is paid to sending the fruit to Jacksonville upon a reliable and expeditious schedule.

"Very elaborate tables were introduced, showing the cost of constructing this railroad and the financial results of its past operations. These statements and tables have been examined by the Commission, but it does not seem necessary to reproduce them here, or to state in detail the grounds of our conclusions. But for this railroad the pineapple industry in Florida would not to-day exist. The quality of the service rendered that industry by this road is not criticized. The shippers of this fruit ought not to object, nor do they object, to paying a fair compensation for the service, and in our opinion the present rates do not exceed such just compensation for the transportation of pineapples from various producing points to Jacksonville, and we so hold."

And concerning the earnings of the East Coast Line, it was said:

[179] "The total earnings of the Florida East Coast Railway for the same year [ending June 30, 1907] were $5,911 per mile, and its operating expenses $4,502. The greater part of the receipts of this railroad are from its passenger service. The evidence shows that a considerable portion of what little freight revenue it has comes from the transportation of fruits and vegetables. It has given in the past great attention to this service, and has apparently satisfied its patrons in this respect. It makes no through rates, but receives its full local in all cases up to Jacksonville."

Giving effect to the foregoing, the Commission held that the complaint as to gathering charges was wholly unfounded, and they were maintained. A different conclusion, however, was reached as to charges from the base points to points of distribution or consumption, as to which some reduction was made. It consequently follows that all the other roads who were defendants were subjected to some reduction as to their rates, while the East Coast Line, because of its being a purely gathering road, was subjected to no reduction whatever.

Within a year after this action by the Commission the same complainant commenced a new proceeding (No. 2566) against two hundred railroads, including, among others, the East Coast Line, to establish carload rates from base points in Florida to interstate points. At the same time in No. 1168, which, as we have seen, had been previously passed upon by the Commission and decided in favor of the East Coast Line, a supplemental petition was filed against that road, the sole complaint against the East Coast Line in such petitions being as to its gathering rates on pineapples from points of production to Jacksonville. And it is to be presumed that the complaint as to pineapple-gathering rates was made only against the East Coast Line, because, as we have seen, as stated by the Commission, that road was almost the exclusive carrier of such [180] product, and in fact had virtually built up that industry. The controversy, while it involved a claim of reduction, in its broad aspect presented only a controversy as to whether there should be put in force carload and less-than-carload instead of any-quantity rates in the performance of its duty of gathering pineapples. On the filing of the new and original as well as of the supplemental petition, the Commission directed the rescinding of its previous order concerning the reasonableness of gathering rates, as well as its finding on the subject of rates from base points, and directed the matter to be reheard. Without referring to the conclusion of the Commission concerning the controversy as to the many railroads who were before it as to their interstate rates, we come to state the ruling of the Commission as to the East Coast Line (17 Inters. Com. Rep. 552):

Digitized by Google

"The evidence produced upon the present hearing suggests no change in what was said so far as that applies to the Florida East Coast Railway. That line operates at the present time 477 miles of main line and 106 miles of branches. It has a first mortgage of $10,000,000, a second mortgage of $20,000,000, and a capital stock of $3,000,000, making in all $33,000,000. This capitalization, with the exception of about $4,000,000, represents an actual cash investment.

"It is urged by the complainant that the portion of the line from Miami south, which has cost some $14,000,000, was not at the present time a paying investment, and that the balance of the line from Jacksonville to Miami, which is used by the growers of pineapples, ought not to be taxed with the cost of this construction. Admitting this to be so, and laying out of view altogether the $14,000,000 which have been invested in that part of the property, it is still true that, during the entire existence of the Florida East Coast Railway, so far as this record shows, that property has never earned in any single year 6 per cent upon the money invested, with the single exception of the year 1909. [181] During much of the time its net earnings have been but little above its operating expenses. We certainly cannot hold that these rates should be reduced because for a single twelve months, under what may be termed abnormal conditions, this railway earned about 6 per cent on the money which has been actually invested in its construction. The years when no return has been received must certainly be given some consideration. Upon no other theory could private capital be induced to invest in the construction of railroads.

"While, however, we adhere to what was said in the previous case, we do think, upon more careful examination, that these rates of the Florida East Coast Railway on pineapples ought to be somewhat revised. They are not consistent with one another, and in our opinion those from the more distant points are too high as compared with rates from nearby points.

"The present rates are in any quantity. About 60 per cent of these pineapples move from the point of origin in carloads, 40 per cent in less than carloads. Carload shipments are stripped and loaded by the shipper, and are not unloaded at Jacksonville, which probably saves the carrier not far from 2 cents per box. The less-than-carload shipment is loaded by the railway and usually unloaded at the station in South Jacksonville or Jacksonville. In our opinion carload rates should be established which are less than the present any-quantity rates by 3 cents per box.

"The establishment of such carload rates will not of a certainty work a decrease in the net earnings of the carriers. It is a false theory of transportation which seeks to force the shipper to avail himself of a less-than-carload service, which is more expensive to render, for the purpose of increasing the gross revenues of the carrier. The true object should be to perform the service in the most economical manner, and to charge for that service reasonable compensation. In the end this makes to the advantage [182] of both the carrier and its patron. The vice president of the Florida East Coast Railway stated that he had always thought that carload rates should be established, and that, in his opinion, to establish carload rates, 3 cents per box less than the present any-quantity rates would not prejudice the net revenues of his company, since he would make up by saving in operating expenses what he lost in gross income."

The order of the Commission which gave effect to these views entered February 8, 1910, changed gathering charges on pineapples and citrus fruits on the East Coast Line from any-quantity to carload and less-than-carload rates, and modified the mileage basis. On attention being directed to the fact that the complaint related only to pineapples, while the order applied to that product and to citrus fruits, the order was modified and restricted to the subject complained of,—pineapples. The East Coast Line conformed to the order, and, indeed, shortly after doing so, also voluntarily put into effect carload and less-than-carload gathering rates on citrus fruits and vegetables, and although the rates thus fixed were somewhat higher than the rates on pineapples which the Commission had established, they were lower than the citrus fruit and vegetable rates which had been expressly sustained by the Commission.

Some months after this was done the same complainant who had filed the previous petitions presented in No. 1168 a second supplemental complaint against the East Coast Line, and new petitions against the Seaboard Air Line and Atlantic Coast Line Railways (No. 3808). So far as the East Coast Line was concerned, the complaint was against the citrus fruit and vegetable-gathering rates, and asked that they be equalized with or made the same as the pineapple rate. The Florida Railroad Commission intervened and asked the same relief. The Commission in effect granted the prayer of this second supplemental complaint, found the rates of the East Coast Line on [183] citrus fruits and vegetables to be unjust and unreasonable, and directed the putting into operation of a lower stated schedule of gathering rates which was made applicable not only to the East Coast Line, but also to the other roads which were parties to the proceeding. And it is this order which the railroad refused to obey, and to enjoin the enforcement of which this suit was brought.

Digitized by Google

Without going into detail, it suffices to say that the report of the Commission concerning the action just stated did not purport to question the correctness of its previous findings sustaining the citrus fruit and vegetable rates of the East Coast Line, but was based upon what was deemed to be a change in conditions since the previous decisions. After pointing out that it had previously ordered a change from any-quantity to carload and less-than-carload rates on pineapples from gathering points to the base point on the East Coast Line, and on all fruits and vegetables from base points outward, and that on both the Atlantic Coast Line and the Seaboard Air Line any-quantity rates yet remained from gathering points as to all fruits and vegetables, although such was not the case as to the East Coast Line, because of the change which it had voluntarily made, it was said (22 Inters. Com. Rep. 11, 14-16):

"No material change has taken place since then [that is, since the previous decisions], so far as this record discloses, which would lead to a different conclusion if the same subject were before us to-day. The volume of business transacted has increased, but the expenses of operation have also increased to an extent which offsets the greater amount of business.

. . . . . .

"It appeared in the original case that citrus fruits to some extent, and vegetables to a much greater extent, were shipped in small lots to Jacksonville, and there reloaded for movement beyond. It was our impression that, in [184] establishing carload rates from the base point, that this would permit the movement in small lots up to the base point and the consolidation at such point, and that the carload movement would in fact be mainly beyond the base point. Such has not been the result. In order to obtain the carload rate beyond the base point it seems to be necessary for the shipper, in actual practice, to present a full carload at the point of origin, and from this it follows that the movement up to the base point at the present time is entirely different from what it was when we approved these any-quantity rates. At that time the loading was by the carrier; now it is mainly by the shipper. The loading of the cars from the point of origin to the base points is much heavier now than formerly. In 1907 the average loading of citrus fruits and pineapples upon the Atlantic Coast Line up to the base point was 215 boxes. In 1910 this loading had increased to 279 boxes. In case of vegetables the increase is even more marked. The number of cars now required to transport the same amount of this traffic from points of origin to base points would be materially less than in 1908. Otherwise stated, it costs the shipper more to handle his business to-day and it costs the railroad less."

And upon that changed circumstance an order was awarded directing the change from any-quantity to carload and less-than-carload, and fixing a rate which was the same as that previously fixed for pineapples. Of course, as the East Coast Line had voluntarily put in carload and less-than-carload rates, it was only affected by this order to the extent that it lowered the traffic charge as contained in the schedule which had been previously voluntarily established.

It is insisted that the order of the Commission was wrongful, and that the court below erred in not restraining its enforcement for the following reasons: (a) because the order complained of was rendered without any evidence [185] whatever to sustain it; (b) because it confiscated the property of the railway in a twofold aspect; first, by fixing a rate so unreasonably low as to afford no remuneration to the corporation for the use of its property; and second, because, although the Commission, in order to justify the rate which it fixed, took into account the revenue derived from the extended road, it nevertheless declined to at all consider the value of the extended road and the right to earn a return thereon. We come as briefly as possible to consider these contentions separately.

(a) That there was no evidence whatever tending to sustain the reduction of the rates on citrus fruits and vegetables as to the East Coast Line which the Commission ordered.

While a finding of fact made by the Commission concerning a matter within the scope of the authority delegated to it is binding, and may not be re-examined in the courts, it is undoubted that where it is contended that an order whose enforcement is resisted was rendered without any evidence whatever to support it, the consideration of such a question involves not an issue of fact, but one of law, which it is the duty of the courts to examine and decide. Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 227 U. S. 88, 91, 92, 57 L. ed. 431, 433, 434, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185, and cases cited.

Digitized by Google

In view of what we have said concerning the state of the record, the solution of the question must depend upon an examination and analysis of two subjects: the one, the reports of the Commission in the previous cases, and the other, the testimony which was before it and the report made in this case. As to the first, in view of the statements made by the Commission in its report in the original case (No. 1168, 14 Inters. Com. Rep. 476) as to the earning power of the road, the nature of its business, and the reasonableness of its rates, and the express finding that the citrus fruit and vegetable rates were just and reasonable and should not be changed, and the further fact that they were not called in question in the second proceeding, it [186] follows that the inquiry narrows itself to the mere consideration of the testimony taken in this proceeding, and the report of the Commission in such proceeding, and the testimony taken before the court below in so far as it is proper to consider it in connection with the particular question under consideration. But, coming to make a review of the testimony before the Commission on the issue raised by the second supplemental petition, we fail to find the slightest proof tending to sustain the reduction in rates as to the East Coast Line, which was made.

There are only three subjects referred to in the testimony which can in any view be considered as having any possible tendency to show such a change as would cause the rate which was found by the Commission in the past reasonable, and not to justify a change, to be unreasonable and therefore require reduction. The three subjects are these: (a) testimony by the chairman of the Florida Railroad Commission that there had been a considerable increase in the volume of traffic in citrus fruits and vegetables since the previous finding; (b) a further statement or admission made by an officer of the East Coast Line in a colloquy which took place at the hearing in this case, to the effect that, as shippers under carload rates loaded their own cars, there was some difference in cost, to the advantage of the road over the cost of loading when the any-quantity rates prevailed; (c) testimony with reference to the Atlantic Coast Line and the Seaboard Air Line (but none as to the East Coast Line), to the effect that on those roads it had come to pass that there was a saving in expense and an increase in earning capacity because, even under the any-quantity rates, carload shipments had greatly increased, and cars so shipped were much more heavily loaded and moved from the point of production through the base point to their ultimate destination, when such was not the case at the time the previous order was made. Testimony which, as we have seen, was expressly [187] declared by the Commission to be in effect the cause which gave rise to the reduction. But at once it is to be observed that, so far as any inference alone from the difference between carload and less-than-carload rates and any-quantity rates is concerned, it had no application to the East Coast Line, since that road had put in the carload and less-than-carload rates while the other two roads had not. And so far as the consideration of the increased loading is concerned, as stated by the Commission, whatever may have been the proof as to the Seaboard Air Line and the Atlantic Coast Line, it is beyond controversy that no such proof can be found in the record as to the East Coast Line except the vague intimation to which we have referred.

Thus, by analysis, the case comes to this: Did the facts as to the increased loading which the Commission found to exist in the case of the Seaboard Air Line and the Atlantic Coast Line support or tend to support the order as to the East Coast Line in the absence of all testimony in the record concerning the existence of such fact as to the traffic on that road? In other words, the question is, Because there was testimony as to the traffic of those roads, can such testimony be said to tend to establish the same condition on the East Coast Line? Conceding that, from an abstract point of view, an affirmative answer would have to be given to such question, we think such is not the case here for the following reasons: (a) because of the difference in business carried on by the two roads named and the East Coast Line, they being not only gatherers of the local product, but trunk line carriers; (b) because of the difference in the situation and traffic of the two trunk lines named and the East Coast Line, as deduced solely from the peculiar environment and movement of business on that road so aptly stated in the passages from the reports of the Commission which we have quoted. Differences which presumably gave rise to [188] separate statements in the previous reports in considering that road. While we do not say that the conclusion is affirmatively sustained, nevertheless we think the state of the record at least tends to give some support to the suggestion in the argument that the greater magnitude and importance of the consideration of the business and rates of the two trunk line carriers concentrated attention in that direction, and therefore caused the inquiry on that subject and the facts concerning the same to eclipse the distinctions between those lines and the East Coast Line,—distinctions which, if otherwise taken under consideration, should have produced a different result.

Digitized by Google

As it follows from these views that the order in question as to the East Coast Line and its enforcement should have been enjoined by the court below, our duty is to reverse the action of that court, and to remand the case to the proper district court, with directions to grant the prayer of the East Coast Line, and restrain the enforcement of the order in question; and it is so ordered.

Reversed.

CLEVE W. VAN DYKE, Plff. in Err.,
v.
CORDOVA COPPER COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 188–192.)

Error to state court — suit begun prior to statehood.

A judgment of the Supreme Court of the State of Arizona in a case which, though begun prior to the admission of said state into the Union, was tried after the conferring of statehood, and judgment rendered in a state court, is not reviewable in the Federal Supreme Court by virtue of the provision of the Arizona enabling act of June 20, 1910 (36 Stat. at L. p. 557, chap 310), § 32, that "from all judgments and decrees or other determinations of any court of the said territory, in any case begun prior to admission, the parties to such cause shall have the same right to prosecute appeals, writs of error, and petitions for review to the Supreme Court of the United States or to the circuit court of appeals as they would have had by law prior to the admission of said state into the Union."

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1030–1035, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 735.]

Submitted May 11, 1914. Decided June 8, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Arizona to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Superior Court of Gila County, in that state, in favor of plaintiff in a suit for money loaned, begun prior to the admission of the state into the Union, in the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District of the Territory of Arizona. Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

See same case below, 14 Ariz. 499, 132 Pac. 94.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Richard E. Sloan and James Westervelt submitted the cause for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. John H. Campbell and W. J. Hughes submitted the cause for defendant in error. Mr. Karl W. Kirchwey was on the brief.

Memorandum opinion by Mr. Chief Justice White, by direction of the Court:

This action was brought on December 2, 1911, by the Cordova Copper Company in the "district court of the fifth judicial district of the territory of Arizona in and for the county of Gila" to recover sums of money alleged to have been loaned to Van Dyke, the plaintiff in error, and remaining unpaid. The case was tried in April and May, 1912, after the admission of Arizona as a state, in the "superior court of Gila county, state of Arizona," and resulted in a verdict on May 4 for $15,364.75, upon which judgment was entered on the same day. On May 16, Van Dyke moved for a new trial, which motion was, at the instance of the company, stricken from the files. An appeal was taken to the supreme court of the state. The court, deciding that the appeal was taken alone from the judgment, and that there was no reversible error in the [190] judgment roll, held that it could not review errors which were alone susceptible of being reviewed upon an appeal from an order refusing a new trial, although treating the motion to strike out as equivalent to such refusal, and the judgment was consequently affirmed. This writ of error was then prosecuted, and the case is before us on a motion to dismiss.

Neither in the assignments of error nor in the argument at bar is it asserted that Federal rights were raised or involved in the court below, but the assertion that the case is within our jurisdiction rests solely upon the provisions of §§ 32 and 33 of the Arizona enabling act of June 20, 1910 (36 Stat. at L. pp. 557, 576, 577, chap. 310). The sections in question, generally speaking, provide for the trial of cases pending at the time of admission to statehood, and for their transfer to the appropriate courts established under the new system, and the particular language upon which the controversy turns is this:

". . . and that from all judgments

Digitized by Google

and decrees or other determinations of any court of the said territory, in any case begun prior to admission, the parties to such cause shall have the same right to prosecute appeals, writs of error, and petitions for review to the Supreme Court of the United States or to the circuit court of appeals as they would have had by law prior to the admission of said state into the Union."

The contention is that as this case was "begun prior to admission," and is one which, in consequence of the amount involved, might have been brought to this court from a judgment of the supreme court of the territory; therefore it comes within the express terms of the statute and there is jurisdiction. But, conceding the premise, we think the conclusion is clearly in conflict with the plain language of the provision relied upon. We say this because the right to prosecute writs of error conferred is limited to "judgments and decrees or other determinations of any court of [191] the said territory," thus obviously excluding the right to review in a case like this where, although "begun prior to admission," the case was tried after the conferring of statehood, and judgment rendered in a state court. It may indeed be, as suggested in the argument, that to thus construe the provision renders superfluous the phrase "in any cause begun prior to admission," since, in the nature of things, no judgment could be rendered by a territorial court unless the action had been brought prior to the admission of Arizona as a state. But we may not, in order to give effect to those words, virtually destroy the meaning of the entire context; that is, give them a significance which would be clearly repugnant to the statute, looked at as a whole, and destructive of its obvious intent. The statute was enacted for a twofold purpose: first, to save the right of appeal which had arisen and was in existence in cases decided prior to statehood in the methods contemplated by existing laws; and second, to appropriately distribute and provide for the transfer of untried and pending causes to the new courts which would come into existence under the new system. Passing the question of power to so do, it could not be assumed, except as the result of the most unequivocal direction to that end, that the statute was intended to create a new and strange method of procedure unknown to our constitutional system of government, by which the judgments to be rendered by state courts in cases which the statute contemplated should be transferred to such courts for trial, should be reviewed not according to the methods provided by the state law for such judgments, but by the Federal courts, although no Federal question of any kind was present to give such courts jurisdiction. That no such anomaly could possibly have been contemplated is shown by the proviso of § 33 of the act, making cases in the supreme court of the territory, which were pending at the time of statehood, and which were transferred to the highest [192] court of the state, reviewable by this court not as judgments of territorial courts, but, on the contrary, as judgments of state courts; in other words, making it plain that it was not contemplated that, after a case had been transferred to and decided by a state court, it would be subject to a review in this court, simply because it was pending in the territorial court at the time of the enabling act, as if it were a judgment of a territorial court.

Dismissed for want of jurisdictoin.

L. V. MULLEN, Plff. in Err.,
v.
N. H. SIMMONS, Sheriff of Johnston County, Oklahoma, et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 192-199.)

Execution — property subject to — Indian allotments.

Lands allotted to a Choctaw Indian could not be subjected, after the restrictions on alienation were removed, to the levy of an execution under a judgment in damages for a tort, theretofore recovered, without violating the provisions of the act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. at L. 642, chap. 1362), § 15, that "lands allotted to members and freedmen shall not be affected or encumbered by any deed, debt, or obligation of any character, contracted prior to the time at which said lands may be alienated under this act, nor shall said lands be sold except as herein provided."

[For other cases, see Execution, II. a; Indians, VIII., in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 263.]

Submitted May 11, 1914. Decided June 8, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Oklahoma to review a decree which reversed a decree of the District Court in and for the Seventh Judicial District, Johnston County, in that state, enjoining the sale of an Indian allotment under execution. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

See same case below, 33 Okla. 184, 122 Pac. 518.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. S. T. Bledsoe submitted the cause for plaintiff in error. Mr. J. R. Cottingham was on the brief.

Digitized by Google

Mr. John E. Dolman submitted the cause for defendants in error. Mr. L. S. Dolman was on the brief.

[195] Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff in error brought suit in the district court in and for the seventh judicial district, Johnston county, state of Oklahoma, to restrain defendant in error, who was defendant in the trial court, from selling under execution issued upon a judgment obtained against one F. A. Bonner certain lands, which are described, belonging to plaintiff in error. He was plaintiff in the action, and we will so refer to him. Plaintiff, it is alleged, derived his title from F. A. Bonner by warranty deed dated October 17, 1908, Bonner then having unrestricted right to sell. Bonner is a member and citizen of the Choctaw Tribe of Indians, of one-sixteenth degree of Indian blood, and that the lands described constitute his allotment as a member and citizen of such tribe; that the judgment upon which the execution was issued was rendered and the debt evidenced by it contracted more than five years prior to the issuance of the execution, and at a time when the lands were inalienable, and that under the laws of the United States and the treaties between the Chickasaw and Choctaw Nations and the United States the lands were exempt from the operation of the judgment. That defendant threatens to sell the lands, and that a sale thereof and the deed which may be executed will cast a cloud upon plaintiff's title. A restraining order was issued. Defendant in his answer alleged that when the restraining order was served upon him, he was in possession of the lands under the execution which he set up as a defense. He admitted the other allegations of the plaintiff, and alleged that E. F. Ham et al., plaintiffs in the judgment, were necessary parties. He prayed a dissolution of the restraining order and that the suit be dismissed.

Subsequently Millord F. Ham and others filed "their interplea in said cause" and asked to be made defendants. [196] For answer to plaintiff's petition they alleged the following: They recovered the judgment in controversy against Frank Bonner for the sum of $2,066.66⅔ on January 31, 1901, as damages for the killing of the husband of one of the interpleaders and the father of the others, upon which executions were issued, but all returned unsatisfied, and finally, on the 29th of September, 1908, the interpleaders caused the execution in controversy to be issued and levied upon the lands described in plaintiff's petition. On February 23, 1906, Bonner became the owner of the lands by allotment of the same as an Indian, and the judgment thereupon became a lien upon the lands. Subsequently that part of the Indian territory and the southern district where the lands are located became a part of what is now Johnston county, and the judgment is still a lien upon the lands and was a lien at the time of the purchase by Mullen, who, at the time of the alleged conveyance to him, had full knowledge and notice of the judgment, and knew that an execution had been issued and levied upon the lands, and that, therefore, he is not an innocent purchaser of them, but took them subject to the judgment.

Mullen demurred to the answer of Simmons and to that of the interpleaders upon the grounds (1) that they did not constitute a defense. (2) They failed to show that the execution was a lien upon the lands, failed to show that the lands were seized by the sheriff prior to the deed to plaintiff, and failed to show that a lien attached by virtue of the execution. (3) The lands, having been taken in allotment by Bonner, were not subject under the law to any debt, deed, contract, or obligation of any character made prior to the time at which the lands could be alienated by the allottee; that the judgment was recovered against him more than five years before the lands were alienable, and that the lands were not subject to it or to the execution issued upon it.

The judgment of the court was that it "doth overrule [197] plaintiff's general demurrer and his first special demurrer . . . and doth sustain plaintiff's second special demurrer . . . and the interpleaders and the defendant elect to stand upon their answer and interplea herein, refuse to plead further, and the court finds for the plaintiff, and that he is entitled to the relief prayed for in his petition. . . ." And it was adjudged that the defendant Simmons, as sheriff of Johnston county, and his deputies, and the interpleaders, be enjoined and restrained forever from issuing or causing to be issued any execution or other process upon the judgment rendered against Frank Bonner in favor of the interpleaders, and from levying the same upon the lands described.

The supreme court of the state reversed the judgment, deciding "that the lien of interpleader's judgment attached to the allotment as soon as it came into being; that plaintiff took the land subject thereto, and that the same should be enforced and said land sold to satisfy the same, and that, too, notwithstanding the provisions of the 15th section of the act of July 1, 1902, which has no material bearing on the question."

Digitized by Google

The section referred to is as follows: "Lands allotted to members and freedmen shall not be affected or encumbered by any deed, debt, or obligation of any character contracted prior to the time at which said land may be alienated under this act, nor shall said lands be sold except as herein provided." [32 Stat. at L. 642, chap. 1362.]

The supreme court of Oklahoma, in deciding that this provision did not apply, distinguished between the obligations resulting from an Indian's wrongful conduct and the obligations resulting from his contracts, saying: "A judgment in damages for tort is not a 'debt contracted'" within the contemplation of § 15. In other words, the court was of the view that the tort retained its identity, though merged in the judgment. However, we need not enter into the controversy of the cases and the [198] books as to whether a judgment is a contract. Passing such considerations, and regarding the policy of § 15 and its language, we are unable to concur with the supreme court of Oklahoma.

This court said, in Starr v. Long Jim, 227 U. S. 613, 625, 57 L. ed. 670, 675, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 358, that the title to lands allotted to Indians was "retained by the United States for reasons of public policy, and in order to protect the Indians against their own improvidence." It was held, applying the principle, that a warranty deed made by Long Jim at a time when he did not have the power of alienation "was in the very teeth of the policy of the law, and could not operate as a conveyance, either by its primary force or by way of estoppel," after he had received a patent for the land.

The principle was applied again in Franklin v. Lynch, 233 U. S. 269, ante, 954, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 505, and its strict character enforced against the deed of a white woman who acquired title in an Indian right. It is true, in these cases the act of the Indian was voluntary or contractual, and, it is contended, a different effect can be ascribed to the wrongs done by an Indian, and that in reparation or retribution of them the state law may subject his inalienable lands —inalienable by the national law—to alienation. The consequence of the contention repels its acceptance. Torts are of variable degree. In the present case that counted on reached, perhaps, the degree of a crime, but a tort may be a breach of a mere legal duty,—a consequence of negligent conduct. The policy of the law is, as we have said, to protect the Indians against their improvidence, and improvidence may affect all of their acts,—those of commission and omission, contracts and torts. And we think § 15 of the act of July 1, 1902, was purposely made broadly protective, broadly preclusive of alienation by any conduct of the Indian, and not only its policy but its language distinguishes it from the statute passed on in Brun v. Mann, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 154, 80 C. C. A. 513, 151 Fed. 145. Its language is that "lands allotted . . . [199] shall not be affected or encumbered by any deed, debt, or obligation of any character contracted prior to the time at which" the lands may be alienated, "nor shall said lands be sold except" as in the act provided. The prohibition, then, is that the lands shall not be "affected . . . by any obligation of any character," and, as we have seen, an obligation may arise from a tort as well as from a contract,—from a breach of duty or the violation of a right. Exchange Bank v. Ford, 7 Colo. 314, 316, 3 Pac. 449. If this were not so, a prearranged tort and a judgment confessed would become an easy means of circumventing the policy of the law.

Judgment reversed and case remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Mr. Justice Day dissents.

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER COMPANY OF AMERICA, Plff. in Err.,
v.
STATE OF MISSOURI, ON THE INFORMATION OF ITS ATTORNEY GENERAL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 199-215.)

Error to state court — Federal question — where and when raised.

1. Federal questions first raised by exceptions to the report of a special commissioner to whom an original proceeding in the highest state court had been referred to take evidence and report his conclusions will support a writ of error from the Federal Supreme Court, although the highest state court did not refer to the Federal questions in its opinion, and although that court has laid down the rule that constitutional questions must be raised at the first opportunity.

[For other cases, see Appeal and Error, 1249-1318, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Constitutional law — due process of law — freedom to contract — state anti-trust laws.

2. The application to a combination which has benefited instead of injured the public, of the prohibitions of Mo. Rev. Stat. 1909, § 10,301, and Rev. Stat. 1899, § 8966, against combinations which tend to lessen competition in the importation, transportation, manufacture, or sale of commodities, does not render such legislation repugnant to U. S. Const., 14th Amend., as unreasonably and arbitrarily limiting the right of contract.

---

Note.—On the general subject of writs of error from United States Supreme Court to state courts—see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4 L. ed. U. S. 97; Hamblin v. Western

Digitized by Google

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, 598-600, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Constitutional law — equal protection of the laws — classification — state anti-trust laws.

3. Confining to manufacturers and vendors of articles the prohibitions of Mo. Rev. Stat. 1909, § 10,301, and Rev. Stat. 1899, § 8966, against combinations to lessen competition and regulate prices, while permitting such combinations among purchasers, does not render the legislation repugnant to U. S. Const., 14th Amend., as denying the equal protection of the laws.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, IV. a, 5, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

Constitutional law — equal protection of the laws — classification — state anti-trust laws.

4. Excluding combinations of wage earners from statutory prohibitions against combinations to lessen competition and regulate prices, as is done by Mo. Rev. Stat. 1909, § 10,301, and Rev. Stat. 1899, § 8966, as construed by the state courts, does not render such legislation repugnant to U. S. Const., 14th Amend., as denying the equal protection of the laws.

[For other cases, see Constitutional Law, IV. a, 5, in Digest Sup. Ct. 1908.]

[No. 166.]

Argued April 29, 1914. Decided June 8, 1914.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri to review a judgment of ouster in a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto against a foreign corporation charged with violations of the state anti-trust laws. Affirmed.

See same case below, 237 Mo. 369, 141 S. W. 672.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Edgar A. Bancroft and William M. Williams argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Selden P. Spencer and Victor A. Remy, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

A Federal question was raised and was decided by the Missouri supreme court adversely to plaintiff in error.

Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 184 U. S. 530, 534, 46 L. ed. 673, 676, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 446; Meyer v. Richmond, 172 U. S. 82, 91, 93, 43 L. ed. 374, 377, 378, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 106; Columbia Water Power Co. v. Columbia Electric Street R. Light & P. Co. 172 U. S. 475, 487, 43 L. ed. 521, 524, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McWhirter, 229 U. S. 265, 276, 57 L. ed. 1179, 1186, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 858.

It has been adjudged by the supreme court of Missouri that the anti-trust statute does not apply to persons engaged in labor pursuits (State ex rel. Hadley v. Standard Oil Co. 218 Mo. 370, 116 S. W. 902) or to business of mere personal service (State ex rel. Star Pub. Co. v. Associated Press, 159 Mo. 456, 51 L.R.A. 151, 81 Am. St. Rep. 368, 60 S. W. 91).

Such combinations may restrain trade and were illegal at common law.

Dier's Case, Y. B. 2 Hen. V. fol. 5, pl. 26; Ipswich Tailors' Case, 11 Coke, 53a; More v. Bennett, 140 Ill. 77, 15 L.R.A. 361, 33 Am. St. Rep. 216, 29 N. E. 888; Bailey v. Master Plumbers' Asso. 103 Tenn. 99, 46 L.R.A. 561, 52 S. W. 853.

There is no ground for the attempted distinction between owners of commodities and owners of services. Both may restrain trade. Anti-trust laws—aiming to protect the freedom of trade and resting on the police power—must include all persons who are capable of restraining trade. Such laws must be coextensive with the evils to be prevented and remedied, and should be enacted, as well as construed, according to the rule of reason.

Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 127, 21

Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884; and Kipley v. Illinois, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

On what adjudications of state courts can be brought up for review in the Supreme Court of the United States by writ of error to those courts—see note to Apex Transp. Co. v. Garbade, 62 L.R.A. 513.

On how and when questions must be raised and decided in a state court in order to make a case for a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States—see note to Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. McGrew, 63 L.R.A. 33.

As to when Federal question is raised in time to sustain the appellate jurisdiction of the Federal Supreme Court over state courts—see note to Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. McGuire, 49 L. ed. U. S. 414.

On illegal trusts under modern anti-trust acts—see note to Whitwell v. Continental Tobacco Co. 64 L.R.A. 689.

As to what constitutes due process of law, generally—see notes to People v. O'Brien, 2 L.R.A. 255; Kuntz v. Sumption, 2 L.R.A. 655; Re Gannon, 5 L.R.A. 359; Ulman v. Baltimore, 11 L.R.A. 224; Gilman v. Tucker, 13 L.R.A. 304; Pearson v. Yewdall, 24 L. ed. U. S. 436; and Wilson v. North Carolina, 42 L. ed. U. S. 865.

As to the validity of class legislation, generally—see notes to State v. Goodwill, 6 L.R.A. 621, and State v. Loomis, 21 L.R.A. 789.

As to constitutional equality of privileges, immunities, and protection, generally—see note to Louisville Safety Vault & T. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 14 L.R.A. 579.

Digitized by Google

L. ed. 425; 21 Cong. Rec. 1890, pp. 2727, 2729; Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U. S. 274, 301, 302, 52 L. ed. 488, 502, 503, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301, 13 Ann. Cas. 815; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 556, 560, 563, 46 L. ed. 679, 688, 690, 691, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; People ex rel. Akin v. Butler Street Foundry & Iron Co. 201 Ill. 258, 66 N. E. 349; Eddy, Combinations, §§ 910, 912, pp. 1021, 1022; Cong. Rec. 62d Congress, 3d Session, p. 4838; Adams v. Brenan, 177 Ill. 194, 42 L.R.A. 718, 69 Am. St. Rep. 222, 52 N. E. 314.

The following state court decisions support the exemption of labor and services, but on different, inconsistent, and fallacious grounds:

State v. Duluth Bd. of Trade, 107 Minn. 546, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1260, 121 N. W. 395; Rohlf v. Kasemeier, 140 Iowa, 182, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1284, 132 Am. St. Rep. 261, 118 N. W. 276, 17 Ann. Cas. 750; Cleland v. Anderson, 66 Neb. 260, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 136, 92 N. W. 306, 96 N. W. 212, 98 N. W. 1075, 105 N. W. 1092. Contrary holding. Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Cornell, 110 Fed. 825; State v. Coyle, 7 Okla. Crim. Rep. 50, 122 Pac. 243; Cote v. Murphy, 159 Pa. 420, 23 L.R.A. 135, 39 Am. St. Rep. 686, 28 Atl. 190; Hunt v. Riverside Co-op. Club, 140 Mich. 538, 112 Am. St. Rep. 420, 104 N. W. 40; Owen County Burley Tobacco Soc. v. Brumback, 128 Ky. 137, 107 S. W. 710; Com. v. International Harvester Co. 131 Ky. 551, 133 Am. St. Rep. 256, 115 S. W. 703.

The Missouri anti-trust statute is unconstitutional because, while it prohibits arrangements and combinations designed or tending to lessen competition in the manufacture or sale of commodities, or to increase market prices, it does not prohibit arrangements or combinations between purchasers of commodities, designed or tending to lessen competition or to decrease market prices.

Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 395, 400, 49 L. ed. 518, 523, 526, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276; Chapin v. Brown Bros. 83 Iowa, 157, 12 L.R.A. 428, 32 Am. St. Rep. 297, 48 N. W. 1074.

